The Masoretes flourished from about 500 to 1000 A.D. They were supposed to have standardized the Hebrew O.T. in about 600-700 A.D. by putting in the vowel pointings to aid in the pronunciation of the consonantal text. Their text is called the Masoretic Text or M.T. if you want to abbreviate it. Many Christian writers and scholars assume that these Jewish Scriptures, as preserved by these Masoretes, are the "same" Jewish Scriptures that are contained in their Christian Bibles today. Over my first seven years of scholarly research following graduation from Seminary in 1988 I saw personally hundreds of deviations from the Hebrew Masoretic text and Bible when compared with the latter editions of the Christian Bible. To assume that your Christian Bible reads like the Hebrew Scriptures and that the New Testament has accurate quotes from the Hebrew Masoretic Text in "key" places like Messianic Prophecy, is an assumption that cannot be sustained when individual comparison of these more ancient Hebrew passages are compared with later Christian collections of them in our Christian Bible. Nothing could be further from the truth that saying that our Christian Bible is based off the Masoretic Text!

To properly understand the importance of the Masoretic Text in relationship to the Christian Bible of today some history is necessary. In C.E. 70 Jerusalem, after the Jewish revolt, was destroyed by the Romans. The religion of the Jews lost their most important icon, the Temple itself. It was destroyed, never to be rebuilt. To save their religion, the Rabbi Yochanan ben Zakkai from the Hillel school in the Pharisaic party, obtained permission from the Romans to rebuild the Sanhedrin on a spiritual basis in Jamnia. There a “synod” or meeting in C.E. 95 was held in which the extent of the Hebrew canon was debated. The books of the apocrypha and the books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes and the Song of Songs had their canonicity debated. Some of the books in the apocrypha were rejected because they were extent only in the Greek language. However, other books, such as I Maccabees existed in Hebrew as well as Greek. The reason for its rejection was more on pragmatic than religious grounds. I Maccabees described the revolt led by the Maccabean family against the Syrian king, Antiochus Ephiphanes (d.163 B.C.) who attacked Jerusalem and pillaged the Temple in 167 B.C. The rabbis in Jamnia were in no mood to promote a book about revolt so soon after their own failed revolt against the Romans. Thus, I Maccabees was excluded from the canon. The Song of Solomon, an overtly sexual book, was accepted solely on the tradition that it was written by King Solomon. Jewish and Christians theologians have, ever since then been forced to interpret the book allegorically to give the book some semblance of religiousness. The debate played a major role in deciding the twenty four books of the Hebrew Canon which coincided with the thirty nine books of the Christian Old Testament (Allegro, The Dead Sea Scrolls: p59-60, Anderson, A Critical Introduction to the Old Testament:p192, Bruce, The Books and the Parchments: p97, Livingstone, Dictionary of the Christian Church: p327). Around the end of the first century AD, there were doubtless many slightly different renditions of the Hebrew scriptures around. It was also around this time that a certain textual tradition was selected as the norm or authoritative text for all time. Thus this standard text was not based on any scientific or critical study on the many extant manuscripts of the scriptures and it is this text that eventually became known as the Masoretic (Hebrew: masorah = "tradition") text. What is important to note is the scholarly consensus that although the earliest extent manuscript of the Masoretic text today is very late (C.E. 916), all the evidence we have, based on fragments that predates this oldest manuscript, point to the fact that the text remain practically unaltered since the time of the synod at Jamnia (Allegro, The Dead Sea Scrolls: p59-60). What is even more important to note is the fact that this Masoretic text differs from the Septuagint in the actual textual content in many "key" theological places.

When one undertakes a serious study of the Greek LXX, the Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures, he finds that its origin does not actually go back to 285–247 B.C.E., but is the work of an early Church Father, Origen which is later pushed back into past history to increase its authority as a Sacred Book; a book that was actually written "late" to contradict the Hebrew Masoretic Text to which a false dating is attributed to artificially create Scriptural authority prior to the Masoretic Text. The whole idea of an "early date" for the LXX is based upon a legend which today, when scrutinized under the light of modern scholarship, is shown to be a ruse at best.

DOES THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE CONTAIN THE JEWISH MASORETIC TEXT.....OR HAS IT BEEN ALTERED?

It would be a wonderful thing if in the Christian Bible we had a faithful replication of the Jewish Palestinian Masoretic text but we do not. Therefore the need for ministries like Bet Emet to bring this sad fact to your attention in hopes that your recognition of such a problem will lead to your own investigation into the matter to not only confirm what we have said, but also lead you in repentance of many false religious beliefs you hold as a traditional "Christian."

In looking over the introductory notes of several of the Bibles I posses I was struck by the statements by several Bible committees guarantying that within their "translations" we have the Jewish Scriptures. One hardly ever approaches one's Christian Bible thinking it could be wrong and thus we, by default, are led astray.

If you open the beginnings of your Christian Bibles you often find in the preface to the Old Testament a commentary detailing how your Christian Old Testament was put together. Granted this is just a collection of summary statements but you can get the drift. Let me give you an example.

The Oxford Study Edition of The New English Bible with Apocrypha states on page 14: "the earliest known Hebrew manuscripts containing any parts of the Old Testament are among the Scrolls (commonly called the Dead Sea Scrolls) found in the caves of Qumran near the north-western end of the Dead Sea; they may be dated in the last two centuries B.C., though some may be a little earlier and others somewhat later."

So far so good. But watch what they say later:

"The text which they present is to a large extent identical with that in our Hebrew Bibles."

THAT STATEMENT IS SIMPLY JUST NOT TRUE AND I CAN PROVE IT TO YOU IF YOU WILL LISTEN!

WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW CAN HURT YOU

Most of you would read such a comment "large extent identical with that in our Hebrew Bibles" and be reassured that your Christian Old Testament is a faithful representation of the Old Testament in the Jewish Hebrew Bible.

Answer for yourself: What about those portions that do not fall within the above "To a large extent"? Do these portions make a major theological difference? Are these differences the reason why the Jews do not accept the Christian's Old Testament and much that is taught about Jesus by the Christian church and their texts?

Answer for yourself: What if I could show you that the above statement as representative of most Christian Old Testaments was a lie? Are you aware that the quotes from this suspect Old Testament in the Christian Bible are found at the very heart of the "Jesus Story"? If they are not accurate to the Hebrew, then what does this do to our "Jesus Story", or even more, to the truth about this New Testament "Jesus"?

Over my dedicated twenty plus years as a serious Bible researcher I have heard it all. The only way to know the truth for yourself is to find it yourself. I set out to do that and I have. And it is this truth I share with you. So many today have "holes" in their beliefs; holes when filled would alter their perspectives. But most study to a superficial level it seems and end up accepting and promoting the "party line" or "denominational position" for acceptability within the fraternity, or being preconditioned to a particular "belief" then when challenged they dismiss their opponents challenges.

What you just read above "that the Christian Old Testament in your Bibles is to a large extent identical' with the Hebrew Bible" is a lie spread by those of a particular religious position that produced that particular Bible. I have invested great time and finances to find out what the facts are concerning the changes and differences in the Jewish Hebrew Bible that are "NOT to a large extent" the same as the Christian Old Testament.

I have been humbled to say the least by my research and these comparisons and this led directly to my resignation as a Christian Pastor. As my studies progressed during the eight years of my pastorate I came to a place finally where I could no longer continue the charade. I had to resign. Simply said, based on what I discovered the facts were as plain as the nose on my face; I had not been preaching the truth as taught by the Bible that a Jew like this Jesus would have used and read in the first century. Given the harsh reality of this truth I had to leave the pastorate and tell others the hidden "truth" about the Bibles we inherited from Constantine.

SO WHAT IS WRONG WITH THE CHRISTIAN OLD TESTAMENT IN MOST CHRISTIAN BIBLES?

There are basically two major problems with the Christian Old Testament: Doctrine and Prophecy.

The Christian Old Testament is not a faithful representation of the Jewish Hebrew Scriptures in multiple places. Simply said, many DOCTRINES as recorded and taught about Jesus in the New Testament come directly from what is recorded in the Christian's Old Testament. If these doctrines find their origin in a falsified and corrupted Christian Old Testament which the Christian Bibles uses, then understand such doctrines in the New Testament are false as well! That means the quotes in the New Testament are wrong if the sources for them can be shown to be wrong when compared to the Hebrew Scriptures that read differently! But few Christians ever think such a thought and fewer still ever investigate the verses they read in their Old Testaments and New Testaments to verify that they are "the same" or "identical" with the Hebrew Scriptures from which they are taken! A simple comparison between the Christian's Old Testament, along with the Septuagint (the corrupted Greek translation of these Jewish Scriptures) from which most of them were taken, when compared to the Hebrew Scriptures in the Jewish Tankah, will both shock and convince even a blind man, that the texts in our Christian version of the Hebrew Scriptures are falsified in many, many "key" theological and messianic passages. This affects "DOCTRINE" and "PROPHECY". Given this fact, a fact that most Jewish people and Rabbis know, account for the reason that they cannot accept the traditional dogmas concerning the New Testament Jesus. You, a Christian, are unaware that these corruptions of the Hebrew Scriptures exist in your Christian Bible. You only need a little "truth" to break out of this deception and begin your own personal investigation into these matter; an investigation that will reveal the truth about the Christian Bible to you and the truth that I speak in this article.

What I am saying is that supposedly “fulfilled prophecies” from the Old Testament in our Christian Bibles, seen as quotes in the New Testament as applied to the central figure, this Jesus, are in reality quotes of forgeries and purposeful misquotations of the former Hebrew Scriptures. Sad to say but the Christian's Old Testament come from earlier Hebrew Scriptural texts which were purposefully altered and falsified when translated into the Greek translation of them 200 years or more before the time period for this Jesus. This forgery of the Hebrew Scriptures was only to continue with the pens of Rome. Therefore, once you see these for yourself, then you will know beyond any doubt that the New Testament's reference to these supposed "fulfillments of supposed Hebrew Messianic prophecy are less than trustworthy. In fact they are false and deception. Upon examination with the real Hebrew Masoretic text, these supposed "fulfilled" Messianic prophecies, for the most part, are shown to but gross falsifications and purposeful mistranslations and misquotations as well as even pure "inventions" that distort the Divine Truth of the true Hebrew Scriptures in many instances. There is a big difference when reading the Old Testament and believing what you are reading came from God and reading a falsified version of it in the Christian Bible that came from men with a theological agenda; an agenda that caused them to "add to" and "take away" from the Word of God (the Hebrew Scriptures). Many of these "doctrines" and "prophecies" were literally “created” by the Pythagorean-Greek-Hellenized Jews of Alexandria (Essenes) when they translated the Jewish Scriptures into Greek, thus turning the human "anointed one" expected from the loins of King David, into a "cosmic Superman". Others follow suit later like Origen of the Roman Church which pick up where these Essenes left off and the falsification and forgery of the Hebrew Scriptures continue. All of this I hope you understand ends up in our New Testaments and center on the Jesus as "the Krst/Christ" in the New Testament. In so doing the human seed of King David is given a virgin miraculous birth and a supernatural life which, among mention, he now walks on water like Poisidon and turns water in wine like Bacchus, cast the pigs of the cliff like Horus and raises Lazarus to life exactly like Horus brought his Father back to life when he resurrected his Father back to life as "L-Asur-Us" (the Egyptian original Lazarus story seen when the god Osiris was resurrected from the dead). Here is the rub. It is not the stories that are false, but the interpretation of them. At the heart of these Scriptures that have come down to us in our Christian Bible lies not the ancient allegorical, mystical, and metaphysical interpretation of them as it did when given by the ancient Spiritual Masters. Instead, we inherited them in such a way that they were taught and rewritten to be "literal" and "historical" when in fact they never were to be understood in such a manner as stated by the ancients and amazingly the earliest of Christians. What was "metaphysical" Divine Truths regarding the Soul as found in the Hebrew Scriptures were through centuries of distortion so distorted that those who now heard them and read them were led incorrectly to approach them as if "historical" and "literal" events when in fact nothing could be further from the truth. They were pseudo-history at best and until we recover the true unaltered Masoretic texts along with Rabbinical exegesis on its 4 levels of interpretation, the mystical interpretation being the truest, then we have not a chance to rightly divide the Word of God.

THE TERRIBLE IRONY OF THIS

Answer for yourself: Have you ever confused "Messianic prophecy" with "Sun-worship" and the prophecy concerning the coming of sun-god redeemers?

Before you say "no" you need to listen to this. These Pythagorean-Greek Jews of Alexandria (the Essenes) had long since separated from conservative Judaism. Study will reveal this to you. Just because Jews lived in Alexandria does not mean they were not Hellenized and had been influenced by the religious climate that existed in Alexandria, Egypt.

These Greek-Jews (Essenes) of Alexandria were the earliest translators of the Jewish Scriptures and were partly responsible for the Greek translation of the Old Testament which would later find its way into the Christian Bible. In other words, many religious teachings of these Pythagorean-Buddhist Essenes, as taken from Pythagorean and Buddhist religious beliefs, as well as Iranian sun-worship, were "added" into their Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures in order to enhance the religious authority of their sect. In so doing the Metaphysical understanding of cosmology was altered to understood no longer "mystically" and "metaphorically" but now a "literal" and "historical" import was given to the text and all to easily accepted by the unlearned and illiterate of that day and age. This is a fact! They Essenes made it appear as if God had sanctioned them as "His people" instead of Israel! Besides that they altered what the Tanakh said concerning the "anointed one to come" andpatterned the Messiah after the literalization of the metaphysical sun-gods. This again is a major, major study in contrasting the life and events of these nation's allegorical sungods with the later "literal" and "historical" life of this supposed first century Jesus of Nazareth. The stories are so similar that it is staggering. What one must learn before such a study is the fact that the ancients NEVER believed that these sungod stories were "literally" true but yet they expressed "Divine Truths" that were literally true regarding the Soul of mankind and the true Divine Essence that tabernacled within every child of God. This is the "secret" that we have missed in Christianity; that the sungods and goddesses, stories that parallel the "Jesus Story" from beginning to end, are a Divine Pattern that holds the secret to man's True Self as an evolving expression of Divinity which has become "incarnated" into "matter" in this present existence. Totally lost in such a limited "literal" and "historical" approach to the "Jesus Story" is the Metaphysical truth of Mankind's True Self and incarnational goal.

Pythagorean-Buddhist Greek-Jews, Essenes, looked toward a cosmic sun-god incarnated man. This man will be "crucified" and killed in the heavens in its "fall" into "matter" and "material existence". The "falling from Heaven" was not into sin, but into "material existence" and ultimately flesh. These concepts were later personified down through time as if this incarnational "godman" was real. The stories and legends grew and over time the idea of God coming to descend in a "allegorical death" into " matter" was termed the "crucificion of God" by the ancients (http://paganizingfaithofyeshua.netfirms.com). The irony is that this large group of Essene believers, in the turbulent Messianic confusion of the first century, looked to the "crucified savior" as the one they had been waiting for, but admittedly missed recognizing and identifying him as such while he was believed to have lived among them unnoticed in the first century. Israel was seen to have evidently not "merited" their Messiah; they had evidently missed the prophetic coming of their "savior", Messiah, Christ. The prophecy of Daniel and the 70 weeks had said that the Messiah must come before 70 C.E. and Messianic fever was at a high pitch. So, if you followed, these beliefs as held by these Pythagorean-Buddhist Essenes, which originated from allegorical sun-worship, the same mixture of Essene and ancient cosmology were mixed with Messianic Propehcy regarding a human descendent from the loins of King David and out comes a "Superman" in the later Greek translations of the Hebrew Scriptures. As God had given His life to mankind in "falling to His death" in "matter" so likewise was it termed that God's Son did the same. This same idea of the crucifixion of God for mankind was, after the destruction of the Temple when no Messiah ever arrived, now applied again to God's Son who, according to prophecy, must has walked among them unnoticed never being revealed as Israel's King. To this absence was the explanation that God's Son likewise gave his life for mankind. Thus the creation of the crucifixion of Jesus long after the face and later written from oral traditions into later texts and Gospels by the hands of Rome who were aware of the same tradition. This this later Jesus became the "fulfillment" of both cosmology and Messianic prophecy by the Essenes and identified with the nation's other crucified theological heroes.

So what was never Messianic prophecy in the Greek translation and later alteration of the Jewish Scriptures, now becomes "Messianic prophecy" to these Essenes in the first century. Religious concepts held by these Essenes which they applied to their incarnated and "literalized" sun-god redeemer Angel-Messiah were now applied later to the Jesus of Rome's invention. What for thousands of years had been always understood as "allegorical" and "metaphysical" not becomes, for the first time at the hands of the Essenes, "literal" and "historical". Rome will later take up where these Essenes left off. These Essenes literally convert as a large group to the messianic movement in the first century and almost totally vanish after the destruction of the Temple in 70 C.E. They become, as many scholars maintain, absorbed into the first Christians. Note, this is not the Gnostics, but the later "literalized" version of Christianity. Now within the synagogues in the latter part of the first century and later we have two Messianic beliefs jockeying for mastery: one Davidic, and one Cosmic; one from the Tanakh and one from a synthesis of Pythagorean-Indian-Buddhist belief which trace their origin to astrology and sun-worship and which were recorded in a literalized and falsified translation of the Jewish Scriptures by prior Essenes in Alexandria in order to bolster the authority of their sect by promoting the sect and their religious views as if given by God in the Bible. No wonder the Jews down through history, as well as today, don't accept much what is taught by the Christian church about Jesus and the Messiah; their true Hebrew Scriptures, and not the other versions of the marginal sects of Judaism like the Essenes, never had such things in it!

The problem for the Christian is that the Tanakh never said such things about the Davidic Messiah. Many of these concepts as held by these Essenes which were applied by them from the corrupted Greek Old Testament to Jesus, their acclaimed Angel-Messiah, never could be found in the Jewish Tanakh. Their beliefs about Messiah were not to be found in the Tanakh, but only in their own writings to which they exalted above the writings of Moses and the prophets.

The same passages that these Essenes yielded to in the Greek Old Testament for their beliefs concerning their godman, when examined in the Jewish Scriptures and rightly understood and interpreted by conservative Rabbis, never were intended to be of a Messianic nature in the first place.

Answer for yourself: Do you want to believe the truth about Jesus and the Messiah, or will fantasy and pagan beliefs, long ago added to the Word of God and undetected by most today, suffice for your religious beliefs as far as your concerned?

Tragically, we read these "added" religious doctrines in our Christian Old Testament, and read the "quotes in the New Testament as taken from the same source" as if given by God. We read them as if this were the truth about the Messiah and Jesus. We never had a reason to doubt our Christian Old Testament or its quotes in the New Testament. Just a cursory reading of these documents will not reveal what I have said in this article to hardly anyone. Only serious study and comparative study of the documents will do this. We choose to believe like "good and faithful" Christians and like sheep we were led astray and never knew it. And we never knew, that is up till now! God knows we have believed a lie even if we don't, and I thank Him that is love is not contingent on us being "right." But if we can learn the truth and alter our worship whereby we remove ourselves, based on what we learn, from idolatry, then our love for God should demand we study to find the truth and not die as idolators.

The Christian Old Testaments might read as if came from God, because most of it did, and the New Testament's quotes of these falsified passages might seem reassuring, but if you took the time to compare these problem passages with the Jewish Bibles today you would see for yourself the prophets never said such things as recorded in many places in the Christian Old Testaments. Besides that, the quotes in the New Testament, when taken from these problem passages, are completely wrong and misleading as well.

There exists today the Jewish Hebrew Scriptures and the Christian Old Testament and they are not the same in very important places affecting both doctrines and prophecies. As a Christian you will never know that until someone first tells you and then you go look for yourself to see if this be true. When I was confronted with such information I, as a Pastor, had to know. What if I had been wrong? What if I had the wrong book? What if 2000 years ago things were changed and I don't know it and believe what I have been told and taught by others who don't know as well?

As stated above, but its importance requires its restatement. Many quotes from this altered Christian Old Testament were again included in the New Testament and you read them as if they are again true and given by God. All you are reading are the accepted traditions of those who came before you who either never knew how to read Hebrew, knew of this deception or willfully added to it.

The New English Bible goes on to say:

"In the second century A.D. or even earlier the Rabbis, the Jewish religious leaders, compiled a text from such manuscripts as had survived the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, and on this basis was established the traditional or Masoretic text, so called from the Hebrew word "massorah" or "tradition". The earliest surviving manuscripts of this text date from the ninth to eleventh centuries A.D.; and it is this text, as printed in R. Kittel's Biblia Hebraica (3rd edition, 1937), which has been used for the present translation".

Let me tell you what you just read....Another lie!

The text in the Oxford's New English Bible, like all Christian Old Testaments, is NOT the text that is used, or has been used, by the Jewish Rabbis and people since long before Jesus! That's right. The text you are reading is the one handed down by the Alexandrian translators which forged many of their sects Pythagorean-Buddhist and Essene doctrines into their translations. You are reading the evolution of their Greek translation and not the Hebrew Masoretic text in all instances. In the majority of the passages we find agreement between the Greek and the Hebrew, and any differences are minor to say the least. Yet, it not these passages that trouble us, but the one which make for theological and doctrinal diversity.

This is the purpose of the Web Site and the many articles listed; to reveal this problem to all those who show interest. On this site I have provided for you what I believe to be overwhelming evidence to not only the falsification and purposeful mistranslation of the Jewish Scriptures, but hundreds of examples of these divergent doctrines and religious beliefs which influenced many in the early years of the early church. Some never deterred from the faith of Jesus; but many did. Many were influenced by this Greek adulteration of the Jewish Bible, and forthcoming were doctrines taken from this Greek text along with variant readings which ended up in your Christian Bibles. We go to church and "hear" these falsehoods taught and "amended" but never take the time to compare. I have don't that for you. The evidence is not pretty, but repentance is. With every lie exposed, with every false doctrine crushed, and with every step toward truth and obedience, then God is closer.

Not only did you not know of these things before now, but those who published this Oxford Bible did not know as well; at least hopefully for it would be a terrible thing to think that such deception was done on purpose. To list all the Christian Bibles which have fallen to this same deceptions would take forever.

THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE CHRISTIAN'S OLD TESTAMENT TEXT

"What about the Hebrew text used by the KJV translators? Here is some background on it. The Daniel Bomberg edition, 1516-17, was called the "First Rabbinic Bible." That's a joke. This text, in many places, was derived from the Septuagint instead of the Palestinian Masoretic text, which I will show you in the following pages on this web site, is but an altered and poorly constructed falsification of the Jewish Scriptures in many places. Again, I must be fair. Much confirms the Jewish Masoretic text, but there are instances where it does not and these are theological and doctrinal problems for the Christian if he only knew.

Then in 1524-25, Bomberg published a second edition edited by Abraham Ben Chayyim (or Ben Hayyim) iben Adonijah. This is called the Ben Chayyim edition of the Hebrew text. Daniel Bomberg's edition, on which the KJV is based, was the Ben Chayyim Masoretic Text. This was called the Second Great Rabbinic Bible. This became the standard Masoretic text for the next 400 years. All along you need to understand this is a fraudulent text and now the people, uneducated, never knew. Sounds a lot like today. They accepted what they had been handed just like you and me. Bomberg never knew himself for the adulteration of the Jewish Scriptures into Greek was clouded in embellished legends (the letter of Aristeas) which had grown around the importance and divine creation of the Greek translation which scholars today recognize as lies told to increase the importance and acceptance of this falsified text by the Gentiles as against the Jewish Bible. You need to realize when one begins with a misrepresented text, and when quotes are taken from these falsified, perverted, twisted, and adulterated passages, then the quotes are just a wrong as its parent document!

"The Ben Chayyim Masoretic Text was used even in the first two editions of Biblia Hebraica by Rudolf Kittel. The dates on those first two editions were 1906 and 1912. He used the same Hebrew text as the KJV translators (it is already corrupted). Now the KJV has this same falsified and corrupted Old Testament as the Septuagint and few know today; except the Rabbis who both know and read Hebrew.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever wondered why the Rabbis don't use the Christian Bible's Old Testament? Could it be that they know it is theologically mutant in many places? Why not use it if it is accurate?

SO WHY HAS CHRISTIANS REJECTED THE JEWISH BIBLE JESUS USED? IS "OLDEST" REALLY THE "BEST"?

Today, the reason that most of the Hebrew departments, in colleges, universities, and seminaries who teach Hebrew, use Septuagint and Christian Old Testaments instead of the Palestinian Masoretic text is the same reason they use the critical Greek text in the N.T. They believe the "oldest" texts, either in Hebrew or in Greek, must always be the best.Not necessarily. Since no copies of the Masoretic text could be found till the 9th century A.D. these “differences” of what I spoke were assumed to be nothing more than a Jewish reaction to Christianity. Christian writers and scholars of their day assumed that the variant readings were because the Jewish Rabbis removed the “prophecies” in reaction to Christianity and Jesus. Without sufficient knowledge and on the surface this makes all the sense. We have two Old Testaments. One is made to be a constant prophecy about the Messiah or Jesus. The other is not. The Greek manuscripts of the Jewish Hebrew Scriptures were older than any existing Jewish Masoretic texts by a thousand years, and following the rule "oldest is best" preference was given by most to the Greek translation over the Hebrew Masoretic text. Not all agreed however. I find it rather startling that Clement of Rome, the first Bishop of Rome, referenced in all his writings the Jewish Masoretic Palestinian text and never quoted from the Greek. Check me out and see if I am right. The first Church father beyond Paul did not use the Greek Scriptures and he was the Bishop of Rome.

Answer for yourself: What did he know that we don't? Could he possibly have known that the Greek translation had been perverted and misrepresented the Messiah so badly that he could not use it?

So, logically following the “oldest is best” rule the Christians paid little attention the the Jewish Bible and their Jewish texts which were definitely “not Christianized (in the form of promotion of the Essene Angel-Messiah).” What you need to understand is that even though these Greek translations might be the oldest, they were doctored by Essene heretics and therefore are not the "best" regardless that they are the oldest. Oldest never means most accurate or truthful.

Answer for yourself: But how can we know for sure? How can we know the Rabbis' Old Testaments today are true and the Christian Old Testament falsified? Until the last 50 years it has been one camp vs the other camp; opinion vs opinion. Nothing was settled.

THE ROCKS CRY OUT

Then God did something wonderful.

With the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls came evidence to the existence of this Jewish Masoretic text just as old or older then the Septuagint (Greek translations of the Old Testament). The identical similarity of a texts separated by over a thousand years was infinitesimal. The accuracy was astonishing and almost beyond belief. No longer could Christians say the Jews changed their Old Testaments after Jesus as a sour-grapes reaction to Christianity! Since the discovery of the manuscripts at Qumran we now have copies of the same texts reading identical which are separated by more than one thousand years. This exactness in the comparison of the 900 A.D. texts with the 200 B.C.E. texts has convinced textual scholars, both Jews and Christians, that such uniformness can be applied safely to all of the Masoretic texts. It must not be forgotten that we now have in our possession Masoretic texts as old or order than the Septuagint which contradict and correct the deviant readings which were added to the Greek mistranslation of the Hebrew texts by the Alexandrian Greek-Jews and Essenes. We now know the Septuagint is the errant text and one needs to begin to examine the origin of this translation in order to come to an understanding who it was that was behind the translation, and the existing religious beliefs of the sect that translated it, and their reasons for doing so.

The discovery at Qumran revealed that the Masoretic text we have today as preserved and used by Rabbis all over the world, is the same Masoretic text unaltered for the most part that existed long before the time of Jesus. It is this Masoretic text which should have been used in all readings of the Christian's Old Testament and it was not! And again let us not forget that this Jewish Masoretic text, as found at Qumran, differs considerably with the Greek translations found there also. If this more accurate Masoretic text had been used for the Christian's Old Testament instead of the corrupted Essene one, then the lies told about Jesus in the New Testament would not have existed, or at least been promulgated as if were Divine fiat.

What should concern you now is whether you want to read the real Word of God before you die or not. What should concern you is that you have a choice before you: you can obtain an "accurate" translation of the Jewish Scriptures in English by accepting the Jewish Tanakh, or you can continue to read your contemporary Christian Old Testament and its fables concerning a godman Angel-Messiah. A "translation" is what you were expecting when you bought your Christian Bible; you got a purposeful mistranslation in many places, and not possessing the knowledge, you are forced to read it not discerning the meat from the bones.

Answer for yourself: Don't you want a faithful translation? If it could be proven to you that the Greek translation was falsified over two thousand years ago would you not want to know? It it could be shown that those who did this translation were not the Rabbis as attested by legend as you have been told... would you want to know? Do you want to get behind the legends and get the facts and the truth?

DID JESUS LEAVE US ANY CLUES?

Not only was the Jewish Scripture preserved by the Jews in Palestine, but it was authorized by Jesus. Understand that in Jesus' day the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures existed and had for almost two hundred years. It can be shown that Jesus authorized the traditional Masoretic Hebrew O.T. text and not the Greek translation of these Jewish Scriptures:

Matt 4:4

4 But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Matt 5:17-18

17 Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill.

18 For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled (referencing the Hebrew text and not the Greek).

44 And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me.

Jesus never refuted any text, any word, or any letter in the Hebrew O.T. He didn't say, "Now Moses was misquoted here, it should have been this..." Jesus neve said: "We need to get the Greek translation because the Messianic prophecies in the Hebrew have been altered and I have been taken out of them." He never said: "The doctrines as taught in the Hebrew texts have passed away and the newer ones in the Greek is what God really intended to say." THINK!

He offered no textual criticism whatever. Had there been any changes, I'm sure he would have at least mentioned it somewhere in his teaching and preaching or at least corrected it if it had been in error. If he had then we would have some record of it, but in all that is recorded of his life and his sayings there is not one instance of him ever correcting "the text" or telling us that the existing Greek translation is the true Word of God and should be heeded over the Palestinian Masoretic text. Jesus was quick to correct sin and error in behavior of the people, and the source for his authority and truth which was the standard for all mankind's conduct was the Hebrew texts. It would seem that if such beliefs and dogmas in the Hebrew Masoretic text had been wrong and different ones and changes in the Greek translation had been right, then Jesus would have been a hypocrite to teach from and correct others from a Hebrew Masoretic text which was not authoritative or Divine. Jesus, if from God, would have been obligated to teach from the new improved Greek Bible. He did not!

Jesus never alluded to the Greek Bible once, but always referred to the Jewish Masoretic text as it existed in his day! Understand the Greek texts and translation of the Jewish Scriptures existed in his day and this Greek Bible had 4 divisions and not 3 like the Jewish Bible. Again, he tells us in Luke 24:44 that it is the: 1) Law of Moses, 2) prophets, and 3) psalms where all is to be fulfilled. (3 divisions and not 4). Jesus alludes directly to the Jewish Bible and not the Greek Bible.

Answer for yourself: Don't you think Jesus knew of the alterations and corruptions of the Greek translation and could this be the reason both he and the Jewish religious leaders in Palestine refused to use it?

Jesus' stamp of approval is on the Masoretic Hebrew text, and yours needs to be as well.

DID THE RABBIS TRANSLATE ONLY THE FIRST 5 BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT & HAD NO OTHER PART IN THE LXX?

As legends would have it the Jews are credited with translating the Jewish Scriptures in the Greek; thus giving the world the Greek Old Testament. In reality, this is just not so. Only when one come to the correct understanding of history and the origin of the LXX can one explain why this Greek OT deviates in hundreds of places from the Masoretic Hebrew Text. Often men will say that the LXX is a faithful translation of the Jewish Masoretic Text, but personal research into the true history will reveal to the serious student the fallacy of such false traditions. This explains the hundreds of purposeful misquotations and mistranslations that litter the pages of the LXX. The problem is no one knows, unless he compares line upon line and precept upon precept with the Jewish Tanakh. Such research will reveal to you how, among other things how "young woman" becomes "virgin" in Isaiah. I have done such homework. Have you? So let us study Josephus and see what he has to say on the matter of the translation of the Jewish Scriptures into the Greek.

THE ANTIQUITIES OF THE JEWS…PREFACE

1. THOSE who undertake to write histories, do not, I perceive, take that trouble on one and the same account, but for many reasons, and those such as are very different one from another. For some of them apply themselves to this part of learning to show their skill in composition, and that they may therein acquire a reputation for speaking finely: others of them there are, who write histories in order to gratify those that happen to be concerned in them, and on that account have spared no pains, but rather gone beyond their own abilities in the performance: but others there are, who, of necessity and by force, are driven to write history, because they are concerned in the facts, and so cannot excuse themselves from committing them to writing, for the advantage of posterity; nay, there are not a few who are induced to draw their historical facts out of darkness into light, and to produce them for the benefit of the public, on account of the great importance of the facts themselves with which they have been concerned. Now of these several reasons for writing history, I must profess the two last were my own reasons also; for since I was myself interested in that war which we Jews had with the Romans, and knew myself its particular actions, and what conclusion it had, I was forced to give the history of it, because I saw that others perverted the truth of those actions in their writings.
2. Now I have undertaken the present work, as thinking it will appear to all the Greeks (2) worthy of their study; for it will contain all our antiquities, and the constitution of our government, as interpreted out of the Hebrew Scriptures. And indeed I did formerly intend, when I wrote of the war, (3) to explain who the Jews originally were, - what fortunes they had been subject to, - and by what legislature they had been instructed in piety, and the exercise of other virtues, - what wars also they had made in remote ages, till they were unwillingly engaged in this last with the Romans: but because this work would take up a great compass, I separated it into a set treatise by itself, with a beginning of its own, and its own conclusion; but in process of time, as usually happens to such as undertake great things, I grew weary and went on slowly, it being a large subject, and a difficult thing to translate our history into a foreign, and to us unaccustomed language. However, some persons there were who desired to know our history, and so exhorted me to go on with it; and, above all the rest, Epaphroditus, (4) a man who is a lover of all kind of learning, but is principally delighted with the knowledge of history, and this on account of his having been himself concerned in great affairs, and many turns of fortune, and having shown a wonderful rigor of an excellent nature, and an immovable virtuous resolution in them all. I yielded to this man's persuasions, who always excites such as have abilities in what is useful and acceptable, to join their endeavors with his. I was also ashamed myself to permit any laziness of disposition to have a greater influence upon me, than the delight of taking pains in such studies as were very useful: I thereupon stirred up myself, and went on with my work more cheerfully. Besides the foregoing motives, I had others which I greatly reflected on; and these were, that our forefathers were willing to communicate such things to others; and that some of the Greeks took considerable pains to know the affairs of our nation.

3. I found, therefore, that the second of the Ptolemies was a king who was extraordinarily diligent in what concerned learning, and the collection of books; that he was also peculiarly ambitious to procure a translation of our law, and of the constitution of our government therein contained, into the Greek tongue. Now Eleazar the high priest, one not inferior to any other of that dignity among us, did not envy the forenamed king the participation of that advantage, which otherwise he would for certain have denied him, but that he knew the custom of our nation was, to hinder nothing of what we esteemed ourselves from being communicated to others. Accordingly, I thought it became me both to imitate the generosity of our high priest, and to suppose there might even now be many lovers of learning like the king; for he did not obtain all our writings at that time; but those who were sent to Alexandria as interpreters, gave him only the books of the law, while there were a vast number of other matters in our sacred books. They, indeed, contain in them the history of five thousand years; in which time happened many strange accidents, many chances of war, and great actions of the commanders, and mutations of the form of our government. Upon the whole, a man that will peruse this history, may principally learn from it, that all events succeed well, even to an incredible degree, and the reward of felicity is proposed by God; but then it is to those that follow his will, and do not venture to break his excellent laws: and that so far as men any way apostatize from the accurate observation of them, what was practical before becomes impracticable (5) and whatsoever they set about as a good thing, is converted into an incurable calamity. And now I exhort all those that peruse these books, to apply their minds to God; and to examine the mind of our legislator, whether he hath not understood his nature in a manner worthy of him; and hath not ever ascribed to him such operations as become his power, and hath not preserved his writings from those indecent fables which others have framed, although, by the great distance of time when he lived, he might have securely forged such lies; for he lived two thousand years ago; at which vast distance of ages the poets themselves have not been so hardy as to fix even the generations of their gods, much less the actions of their men, or their own laws. As I proceed, therefore, I shall accurately describe what is contained in our records, in the order of time that belongs to them; for I have already promised so to do throughout this undertaking; and this without adding any thing to what is therein contained, or taking away any thing therefrom.

4. But because almost all our constitution depends on the wisdom of Moses, our legislator, I cannot avoid saying somewhat concerning him beforehand, though I shall do it briefly; I mean, because otherwise those that read my book may wonder how it comes to pass, that my discourse, which promises an account of laws and historical facts, contains so much of philosophy. The reader is therefore to know, that Moses deemed it exceeding necessary, that he who would conduct his own life well, and give laws to others, in the first place should consider the Divine nature; and, upon the contemplation of God's operations, should thereby imitate the best of all patterns, so far as it is possible for human nature to do, and to endeavor to follow after it: neither could the legislator himself have a right mind without such a contemplation; nor would any thing he should write tend to the promotion of virtue in his readers; I mean, unless they be taught first of all, that God is the Father and Lord of all things, and sees all things, and that thence he bestows a happy life upon those that follow him; but plunges such as do not walk in the paths of virtue into inevitable miseries. Now when Moses was desirous to teach this lesson to his countrymen, he did not begin the establishment of his laws after the same manner that other legislators did; I mean, upon contracts and other rights between one man and another, but by raising their minds upwards to regard God, and his creation of the world; and by persuading them, that we men are the most excellent of the creatures of God upon earth. Now when once he had brought them to submit to religion, he easily persuaded them to submit in all other things: for as to other legislators, they followed fables, and by their discourses transferred the most reproachful of human vices unto the gods, and afforded wicked men the most plausible excuses for their crimes; but as for our legislator, when he had once demonstrated that God was possessed of perfect virtue, he supposed that men also ought to strive after the participation of it; and on those who did not so think, and so believe, he inflicted the severest punishments. I exhort, therefore, my readers to examine this whole undertaking in that view; for thereby it will appear to them, that there is nothing therein disagreeable either to the majesty of God, or to his love to mankind; for all things have here a reference to the nature of the universe; while our legislator speaks some things wisely, but enigmatically, and others under a decent allegory, but still explains such things as required a direct explication plainly and expressly. However, those that have a mind to know the reasons of every thing, may find here a very curious philosophical theory, which I now indeed shall wave the explication of; but if God afford me time for it, I will set about writing it (6) after I have finished the present work. I shall now betake myself to the history before me, after I have first mentioned what Moses says of the creation of the world, which I find described in the sacred books after the manner following.

SO WHY SHOULD THIS MATTER TO THE CHRISTIAN?

First of all you should desire as truthful translation of the Jewish Scriptures Yeshua used as possible. For over 200 years the Greek translation had been in existence and falsely translated by the Greek-Jews of Alexandria for theological purposes who patterned YHVH's Messianic predictions after their pagan gods. Such is the fruit of Hellenization on the Jews. In many places the Word of YHVH has been altered to make the Messiah conform to the pattern of mystery religions. As it that was not enough, when one's religious belief system includes a belief about Yeshua, then understand prophecies altered in the LXX would mistakenly be applied to him which have little relevance to his historical existence. False beliefs are attached to Yeshua let alone the Jewish Messiah. Many of these beliefs, all stemming from a fraudulent translation, are in the Words of the Jewish Scriptures considered sin by YHVH. And if that is not enough, this falsified Greek translation, in which the Jewish Rabbis only translated the first 5 books, has become the substrate for all Greek New Testaments which follow. If the Greek NT is based off a fraudulent translation of the Palestinian Masoretic text in hundreds of places because of the theological agendas of these Greek-Jewsish Pythagorean-Buddhists of Alexandria, Egypt, in the first two centuries B.C.E. as well as the futher corruptions by the monks during the Church age, then understand the Christian Bibles we have are false as well in these places. The quest for you is to divide the truth from the chaff. Such is an absolute impossibility without years of intense study in manuscript evidences. I have devoted much of my life to such a purpose and share these findings with you in hopes you, the reader, will understand that such alterations pass off today as truth and the sad fact of the reality of the matter is that God never gave it and Yeshua never believed it. Thus when alluding to the Scriptures in his day, Yeshua on two occasions mentions that the Palestinian text, and not the LXX, refers to him. Without a doubt Yeshua knew of the problems with the Greek translation in his day. So did the Rabbis.

Answer for yourself: Do You? And does it matter to you? The bottom line in all of this dear one, is that unless you have the Palestinian text, you have never read the unadulterated Word of God yet in you life. You have accepted in total faith a religious propagandist document full of hundreds of mistranslations, misquotations, and verses lifted out of context which has almost destroyed the true revelation of the Messiah given to Israel. If this touches your heart let us hear from you as we can help you better worship the Father in Spirit and in Truth and not through corrupted pagan texts mixed with some truth as found in your Christian Bibles. Shalom.

THE "SEPTUAGINT" TRANSLATION OF THE HEBREW SCRIPTURES INTO GREEK

Answer for yourself: How do you give authority to a new book that is in competition with a prior "best seller?"

Well that is simply, you build up big legends about this "new book" and spread them to the populace. In time your "new book," if merchandised correctly, will outsell your competition. This was done with the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures.

THE LETTER OF ARISTEAS

Forged tales were fabricated to account for the translation into Greek of the Jewish Scriptures, in what is known as the Septuagint Version. After the conquests by Alexander the Great and his establishment of the city of Alexandria in Egypt, immense numbers of Jews were settled in the new city, which quickly became the commercial and intellectual center of the ancient world, with Greek the universal language. The holy Hebrew language had become a dead language to the Jews of the "Dispersion"; their synagogue services could not be conducted in the mother tongue. The Alexandrian Jews, the vast majority who had been influenced by Hellenism and the Greek religious culture, were accordingly under necessity to render the "Law" into Greek for their public use; and this was gradually done by such of them as thought themselves able to do such work. These Greek-Jewish Essenes of Alexandria would take it upon themselves to translation the Jewish Scriptures into Greek as well as add many of their sect's doctrines and dogmas among its pages. But this common-place mode of rendering the sacred Hebrew into a Gentile speech did not satisfy the pious wonder-craving Jewish mind. Accordingly, somewhere about 200 B.C., an anonymous Jew invented a more satisfactory tale, which has had incalculable influence on the Christian faith and dogmas. This pious Israelite had the customary recourse to religions forgery; he forged a letter in the name of one Aristeas, an official of Ptolemy II, Philadelphus, the Greek king of Egypt, 285-247 B.C., purporting to be addressed to his brother, Philocrates, and giving a marvelous history of the Translation.

Here, in substance, is what we read of the first origin of the Version, limited therein to the "law" of Moses, as first related by Josephus. What we need to do is stop and think right now: at this time at the translation of the Jewish Scriptures into Greek the Jews recognized as their "Bible' ONLY the first five books of Moses. This is important because the legend will make it sound as if the Rabbis translated the whole of the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings. Their failure to do so explains the hundreds of corruptions and adulterations made to the text as it was translated into Greek by these Greek-Jews of Alexandria later. Ptolemy had recently established a library at Alexandria, which he purposed should contain a copy of every obtainable literary work extant. This Library became the most extensive and celebrated of the ancient world, containing some 700,000 manuscript books at the time it was savagely destroyed, in 391 A.D., by the benighted Christian zeal and fury of Bishop Theophilus of Alexandria and his crazy monks of Nitria, as related in Kingsley's Hypatia or any history of the times. CE. xiv, 625.) At the suggestion of Demetrius, his Librarian, fables the pseudo-Aristeas through Josephus, that he should enrich the Library with a copy of the sacred law (notice again it was the first 5 books of the Law only) of the Jews Ptolemy wrote to

Eleazar the chief priest at Jerusalem, sending the letter and magnificent presents "to God" by the hand of a delegation including Aristeas, requesting a copy of the Law and a number of learned Jews competent to translate it into Greek. The embassy was successful; a richly ornamented copy of the holy law, written in letters of gold, was sent to the King, together with seventy-two Doctors of Israel, deputed to deliver the Book and to carry out the wishes of the King. They were received with great honor, says pseudo-Aristeas, and duly feted for several days; they were then conducted across the long causeway to the Island of Pharos to the place which was prepared for them, "which was a house that was built near the shore, and was a quiet place, and fit for their discoursing together about their work, ... Accordingly they made an accurate interpretation, with great zeal and great pains," working until the ninth hour each day, and visiting Ptolemy every morning. "Now when the Law was transcribed [first 5 books only], and the labor of interpretation was over, which came to its conclusion in seventy-two days," the work was read over to the assembled Jews, who rejoiced that "the interpretation was happily finished"; they were enjoined to report any errors or emissions which they might discover, to the "Seventy," who would make the necessary corrections in their work. (Josephus, Antiq. Jews, Bk. XII, chap. 2; CE. xiii, 722.) Thus the translation was only of "The Law," the Five Books of Moses; and it was open team-work, all the Seventy-two working together, comparing and discussing as they proceeded, and expressly enjoining the Jews to note and report for correction all errors of omission or commission which they might discover.

NECESSARY CORRECTIONS? WHAT'S UP?

Thus the pseudo-Aristeas, as cited by Josephus; thought, as a matter of fact, this Septuagint Version, so-called because of the legendary Seventy-(two), was in the grossest manner inaccurate, and imported innumerable errors into the Christian religion which was based upon and propagated for several centuries only through the Septuagint texts. Indeed, "the text of the Septuagint was regarded as so unreliable, because of its freedom in rendering, and of the alterations which had been introduced into it, etc., that, during the second century of our era it was discarded by the Church." (Catholic Encyclopedia. iv, 625.) We shall notice the fearful error of Isaiah's "virgin-birth" text; for other well-known instances, it makes out Creation 1195 years earlier than the Hebrew and Vulgate, 4004 B.C., and the venerable Methuselah is made to survive the Flood by fourteen years.

Despite, however, its patently legendary character, the pseudo-Aristeas' account, the forged letter and the story, were eagerly accepted as genuine and authentic by Fathers, These Greek early Church Fathers, believing the legend, fell prey to the errors in the Greek text. Coupled with that and their inability to read Hebrew whereby such "purposeful mistranslations" could be easily spotted, they like most of us, fell prey to relying on a text full of error of which they never knew since adopting and believing in simple faith that this Greek translation was accurate and was the "Bible from God!" Popes and ecclesiastic writers until the sixteenth century, when their spurious character was revealed by the nascent modern criticism. "The authenticity of the letter, called in question first by Louis Vives (1492-1540), professor at Louvain, is now universally denied." (CE. xiii, 722.)

FURTHER EMBELLISHING OF THE LXX LEGEND...THE CREATIVITY OF THE CHURCH FATHERS

The Fathers, however, could not rest content with this unvarnished original fabrication in the name of Aristeas, of an ordinary human and errant translation of the "Law"; they avidly set about embellishing it in the accepted clerical style, adding fanciful and lying details to emphasize the miraculous and inspired origin of the Version. These actions guaranteed the success of the LXX over the Palestinian Masoretic text. What I find amazing is that Clement of Rome, the Bishop of Rome, the first major Christian writer after Paul, used only the Jewish Palestinian text for "all" his quotations of Scripture in his writings. It is not as if he did not know Greek, for being the Bishop of Rome dictated such, but yet, he quoted only from the Jewish Scriptures and not the Greek translation.

Answer for yourself: Did he know something we don't, are as yet just coming to the knowledge of?

As this notable instance of belief in legends serves admirably to illustrate the childish and uncritical credulity of the Fathers, their reckless disregard of truth, their chronic zest for any untruth or fable quotable to pander to the glory of God and enhance the pious superstition of the Faithful, let us here watch the growth of this simple human yarn of the Jewish Aristeas-forger into the wonderful and ever more embellished miracle as it passes from Father to Father, -- exactly as the Gospel-fables grew from "Mark" to "John." According to Fathers Tertullian, St. Augustine, St. Jerome, et als., the 72 were inspired by God each severally for the entire work; in translating they did not consult with one another; they had been shut up incomunicados in separate cells on Pharos, either singly or in pairs, and their several translations, when finished and compared, were found to agree entirely both as to sense and the expressions employed, with the original Hebrew text and with each other (St. Clement of Alexandria, St. Irenaeus, Justin Martyr). Finally, the 72 translated not only the Law, but the entire Old Testament, -- several of whose Books were not yet at the time written. Again this betrays the lack of truth and honesty as found in the early Church Fathers and yet we are to believe them and untold is the influence they had upon what we call Christianity today!

WHY CAN'T JUSTIN MARTYR GET THE FACTS RIGHT THE SECOND TIME?

Father Justin Martyr adds near-eye-witness verification to the false and already embroidered history, saying that the "Seventy" were, by order of the King, (Ptolemy)" shut up in as many separate cells, and were obliged by him, each to translate the whole Bible apart, and without any communication with each other, yet all their several translations were found to agree verbatim from the beginning to the end, and were by that means demonstrated to be of divine inspiration"; and he adds, for confirmation of faith! -- like Paul, protesting he is not lying in anticipation of the accusation: "These things, ye men of Greece, are no fable, nor do we narrate fictions; but we ourselves having been in Alexandria, saw the remains of the little [cells] at the Pharos still preserved." (Ad Graec. ch. xiii; ANF. i, 278-9.)

But in repeating the tale to the Roman Emperor, Father Justin makes the unhappy blunder of saying, that Ptolemy "sent to Herod, who was at that time king of the Jews, requesting that the books of the prophets [pseudo-Aristeas said the "Law"] be sent to him; and the king did indeed send them" (I Apol. ch. xxxi; ANF. i, 173).

Answer for yourself: Did you catch his lie?

Herod lived some 300 years after Ptolemy died. This forged fable is time and again repeated as sober truth.

Bishop Saint Irenaeus emphasizes the miraculous nature of the translation of all the Books, saying that when the 72 identical translations were compared, "God was indeed glorified, and the Scriptures were acknowledged an truly divine; ... even the Gentiles present perceived that the Scriptures had been interpreted by the inspiration of God. And there was nothing astonishing in God having done this. ... He inspired Esdras the priest (after the return from captivity) to recast all the words of the former prophets, and to reestablish with the people of God the Mosaic legislation." (Adv. Haer. III, xxi, 2; ANF. i, 451-2.) By now you should be seeing little miraculous was connected with them.

THE TRANSLATION OF THE REST OF THE JEWISH SCRIPTURES

In the course of a century or two before the Christian Era, the other Hebrew sacred books were likewise translated into Greek for the use of the Greek-speaking Jews of "the Dispersion," together with numbers of the forged Jewish apocrypha, and all these were added to the rolls of "Scriptures." This final and adulterated form of the Septuagint "was the vehicle which conveyed these additional Scriptures [i.e. the apocryphal Tobias, etc.] into the Catholic Church." (Catholic Ency. iii, 271.)

The role of the Holy Ghost in certifying the ill-translated and tempered Septuagint for the foundations of Christian Faith, was very disastrous, as CE. Points out:

"The Church had adopted the Septuagint as its own; this differed from the Hebrew not only by the addition of several books and passages but also by innumerable variations of text, due partly to the ordinary process of corruption in the transcription of ancient books, partly to the culpable temerity, as Origen called it, of correctors who used not a little freedom in making 'corrections,' additions, and suppressions, partly to mistakes in translation, and finally in great part to the fact that the original Septuagint had been made from a Hebrew text quite different from that fixed at Jamnia as the one standard by the Jewish Rabbis." (CE. vii, 316.)

So YHVH only knows what he actually said and did in the 4004 years up to the time of the birth of Jesus.

BUT THE WORST IS YET TO COME...IF THAT IS POSSIBLE

Matters grew worse as time progressed: the ex-Pagan Greek Fathers who founded Christianity, propagated the new Faith for several centuries only from the tortuous texts of this falsified Septuagint, which was the only Old Testament "Scriptures" known to and used by them as the source of the "prophecies fulfilled by Jesus Christ" and the holy mysteries of the Jewish-Christian Faith. "Copies of the Septuagint," says CE., "were multiplied, and, as might be expected, many changes, deliberate as well as involuntary, crept in." (CE. xiii, 723.) Indeed, the itch for Scripture-scribbling was so rife among such ex-Pagan Christians as could write and get hold of a copy, that St. Augustine complains: "It is possible to enumerate those who have translated the Scriptures from Hebrew into Greek, but not those who have translated them into Latin. In sooth, in the curly days of the faith whoso possessed a Greek manuscript and thought he had some knowledge of both tongues was daring enough to undertake a translation." (De Doct. Christ. II, xi; CE. ix, 20.) So the Faith was founded on befuddlement of the Blessed Word of God as any nondescript scribbler palmed it off to be.

The Holy Church never possessed or used a single book of "Scripture" or other document of importance, to the glory of God and the glorification of the Church, which was not a rank original forgery and bristled besides with "many deliberate changes" or forged interpolations.

THE HEBREW MANUSCRIPTS OF THE BIBLE & THE TESTIMONY OF THE CATHOLIC ENCYLOPEDIA

THE PRE-MASSORETIC TEXT

The earliest Hebrew manuscript is the Nash papyrus. There are four fragments, which, when pieced together, give twenty-four lines of a pre-Massoretic text of the Ten Commandments and the shema (Ex., xx, 2-17; Deut., v, 6-19; vi, 4-5). The writing is without vowels and seems paleographically to be not later than the second century. This is the oldest extant Bible manuscript (see Cook, "A Pre-Massoretic Biblical Papyrus" in "Proceed. of the Soc. of Bib. Arch.", Jan., 1903). It agrees at times with the Septuagint against the Massorah. Another pre- Massoretic text is the Samaritan Pentateuch. The Samaritan recension is probably pre-exilic; it has come down to us free from Massoretic influences, is written without vowels and in Samaritan characters. The earliest Samaritan manuscript extant is that of Nablûs, which was formerly rated very much earlier than all Massoretic manuscripts, but is now assigned to the twelfth or thirteenth century A.D. Here mention should be made of the non-Massoretic Hebrew manuscripts of the Book of Ecclesiasticus (q.v.). These fragments, obtained from a Cairo genizah (a box for worn-out or cast-off manuscripts), belong to the tenth or eleventh century of our ear. They provide us with more than a half of Ecclesiasticus and duplicate certain portions of the book. Many scholars deem that the Cairo fragments prove Hebrew to have been the original language of Ecclesiasticus (see "Facsimiles of the Fragments hitherto recovered of the Book of Ecclesiasticus in Hebrew", Oxford and Cambridge, 1901).

THE MASSORETIC TEXT

All other Hebrew manuscripts of the Bible are Massoretic, and belong to the tenth century or later. Probably the earliest Massoretic manuscripts are: "Prophetarium Posteriorum Codex Bablyonicus Petropolitanus", dated A.D. 916; the St. Petersburg Bible, written by Samuel ben Jacob and dated A.D. 1009; and "Codex Oriental. 4445" in the British Museum, which Ginsburg (Introduction, p. 469) assigns to A.D. 820-50. The text critics differ very widely in the dates they assign to certain Hebrew manuscripts. De Rossi is included to think that at most nine or ten Massoretic manuscripts are earlier than the twelfth century (Variæ Lectiones, I, p. xv).

The critical study of this rich assortment of about 3400 Massoretic rolls and codices is not so promising of important results as it would at first thought seem to be. The manuscripts are all of quite recent date, if compared with Greek, Latin, and Syriac codices. They are all singularly alike. Some few variants are found in copies made for private use; copies made for public service in the synagogues are so uniform as to deter the critic from comparing them. All Massoretic manuscripts bring us back to one editor -- that of a textual tradition which probably began in the second century and became more and more minute until every jot and tittle of the text was almost absolutely fixed and sacred. R. Akiba seems to have been the head of this Jewish school of the second century. Unprecedented means were taken to keep the text fixed.

The scholars counted the words and consonants of each book, the middle word and middle consonants, the peculiarities of script, etc. Even when such peculiarities were clearly due to error or to accident, they were perpetuated and interpreted by a mystical meaning. Broken and inverted letters, consonants that were too small or too large, dots which were out of place -- all these oddities were handed down as God-intended. This lack of variants in Massoretic manuscripts leaves us hopeless of reaching back to the original Hebrew text save through the versions. Kittel in his splendid Hebrew text gives such variants as the versions suggest.

THE TRUTH ABOUT WHAT WAS FOUND AT QUMRAN

There sure is a lot of talk about the Dead Sea Scrolls and what was discovered at Qumran. Sadly few know of what they are speaking of as rumor has again replaced solid facts and easily discernible evidence. The debate today, among those pseudo-scholars who have read at least one book on the subject, rages between which texts of the Bible found at Qumran are "authoritative." Many, too many, reply upon the Greek translation of the Jewish Bible for their Old Testaments today, and that for several reasons. First of all, this Greek translation was the translation used by the Greek-speaking church and later it would be the ultimate source and standard for all English translations since the beginning. Coupled with this was the discovery of portions of the Greek translations of the Jewish Scriptures at Qumran. With the failure of the church to read and understand Hebrew the Jewish Hebrews texts, along with the loss of the Hebrew language among the Hellenized Jews of the Second Temple period, even in the days of Jesus, Aramaic had replaced the use of Hebrew among all but the intellectuals and spiritual leadership. Needless to say the ability to read Hebrew fell into disuse long, long ago, and few early Church Fathers could handle the language. Therefore, for them their Bible had to be Greek.

This Greek Septuagint translation of the Torah was done between 285 and 244 B.C.E., as my quote from the Judaica below attests to. Further more, the other books of the Tanach were translated during the following 2 centuries, i.e. between 244 and 44 B.C.E.

"Septuagint, the oldest Greek translation of the Bible...the legend contained in the apocryphal letter of Aristeas, according to which 72 elders of Israel, six from each tribe, translated the LAW [Torah] into Greek in Alexandria, during the reign of Ptolemy II Philadelphus (285-244 B.C.E.)...The designation Septuagint was EXTENDED to the rest of the Bible and non-canonical books that were translated to Greek during the following two centuries" (Encylopaedia Judaica, Volume 14, p1178).

As stated above Biblical manuscripts were recovered in the Qumran excavations; some were Greek, some Aramaic, and some Hebrew. What escapes almost all today, even some scholars it seems, is that the Essenic community possessed conflicting "Bibles." In other words, the Greek read often exactly opposite to what the Hebrew would read.

Answer for yourself: How can this be and yet be the Word of God?

Without serious investigation on your part you most likely never knew this fact in the first place. Besides that, most today, if they know anything at all, have failed to be told about these alarming inconsistencies in the Biblical texts recovered there. There seems to be a general acceptance that the Greek manuscripts found there only solidify the authority already accepted for the Septuagint (the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures).

Let me say that the facts state otherwise along with some scholars who will attest to such. Let us examine just what was found there and see if the manuscripts discovered there confirm the authority of the Greek Bible over the Hebrew Old Testament.

THE FACTS DON'T LIE.....SO WHAT ARE THEY?

The Biblical manuscripts found in the Qumran, are distributed as follows: 60% Proto-Masoretic texts, 20% Qumran style manuscripts, 10% Nonaligned texts, 5% Proto-Samaritan texts, and 5% Septuagintal type texts.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice only 5 % of all the manuscripts found there were Greek? That means the vast majority of the texts were in Hebrew or Aramaic. So much for the fact that the Essenes accepted the authority of the Greek Old Testament and its variant readings over the Palestinian Massoretic text.

Further more, the Qumran style manuscripts have their bases in the proto-Masoretic texts. The Masoretic type texts were dominant in the time of the Hasmonean period (about 160 B.C.E.). (p172 of Reclaiming the Dead Sea Scrolls by Shiffman)

Furthermore, most of the text that vary from the Masoretic (4 LXX manuscript fragments, for example, dating to the 1st and second century B.C.E.), come from cave 4. This is the cave where the texts were not preserved carefully in jars. It is conjectured, that cave 4 was a geniza for the depositing of texts that were damaged or had textual errors.

Some say, 'Cave 4 is close to to Qumran, and had shelves, so it must have been where they kept the books they were currently using.' I disagree. The geniza of Cairo shows that flawed texts, text no longer usuable or never usable, that contained the Name of God were stored nearby. Many synagogues today have genizas in the synagogue itself. It would have been more likely for the people of Qumran to have stored the books they used daily or weekly directly in their settlement, in a building where it could be easily used. These cave 4 scrolls, were, in my opinion, part of a genizia of texts that were in error or unacceptable in other ways, yet could not be merely thrown out, as they contained the Name of God or were part of faulty Scriptural texts.

Additionally, another quote from the Encyclopaeadia Judaica supports this. "In talmudic and midrashic literature, however, it is [geniza] used as a nomen actionis (Shab. 16:1; Lev. R. 21:12; Meg. 26b), as a place for the putting away of all kinds of sacred articles, such as sacred books no longer usable, as well as the books of Sadducees and heretics, and other writings of which the sages disapproved but which were not required to be burned" ("Genizah", Encyclopaeadia Judaica)

Cave 7 contained a collection of only Greek texts, including 2 LXX fragments on paprus. (Shiffman, p 212).

Clearly, by the time of the Hasmoneans (who were before Jesus in history) at least, the Masoretic texts were the majority texts. Jesus himself followed the same division of the Tanach into Torah, Prophets, and Psalms (ie writings), as it says in Luke 24:44. Jesus never made mention of the "four divisions" of the Greek Bible which was existing in his day.

The texts are sacred to us, so the task of copying them is considered of utmost importance. A number of safe guards are taken to preserve the accuracy by the scribe himself. The congregation who gets the scroll is another check in the accuracy of the scroll. They always have someone checking the Hebrew as the scroll is read, comparing it to a scroll that is known to be Kosher (i.e., without errors). Based on the Biblical scrolls found in Qumran, the Jewish scribes have done a remarkably accurate job of passing the text down for the last 2200 years.

In the approximately 2000 years since the writing of the Dead Sea Scroll Isaiahs, it is interesting to note that the only difference between those and the Masoretic text are minor spelling errors in the DSS Isaiah versions. Scholars interpret this and understand that such "accuracy" for such older manuscripts (the DSS Isaiah almost 1000 years older than any known existing Hebrew manuscript before the find at Qumran) lends credibility and assurance that the older existing Massoretic texts which were previously only known from the 9th century A.D., were just as equally meticulously preserved as well from their earlier sources. So this meticulousness in care and copying of the Hebrew manuscripts has been attested to and proven by archeological finds. Such precision and care can be expected to be applied to all the translations by the Jewish scribes. And when Qumran reveals Massoretic and pre-Massoretic texts existing contemporary to the Septuagint, then there is no longer any need for doubt reading its accuracy. The problem comes when one realizes that and can no longer blame the divergent readings of the Massoretic texts as Jewish reactionism to Christianity in the Middle Ages. This simply will not hold water any longer. One must now deal with these divergent readings found at Qumran and as attested in the Jewish Tanakh as they oppose many readings in the Greek Septuagint and the later Christian translations.

It is also important to note that in communities as far apart as Syria or Yemin and England, isolated from each other, the Torah is the same. This is amazing given the distance between them before the age of mass communication and given the isolation of the 2 communities from each other. They were not comparing notes, but copying the Torah from previous ones in their possession. This attests to the accurate transmission of the Torah and Tanach following the scribal methods.

In contrast, early in Church history, a Church Father set out to make a standard version of the LXX, due to the fact that there were so many versions out there.

Origen became alarmed at the state of the Greek text of the Bible: the latter not only differed considerably from the Hebrew text of the Jews, which he believed to be the original one, but it appeared in a wide range of forms in the manuscripts current among the Christians. His purpose in producing his enormous work known as the Hexapla ("the sixfold," completed in 245 C.E.) was to reconstitute and standardize the "genuine" text of the Septuagint, essential both to sound exegesis and effective apologetics.

The Hexapla did not become preeminent throughout the Christian world, since, at the end of the fourth century, Jerome referred to the existence of two other recensions, one Egyptian by Hesychius, and the other made in Asia Minor by Lucian. The existence of these three versions might in itself afford a sufficient explanation of the many discrepancies displayed by the Septuagint manuscripts (Encyclopaedia Judaica, "Bible: Translations").

Considering the painstaking accuracy with which the Tanach is copied, I would rather rely on the oldest Hebrew manuscripts we have today and their translation rather than the Greek mistranslation, no matter how good it might be or others attest to it. You see, the language of the translation limits its accuracy. Greek is very different from Hebrew, and the translation was designed to meet the needs of a Greek-speaking audience. The language you use colors the meaning, and the LXX is thus colored by the Greek language let alone purposefully mistranslated in many, many places. Something that might be of interest to you. Origen, one of the Church father's, believed that the Hebrew text of the Jews was the original text. (Encylopaedia Judaica, "Bible", p853). Many modern translations, such as the NRSV, make use of the Hebrew Masoretic text.

THE HEBREW MASORETIC TEXT....OR THE GREEK SEPTUAGINT...WHICH IS FROM GOD?

"What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God." (Rom. 3:1-2)

According to the Bible, the Hebrews were given charge of keeping and copying God's word. The word "oracle" means revelation, prophecy, canon, or edict. It was unto the Jew, that the Old Testament revelation and canon were committed. This is why twice in the Old Testament they were instructed not to add to or take from the word of God:

"Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the LORD your God which I command you." (Deut. 4:2).

"Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." (Prov. 30:6).

MAKING SURE THE COMMANDMENTS WERE OBEYED WHEN COPYING THE MANUSCRIPTS

The faithful Hebrew scribe took this task very seriously. Precise steps were taken by the scribes in preparing both the parchment upon which they wrote, and in preparing themselves in order to copy God's Holy word. According to the Hebrew Talmud, the rules of the scribe consisted of the following:

- 1). The skins of the parchments had to be prepared in a special way and dedicated to God so that they would be clean in order to have God's words written on them.
- 2). The ink which was used was black and made in accordance to a special recipe used only for writing scripture.
- 3). The words written could not be duplicated by memory but must be reproduced from an authentic copy which the scribe had before him. And, the scribe had to say each word aloud when he wrote them.
- 4). Each time the scribe came across the Hebrew word for God, he had to wipe his pen clean. And when he came across the name of God, Jehovah (YHWH), he had to wash his whole body before he could write it.
- 5). If a sheet of parchment had one mistake on it, the sheet was condemned. If there were three mistakes found on any page, the whole manuscript was condemned. Each scroll had to be checked within thirty days of its writing, or it was considered unholy.
- 6). Every word and every letter was counted. If a letter or word were omitted, the manuscript was condemned.
- 7). There were explicit rules for how many letters and words allowed on any given parchment. A column must have at least 48 lines and no more than 60. Letters and words had to be spaced at a certain distance and no word could touch another.

CONFIRMING TESTIMONY TO THE METICULOUSNESS IN THE COPYING OF THE JEWISH BIBLE

Commenting on these rules, Dr. H.S. Miller writes, "Some of these rules may appear extreme and absurd, yet they show how sacred the Holy Word of the Old Testament was to its custodians, the Jews (Rom. 3:2), and they gave us strong encouragement to believe that we have the real Old Testament, the same on which our Lord had and which was originally given by inspiration of God" (General Biblical Introduction, p. 185).

In his book, The Text of the Old Testament, Dr. Ernst Wurthwein writes, "This was the purpose of the scribes' meticulous work. They counted the verses, words, and letters of the Law and other parts of the Scriptures as a procedural aid in preparing manuscripts and in checking their accuracy." (Eerdmans Publishing, 1979, p. 19).

The Jewish historian Josephus (37-95 AD) comments on the preciseness of the Jewish scribes and their faithfulness in copying the Old Testament scriptures. "...for during so many ages as have already passed, no one has been so bold as either to add anything to them; but it becomes natural to all Jews, immediately and from their very birth, to esteem those books to contain divine doctrines, and to persist in them, and, if occasion be, willingly to die for them." (Flavius Josephus, Against Apion 1:8). Some have taken Josephus' statement to mean the contents of the Old Testament. Other have understood it to mean the canon of the Old Testament. Either way, his statement affirms the sacredness the Hebrews have for Holy Scripture.

WHAT THE DEAD SEA SCROLLS TAUGHT US...THAT WE HAD WRONG

For years it had been thought that the Bible which Christ used was the Greek Septuagint (also known as the LXX). The common thought was that the Jews at the time of Christ had all but lost their use of Hebrew. Since the international language of that day was Greek, the hypothesis was that Christ did not use the Hebrew scriptures, but read from the Greek LXX. However, with the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls it has been established that the Jews did not lose there use of Hebrew. In fact, most of their writings (both sacred and otherwise) were written in Hebrew.

Alan Millard has written the following about the Dead Sea Scrolls (DSS) and their relation to ancient languages. "Aramaic, Greek, Latin... was Hebrew spoken too? For years scholars believed not, or that it was restricted to religious circles, synagogue readings and prayers, and the Temple. Counting in favor of a wider knowledge is the presence of Hebrew inscriptions on the other side of Hasmonean coins. That might mean no more than Latin legends on coins of recent times--a grand style which the educated could understand. However, recent discoveries have thrown new light on the question. Books in a style of Hebrew imitating the Old Testament yet distinct from it, and some in Hebrew more like that of the Mishnah make up a larger section of the Dead Sea Scrolls" (Discoveries From the Time of Jesus, Lion Pub., Oxford; p. 35. Professor Millard has served with the British Museum in the Department of Western Asiatic Antiquities and is Rankin Reader in Hebrew and Ancient Semitic languages at the University of Liverpool).

WHICH OLD TESTAMENT DID JESUS READ...THE JEWISH ONE OR THE ONE WE HAVE TODAY AS CHRISTIANS WHICH CAME FROM THE GREEK?

This discovery confirms what we find in the Gospels concerning the Hebrew Old Testament used by Jesus. In Matthew, Jesus proclaims; "For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." (Matt. 5:18). It is interesting that he used the words "jot" and "tittle." In the Wycliffe Bible Commentary, Dr. Homer Kent of Grace Theological Seminary writes, "Jot. Smallest letter of the Hebrew alphabet (yodh). Tittle. Tiny projection on certain Hebrew letters." (p.937). The smallest part of the letters Jesus used to describe the fact that the law would not pass until all was fulfilled, were Hebrew. This would be odd if Jesus were reading from a Greek Old Testament.

Further, Jesus says in Luke 11:51; "From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple: verily I say unto you, It shall be required of this generation.". This statement attests that Jesus used the Hebrew canon of scripture and not the Greek translation which was available in his day. The order of books found in our Old Testament run from Genesis to Malachi. The Greek LXX has the same order but adds additional books (the Apocrypha). The Hebrew canon, while containing the same books as our Old Testament, places the order of the books differently. The Hebrew Bible runs from Genesis to 2 Chronicles with the minor prophets in the middle and not the end as in our Old Testament. We know that Abel was killed by his brother according to Genesis 4:8. Zacharias was killed in 2 Chronicles 24:20-22. Thus showing the first and last to die according to the Jewish Bible. Dr. Merrill Tenney agrees by simply stating, "Able was the first martyr of the OT history. Zacharias was the last, according to the order of books in the Hebrew Bible, which, unlike the English Bible, ends with Chronicles." (Ibid. p.1049). With these things in mind, we can safely say the Bible of Jesus was a Hebrew Bible.

THE MASORETIC TEXT:

The Masoretic Text is the traditional Hebrew Old Testament text of both Judaism and Protestantism (The Catholic Church, historically, used the Latin translation of Jerome based on the Greek LXX). Masoretic comes from the word "Masora" which usually refers to the notes printed beside the Hebrew text by Jewish scribes and scholars.

Until recently, the oldest manuscripts of the Hebrew Old Testament dated from the ninth century and onward. These Hebrew manuscripts of the middle ages are in general agreement with each other. The Biblia Hebraica by Kittel is the basic Hebrew Old Testament used by scholars and translators and is based on the Masoretic Text from this time period. However, with the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls Hebrew Scriptures and manuscripts which date from around 168 BC to about 68 AD were discovered which predate the previously known most ancinet extant Hebrew Scriptures known to mankind. Here we now have Hebrew manuscripts which outdate the previous middle age Hebrew manuscripts by about 1,000 years. What is interesting to the student of textual criticism and the believer in Biblical preservation, is the fact that a large number of the DSS agree with the Masoretic Text and against the Septuagint reading! Although there are some manuscripts within the findings of the DSS which agree with the LXX and also reflect a differing Hebrew Text with a number of variants, the fact remains that we now have manuscripts dating from the time of Jesus or before which agree with the Masoretic Text. This give additional credence to the preciseness and integrity of the Hebrew scribes in their accuracy of reproducing the manuscripts throughout the ages. And, most importantly, it shows the preservation of the Old Testament Text in Hebrew is preserved by God in the Jewish faith.

Dr. Emanuel Tov of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem and one of the editors of the DSS writes: "Of similar importance are the new data about the context of the biblical scrolls, since different texts are recognizable [this is explained when one understands the evolution of the Essene sect and their evolving religious beliefs from fundamental Judaism in 170 B.C. E. to Pythagorean-Buddhist apocalypticism in pre 70 A.D.]. Some texts reflect precisely the consonantal framework of the medieval MT (Masoretic Text). Others reflect the basic framework of the MT, although their spelling is different. Still others differ in many details from the MT, while agreeing with the Septuagint or Samaritan Pentateuch. Some texts do not agree with any previously known text at all, and should be considered independent textual traditions. Thus, the textual picture presented by the Qumran scrolls represents a textual variety that was probably typical for the period." (The Oxford Companion to the Bible edited by Bruce Metzger and Michael Coogan, 1993; p.160)

Norman Geisler and William Nix attest to most of the DSS reflecting the Masoretic Text. In their book,

A General Introduction to the Bible, they write, "The (Dead Sea) scrolls give an overwhelming confirmation of the fidelity of the Masoretic text." (p. 261). They go on to cite Millar Burrows' work, "The Dead Sea Scrolls," "It is a matter of wonder, " states Burrows, "that through something like a thousand years the text underwent so little alteration. As I said in my first article on the scroll, 'Herein lies its chief importance, supporting the fidelity of the Masoretic tradition.'" (Ibid.). Ernst Wurthwein cites R. de Vaux as saying, "The script is more developed, the Biblical text is definitely that of the Masora, and it must be concluded from this that the documents from Qumran (i.e. DSS) are older, earlier than the second century [B.C.E.]" (Wurthwein, p. 31). Concerning the scrolls of Isaiah found in Cave 1 at Qumran, Wurthwein writes, "The scrolls (1QIsa. a.) has a popular type text which supports (the Masoretic Text) essentially, but which also offers a great number of variants. . .A second Isaiah manuscripts (1QIsa. b.) is fragmentary, but stands much closer to the Masoretic text." (Ibid. p. 32).

Additional manuscripts have also been found which support the Masoretic Text. Again Wurthwein informs us of the following: "Also important are the remains of fourteen scrolls with Biblical texts from the period before AD 73, discovered while excavating the rock fortress of Masada in the Judean desert in 1963-1965. These agree extensively with the traditional Biblical texts--only in the text of Ezekiel are there a few insignificant variants." (Ibid. p. 31). To these we can also add the Geniza Fragments which date from the fifth century AD. These manuscripts were discovered in 1890 at Cairo, Egypt. They were located in a type of storage room for worn or faulty manuscripts, which was called the Geniza. The fragments number around 200,000 and reflect Biblical texts in Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic. The Biblical texts discovered support the Masoretic Text.

In one sense, the Masoretic Text may be thought of as the Textus Receptus of the Old Testament. In fact, some scholars have referred to it as such. Like the Textus Receptus of the New Testament, the Masoretic Text is based on the majority of manuscripts and reflects the traditional text used. Although there are differences found in some Masoretic Texts, these differences are minor and usually deal with, orthography, vowel points, accents, and divisions of the text. In 1524/25, Daniel Bomberg published an edition of the Masoretic Text based on the tradition of Jacob ben Chayyim. Jacob ben Chayyim was a Jewish refugee who later became a Christian. It was his text which was used by the translators of the King James Bible for their work in the Old Testament, and it was the basis of Kittel's first two editions of his Hebrew text. Wurthwein notes that the text of ben Chayyim, "enjoyed an almost canonical authority up to our own time." (Ibid. p. 37).

For about six generations the Masoretic Text was reproduced by the ben Asher family. Moses ben Asher produced a text in 895 AD known as Codex Cairensis containing the writing of the Prophets. Codex Leningradensis dates to 1008 AD and was based on the work of Aaron ben Moses ben Asher, the son of Moses ben Asher. This Codex is the oldest manuscript containing the complete Bible. Some of the differences found within this family of manuscripts are the basis of Kittel's third edition of his Biblia Hebraica and has been used by scholars in producing modern translations of the Bible, such as the New International Version (1978), the New King James Version (1982), and the New Revised Standard Version (1989).

For the most part, scholarship agrees that the Masoretic Text became the standard authorized Hebrew text around 100 AD in connection with the completion of the New Testament.

Thus we see that the Masoretic Text existed prior to the writings of the New Testament, was used as the official Hebrew Old Testament at the time of the establishing of the Biblical canon, and has been used since as the official representation of the Hebrew originals

THE GREEK SEPTUAGINT:

The most noted Old Testament translated into Greek is the Septuagint (also known as the LXX). The conventional thought is that the LXX was translated from the Hebrew text by Hellenistic Jews during the period from 275 to 100 BC at Alexandria, Egypt. This has been proven legend today! And, as pointed out by scholars such as Ralph W. Klein, the LXX used a differing Hebrew text and not that of the Masoretic Text type, as reflected in some of the finding among the DSS. The LXX was used by Jerome in producing his Old Testament of the Latin Vulgate used by the Roman Catholic Church, and the LXX remains the official Old Testament of the Greek Orthodox Church. This accounts for the additional books found in the Catholic and Orthodox Churches known as the Apocrypha, because they are contained in the text of the LXX.

The association of the Latin numbers LXX (meaning 70) with the Septuagint comes from the legend concerning the origin of this Greek translation. According to the Letter of Aristeas seventy Jewish scholars were chosen to translate the Law of Moses into Greek so that it could be added to the great library of Ptolemy Philadelphus in Alexandria, Egypt. The letter states that the High Priest in Jerusalem sent 72 scholars to the Egyptian king. The High Priest writes, "In the presence of all the people I selected six elders from each tribe, good men and true, and I have sent them to you with a copy of our law. It will be a kindness, O righteous king, if you will give instruction that as soon as the translation of the law is completed, the men shall be restored again to us in safety." (Letter of Aristeas 2:34-35). Thus six scholars from the twelve tribes number seventy-two (it is to be assumed that the 70 is merely a rounding off of the 72).

One wide-spread myth concerning the LXX is an old story which states that the translators worked on their translation alone and compared their work each morning, only to find that each had translated the passage exactly the same. This, of course, has no historical foundation and some have falsely applied this story to the translators of the King James Bible. However, stories such as this one caused some to claim inspiration for the LXX.

Dr. Karlfried Froehlich notes this and writes, "Inspiration was also claimed for the Greek translation of the 'Seventy', which was endorsed by Alexandrian Jewish authorities. In Christian eyes, the legend of the Septuagint's miraculous origin, first told in the Letter of Aristeas, then elaborated by Philo, and further embellished by Christian authors such as Justin Martyr, Irenaeus of Lyons, Tertullian, and Augustine, even rendered the Septuagint superior to the Hebrew original." (The Oxford Companion to the Bible, p. 310).

Answer for yourself: Since when does "legend" render a fraud as superior a document which, upon comparison with the source document (the Jewish Palestinian text) be shown to contain hundreds of purposeful mistranslations for theological purposes?

Even if the story given in the Letter of Aristeas were true, the Greek translation deals only with the first five books of the Old Testament. Most scholars note that there are differences in style and quality of translation within the LXX and assign a much greater time frame than the seventy-two days allotted in the Letter of Aristeas. In his book, Textual Criticism of the Old Testament: The Septuagint after Qumran, Ralph Klein notes, "the Letter of Aristeas is riddled with many historical improbabilities and errors. . .And yet, however legendary and improbable the details, many still believe that some accurate historical facts about the LXX can be distilled from Aristeas: (1) the translation began in the third century BC; (2) Egypt was the place of origin; and (3) the Pentateuch was done first." (p. 2).

Dr. F. F. Bruce correctly points out that, strictly speaking, the LXX deals only with the Law and not the whole Old Testament. Bruce writes, "The Jews might have gone on at a later time to authorize a standard text of the rest of the Septuagint, but . . . lost interest in the Septuagint altogether. With but few exceptions, every manuscript of the Septuagint which has come down to our day was copied and preserved in Christian, not Jewish, circles." (The Books and the Parchments, p.150). This is important to note because the manuscripts which consist of our LXX today date to the third century AD. Although there are fragments which pre-date Christianity and some of the Hebrew DSS agree with the LXX, the majority of manuscripts we have of the LXX date well into the Christian era. And, not all of these agree.

The most noted copy of the LXX is that found in the Hexapla by Origen. Origen produced an Old Testament with six translations paralleled together, called the Hexapla which means sixfold. The fifth column was the LXX. (The columns of the Hexapla were as follows: 1. The Hebrew text. 2. The Hebrew transliterated into Greek. 3.

The Greek translation of Aquila. 4. The Greek translation of Symmachus. 5. The LXX. 6. The Greek translation of Theodotion.) However, we do not have Origen's Hexapla (with the exception of a few limited fragments). Sir Frederic Kenyon wrote, "A considerable number of MSS. exist which give information as to Origen's Hexaplaric text and particular passages in the other columns, but these do not go far towards enabling us to recover the LXX text as it existed before Origen; and this remains the greatest problem which confronts the textual student of the Septuagint. Until we can do that, we are not in a position fully to utilize the evidence of the Greek for the recovery of the pre-Masoretic Hebrew." (The Text of the Greek Bible, p.35). In other words, we cannot fully reconstruct Origen's fifth column, let alone a pre-Origenian Septuagint.

Origen's LXX was revised and edited by two of his disciples, Pamphilus and Eusebius. There were additional Greek translations of the Old Testament during this time which were also contained in the Hexapla, such as the work by Aquila and Theodotion. Some scholars believe that the translation produced by Theodotion replaced the LXX in the book of Daniel so that the readings there are really that of Theodotion and not of the LXX. However, others have claimed that this is not the case. Therefore, concerning Origen's Hexapla and the LXX the best scholars can say is that cited by Ernst Wurthwein, "Although no authentic manuscript of the Hexaplaric Septuagint has survived, there are manuscripts which represent the text of Origen more or less closely." (The Text of the Old Testament, p.57). Two such manuscripts which represent the text of Origen are Codex Vaticanus and Codex Sinaiticus.

THE LXX AND THE KJV TRANSLATORS

It is interesting to note in our study of manuscript evidence and the King James Bible, how the translators of the KJV viewed the LXX. This Greek work did not go unnoticed by these men as can be seen in the original preface to the KJV written by Dr. Miles Smith. The following are a few paragraphs from the KJV preface for the student to consider. Afterwards, comments will be made.

1) "Notwithstanding, though it was commended generally, yet it did not fully content the learned, no not of the Jews. For not long after Christ, Aquila fell in hand with a new Translation, and after him Theodotion, and after him Symmachus; yea, there was a fifth and a sixth edition, the Authors whereof were not known. (Epiphan. de mensur. et ponderibus.) These with the Seventy made up the Hexapla and were worthily and to great purpose compiled together by Origen."

2) "Yet for all that, as the Egyptians are said of the Prophet to be men and not God, and their horses flesh and not spirit (Isa 31:3); so it is evident, (and Saint Jerome affirmed as much) (S. Jerome. de optimo genere interpret.) that the Seventy were Interpreters, they were not Prophets; they did many things well, as learned men; but yet as men they stumbled and fell, one while through oversight, another while through ignorance, yea, sometimes they may be noted to add to the Original, and sometimes to take from it; which made the Apostles to leave them many times, when they left the Hebrew, and to deliver the sense thereof according to the truth of the word, as the spirit gave them utterance. This may suffice touching the Greek Translations of the Old Testament."

3) "Now to the latter we answer; that we do not deny, nay we affirm and avow, that the translation of the Bible in English, set forth by men of our profession, (for we have seen none of theirs of the whole Bible as yet) containeth the word of God, nay, is the word of God. As the King's speech, which he uttereth in Parliament, being translated into French, Dutch, Italian, and Latin, is still the King's speech, though it be not interpreted by every Translator with the like graadventure so fitly for phrase, nor so expressly for sense, everywhere. . The Romanists therefore in refusing to hear, and daring to burn the Word translated, did no less than despite the spirit of grace, from whom originally it proceeded, and whose sense and meaning, as well as man's weakness would able, it did express. . .The like we are to think of Translations. The translation of the Seventy dissenteth from the Original in many places, neither doth it come near it, for perspicuity, gravity, majesty; yet which of the Apostles did condemn it? Condemn it? Nay, they used it, . . .To be short, Origen, and the whole Church of God for certain hundred years, were of another mind: for they were so far from treading under foot, (much more from burning) the Translation of Aquila a Proselyte, that is, one that had turned Jew;

of Symmachus, and Theodotion, both Ebionites, that is, most vile heretics, that they joined together with the Hebrew Original, and the Translation of the Seventy (as hath been before signified out of Epiphanius) and set them forth openly to be considered of and perused by all. But we weary the unlearned, who need not know so much, and trouble the learned, who know it already."

In the first paragraph we find that the KJV translators attest to Origen's Hexapla and early Greek translations of the Old Testament which post-date the birth of Christianity. These translations, along with the LXX, paralleled in the Hexapla.

The second paragraph shows that the KJV translators saw some of the limitations of the LXX. They recognized that the LXX was produced by Interpreters and not by inspired Prophets. Although the LXX translates many things well, it also failed many times and departed from the original Hebrew (i.e. Masoretic Text). Sometimes the LXX adds to the Hebrew, and at other times it omits. Which, according the KJV translators, made the New Testament writers to, "leave them many times, when they left the Hebrew, and to deliver the sense thereof according to the truth of the word, as the spirit gave them utterance." This simply means that when a New Testament writer cites the LXX, they freely corrected the LXX when it differed from the Hebrew, or as they were moved by inspiration.

The third paragraph is lengthy to show the context. The KJV translators promoted the use of translations. Not as we have come to understand it with a variety of versions differing from one another, but the importance of having the word of God translated into the language of those who cannot read Hebrew or Greek. Their argument was against the Catholic Church which at that time made it a practice of burning Bibles which were in any language other than Latin. The Catholic Church considered such translations as corrupt and worthy of burning. The KJV translators are arguing that the history of the Church demonstrates that even when a translation is poorly done, God can still use it and it should not be burned, as the Catholic Church had a practice of doing. They illustrate their point with the Greek translations of Aquila and Theodotion, which were translated by non-believers and yet their work was not burned by believers. They claim the same with the LXX.

THE LXX AND THE NEW TESTAMENT.....LET'S COMPARE AGAINST THE JEWISH PALESTINIAN MASORETIC TEXT...AND YOU SEE FOR YOURSELF

There are several places where the New Testament quotations of the Old Testament are said to be citations of the LXX. What you need to be concerned about is if this quotation from the LXX as found in your New Testament is faithfully represented as it is worded in the Jewish Scriptures. What you will see if you take the following test is that the New Testament writers are guilty of mishandling and abuse of Jewish Scripture in order to create a new religion and replace the faith of Jesus with one created about him. Without a good background in the Jewish Old Testament one reads the New Testament and notices that it is full of Old Testament quotes all the while believing that these Old Testament quotes refers in some way to Yeshua. But these as well as many other quotes in the New Testament supposedly referring to Yeshua have been lifted out of their original context and used in ways contrary to their original meanings. We end up thinking that the Old Testament was prophesying the coming of Yeshua, when in reality, the passages quoted by the New Testament writers had nothing to do with him at all.

Answer for yourself: How are you to know if what I said is true?

Now you can approach this two different ways. You can look up the New Testament quote and reference it to the more than likely mistranslated and misquoted passage in your Christian Old Testament (as taken from the LXX) and you won't detect any difference. Or you can go out an buy a Stone Edition Tanakh which is as faithful a Jewish translation of the Old Testament as you could get today. Then open all three books at once to the passage in question and compare them according to the following parameters:

Take your New Testament quote then run its source in your Christian OT and then in the Jewish Tanakh. Next compare these three passages according to the following parameters.

Let me give you again the mechanics involved in textual manipulation whereby we end up with something different in meaning that the original author intended.

- 1. Were the Jewish texts and phrases are lifted out of their places and contexts in the Hebrew Scriptures and given meanings which, at best, are forced and alien to what the original writer intended his audience to understand?
- 2. Preceding many of the prophetic verses in the New Testament is the emendation: "What was said through the prophet was thus fulfilled." In this way the writers of the Christian Scriptures endeavored to show that the Tanakh anticipated and predicted the events recorded in the New Testament. If you determined that the above #1 criteria was violated then understand what you are reading in the New Testament is anything but a "fulfillment."
- 3. Understand the techniques employed to establish false proof-texts: the citation of verses out of context, purposeful mistranslation, and purposeful misquotation to serve a theological agenda of the translators.
- 4. Sometimes a figurative or poetic phrase is mistaken for a straightforward statement and vice versa.
- 5. Sometimes sayings of different writers, living in different places, and in different centuries are run together.
- 6. Often two or more of these methods are used in a single quotation.

The following is a list provided by the American Bible Society (ABS) of LXX readings in the NT. The OT passage is given first, followed by the NT citation of it in parentheses. This list may not be complete but presented for your own homework.

Genesis 5:24 (Heb. 11:5) Genesis 46:27 (Acts. 7:14) Genesis 47:31 (Heb. 11:21) Exodus 9:16 (Rom. 9:17) Deuteronomy 17:7 (1 Cor. 5:13) Deuteronomy 18:15 (Acts 3:22) Deuteronomy 27:26 (Gal. 3:10) Deuteronomy 29:18 (Heb. 12:15) Deuteronomy 32:17 (1 Cor. 10:20) Deuteronomy 32:43 (Heb. 1:6) Psalm 2:1-2 (Acts 4:25-26) Psalm 2:9 (Rev. 2:27) Psalm 4:4 (Eph. 4:26) Psalm 5:9 (Rom. 3:13) Psalm 8:2 (Matt. 21:16) Psalm 8:5 (Heb. 2:7) Psalm 10:7 (Rom. 3:14) Psalm 14:3 or 53:3 (Rom. 3:12) Psalm 16:8-11 (Acts 2:25-28) Psalm 19:4 (Rom. 10:18) Psalm 34:12 (1 Pet. 3:10) Psalm 40:6 (Heb. 10:5) Psalm 51:4 (Rom. 3:4) Psalm 69:22-23 (Rom. 11:9-10) Psalm 95:7-8 (Heb. 3:15; 4:7) Psalm 102:25-27 (Heb. 1:10-12) Psalm 104:4 (Heb. 1:7) Psalm 116:10 (2 Cor. 4:13) Psalm 118:6 (Heb. 13:6) Proverbs 3:4 (2 Cor. 8:21) Proverbs 3:34 (James 4:6; 1 Pet. 5:5) Proverbs 3:11-12 (Heb. 12:5-6) Proverbs 4:26 (Heb. 12:13) Proverbs 11:31 (1 Pet. 4:18) Proverbs 25: 21-22 (Rom. 12:20) Isaiah 1:9 (Rom. 9:29) Isaiah 6:9-10 (Matt. 13:14-15; Mark 4:12; Luke 8:10; John 12:40; Acts 28:26-27) Isaiah 7:14 (Matt. 1:23) Isaiah 10:22-23 (Rom. 9:27-28) Isaiah 11:10 (Rom. 15:12) Isaiah 26:11 (Heb. 10:27) Isaiah 28:16 (Rom. 9:33; 10:11; 1 Pet. 2:6) Isaiah 29:13 (Matt. 15:8-9; Mark 7:6-7) Isaiah 29:14 (1 Cor. 1:19) Isaiah 40:3-5 (Matt. 3:3; Mark 1:3; Luke 3:4-6) Isaiah 40:6-7 (James 1:10-11; 1 Pet. 1:24) Isaiah 40:13 (Rom. 11:34; 1 Cor. 2:16) Isaiah 42:4 (Matt. 12:21) Isaiah 43:20 (1 Pet. 2:9) Isaiah 45:23 (Rom. 14:11; Phil. 2:11) Isaiah 52:5 (Rom. 2:24) Isaiah 52:15 (Rom. 15:21) Isaiah 53:1 (John 12:38, 40; Rom. 10:16) Isaiah 59:20-21 (Rom. 11:26-27) Isaiah 61:1 (Luke 4:18) Isaiah 65:1-2 (Rom. 10:20-21) Jeremiah 31:32 (Heb. 8:9) Ezekiel 28:13 (Rev. 2:7) Hosea 13:14 (1 Cor. 15:55) Joel 2:30-31 (Acts 2:19-20) Amos 5:25-27 (Acts 13:34) Amos 9:11-12 (Acts 15:16-18) Habakkuk 1:5 (Acts 13:41) Habakkuk 2:4 (Heb. 10:38) Haggai 2:5 (Heb. 12:26)

As one can see, the list is rather lengthy (and I might add incomplete). It would be rather tedious to compare all the verses in this list. But that is exactly what you have to do if you are to see for yourself where the New Testamant rendering of a passage, as taken from your Christian Old Testament, as taken from the Greek translation is completely and diametrically opposed to the rendering as originally taken from the Jewish Masoretic text.

I would also recommend a final test to prove to you what I said is true. Buy another book: Anti-semitism in the New Testament by Lillian Freudmann. Read this book page by page with all three of the above Bibles open (the Jewish OT, the Christian OT, and the NT). Read page by page and compare every passage with these three sources all the while remembering that we non-Jews who are "believers" deserved a translation and not a free creationism! Read this book and then try to tell yourself that the NT is not forged because your Old Testament was forged to begin with!

I wish to be fair to the case in point. There are many times when the Greek of the LXX and the NT match word perfectly. To explain this the ABS states, "The writers of the New Testament generally quoted or paraphrased the ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament, commonly known as the Septuagint Version," (New Testament Passages Quoted or Paraphrased from the Septuagint, found in the TEV, Thomas Nelson Pub. 1976 ed. p. 367). The problem here is that once we open the possibility that many of the citations are not quotations but "paraphrases" of the LXX, we cannot be certain that it was in fact the LXX that was paraphrased.

Since there are differences between the NT citations and both the LXX and the Masoretic Text, the question arises as to what translation the writers of the NT used. At times it seems as if they are using the traditional Hebrew text, at other times it seems as if they are taking great liberties with the Hebrew text. Sometimes their quote matches the LXX, and at other times their citation differs from the LXX.

Answer for yourself: As Bible believing Christians, how do we resolve this dilemma?

Here is the Christian scholar's answer. I find it totally insufficient. Simply said, my research has shown that the Jewish texts were altered by the Greek-Jewish Pythagorean-Buddhists of Alexandria to promote their unique sect's religious beliefs. Make no mistake about it, the above link is a long study but the facts that you seek about the earliest corruption of the sacred Hebrew Scriptures at the hands of the Alexandrian Essenes are there for all to see. These alterations of the most ancient Hebrew Scriptures and messianic prophecies were only magnified as later recorded when found quoted in the New Testament when written by the hands of the Roman Church. The majority of Christian writers, when advised of this respond usually with this reply:

"Finally, we must remember that the writers of the NT had a unique position which we are not allotted today. They wrote under inspiration. They had the right to change the text, for it was in reality God who was doing the changing in that it is His word. This was recognized by the translators of the KJV. They understood that the Biblical writers would sometimes use a certain text and alter it, "as the spirit gave them utterance". Thus the writers of the NT had a unique liberty, and an awesome responsibly."

Answer for yourself: Can you believe this? These earliest Church Fathers said they had a right to change the Word of God? Amazing!!!

They just told you God cannot say the same thing twice nor make up his mind!

CLEMENT AND THE LXX:

In accordance with this same historical time frame, Sir Frederic Kenyon has pointed out that, "(The LXX) was not . . . accepted by the stricter Jews, who in controversy repudiated arguments based on Septuagint texts." (The Text of the Greek Bible, p.29). This is also true of Josephus who rejected the LXX because of its additions to the Hebrew canon of scripture.

Likewise, scholarship recognizes that the enhancement of the LXX in history came not from the Jewish scribes, but from sources within Christendom from around the third century.

In other words many alterations and interpolations to the Jewish Masoretic Text were made by Christians to make "prophecies" out of non-prophecies, to create Messianic passages which were never meant by the original writers to be Messianic, and literally "Jesusize" passages that never referred to him in the first place. In doing this they "added to" and "took away from the Word of God!"

Then these same forged passages were quoted in the New Testament writings and applied to "the Christ/Messiah" when they were originally added to the Jewish Scriptures by the Pythagorean-Greek-Jews of Alexandria to refer to their sun-god myths and sun-god redeemers.

Then we lost the ancient Divine truth about the "Krst/Christ"!

The next step was to change the interpretation of these Hebrew Scriptures along with their "alteration" in "key" theological places. As if you hadn't noticed, today everything in the Bible is taught as if "literal" and "historical"; even these alterations and forgeries of texts that go unnoticed by most of Christianity today. Sacred Scripture is the Word of God addressed to us in written form, and like every document it is open to different interpretations. However, some interpretations of the Bible-whose text is particularly rich-go deeper than others, and not all the interpretations are equally valid. To interpret any written text properly one has to bear in mind a whole series of factors such as the nature of the document; the kind of person the author is and the ways in which he expresses himself; the context in which he is writing; alterations and forgeries of earlier existing Scriptures when later incorporated in subsequent translations like the Christian Old and New Testaments, and the setting in which the text is going to be read; etc. In the case of the Bible, we are obviously dealing with religious writing whose ultimate author, as Jews (in respect of the Old Testament) and Christians believe, is God himself: God it was who inspired the writers of the various books. But that was way back then and much has occurred to alter these "holy men of old" and their original inspiration that led to these written texts when first put to papyrus and paper. Therefore, correct interpretation of Sacred Scripture must necessarily be guided by the fact that one is dealing with texts inspired by God, texts in which God is using human language to address man. This fact, the divine inspiration of Scripture, has decisive importance when it comes to interpreting the text. Firstly, being the Word of God, Scripture contains a richness of meaning which the human reader can never totally plumb without being equipped with a level of knowledge of the texts of which he reads and the alterations of them that lie in "key" theological divisions separating Judaism and later Roman Christianity. Scripture can be said therefore to have a number of meanings or senses: as the rabbis say, it has seventy faces. Secondly, one must start off from the fact that since God, in Sacred Scripture, is speaking through men--the hagiographers or sacred writers who wrote the text--the first thing to look for is what the writer intended to convey by the words he set down. For the Christian today he starts his Biblical experience being told that the writers of Sacred Scripture intended that they be understood only in a "literal" or historic sense; when study has shown me that there was always too levels of basic understanding of all Sacred Scripture: the "Lesser Mysteries" and the "Greater Mysteries". Within these two board categories we find the various 4 levels of rabbinical exegesis. What is important is that once we get beyond the "common stories" there lies a much richer and deeper understanding of the Scriptures that can ever be understood from a supposed "literal" and "historical" meaning of the text. In fact, this Sod or Mystical, Allegorical, and Metaphysical understanding of the texts is the intended goal of all Scripture. But we start out with the "simple Simon" approach and think mistakenly that we have it all when it fact we are in Scriptural Kindergarten and all of life and incarnation is to provide the opportunity for mankind to learn the truth of his True Divine Self and they is impossible without graduating into higher study of these Sacred Texts. What sadly has complicated this task so much are the falsification and deceptive alterations of them down through history. So our job is complicated today like never before. Not only do we need to find the correct hermeneutic and interpretation of what we read we have to discern what is and what is not the Word of God in the Bible we have inherited. We must go back to the true Masoretic texts FIRST if we ever hope to come to the truth regarding God and the purpose of our incarnation in this present existence.

As to its value in the study of textual criticism, Dr. Ernst Wurthwein writes, "No other version has received as much attention for textual criticism as (the LXX). Not only was it valued highly in antiquity, but in the nineteenth century many scholars practically preferred it over the Masoretic text. They believed that because of its pre-Christian origins it could assist in the recovery of an earlier, pre-Masoretic text that would be closer to the original than (the Masoretic Text). But today we recognize that (the LXX) neither was nor was intended to be a precise scholarly translation." (The Text of the Old Testament, pp 63-64). Later, Wurthwein quotes Dr. G. Bertram as writing, "The Septuagint belongs to the history of Old Testament interpretation rather than to the history of the Old Testament text. It can be used as a textual witness only after its own understanding of the Old Testament text has been made clear." (Ibid. pp. 67-68).

That is what Bet Emet is trying to tell you. The Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures had it's own agenda...and it was not the proliferation of truth!

Therefore we can see that the LXX does not shed light on the text of the original Hebrew, but only on how some deviated from and re-interpreted the Hebrew text to further their sects authority and religious ideology.

Further, we also can see that the Biblical guardians of the Old Testament, the Jews, were not in favor of the readings found in the LXX, nor in the additions it made to the Hebrew canon of scripture. Nor are they today!

TRUTH IS THE HIGHEST RELIGION EVER GIVEN MANKIND

Having laid the foundation for this series of studies we are ready to embark upon the search for an in-depth understanding of the "Pattern in the Mount" of which we read in the Hebrew Scriptures and see referenced in the Book of Hebrews. Many years ago, during the early years of my Pastorate I discovered by accident this "hidden Pattern" underlying the Hebrew and Greek words that lay silent behind the English words of our Bibles. Over the first two years of my eight year Pastorate I would look up in the original languages of my KJV Study Bible, both in the original Hebrew and the Greek Lexicons, the "nouns" and "verbs" of almost every passage in the Bible since being convinced beyond any doubt and having previously learned that if we don't have the "original meaning" of the words of our Bibles then most likely we don't have the truest meaning and understanding of what these texts have to say to mankind. It is not an understatement to say that "much is lost in the translation". Too much as you will come to see. I came to see that this was so true and the impact of what I was discovering mounted day by day. Over time I could clearly see that there was a "Pattern" developing behind such study and inquiry on my part and most alarming was the fact that this "Pattern" was not my religious experience; both religiously and ethically as a Christian let alone a Pastor. This "Pattern" will involve not only the ways in which both "non-Jews" and later "Jews" would "worship of God" whereby they both followed the Biblical Feast and Festivals which are connected to the Equinoxes and Solstices but other such insights from illumination of this "Pattern" discerned from such personal studies would often be a direct contradiction to my Christian experience and my Christians religious belief system.

I would come to see through continued study that this "Pattern" of Divine Revelation could be found in many parts of the Bible as well as in many religions outside of my Bible; many that predated the time of the Bible and well as after. At the core of this "Pattern" was an understanding of God and His worship that revolved around the Equinoxes and Solstices and applied to both "Jew" and "non-Jews". We call these by the more common name the "Biblical Festivals". Understand that this "Pattern" of worship and understanding of God and man's responsibilities toward God predated Judaism and could be found as far back as Ancient Egypt. This is the "Pattern" in the "Mount" of what we read. What I found is that religious beliefs that were derived from this "Pattern" maintained an existing integrity and similar understanding down through history, from nation to nation, century through century, since having had their origin with Ancient Egypt. But what I found most disconcerting and problematic for me is the often confirmed fact that around the 2nd through the 5th century these same "religious beliefs" and "dogmas", as inherited from Ancient Egypt and handed down through nation after nation, even Israel, could be shown to have undergone a radical "reinterpretation" whereby the earliest understanding of them by mankind, from nation to nation, was changed and this "altered religious belief" has existed in this "reinterpreted" form in Christianity every since.

In the following articles I will show the reader how many traditional religious beliefs dating as far back as Ancient Egypt would be handed down among the nations including Israel which sadly would later succumb to a tragic "reinterpretation" by an emerging Gentile Roman Orthodox Christianity. I came to see over time in my studies following Seminary very clearly that I, as a Christian, was following a religion that had severed itself long ago from a Divine Past which had at one time followed the most ancient understandings of the Divine given to mankind in the beginning of time. Not only that what I was seeing made sense to me in the reality in which I lived and its practicality was beyond question. My studies would advance to where I would seek out this "Pattern" in all of its manifestations and such a quest would eventually take me to the depths of the Ancient Egyptian Religion where I would find this "Pattern" and its most detailed exposition and expression. This "Pattern in the Mount" would be manifested not only in religious dogmas and "theologies" but in Ancient Egypt's magnificent architecture and hieroglyphics that yet takes our breath away when viewing its scope and grandeur. At the very core of this "Pattern in the Mount", laying in the ashes of Rome's repeated attempts to vanquish such knowledge from the world and Judaism, would be the highest revelation of the Divine Soul ever given mankind.

In all the years of my religious studies I suppose the most important word that I have ever encountered in my Bible studies is this word "Pattern". The only problem for me is that in Christianity I was familiar with these ancient "concepts" but my "Christian interpretation" of them were often diametrically opposed to what I discovered they at first had meant to the ancients who were given these Divine concepts. Amazingly, these Divine Concepts would remain basically unchanged from nation to nation, from religion to religion, and would maintain a solidarity between them until the rise of Constantine. This should be problematic to you if you are in that small number today of "thinking believers".

Answer for yourself: Why had these ancient religious dogmas and doctrines that found their earliest expression in Ancient Egypt and even later in Judaism been "reinterpreted" and "altered"? For what purpose? Had the Divine we call God changed His mind? Had human nature changed and now needed a "Plan B"? Who has the truth now about God and His message for all of mankind? Do we look to Rome or to Judaism or even earlier to Egypt for the proper interpretation of such religious dogmas of being "born again", "immortality of the Soul", "the Sabbath day", "Baptism", "Eucharist", "Last Judgment", "Heaven", "the Christ", "the Messiah", "Resurrection of the Dead", "Eternal Life", etc? All of these "religious dogmas" had their beginning with ancinet Egypt and the Hebrews who spent time there carried these "beliefs" with them and even through they would give to them a unique cultural distinctive, since being Hebrew-Egyptians, they basically remained the same regarding the evolution of the Soul of mankind.

All I knew is that there was a "Pattern" behind the words of my Bible and the more that I studied I began to see that many of my traditional Christian dogmas and "religious beliefs" were contradictory and opposed to what this "Pattern" had meant in the earlier Hebrew revelation let alone even further back in history in ancient Egypt. In time I would come to see the parallels between this Hebrew revelation and a much earlier one in Ancient Egypt. So much of Biblical Judaism and the earlier ancient Egyptian Religion and understanding of God and this Cosmos are as if they are identical. It made sense to me since Israel and the Hebrews were taught many of these Divine "beliefs" by Moses, himself a Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt, and the later leaders of this emerging Jewish nation. All the while I remained troubled at why my Gentile Christian experience and Christian faith was a denial of both of these earlier "Pattern" of Divine Thought of Egypt and Israel that seemed to be wed together in a Divine harmony and symphony of thought.

We need to come to an understanding of this "Pattern" and apply what we learn to our lives. Only with this understanding can we accurately evaluate our "experience" in the Christian Church of Constantine and if we be on the "right path" for our Soul.

Let us examine the word "Pattern" for the depth of its meaning and begin to see how it is used by our Creator.

- A model or original used as an archetype.
- A person or thing considered worthy of imitation.
- An ideal
 - A conception of something in its absolute perfection.
 - One that is regarded as a standard or model of perfection or excellence.
- An artistic or decorative design
- A composite of traits or features characteristic of an individual or a group: one's pattern of behavior.

Let us take note of these above meanings for the word "Pattern" and associate it with the word as used in the Hebrew Scriptures:

Exod 25:9 9 According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it. (KJV)

Exod 25:9 9 According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it. (KJV)

Exod 25:40 40 And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the mount. (KJV)

Now for a New Testament reference to these Hebrew Scriptures:

Heb 8:5 5 Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

There appears to be a "Pattern" in Heaven that is to be reproduced on Earth. But notice it is not just to be reproduced on Earth in "things" but in mankind as well as we see in the above definition an its meaning that extends to:

- A person or thing considered worthy of imitation.
- An Ideal that refers to absolute perfection
- A standard of perfection or excellence that can refer to traits or features or characteristics of an individual or a group
- a patterned behavior

This "Pattern" extends to mankind's "behaviors" as created beings made in the image of God; a behavior that is modeled on the workings of God's Universe. "Religion" has been the major determinant of human behavior since the dawn of consciousness. Religious ethics is that aspect of religion concerned with proper patterns of action in the situation and circumstances of the human cycle and social relations. Ethics provides the link between beliefs and right action (behavior). Central to this idea of "religious ethics" is this "Pattern" hidden in our Bibles.Literally it is "Heaven's way of speaking to Earth and mankind". Ancient mankind saw in the Laws of the workings of God's Cosmos the revelation of God to mankind of how man was to live in harmony within God's Cosmos and others made in this same image of God. These Laws were understood to bring harmony not only in the Heavens above but if applied by mankind in his existence the same "harmony" could be achieved between humanity. Now we better understand:

Matt 6:10 10 Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. (KJV)

Hidden in this verse is this whole idea of the "Pattern" in Heaven that is to be reproduced not only on Earth but in mankind as well. Earth and mankind is to be a living image of Heaven on Earth. Egypt called this concept "So Above, So Below". We will this the extent of this idea the more our studies advance.

A key word for us to understand is this concept of such an "idea" is the word "archetype" and it lies at the very center of this "Pattern in Heaven" that is to be reproduced in the Earth and in mankind as well. Take timet to please read this article to understand how the "Mind of God" communicates with the mind of mankind. Having done this then let us move on in this study.

God opened the mind of Moses to understand this meaningful "Pattern" or this "structural design", which design must eventually match the outline of the archetypal "thought form" (called "the Word") projected by the Cosmic Mind of God for this area of creation of God's Cosmos; by that I mean Earth and humanity. This "Divine Thought" is the "Logos" of which we read in the New Testament, the "word made flesh", as understood when God's Consciousness comes to tabernacle in you and me as "the Christ within". This concept was never to be limited to but one person as Rome has done thereby robbing mankind of his true "identity" and goal of spiritual evolution as Souls living in an Earthly existence; a training ground for our Soul.

Harmony with this immanent pattern of "Cosmic Though" or "Mind" is the insistent demand made by God of mankind, of you and me, as well as the only true measuring stick for "ultimate truth" for mankind.

We need to understand that this " lower mind" which you and I possess is but a fragment of the Divine Cosmic Intellect (God) and is by nature of its very origin and character able to recognize this "harmony of ideas" with the overshadowing form of this Divine truth (this Divine Pattern) that exists in God's Heaven. In other words we have an "internal witness" if we only listen to it. It is important to note that some knowledge of the features of this living mosaic and "Pattern" is essential for man to possess or have access to in order that he not have to depend upon his animal nature (carnal nature) to to determine whether an action on his part, or a personal experience or a philosophy is good or detrimental for himself as well as others. There has to be an "Absolute" that defines what is right and wrong for mankind for we are consistently warned not to lean upon our own understanding. God put this "Absolute" within us as His "Krst/Karest/Christ" which is growing to maturity within us as Paul says:

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

It is the role of the indwelling Krst-Christ to us in our Spiritual Evolution according to this existing "Pattern in the Mount".

Deut 12:8 8 Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes. (KJV)

Prov 3:5-7 5 Trust in the LORD with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. 6 In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths. 7 Be not wise in thine own eyes: fear the LORD, and depart from evil. (KJV)

All actions of humanity as well as his thoughts that lead to behavior are finally appraised by man's consciousness, according as to whether they harmonize or disagree with the "cosmic thought structure" that is working to its own manifestation in the process of human evolution and development. This means that God is working Himself in mankind to be "conscious" of His own Creation and thereby experience it through humanity. God wants to experience His own creation and is doing so through mankind. Man's involvement in this is to allow God to experience His own unconscious through man allowing His individual unconscious images expression. This process is called the creation of consciousness within humanity and the purpose of God dwelling as His "Christ" within us. Thus the admonition:

Phil 2:5-7 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: (KJV)

Thus the need for a vehicle for God to experience the glory of His creation through mankind. As we grow spiritually we are to be conformed into the "Mind of God" and our lives are to reflect this Heavenly "Pattern" of Divine Order and Harmony. Egypt got it right and so does Judaism which realized the importance of God's Laws as if they are "training wheels" on a bicycle to keep mankind upright in his life and help man live a life and ordered existence whereby we can become expressions of the divinity which lives within us.

This means that in man his thoughts, in his mind and consciousness, as models of a higher Divine "Pattern", either are in harmony with this Eternal Design and "Pattern for all Creation" or they are not. Deep within us all is a sense that registers in the outer mind of man either the symphony of agreement with this "Divine Pattern" or either its disagreement. The acuteness of this awareness in man's mind can be viciously blunted, so that its registering sense is sadly corrupted. Thus the war between the Spirit and the Flesh and its impact upon the awaking of man's Soul to the Spiritual Dynamics of his existence and the intended primordial pattern laid down for human evolution.

I discovered in my studies over the years that early ancient theology, as far back as Ancient Egypt, presented the general outline of this great cosmic plan of creation better than any nation that followed them in the history of the world and did so in the reflected light of which mortal minds could understand and come to terms with as the "Pattern" for all life on earth. One of the deep principles of this "Soul Science" or Ancient Spiritual Wisdom was that "right knowledge" must come to save the individual from pitiable suffering arising from ignorance. If it is a fundamental truth that ignorance of God and His way for mankind is the cause of sorrow, then knowledge is its cure. And all the great religions of antiquity make this assertion. Says Hermes: "The vice of a soul is ignorance; the virtue of a soul is knowledge." The Book of Proverbs in the Bible enjoins at length the prime necessity of getting wisdom, understanding, knowledge. Its preciousness is set above "all the things that thou canst desire." Knowledge is glorified as an ornament of grace and a crown of life unto its possessor. In Proverbs "right knowledge" is not placed second to Love or Christly Charity. By an invincible argumentation Plato and Socrates work out in dialogue after dialogue the proposition that one cannot be good until one knows what the good thing is, and even what it is good for. The greatest manifestation of love from God to mankind is not in His salvation but the revelation to man of God Himself and what is and is not acceptable with God. God have His "Mind" to mankind whereby we might know the truth and the way we are to walk out our "salvation with fear and trembling" as the passage says. Thus the need for Divine Revelation like we find in the 42 Negative Confession of Ancient Egypt and the Torah of Judaism (the Laws of Moses, entailing the Covenant of Noah for the "non-Jews" as well as the Covenant of Moses for the "Jews") that lays this out for mankind whereby they "are without excuse".

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

The Ancient Egyptians along with the Hebrew reasoned that there must be an "Absolute Truth" and that truth is exampled in the Laws of God that operate both in Heaven "Above" and in Nature "Below". This is God's School for the right development of the Souls of mankind; the working of God's Cosmos is the "blackboard" of instruction for the Souls of mankind. This will become very clear as out studies advance to the uranograph later (the Star Charts).

I would find in my studies that fully enlightened sages of the ancient past gave to infant humanity mighty formulations of cosmic truth and brought the knowledge of this "Divine Pattern" down from Heaven "above" and made it available to mankind "below". They placed this torch in the hands of the early races for the advantage of all succeeding humanity. Precautions of the most extraordinary nature were taken to safeguard the deposit. But historical groups at various times in the history of this planet, for various motives, expended great amounts of effort and energy to destroy such a "Divine Revelation". Roughly from the third century of Christianity until almost the present day, the open declaration of this spiritually high teaching invited the bitterest persecution from Christianity. Such Spiritual Ancient Wisdom and Esoteric philosophy was forced to hide underground and make its way through the centuries by underground channels and covert devices. Fearing persecution or death they often hid under the disguise of Christianity. The Corruption and persecution by emerging Roman Orthodoxy threatened the utter extinction of such previous Spiritual light and yet does so today. Ignorance of the "keys" for the proper interpretation of this Ancient Wisdom, which ironically lays beneath Christianity's own misinterpretation of their own Scriptures, is the culprit today that allows Christianity to remain as the "blind leading the blind". Religious and political agendas have come and gone and often go hand in hand, but at the root of both is the human desire to not submit the "animal nature" in us all to the rule of God' and His Spirit. Law and order, as exampled by God's Heaven, does not always suit the desire of nations and evil leaders. Fueled by such desires that only led to a deepening Spiritual ignorance this Ancient Spiritual Knowledge slowly was buried from the minds of men. Nations will rise and fall and along with them more and more of this Ancient Soul Science that found its origins in Ancient Egypt will fade from the minds of men. But in one of the resurgent waves of revival, this ancient light is breaking through the entrenchment of theological ignorance once again. Wisdom is having its rebirth and Christianity is under the microscope of modern scholarship like never before and it is because of this resurgence of knowledge, as Proverbs tell us is man's greatest gift, the truth of what happened to Christianity by the Roman Empire some 1,800 years ago is being seen like never before. We are seeing without a doubt that 2.5 billion people in the world have a completely erroneous interpretation of these Christian texts they cherish and depend upon for the salvation of their Souls and most will live and die and never know the truth as so many have before them. But that does not to be your experience.

The central core of this ancient Spiritual Knowledge was that man is himself, in his real being, a spark from this Divine Cosmic Energy-Mind that we, for lack of a better word, call God; a divine fire that is but a tiny Emanation from this Central Cosmic Intelligent Architectural Energy we call God. Man, as a part of this Living Intelligent Energy or God came into existence through a long channel of Emanations and now this "Living Energy" is buried in levels of existences and planes of matter, both invisible and visible, throughout the Cosmos. Of importance is the fact that this "Living Energy" has come to tabernacle in the flesh of human bodies that allows for the existence of a consciousness and awareness of God of His own creation through mankind. The depth of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom cannot be elucidated in-depth at this time but we will see it more and more in our studies as more "keys" for its proper interpretation are presented to the reader in future articles.

This Ancient Spiritual Wisdom taught that at the summit, or in the interior heart, of man's nature was the divine and immortal Spirit; on the lower level there was the body, with its twofold equipment for sensation and emotion. Bridging the gap between the immortal Spirit and the body is the principle of conscious mind. It could span the gap between "quickening spirit" and inert matter; because it stood between them and possessed affinities with both of them, which they lacked with each other. It could touch the Soul/Spirit on the ethereal plane above and flesh on the material plane beneath and pass the lofty "thoughts and will of the Creator" above across the vast gulf to the beneficiary below. You could say that this spark of Cosmic Mind-Consciousness is the bridge between Spirit and Matter (body). Modern Christian religious conception faces the absurd situation of visualizing man as obviously physical and animal by virtue of his body, and as obviously intellectual and spiritual through his soul, but with the ancient hierarchical grades of divine intermediacy completely removed between these two levels of mankind's existence. Early Christian revolt against such Esotericism and Spiritual Knowledge denied these "levels of Emanation" between the Divine Mind and matter as in doing so completely rejected the status-quo of religious thought since the beginning of recorded time. In so doing they denied not only the Ancient Egyptian Religion of Judaism and a pre-Persian Judaism which would be so like-minded but Science as well. Today Science and Physics is validating the Kabbalah which religious tenants lie at the very core of this Ancient Egyptian Religion and revealing the errors of this tragic Spiritual digression of early anti-Jewish Gentile Christianity. This loss of Spiritual Emanation between the Absolute and mankind is one of the most tragic loses of Divine Truth ever experienced by human kind. The gap left vacant had unavoidably to be filled in by a new "created" theology was accomplished through gross misinterpretation of what came before and finds expression today with the single figure of Rome's imagination in the form of the supposed historical Jesus as "the" mediator between man and his God. This "ladder" in Heaven was personified not in "steps and levels" as was done by the earlier Spiritual Masters but now all rolled into one supposed "literal-historical" person; a person which critical study and modern scholarship cannot attest in all the unforged extra-Biblical materials available to us today. A historical personage, a supposed "literal-historical" personage arrived at by a completely different interpretation and hermeneutic of ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom as used by mankind since the beginning of time, was called in to implement a function that was originally assigned to one of the principles of man's own constitution. This was one of those consequences which the little blunder of mistaking religious myth and allegory for history entailed for succeeding ages including ours.

Such a carrier and preserver of Spiritual Values was this Divine Spark, this "spark" of Divine Mind that lay hidden beneath the facade of a physical body as the latent energy within a rock which, when released, reveals itself to be light and energy at its very core. We find the same "Pattern" in our human bodies as they operate literally on electricity in our nervous system; itself a small representation of this Divine Spark, described by Heraclitus as "a portion of cosmic Fire, imprisoned in a body of earth and water." The Ancients teach that this "Divine Spark" found itself on earth to trace its line of progress and Spiritual Evolution through the ranges of the elements and the kingdoms provided on this Planet (mineral, plant, animal, human), harvesting its varied learned experiences at the end of each cycle of its existences. In other words God was experiencing His Creation it all of its facets though these various levels, manifestations and Emanations. It was described by Greek philosophy as "more ancient than the body," because it had run the cycle of incarnations in many bodies, donning and shedding them as garments of contact with lower worlds, so that it might treasure up the experiences of "Life" in every form of it. The mutual relation of this Soul to its garment, the body, in each of its incarnate periods, is the center of the ancient Spiritual philosophy, and the core of all Biblical meanings. As the Egyptian Book of the Dead most majestically phrases it, the Soul, projecting itself into one physical embodiment after another, "steppeth onward through eternity."

The one grand premise for our Bible and behind stories that we mistakenly interpret as "assumed historical narratives" instead of Divine Allegories which are actually taken from ancient Spiritual Wisdom is that man is a "god" (small "g") functioning in the body of a human animal, and that this situation is typical of all other existent life, and a key to the comprehension of all Spiritual Writings as they exist from nation to nation. The restoration of the "keys" to rightfully interpret our Bibles and see these above truths as Divine potentials and realities hidden within all mankind instead of relegated to one "supposed literal-historical" person who lived in Palestine over 2000 years ago will enforce a drastic alteration in one's current Christian theological dogmas and religious belief system. Such restoration of these "interpretative keys" for our Bibles and our "Jesus Story" as but one of many "sungod" stories told through the eyes of the Jewish nation and a departing sect within it some 2000 years ago will demand a discarding of the conventional form of the God idea and a return to that of learned antiquity. Such restoration of these "interpretive keys" of our own Christian Bible will cause Christianity to cast off is erroneous exoteric "literalism" and reassert its own primal majestic message that once was espoused by the real "Chrestians" and "Christian Gnostics" and would have remained the "only" interpretation of Divine Spiritual Realities had not the rise of the Mighty Roman Empire extinguished such Spiritual Light between the 2nd and 5th centuries.

Answer for yourself: And what was this Spiritual Light again? Simply that the Universal Mind, this Living Intelligent Energy we call God had sent a small "part of Himself" into matter; more importantly eventually rising through the mineral, plant and animal kingdoms to tabernacles in the flesh of mankind as a "Living Consciousness. This Living Intelligence as God has come to live within humanity as the indwelling "Krst/Christ" and man's sole purpose is to grow in the knowledge of his identity as a true "son" of God and in so doing give God expression in His creation. It was in so doing by discovering the "god" within him and nurturing it that "Christ" was to be formed in him thereby preparing him for the next stage of his Soul's evolutional existence following the death of the body. Human life was the training ground for his Soul and "the Christ" within him whereby the animal nature in humanity was to be transformed into the Divine nature of God. Such was the sole purpose of mankind's existence.

This understanding lies at the very hope and salvation of a Bible which is critically exposed today by modern scholarship to be a falsehood with its current "literal-historical" hermeneutic and interpretative method fixed by blind leaders of Christianity which falsely teach today that they possess an "inerrant and infallible" text which is to be first interpreted "literally". Nothing could be further from the truth! This "Christ Story" or "Jesus Story" is not a "historical-literal" story of another; it is "your" story, "my" story, and the template and "Pattern" for the Spiritual evolution of the whole of mankind. This explains why this same "story" has basically been told since the beginning of time. What we mistakenly think is a "literal-historical" narrative about some Jewish Rabbi is the personified story of the Descent of the Soul into matter (flesh of mankind) and through Spiritual allegory and metaphor the Souls of mankind were acquainted with the "blue print" for their intended Spiritual evolution on this plane of existence. Serious study into certain areas of this Ancient Divine Wisdom in search of this Divine Spiritual Truth that lies hidden behind our literalized "Jesus Story" is profitable for truth but costly as traditional Christians possessing this traditional "salvation" message which is attached to a "literal-historical" Jesus quickly are confronted with huge amounts of contradictory and irrefutable evidences and facts that brings their simple "Jesus Story" into suspect. This makes such truth-seekers "fearful" to proceed as their "cherished" dogmas connected to their Christian-reinforced "salvation" creed crumble increasingly page by page in such studies. But truth is all that matters and "Truth is the highest religion" ever given mankind.

Study is your friend. No student acquainted with the history of early Christianity can for a moment maintain, in the face mountains of contradictory evidences, that "medieval" or "modern" presentations of Christian theology are identical with those held at the start of the Gnostic Christian movement. Such personal study will reveal to the reader that one of the most influential and admittedly the most learned of the Church Fathers, whose scholarship had been powerfully instrumental in formulating the early creedology, was excommunicated as a heretic within three hundred years after his death by a Church that had so quickly lost the light of its original inspiration. "Origen, the pupil of St. Clement of Alexandria, and the best informed and most learned of the Church Fathers, who held the doctrine of rebirth and karma to be Christian, and against whom, 299 years after he was dead, excommunication was decreed by the exoteric Church on account of his beliefs, has said: 'But that there should be certain doctrines not made known to the multitude, which are revealed after the exoteric ones have been taught, is not a peculiarity of Christianity alone, but also of philosophical systems in which certain truths are exoteric and others esoteric' (quoted in the Tibetan Book of The Dead, by. W.Y. Evans-Wentz, in a note to p . 234, from Origins's Contra Celsum, Book I, Ch. VIII). Both Origen's statement and his posthumous discrediting at the hands of the Church Council make it clear that early Christianity had been radically transformed within a few hundred years after its inception. And every individual or sect in the centuries following the third that endeavored to revive the pristine purity of the original formulations of this Ancient Egyptian and Jewish Spiritual Wisdom was sharply hounded and persecuted and even murdered without the slightest regard by their Christian tormentors. Rather than the Romanized Pauline theology which comprises so much of today's New Testament, we find in the Gnostic Paulinism, which represents perhaps the clearest stream of high spiritual teaching in the New Testament as it now stands, was hard put to escape being torn out of the context of Scripture or defeated in ecclesiastical controversy. If they could not destroy all of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom then the recourse was for Rome to "reinterpret" it. That is why the Pauline literature in the New Testament seems so contradictory in "key" places; this betrays either a schizophrenic mind or monkish tampering of the texts. The "latter" is the truth. This issue must be faced by Christians to whom "truth " matters in light of modern scholarship which shows such forgery of our current Scriptures to be rampant in Roman Christianity. This restoration of earlier Divine Truth along with its proper "interpretation" must be accomplished to rescue the Bible from ridicule by modern scholarship and other religions which point out such plagiarism and "reinterpretation" by early Christianity. This is, as I see it, the only hope for Christianity in this age of information and its hopeful restoration as the "path" for nations and the true hope of humanity and for 2.5 billion people today.

The crux of the entire problem, again if you have not noticed, is the conception of deity in a form continuingly available for man in the heart of his own nature and not one separated apart from the whole of humanity in one isolated individual as Rome fashioned. This conception of divinity hiding in mankind awaiting its "resurrection" is the core of all religious hypothesis, and loss of it has been the cause of doubt, confusion and despair for humanity living in the shadow of Roman Christianity for over 1,800 years. Light and truth long lost are once more at hand from the efforts of critical scholars and archeologists to enlighten minds now groping in spiritual darkness with Bibles to which they hold few if any clues to its intended interpretation. We trust our Pastors and their sermonizing never knowing that the vast majority of them do not possess these "keys" to interpret their Bibles correctly from which they preach. False notions of deity, which has been limited by Rome to but one person, have nearly cost mankind the loss of its birthright of intended Spiritual Knowledge and its goal of Spiritual evolution as a divine being!

The boast of Christianity and Judaism is that they alone have presented to mankind its purest concept of deity in the form of the One God--Monotheism. The claim is by no means true as fact and many levels of "truth" and "untruth" are to be found in these claim. Christianity may more correctly be said to have been the first to present the One God without the ancient train of the subordinate gods or "Neteru" as Emanations and archetypes from this one God in His created Cosmos. Judaism on the other hand must look to its Kabbalah to find this earlier Ancient Spiritual Concept of God and His Emanations into this physical existence we know as the only life of our Soul which we can remember. They both boast of having abolished the magnified evils of polytheism. But to the ancient sages the task of handling the Supreme God without His pantheon of lesser divinities (we call these "Neteru" of Egypt in Christianity "angels") was much the same as trying to deal physiologically with a man without consideration of his arms, feet, head and several organs. The gods of primeval religion of which we read and to which we are indoctrinated to cry "paganism" at their first mention were the active manifest powers, faculties, organs of God himself. To the Ancients Mother Nature was God's body, elemental forces the agents of His operative economy, Universal Mind His thinking faculty and ultimate offering His spiritual heart. The ancient systems of wisdom thought it not blasphemy to delineate the organic structure of deity through allegory, symbolism, and images to explain to human grasp and finite mental limitations the cause and nature of the world in which he find himself. Reverence of each level of God and His Emanations was not withheld from even the lowest level and the varied operations of the Godhead and its created manifestations toward consciousness. But over time some strange revulsion against the function and nature of all physical matter later caused theologians to deem it a blasphemy to give God a body, parts and divisions, or to even describe the indescribable in such a fashion. Such theological reasoning came later to conclude that God could be saved from defilement by keeping Him as an empty abstraction. Unknowable and Absolute, it was thought that God was to be kept ineffable. He was not to be dragged down by the minds of mankind into the limits of but a mortal's description. But as my studies advanced I saw quite clearly that the astute Egyptians and later the Greeks kept the one without foregoing the other. They reverenced the One God as beyond the reach of human thought, yet portrayed His Emanations in the field of a hierarchy of manifestation. And they both, in doing so, ranked themselves as His sons and daughters. They deemed it not dishonoring to this Supreme Deity to recognize His being in all things. They saw Him in Nature, and not as abstracted from nature. They saw Him in the Heavens above and not abstracted from His Cosmos for He is the entirety of this whole Universe and anything that may lay beyond. And they studied nature as the living garment and projection of God's immanence. It was God venue for "speaking to them" from both "Above and Below". Egypt got it so right; it is saddening to see how much of God we don't have or understand today because of Rome. Therefore, though the monotheistic concept has a place in man's thought, it is nevertheless to be appraised in its final utility to religion as practically valueless unless we see this "monotheism" as a "unity of Emanations". Thus the "plural" names for God in our own Hebrew Bible; God is "one" but a "unity of many". The "Let us" passages in Genesis cries out to us awaken from a deceiving theology that limits God to a singularity of "one". Holding out a supreme Ineffability to its followers, Rome will withhold from its religious followers at the same time the knowledge of that deity that is lodged immediately within their own selfhood as "the Christ within" as but one of many of the Emanations from the Father.Giving them a God who is utterly inaccessible, it blocked their approach to the "god" who lives within their own bodies as His temple.

This is of surpassing importance for our study because at the heart of it is a revolution in mankind's thinking and esteem of his very existence. The grasp of this Divine Truth along with its many "keys" so necessary to the correct interpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom that is in our Bibles is devastating to prevalent Christian orthodoxies and their erroneous interpretations of our "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: So, once again, why is this knowledge so important for us today?

We can hardly love or worship what we cannot know. At best without knowledge man is relegated to wander amidst wonderment and speculation. Ancient religion was suspected of having left the monotheistic God out of its picture. It did not. They only described Him as the "Many in the One". Communion has never been established between man and an Absolute God in the cosmic heavens, the En Sof of Judaism and Amen of Egyptian Religion. He is unknowable and unaccessible. But the Ancient Spiritual World provided a contact with a god dwelling immediately within the human breast and a god who stood as close to man as his next breath; in fact lived within him. The seers of old held it a sacrilege for mortals to worship any power outside themselves because God was nearest "within mankind". This is not to be viewed as an affront to deity. It was just the recognition of deity at the point where it was accessible. to mankind. The real heresy and apostasy, the gross heathenism, is to miss deity where it is to be had in the blind effort to seek it where it is not available.

Deity for man is at home, within him and not afield in distant skies. The Hubble telescope has seen the end of the expanding Universe and not yet seen God. The kingdom of heaven and the hope of glory and God's home are within us.

Luke 17:21 21 Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you. (KJV)

The Kingdom of Heaven and the hope of glory for mankind lurk within the unfathomable depths of man's consciousness. Divinity lies buried under the heavier motions of the sensual nature and the incessant scampering of the superficial mind. This Kingdom of Heaven is the still small voice, drowned out mostly by the raucous clamor of fleshly, material and mental interests. It is a pure and simple, mild Presence, awaiting the day when the outer man (called the "old man" in Scripture", the flesh) will give more heed to its quiet speech. The Supreme God is not available; the EnSof is unknowable, but within the quietude of his own being every man may find a fragment, an Emanated "spark" of Cosmic Fire of that same God, made personal in his own individuality. This is the meat of the lost wisdom of antiquity, that man is a "god" awaiting manifestation and his own glorification. Other than potentially, God in His wholeness is not present with man; but He has not left man without that measure of His grace that man can use. He has projected into our nature a portion, a beam, of His own divine Living Energy and life. He has apportioned amongst all His creatures that measure of His ineffable power which each is capable of receiving. This ray of consciousness is what separates mankind from the animal kingdom. Within this animal we call mankind dwells a "god", a spark of Cosmic Universal Mind, the Soul. That is why the Egyptian Messiah, Horus, the prototype for all later "sungods" and "Christs", and yes our "Jesus", was shown to have two natures; one an animal and one a "god". Look at the picture on the left. The hawk's head was used to symbolize that in mankind dwells the ability for man to see into the Heavens and the potential that awaits his Spiritual evolution; while at the same time man is yet an animal capable of the cruelest potential. There is a tension between the two for dominance. Thus Egypt described this as the battle between Set and Horus; the flesh and the Spirit/Soul. Yet potentially God has lodged the whole of Himself in every man, for the nucleus of His divinity that He has implanted in every creature is a seed of the whole of his being. In man the divine seed is the Krst/Karest/Christos, the son of the Almighty Father. It is not meant to be negative, but the glorious affirmation of all attainment, to assert that this germ of divinity within the heart of mankind is all of God that man can possibly absorb in the present cycle of his spiritual existence in this plane of being. The cosmic God is hardly an object of worship by humanity; but that segmented portion of infinite Being that is tabernacled within the flesh of mortals--this is the actual divinity assigned to receive the attention and homage of mankind, and sacrificially to be eaten; the Christ within.

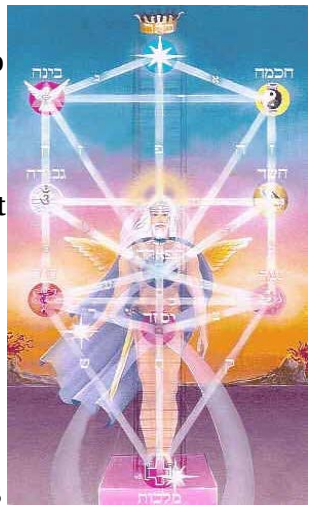
Thus the admonitions of the Gnostic Paul which Rome so desperately tried to destroy in their worship of the god of forces and military might:

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Col 1:24-27 church: 25 Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God; 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

The indwelling god is Himself being brought to birth within the womb of humanity. The "incarnation" of the gods in nation after nation and which we read about in our "Jesus Story" is your story, my story, a Divine Allegory and Personification of God coming to live in you and me as "the Christ"...our Soul. The reality of it is that each individual is gestating a divinity within the depths of his own nature. Christianity has fervently exhorted us to look into the celestial sky to find the unapproachable God. All the while the infant deity slumbers unheeded within the hearts of mankind awaiting the time where he can "be formed in me and you". Make no mistake about it; we are co-laborers with God in this grand enterprise. Christianity has largely nullified the force of St. Paul's almost frantic cry to us:



2 Cor 13:5 5 Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates? (KJV)

Sadly many of us don't know this and had Rome been more successful in covering up this righteous demand that outlaws lawlessness of military might and wanton disregard for the Spiritual Nature in mankind this Divine Knowledge would have passed completely away. But Rome could not kill everyone and burn everything as hard at they tried. Today the "rocks are crying out" and the truth rising again into the light of day and our Religious Texts and their erroneous interpretations are being exposed to scrutiny by modern scholarship and archeology to which the only agenda they possess is "truth" and not the building of a bigger ministry or taking up a larger offering. We wait foolishly for one to come from Heaven and make things right among mankind when this is the task of the indwelling Christ in each of us. As long as this indwelling divinity is starved for recognition of his existence yet alone His divine purpose then mankind has little hope as the fruits of our existence on this planet attest. We need only to look around and examine the fruits of 2.5 billion people who are robbed of their divine goal of bringing "manifestations of Christ" in the world. As long as Christianity teaches a "get out of jail free" theology then again there is little hope for mankind Spiritual evolution and the spiritual slumber of Christianity is to continue.

Eph 5:14-15 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, (KJV)

The seers of old distinguished between the Unknowable God of the thought and the actual Presence of this Divine Spark in the human constitution by denominating the former "God" and the latter "the god." Intermediate deities were called variously "the Gods" and "the gods." Again I stress the importance of understanding correctly the concept of the "Neteru". Contrary to what we are told today, the object of most constant attention in Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Philosophy was "the god," the personal indwelling lower Emanation of the Absolute Deity living within the individual. On the plane of all practical living value, it was useless to look to higher evolutionary forms of Deific expression unless and until that was brought from infancy to maturity within the life of a child of God, since its qualities had to be assimilated into human nature before anything higher could be received or achieved in mankind's spiritual evolution. It can be stated as a matter beyond and doubt that the vital concern of ancient religion was with the god lodged within the human psyche. If man missed contact with deity there, he missed it utterly. The image of the Tree of Life, the Kabbalah, on the right shows this Spiritual Evolution of divinity that finds is home in mankind. Again, Ancient Egypt and Judaism got it right; sadly a tragic misinterpretation or outright denial of this hoary Spiritual Wisdom by an anti-Judaism Rome has robbed us of our rightful Soulish heritage as Christians.

Christianity euhemerized the pagan conception of the earliest development of deity in us in their creation of a "historical Jesus". They attributed the origin of the gods to the deification of a supposed historical hero concurrent with the times and chose the expected Jewish Messiah as their cradle for their theological agenda. Instead of holding mankind responsible for their own personal righteous Soulish and Spiritual Evolution Rome buried it under the disguise of one who "pardons everything", no repentance needed. This gave license to the Mighty Roman Empire to answer for nothing and the history of the Dark Ages attests to such long-hidden shameful secrets of organized patriarchal religion that goes by the name Christianity. Over a period of almost two millennia, the Christian Church oppressed and brutalized millions of individuals in an attempt to control and contain their brand of "orthodox" spirituality. One only needs look at Constantine and his death-bed "baptism" that supposedly absolved him of monestrous acts continually throughout his life as a supposed "Christian". This "get out of jail free card" with "Jesus" picture on it does not work and sadly too many have lived and died unprepared to meet their maker because of such false assurances. And all the while the Christ comes not from Heaven as we are told to believe and as forged and twisted prophecies are made to state by the pens of Rome that we need "only believe" and the darkness continues. In case you haven't noticed this Jesus 2nd Coming is long over-due according to Christianity's own interpretations of its own Scriptures. We can forge Daniel 9 in our Christian Bibles and lengthen the time for the coming of this Savior but even that today stands open to ridicule since even this elongated date has come and gone. Something is wrong. It is time we come to see and realize that there is no Christ coming down from Heaven as we have been led to believe; for the Krst/Christ has already come in us. It is our whole interpretation of the "Jesus Story" that is wrong!

The personalized Christ, when limited to but one person as Rome has done, cuts the commonalty of mankind off from its divinity. An "only-begotten son of God," made to carry all the values and meanings in his one human person, robs mankind at large of its Spiritual birthright. The mistranslation of the Greek "monogenes" as "only-begotten" was an error with the most terrific consequences for Christendom. "Monogenes" or "only-begotten" properly means "born of the one parent alone" (the Father, Spirit), in contradistinction to the idea of being born of the union of Father and Mother, or spirit and matter. It was a reference in the ancient understanding of the Emanation and genealogy of the gods to the descent of the Logos (the cosmic counterpart of the Christos in man) from the spiritual side of God's nature alone, as distinct from its propagation from the union of spirit with matter. If Jesus was the sole epiphany of deity on earth, then the promises of mankind's universal sonship are made vain. We are assured again and again that we are all sons of God and sons of the Highest. Christianity not only thrust upon this sole man Jesus the divinity that was apportioned amongst us all, but also, in its confusion and ignorance, forced upon his mortal person the function, power and office of the Cosmic Logos, which in the carefully graded system of the Spiritual hierarchies (the Kabbalah for instance) could not conceivably have been embodied in the constitution of a mere man on earth.

Answer for yourself: How could the mighty power that organized and ensouled galaxies of solar systems be confined within the tiny limits of a physical brain and nervous system? Unknown to most Christians is that fact that some of the earliest great Christian Fathers, Clement of Alexandria and Origen (and others) expressly repudiated the possibility of the Logos taking flesh in one person of merely human stature. Such a limitation blasphemed Deity.

What has not been recognized is all of this is the fact that the solitary exaltation of just one man by Rome, our Jesus, has inevitably demeaned humanity. His lonely exaltation has disinherited mankind entirely from our rightful Spiritual goal and intended position by God. And the general revolt of the intellectualism of this age against the resultant debasement of human nature to the level of the worm of the dust through Augustinian and Calvinistic theologies should bravely attest the falsity of such an orthodox characterization of this solitary Jesus.

I am blessed to have read the best books in the history of mankind on these topics over the years and my articles bring this information to the attention of truth-seekers. The mythical as opposed to the historical interpretation of the Gospels has been presented with some clarity by such men as: Dupuis, Drews, Robertson, Renan, Strauss, Massey, Higgins, Mead and others. The historical view of Jesus' life is stubbornly maintained by Christianity in spite of the destruction evidence advanced by Comparative Religion and Mythology which proves otherwise and which points out beyond any doubt the fact that the events of the Gospel narrative are matched with unbelievable identical parallelism to the antecedent careers of such world saviors as Dionysus, Osiris, Sabazius, Tammuz, Adonis, Atys, Orpheus, Mithras, Zoroaster, Krishna, Bala-Rama, Vyasa, Buddha, Hercules, Sargon, Serapis, Horus, Marduk, Izdubar, Witoba, Apollonius of Tyana, Yehoshua ben Pandira, and even Plato and Pythagoras. One's study into Comparative Religion and Comparative Spiritual Mythology will reveal to the reader that the material used in the ceremonial dramas performed by the hierophants and initiates in the early Mystery Religions for 1200 years B.C.E. constitute by and large the same series of events narrated as the supposed "historical-literal" personal biography of the Christian Jesus. If you are a "thinking believer" this is problematic as you might expect for a religion that professes itself as the "only" way of salvation for mankind. Simply said, Orthodox Christianity has incorporated into its "theology" this same Ancient Spiritual Wisdom but tragically has given it an erroneous "re-interpretation" in its presentation of it as a "literal-historical" narratives of a sole individual which they connected to the "hoped-for Jewish Messiah". Judaism, if you are not aware, attests that this hoped for deliverer, this anointed human being and not a super-god-man, never came. It is worth impressing on all minds of "thinking believers" that the legend of the historicity of the Gospels is only to be held by ignoring the solid weight of significant testimony otherwise. I have spent upwards of almost 20 years in serious study of such evidences. The bottom line is that this one Roman Book along with its "literalistic" interpretation given it by Rome can be discredited by hundreds of other books available today. Instead of permitting its adherents to move in the freedom of a spiritual interpretation of "the Christ", the ecclesiastical power of both Roman Catholicism and Protestantism is holding them rigidly to a doctrinal meaning that is badly corrupted by literalism. Understand this! In exalting a supposed "literalistic-historical" Jesus in unique magnificence, it lets the slumbering divinity in every man's heart lie unstirred. Unmoved by such admonitions in its own Scriptures Christian Orthodoxy is content to allow the slumbering divinity within mankind to remain asleep.

"Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Eph. 5:14.

Contrary to what we have been taught by a "darkened" mindset in Christianity, along with their erroneous interpretation of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the indwelling Christ over these last 1,800 years, the deity that needs exaltation is that which is struggling within the breasts of the sons of earth to appear! Theological dogmatism fails utterly to see tragic consequences from this misinterpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Jesus' enthronement as a "literal-historical" entity to which Rome described sole divinity and its method of hermeneutic and interpretation of these Sacred Texts is tantamount to the Spiritual disinheritance of every child on God on this planet. Taught to look outside of ourselves for the source of power and grace, we ignore the real presence of God within us, the indwelling God as the Christ, that pleads for closer recognition and communion. The historical Jesus, fostered by an erroneous interpretation of not only the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the later forged texts in our Christian Bibles, blocks the way to the spiritual Christ and his "resurrection" in the hearts of mankind.

Knowing the tragic history of my Christian birth faith I often dream of how the totality of Christian history could have been so markedly different and the Spiritual evolution of mankind so further advanced had not the supposed historical Jesus been interpolated into the Ancient Spiritual drama of the Descent of the Soul and the Cosmic Mind of God into the flesh of mankind. By this tragic reinterpretation of Ancient Divine Wisdom mankind was falsely led whereby his Spiritual vision was turned outward to the worship of a soon "returning Christ" who would supposedly remedy all of mankind's failures, sins and wrongdoings and bring with him "Heaven on Earth" when it fact this is Soul's goal and the goal of the Christly incarnation in each of us since the beginning of time. The sanctified devotion of hundreds of millions of Souls in Christendom since the beginning of the 2nd century and Rome's radical reinterpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom, instead of being focused upon personal effort to awaken from spiritual slumber (called "death" by the Ancient Wisdom) the Christly spirit within the collective body of humanity, has been scattered in almost total fruitlessness upon the figure of an historicized and carnalized misinterpreted religious Divine myth. This is tragic beyond comprehension and the scope of this does not register with most until their studies advance to the point whereby they restore for themselves the necessary "keys" for the proper interpretation of this Ancient Divine Wisdom. Then they are breathless and stand in stark amazement at what they now see. I warn the reader to don't make the mistake of equating military and technological advance with Spiritual achievement. The present demoralized Spiritual State of America today whereby we cannot build prisons fast enough for our Christianized population that has been thoroughly saturated with Christian "literalistic" doctrinism and a false "historical Jesus" confirms the tragic truth of misinterpretation of our Bibles and its "literalized" message as a guide for mankind's Spiritual path. And the earlier Christian history lends further corroboration in its sorry record of disputations, heretical persecution, crusades against their own Christian sects which erupted into violent warfare between the Church and others who possesses this precious Spiritual Wisdom and died to the tune of 18 million as hands of this false "literalistic" interpretation of our Bibles. Upon the establishment of official ties between the state and Christianity, the state and the Church turned their considerable negative attention to those deemedheretics, although who was and was not a heretic could alter with the winds of political change. And all this was perpetrated in the name of the supposed "literal-historical" person named Jesus who is our example of "love".

It is my hope that the readers of this article sees the scope of this truth I have tried to share; to grasp the futility of gazing gazing into the physical heavens to find God, where no telescope had ever located Him, and searching to see the Christos return, when He never left. Let us realize that God's dwelling can be only in the heart and conscience of man who has been created in the Image of God and in whom the Christ longs to manifest His existence and influence to take our Souls to the next level of our Spiritual journey.

THE TRUTH ABOUT EARLY CHRISTIANITY AND THE ROMAN COVER-UP

Only a few Christians every learn that on the site where the Vatican now stands there once stood a Pagan temple. In fact many early churches were built upon the ruins of Pagan temples. Here on what is known as the Vatican Pagan priests one stood and observed sacred ceremonies, which early Christians found so disturbing that they tried to erase all evidence of them ever having been practiced.

Answer for yourself: What was the problem that precipitated Christianity trying to destroy all the evidence of these "Pagan" rites? Why did Rome not only destroy such knowledge but many of the world's libraries as well? One might assume that we are speaking of gruesome sacrifices of infants or virgins or some type of obscene orgies but that is not the case when one begins a person study into this matter. This is of course what we have been led to believe but that is not the truth of the matter.

Answer for yourself: So what was it?

Where in the Vatican where today the gathered faithful Roman Catholics revere their Lord Jesus Christ, the ancients worshiped another godman who, like Jesus, had been miraculously born on December 25 before three shepherds. In this ancient sanctuary Pagan congregations once glorified a Pagan redeemer who, like Jesus, was said to have ascended to heaven and to have promised to come again at the end of time to judge the quick and the dead. On the same spot where the Pope celebrates the Catholic mass, Pagan priests also celebrated a symbolic meal of bread and wine in memory of their savior who, just like Jesus, had declared:

He who will not eat of my body and drink of my blood, so that he will be made one with me and I with him, the same shall not know salvation (Mithraic inscription quoted in J. Godwin, Mystery Religions In The Ancient World, 1981, p. 28).

Now the above quote should take your breath away especially in light that before now you believed that Christ Jesus brings a unique revelation at the Passover and announces before his disciples and apostles the same adage. As my studies advanced over the years I was shocked to find innumerable parallels between Christ Jesus of the New Testament and the Pagan Mysteries and Pagan godmen and goddesses. As I began to uncover such extraordinary similarities between the story of Jesus and Pagan myth I was stunned and devastated; especially since being an ordained Pastor and Seminary graduate devoted to teaching God's truth. I quickly realized that I might not have "God's Truth" as expressed in my New Testament or at least not understood what is being said as I needed. You should agree that we both have been brought up in a culture which portrays Paganism and Christianity as entirely antagonistic religious perspectives.

Answer for yourself: But are they? Could our current Roman Christianity only be a "literal" presentation of the SAME beliefs held by the ancients and earliest Jewish and Gentile Gnostic Christians which they understood only as "allegories" of Divine Truths?

Answer for yourself: Could I be mistaken about most of what I have been taught since childhood because my inherited religious documents from Rome have been approached with "literal" spectacles instead of "allegorical" spectacles?

Answer for yourself: Besides that could my Christian Bible be a forgery in many places and I not know it?

Answer for yourself: How could such astonishing similarities, likenesses, analogies, and resemblances between ancient Gods and Goddesses and the Jesus story in the Roman New Testament that I was uncovering in my scholarly study be explained?

Needless to say the more I read and studied the more I was consumed and inspired to uncover the reasons for such parallels and had to search even harder and even further to find the answers. In the beginning I was confronted with a theological puzzle which I felt I had but a few pieces but several years later as the pieces and "nuggets" came together I began to see a very clear picture of why such parallels between the Pagan mysteries and the Christ Jesus of the New Testament exist. The more read and looked and collected book after book the more resemblances I found. Soon very few if any accounts of the New Testament Christ Jesus were " unique". Over the years of my study as facts and evidence mounted from such study I felt compelled to completely review my understanding of the relationship between Paganism and Christianity. The unbelievable occurred to me, a Seminary graduate and ordained Pastor due to the collection of revealing facts and evidence amassed from my studies over many years. What I had previously regarded as unquestionable had to be rethought in light of the findings my studies and I had to imagine possibilities that at first seemed impossible. At first I was frightened by what I reasoned but the facts and discoveries I had made in my studied reassured me that God never desired that we place our faith in "lies" and "untruths." God desires we place our faith in what is TRUE. That axon always reassured me as the studies advanced to even deeper levels and as more puzzle pieces came together. Soon the conclusions were inescapable and for me became the simplest and most obvious way of accounting for the evidence that I had amassed.

In America under the influence of Roman Catholicism and Protestantism we have become ingrained to believe that the story of Christ Jesus in the New Testament is to be taken "literally" and is the "gospel truth." But the more I had studied during the years of my Pastorate I had become absolutely convinced that the story of Jesus is not the biography of a historical Messiah, but a myth based on perennial Pagan stories. Now having the facts behind this story I no longer wondered why the Jesus did not believe in my Christian Jesus.

Christianity was not a new and unique revelation but actually a Jewish adaptation of the ancient Pagan Mystery religion. It may sound unbelievable to the reader but that is only because you have not done the necessary scholarly studies to reveal the facts and evidence that exists that proves the above statement. The above statement is firmly based and provable beyond any doubt by any serious seeker of the truth concerning the New Testament Christ Jesus and is based upon rock solid historical and archeological evidences as well as available historical sources and the latest scholarly research. As a Pastor who would be forced to resign based upon my studies my heart was troubled about the untold number of typical Christians who would never know that anything is wrong about their "Jesus" and who, unlike me, did not possess the abilities to due such scholarly study. After many days of soul searching I decided to make this information accessible to the general reader. Many of the articles included in this website have extensive references and many sources are listed for those who wish to analyze the data presented more thoroughly.

HOW DID WE LOSE THIS TRUTH?

Although still radical and challenging today, many of the ideas expressed on this website are actually far from new. As long ago as the Renaissance, mystics and scholars saw the origins of Christianity in the ancient Egyptian religion. Visionary scholars at the turn of the nineteenth century also made comparable conjectures to what my studies were showing me. Regardless of who you are if you do the necessary studies you will find the same things that scholars before you as well as presently uncover. In recent decades, modern academics have repeatedly pointed toward the possibilities that I will share on this website. Yet few have dared to boldly state the obvious conclusions that I drew from my studies. Social ostracism awaited those who did and even some Pastors such as Robert Taylor in the 1840's were put in prison for sharing such truths.

For 2,000 years the West has been dominated by Roman Catholicism and the idea that Christianity is sacred and unique while Paganism is primitive and the work of the Devil. To even consider that they could be parts of the same tradition has been simply unthinkable. Therefore, although the true origins of Christianity have been obvious all along as attested to by one's cursory examination of existing historical studies, few have been able to see them, because to do so requires not only access but a radical break with the conditioning of our culture. If one has the ability to due such studies then I can assure them that there are in store for a complete reappraisal of the origins of Christianity.

THE PAGAN MYSTERIES...WHAT ARE THEY?

Paganism is a "dead" religion. Let me say it another way. Paganism is an "exterminated" religion. It may be a little premature but I am referring basically to Gnosticism in all it variant forms. It did not simply fade away into oblivion. It was actively suppressed and annihilated, its temples and shrines desecrated and demolished, and its great sacred books thrown onto bonfires. No living lineage has been left to explain its ancient beliefs. So, the Pagan worldview has to be reconstructed from the archaeological evidence and texts that have survived, like some giant metaphysical jigsaw puzzle.

Pagan was originally a derogatory term meaning country-dweller, used by Christians to imply that the spirituality of the ancients was some primitive rural superstition. But this is not true. Paganism was the spirituality which inspired the unequaled magnificence of the Giza pyramids, the exquisite architecture of the Parthenon, the legendary sculptures of Phideas, the powerful plays of Euripides and Sophocles, and the sublime philosophy of Socrates and Plato.

Pagan civilization built vast libraries to house hundreds of thousands of works of literary and scientific genius. Its natural philosophers speculated that human beings had evolved from animals. Its astronomers knew the Earth was a sphere, which, along with the planets, revolves around the sun. They had even estimated its circumference to within one degree of accuracy. The ancient Pagan world sustained a population not matched again in Europe until the eighteenth century. In Greece, Pagan culture gave birth to the concepts of democracy, rational philosophy, public libraries, theater, and the Olympic Games, creating a blueprint for our modern world (T. Freke and Peter Gandy, The Jesus Mysteries, 1999, p. 16-18).

Answer for yourself: Having looked at some of the scientific and social accomplishments of Paganism, what was the spirituality that inspired these momentous cultural achievements?

Most people associate Paganism with either rustic witchcraft or the myths of the gods of Olympus as recorded by Hesiod and Homer. Pagan spirituality did indeed embrace both. The country people practiced their traditional shamanic nature worship to maintain the fertility of the land and the city authorities propped up formal state religions, such as the worship of the Olympian gods, to maintain the power of the status quo.

It was, however, a third, more mystical, expression of the Pagan spirit that inspired the great minds of the ancient world. The thinkers, artists, and innovators of antiquity were initiates of various religions known as Mysteries. These remarkable men and women held the Mysteries to be the heart and soul of their culture. The Greek historian Zosimos writes that without the Mysteries "life for the Greeks would be unlivable" for "the sacred Mysteries hold the whole human race together." The eminent Roman statesman Cicero enthuses:

These Mysteries have brought us from rustic savagery to a cultivated and refined civilization. The rites of the Mysteries are called "initiations" and in truth we have learned from them the first principles of life. We have gained the understanding not only to live happily but also to die with better hope* (J.

Campbell, Occidental Mythology, 1964, p. 268). , quoting Cicero, On the Laws, 2.36).

Unlike the traditional rituals of the official state religions, which were designed to aid social cohesion, the Mysteries were an individualistic form of spirituality, which offered mystical visions and personal enlightenment. W. Burkert, Greek Religion: Arcahic and Classical: 1985, p. 291, states: "Dionysus is the god of the exceptional. As the individual gains in independence, the Dionysus cult becomes a vehicle for the separation of private groups from the polis. Alongside public Dionysiac festivals there emerge Dionysus mysteries." W.K.C. Guthrie, Orpheus and the Greek Religion, 1952, p. 50 states: "It is this emergence of mystery religions into the stream of history that is meant by those who refer to the great religious revival of the sixth century. Henceforth... the choice of belief being a matter of individual temperament." R. T. Wallis, Neoplatonism and Gnosticism, 1992, p. 28, states Jaeger's view that "From the fourth century BC on, the form of Greek religion that appealed to most people of higher education was not the religion of the Olympic gods but that of the mysteries, which gave the individual a more personal relationship with the Godhead." The Mystery religions were ideally suited to the conditions following Alexander's conquest, when previously discrete cultures were thrown together. The science of comparative religion was born and old national and racial deities reinvented. The new Mediterranean koine presented to the individual new challenges and new opportunities. The individualistic salvation cults of the Mysteries flourished in this environment.

Initiates underwent a secret process of initiation, which profoundly trans formed their state of consciousness. The great Pagan philosophers were the enlightened masters of the Mysteries. Although they are often portrayed today as dry academic intellectuals, they were actually enigmatic gurus:

- Pythagoras
- Plato
- Empedocles
- Socrates
- Heraclitus
- Anaxagoras
- Diogenes
- The inspired playwright Euripides

All of these idiosyncratic sages were steeped in the mysticism of the Mysteries, which they expressed in their philosophy. Olympiodorus, a follower of Plato, tells us that his master paraphrased the Mysteries everywhere.

At the heart of Pagan philosophy is an understanding that all things are One. The Mysteries aimed at awakening within the initiate a sublime experience of this Oneness.

Sallustius declares: "Every initiation aims at uniting us with the World and with the Deity" (S. Angus, Mystery Religions, 1925, p. 70, quoting from Concerning the Gods and The Universe, p. 4).

Plotinus describes the initiate transcending his limited sense of himself as a separate ego and experiencing mystical union with God:

As if borne away, or possessed by a god, he attains to solitude in untroubled stillness, nowhere deflected in his being and unbusied with self, utterly at rest and become very rest. He does not converse with a statue or image but with Godhead itself. And this is no object of vision, but another mode of seeing, a detachment from self, a simplification and surrender of self, a yearning for contact, and a stillness and meditation directed towards transformation. Whoever sees himself in this way has attained likeness to God; let him abandon himself and find the end of his journeying* (quoted in J. Gregory, The Neoplatonists, 1987, p. 188)

Hopefully these few examples will help us rethink the spirituality provided by the Pagan Mysteries to their initiates.

Roman influenced Christianity has made sure that Christians are indoctrinated with an inaccurate and outdated view of Paganism. We had been taught to imagine a primitive superstition, which indulged in idol worship and bloody sacrifice, and dry philosophy. They were painted to us as if ignorant and devotees of false gods who had lost their way in false worship. Some of us are even familiar with various Greek myths, which showed the partisan and capricious nature of the Olympian gods and goddesses. All in all, Paganism seemed primitive and fundamentally alien. But after learning the "key" to understanding the Pagan Mysteries this all changed for me. The key is simple and involved how we are to approach and interpret what we read: an "ALLEGORICAL" or a "LITERAL" interpretation of the Pagan Mysteries.

After many years of study, however, my understanding of both Paganism and the Christ Jesus of the New Testament has been transformed and the puzzle has come together. It was so simple but without the "keys" then one wanders as he studies Pagan Religions seeking for the understanding of the parallels with the Christ Jesus of the New Testament. At times I felt as if I was in a maze of unrelated thought; only glimpsing a "connection" here and there; never achieving my desired end. It appears as a maze of collected traditions until one receives "Gnosis" and the "key" to understanding the message of the Ancients.

Pagan spirituality was actually the sophisticated product of a highly developed culture. The state religions, such as the Greek worship of the Olympian gods, were little more than outer pomp and ceremony. The real spirituality of the people expressed itself through the vibrant and mystical "Mystery religions". At first underground and heretical movements, these Mysteries spread and flourished throughout the ancient Mediterranean, inspiring the greatest minds of the Pagan world, who regarded them as the very source of civilization.

"OUTER" AND "INNER" MYSTERIES AS RELATED TO THE DYING AND RESURRECTING GODMAN

Each Mystery tradition had exoteric Outer Mysteries, consisting of myths, which were common knowledge, and rituals, which were open to anyone who wanted to participate. This was intended for the common man. This was the "literal" understanding of the Pagan mysteries which was not true to reality but was a disguise of the inner truth. There were also esoteric Inner Mysteries, which were not open to just anyone. These inner mysteries were "allegories" that contained a sacred secret known only to those who had undergone a powerful process of initiation. Initiates of the Inner Mysteries had the mystical meaning of the rituals and myths of the Outer Mysteries revealed to them, a process that brought about personal transformation and spiritual enlightenment.

The philosophers of the ancient world were the spiritual masters of the Inner Mysteries. They were mystics and miracle-workers, more comparable to Hindu gurus than dusty academics. The great Greek philosopher Pythagoras, for example, is remembered today for his mathematical theorem, but few people picture him as he actually was a flamboyant sage, who was believed to be able to miraculously still the winds and raise the dead.

At the heart of the Mysteries were myths concerning a dying and resurrecting godman, who was known by many different names:

- In Egypt he was Osiris,
- In Greece Dionysus,
- In Asia Minor Attis,
- In Syria Adonis,
- In Italy Bacchus,

- In Persia Mithras.

Answer for yourself: Was this "dying and resurrecting godman" to be understood "literally" or "allegorically" by those who were initiates in the Pagan Mysteries?

Fundamentally all these godmen are the same mythical being. As was the practice from as early as the third century BCE, the term Osiris-Dionysus came to be used to denote this godman's universal and composite nature.

From the fifth century BCE philosophers such as Xenophanes and Empedodes had ridiculed taking the stories of the gods and goddesses literally. They viewed them as allegories of human spiritual experience. The myths of Osiris-Dionysus should not be understood as just intriguing tales, therefore, but as a symbolic language, which encodes the mystical teachings of the Inner Mysteries. Because of this, although the details were developed and adapted over time by different cultures, the myth of Osiris-Dionysus has remained essentially the same.

The various myths of the different godmen of the Mysteries share what the great mythologist Joseph Campbell called "the same anatomy". Just as every human is physically unique yet it is possible to talk of the general anatomy of the human body, so with these different myths it is possible to see both their uniqueness and fundamental sameness. On the face of it they look very different, yet they are essentially the same story. Similarly, the tales told about the godmen of the Pagan Mysteries are essentially the same, although they take different forms.

The dramatization of the myth of Dionysus at Eleusis is really the origin of tragedy and theater. The initiates into the Pagan Mysteries were not a passive audience. They initiates into the Pagan Mysteries were participants who shared in the passion of the godman whose death and rebirth was SYMBOLIC OF THEIR OWN DEATH AND SPIRITUAL REBIRTH as they died to the "old man of flesh" and realized that within them dwells "the Christ of God" called by them many different names. They awoke to the realization of the mystical knowledge imparted to them that they were each manifestations of God within flesh. The awakening to the Divine Presence that resided within them was likened to the death and rebirth of the Godman Dionysus (a man created in the image of God but who had forgotten it). So we see the death and resurrection of the Godman was "allegorical" and was never to be understood "literally."

The Mysteries did not offer religious dogmas to simply be believed, but a myth to be entered into. Initiation was not about learning something, but about experiencing an altered state of awareness of one's self.

Answer for yourself: Why did the myth enacted by the Pagan Mysteries have such a profound effect?

The answer is that within the myth of the dying and resurrecting godman were encoded secret teachings!

THE PAGAN MYSTERIES AND ENCODED SECRET TEACHINGS..."ALLEGORICAL" OR "LITERAL"?

In antiquity the word mythos did not mean something "untrue," as it does for us today. Superficially a myth was an entertaining story, but to the initiated it was a sacred code that contained profound spiritual teachings. D. Fidler, Jesus Christ, Sun of God, 1993, p. 6 states: "The teachings of the mystery religions were characteristically embodied in allegory, myth, and symbolic imagery, both as "teaching stories" and as basic paradigms of human experience. Certain philosophical schools, especially the Stoics and Platonists, drew upon traditional myths to illustrate insights, which transcend merely logical description. Moreover, they held that the interpretation of the traditional myths, like the pursuit of philosophy itself, constituted, at its core, a process of initiation." Plato comments, "It looks as if those also who established rites of initiation for us were no fools, but that there is a hidden meaning in their teachings" (Plato, Phaedo, 69c). 38 He explains that it is "those who have given their lives to true philosophy" who will grasp the "hidden meaning" encoded in the Mystery myths, and so become completely identified with the godman in an experience of mystical enlightenment (Ibid., 69d: "As those who understand the mysteries say, "There are many who bear the wand, but few who become Bacchoi." Becoming one with the godman was the goal of the Mysteries.

Answer for yourself: Is this like what Paul taught about being "in Christ"? Yes; completely!

The ancient philosophers were not so foolish as to believe that the Mystery myths were literally true, but wise enough to recognize that they were an easy introduction to the profound mystical philosophy at the heart of the Mysteries.

It was the role of the priests and philosophers of the Mysteries to decode the hidden depths of spiritual meaning contained within the Mystery myths. Heliodorus, a priest of the Mysteries, explains:

Philosophers and theologians do not disclose the meanings embedded in these stories to laymen but simply give them preliminary instruction in the form of a myth. But those who have reached the higher grades of the Mysteries they initiate into clear knowledge in the privacy of the holy shrine, in the light cast by the blazing torch of truth* (Heliodorus, An Ethiopian Story, 9.9, quoted in Fidler, op. cit., 322, note 46).

The Mysteries were divided into various levels of initiation, which led an initiate step by step through ever deepening levels of understanding. The number of levels of initiation varied in different Mystery traditions, but essentially the initiate was led from the Outer Mysteries, in which the myths were understood superficially as religious stories, to the Inner Mysteries, in which the myths were revealed as spiritual allegories. First the initiate was ritually purified. Then they were taught the secret teachings on a one-to-one basis (P. Kingsley, Ancient Philosophy, Mystery, and Magic, 1995, p. 367). A beginner was called a mystae, which means "eyes closed" and is the root of our words "mystery" and "mysticism." The mystae were those who had not yet understood the secret Inner Mysteries. The higher level of initiates were called epoptae, meaning "to have seen." The epoptae were those who had understood the Inner Mysteries (C. Kerenyi, Dionysus, 1976, Preface, xxiv). Despite this abundance of physical evidence for the popularity of the Dionysus cult, Kerenyi reiterates Nietzsche's lament that "Even today virtually everything in the field of the Dionysian still remains to be discovered." The highest stage was when the initiate understood the true meaning of the teachings and finally experienced what Theon of Smyrna calls "friendship and interior communion with God."

Answer for yourself: Is there any connection between these Higher Pagan Mysteries and Christ Jesus of the New Testament?

OSIRIS-DIONYSUS & CHRIST JESUS & CONNECTION TO GNOSTIC CHRISTIANITY

Osiris-Dionysus had such universal appeal because he was seen as an Every-man figure who symbolically represented each initiate. Through understanding the allegorical myth of the Mystery godman, initiates could become aware that, like Osiris-Dionysus, they were also "God made flesh." They too were immortal Spirit trapped within a physical body. This is their "Gnosis".

- Through sharing in the death of Osiris-Dionysus initiates symbolically "died" to their lower earthly nature (their flesh).
- Through sharing in his resurrection they were spiritually reborn and experienced their eternal and divine essence. They came to realize that they were spiritual creatures and that the God of the Universe lived within them. This was their symbolic resurrection to their new awareness of their very self..."Christ in you".

This was the profound mystical teaching that the myth of Osiris-Dionysus encoded for those initiated into the Inner Mysteries, the truth of which initiates directly experienced for themselves. So through the medium of myth these great dynamic truths were imparted to lay people. You can equate this with the later Judeo-Christian concept of "being born again."

Writing of the Egyptian Mystery godman Osiris, Sir Wallis Budge, who was keeper of antiquities in the British Museum, explains:

The Egyptians of every period in which they are known to us believed that Osiris was of divine origin, that he suffered death and mutilation at the hands of the power of evil, that after great struggle with these powers he rose again, that he became henceforth the king of the underworld and judge of the dead, and that because he had conquered death the righteous might also conquer death* (E.A.Wallis Budge, Egyptian Religion, 1899, p.59).

He represented to men the idea of a man who was both God and man, and he typified to the Egyptians in all ages the being who by reason of his sufferings and death as a man could sympathize with them in their own sickness and death. The idea of his human personality also satisfied their cravings and yearnings for communion with a being who, though he was partly divine, yet had much in common with themselves. Originally they looked upon Osiris as a man who lived on the earth as they lived, who ate and drank, who suffered a cruel death, who by help of certain gods triumphed over death, and attained unto everlasting life. But what Osiris did they could also do (Ibid.).

These are the key motifs that characterize the myths of all the Mystery god-men. What Budge writes of Osiris could equally be said of Dionysus, Attis, Adonis, Mithras, and the rest. It also describes the Jewish dying and resurrecting godman Jesus Christ. Like Osiris-Dionysus, he is also God Incarnate and God of the Resurrection. He also promises his followers spiritual rebirth through sharing in his divine Passion.

This might seem foreign and unrelated but it is not. The more that I read and studied the origins of the New Testament the more I was led into the study of Gnosticism since it was Gnostics which gave us the First New Testament (Marcion) the more I came to understand and see the parallels between the various versions of the myth of Osiris-Dionysus. Soon I was knee-deep in the study of Comparative Religions as I was seeing these same religions doctrines and motifs all throughout recorded history. The Osiris-Dionysus myth as been replayed over and over. Armed with this knowledge the the more it became obvious that the story of Jesus had all the characteristics of this perennial tale of Osiris-Dionysus and its variations. Event by event, I found that I was able to build Jesus' supposed biography from mythic motifs previously relating to Osiris Dionysus:

- Osiris-Dionysus is God made flesh, the savior and "Son of God"
- His father is God and his mother is a mortal virgin.
- He is born in a cave or humble cowshed on December 25 before three shepherds.
- He offers his followers the chance to be born again through the rites of baptism.
- He miraculously turns water into wine at a marriage ceremony.
- He rides triumphantly into town on a donkey while people wave palm leaves to honor him.
- He dies at Eastertime as a sacrifice for the sins of the world.
- After his death he descends to hell, then on the third day he rises from the dead and ascends to heaven in glory.
- His followers await his return as the judge during the Last Days.
- His death and resurrection are celebrated by a ritual meal of bread and wine, which symbolize his body and blood.

Answer for yourself: Are these the only parallels between the Christ Jesus of the New Testament and the Pagan Godman? No by any means. There are hundreds. Are they to be understood "literally" or "allegorically"?

In the beginning of these studies not only was I depressed by what I was finding but one might say devastated spiritually. I had spent my whole life worshiping the Christian God who was little more than a replay of the Pagan Godman. What I lacked then in knowledge that would have comforted me immensely is the fact that these Pagan godman were understood by the devotees as "spiritual allegories" that expressed Divine Truths captured for all eternity in the form of myth. Oh how I wish I had had that understanding way back then. Lacking this perspective back then most of whom I was reading in the beginning of such study presented these Pagan godmen in a "literal" way never alluding to the fact that the devotees looked at them not from the perspective of the "Outer Mysteries" but through the "Inner Mysteries." Once seeing this then I was better able to reevaluate the Christ Jesus of the New Testament in the same way and the parallels which once had meant "idolatry" now was seen anew in the same light.

Answer for yourself: Why are these remarkable similarities not common knowledge? Because, as we were to discover later, the early Roman Church did everything in its power to prevent us perceiving them. It systematically destroyed Pagan sacred literature in a brutal program of eradicating the Mysteries - a task it performed so completely that today Paganism is regarded as a "dead" religion.

Surprising to me with further study was the fact that writers of the first few centuries CE saw these similarities between the new Christian religion and the ancient Mysteries. They were extremely obvious to them back then. We have lost a lot today again due to the censorship of Roman Catholicism. Pagan critics of Christianity, such as the satirist Celsus, complained that this recent religion was nothing more than a pale reflection of their own ancient teachings. Early "Church fathers," such as Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and Irenaeus, were understandably disturbed and resorted to the desperate claim that these similarities were the result of Satanic plagiarism and mimicry. Using one of the most absurd arguments ever advanced, they accused the Devil of "plagiarism by anticipation," of deviously copying the true story of Jesus before it had actually happened in an attempt to mislead the gullible! These Church fathers struck us as no less devious than the Devil they hoped to incriminate.

Other Christian commentators have claimed that the myths of the Mysteries were like "pre-echoes" of the literal coming of Jesus, somewhat like premonitions or prophecies. This is a more generous version of the diabolical mimicry theory, but seemed no less ridiculous than the Satanic plagiarism theory. There was nothing other than cultural prejudice, ingrained religious conditioning since childhood, and lack of knowledge that prevents us from seeing the Jesus story as the literal culmination of its many mythical precursors. Viewed impartially, it appeared to be just another version of the same basic story.

As early Christianity became the dominant power in the previously Pagan world, popular motifs from Pagan mythology became grafted onto the biography of Jesus. This is a possibility that is even put forward by many Christian theologians. The virgin birth, for example, is often regarded as an extraneous later addition that should not be understood literally. Such motifs were "borrowed" from Paganism in the same way that Pagan festivals were adopted as Christian saints' days. This theory is common among those who go looking for the "real" Jesus hidden under the weight of accumulated mythological debris. This is only part of the answer we are looking for.

Having collected and collated such a comprehensive body of similarities between the Christ Jesus of the New Testament and the Pagan Mysteries there remained hardly any significant elements in the biography of Jesus that I did not find prefigured by the Mysteries. On top of this, the more I studied I discovered that even Jesus' teachings were not original, but had been anticipated by the Pagan sages! Many great sayings of Jesus in the New Testament were previously espoused by Pagan philosophers and philosophic movements.

Answer for yourself: How could this be?

Answer for yourself: Was there a "real" Jesus somewhere underneath all this?

Just when I thought I was finding the end of the road in my Jesus studies I was to be re oriented ever further the more that I examined Gnosticism and went beyond the surface of this complex religious system of thought.

THE GNOSTICS...& THE FIRST NEW TESTAMENT

Needless to day at times my head was swimming at not only what I was learning but the speed at which it was coming. At times I would have to take a sabbatical and sort out and departmentalize what I was uncovering. It was at these times that I began to seriously question the received picture of the early Church and have a look at the evidence for myself. This led to my serious investigation of the New Testament and how it was produced: who, when, additions, changes, deletions, inventions, and its canonization. Along the way I discovered four major pieces of information that would shape my further studies:

- That instead of "one" New Testament there really was two: the First New Testament of the Gnostic Marcion in 140 C.E. and the refutation of it in 180 C.E. by Irenaeus which I call the "Second New Testament"
- That far from being the united congregation of saints and martyrs that traditional history would have us believe, the early Christian community was actually made up of a whole spectrum of different religious sects and groups.
- These can be broadly categorized into two different schools.
 - On the one hand there were those we will call Literalists, because what defines them is that they take the Jesus story as a literal account of historical events. It was this school of Christianity that was adopted by the Roman Empire in the fourth century CE, becoming Roman Catholicism and all its subsequent offshoots.
 - On the other hand, however, there were also radically different Christians known as Gnostics. These are called Allegorists.
 - Conventionally these two camps are known respectively as orthodox or catholic Christians (LITERALISTS) and Gnostics (ALLEGORICAL INTERPRETATION.

These forgotten Gnostic Christians were later persecuted out of existence by the Literalist Roman Church with such thoroughness that until recently we knew little about them except through the writings of their detractors. We are so fortunate today to be blessed by the discoveries made by archeologists in the last 150 years; in particular in the last 50 or so years with the finds of the Nag Hammadi Gnostic Library and the Dead Sea Scrolls. Only a handful of original Gnostic texts survive the ravages of Rome and Father Time, none of which were published before the nineteenth century. This situation changed dramatically, however, with a remarkable discovery in 1945 when an Arab peasant stumbled upon a whole library of Gnostic gospels hidden in a cave near Nag Hammadi in Egypt. This gave scholars access to many texts which were in wide circulation among early Christians, but which were deliberately excluded from the canon of the New Testament. Discovered were gospels attributed to Thomas and Philip, texts recording the acts of Peter and the 12 disciples, apocalypses attributed to Paul and James, and so on (Timothy Freke and Peter Gandy, The Jesus Mysteries, 1999, p. 1-14).

Answer for yourself: Does it not seem strange to you that a whole library of early Christian documents could be discovered, containing what seems to be the teachings of Christ and his disciples, and yet so few modern followers of Jesus should even know of their existence? How could they have been overlooked for 2000 years? Would not Rome had collected them as they did so much other materials down through history?

Answer for yourself: Have you read them yet?

Answer for yourself: What kept them from being included in the Roman Catholic Second New Testament and its later official canonization of the New Testament?

It seems that even though 2,000 years have passed since the Gnostics were purged, during which time the Roman Church has split into Protestantism and thousands of other alternative groups, the Gnostics are still not regarded as a legitimate voice of Christianity.

Answer for yourself: Could it be that it is these Gnostics who were the "real" early Jewish Christians and that Rome never wanted this fact known? Could it be that these Gnostic Gospels represent more accurate the earliest beliefs of the original Christians concerning "the Christ"?

Answer for yourself: Could it be that the Christ Jesus of the First New Testament was understood only "allegorically" and this knowledge was destroyed by Rome's purge of the Gnostics as well as their later refutation of the Gnostic's First New Testament whereby Rome created their own "literal" Second New Testament which continued in place of an "allegorical Christ" a "human Christ"?

Those who do explore the Gnostic gospels and Gnosticism discover a form of Christianity quite alien to the religion with which they are familiar that we inherited from Rome. To Literalists Roman Catholics, the Gnostics were dangerous heretics. The Church as left us volumes of anti-Gnostic works.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? It is an unintentional testimony to the power and influence of Gnosticism within early Christianity. Roman Catholicism during the early centuries painted Gnostics as Christians who had "lost their way". They claimed they had become contaminated by the Paganism that surrounded them and had abandoned the purity of the true faith. The Gnostics, on the other hand, saw themselves as the authentic Christian tradition and the orthodox bishops as an "imitation church" (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Gospels, 1979, p. 147). They claimed to know the secret Inner Mysteries of Christianity, which the Literalists did not possess.

As I continued to explore the beliefs and practices of the Gnostics I became convinced that the Literalists were right in some way. I discovered a religious tradition concerning God and His Christ that ran from earliest Egypt on down through history through succeeding nations where cherished Divine Concepts were captured for all eternity through myths that were never intended to be taken "Literally." The problem is that today we read these Pagan accounts "literally" and consider them nonsense. If however we approach them with the intended "allegorical" interpretation as was intended then they open before us as beautiful treasures expressing the intricacies of God and His Creation. Of course this will take time and much study as one prepares himself to competently handle this religious literature but the rewards are worth the sacrifice and price to do so. Having said this over time I realized that theearliest Christian Gnostics were little different from Pagans in that they held the secrets of God and His Creation in their myths as did the Ancients. It cannot be overstressed that the problem is that we approach this religious literature with "literal" eyeglasses and are blinded to the Divine Cosmic Truths that they conceal.

Gnostics means "Knowers," a name they acquired because, like the initiates of the Pagan Mysteries, they believed that their secret teachings had the power to impart Gnosis - direct experiential "Knowledge of God". Just as the goal of a Pagan initiate was to become one with God, so for the Gnostics the goal of the Christian initiate was to become one with "the Christ" of God.

What particularly struck me over time and in my studies is the fact that neither Paul nor the the Gnostics were concerned with the historical Jesus. Gnostics viewed the Jesus story in the same way that the Pagan philosophers viewed the myths of Osiris-Dionysus...as an "allegory" expressing higher spiritual knowledge and truths. We know today that these earliest Gnostic Christians regarded the story of Christ Jesus as an allegory taken from the Book of Exodus that encoded secret mystical teachings about Creation and life.

Answer for yourself: Could this explain the similarities between Pagan myths and the biography of Jesus that I had discovered and had been bothered by the whole time? Should I have looked at Christ Jesus as did the earliest Christians in an "allegorical" fashion instead of a "literal" fashion"?

Answer for yourself: Could this explain the lack of credible historical evidence for the historical Jesus outside of that one book called the New Testament?

Answer for yourself: Have we been so caught up with traditional ways of thinking that we had been unable to see it?

DO WE EVEN DARE TO THINK OF THE POSSIBILITY OF WHAT ALL THIS MEANS?

The traditional version of history bequeathed to us by the authorities of the Roman Church is that Christianity developed from the teachings of a Jewish Messiah and that Gnosticism was a later deviation. It was not. Gnosticism came long before Roman literalism and Roman Christianity.

Answer for yourself: Is this Roman version of recorded history accurate to the facts that can be discerned today? No.

Answer for yourself: Is it just possible that true authentic Christianity is not Roman Christianity but a form of Gnosticism?

Answer for yourself: Could it be that orthodox "literalist" Roman Christianity was a later deviation from Gnosticism and that Gnosticism was a synthesis of Judaism and the Pagan Mystery religions and in so being expressed more accurately the earliest religious beliefs of the church concerning "the Christ" and "Jesus"?

More study was to follow but the picture was coming together with each new puzzle piece. Being aware that most ancient Mediterranean cultures had adopted the ancient Mysteries then it was not a problem in seeing how each culture adapted these Pagan Mysteries to their own national tastes and created their own version of the myth of the dying and resurrecting godman.

Answer for yourself: Had some of the Jews done the same? Had some Jews adopted the Pagan Mysteries and created their own version of the Pagan Mysteries, which we now today know as Gnosticism?

Answer for yourself: Had groups of Jews and initiates of the Jewish Mysteries adapted the potent symbolism of the Osiris-Dionysus myths (dying and resurrecting godman) into a myth of their own, the hero of which was the Jewish dying and resurrecting godman Jesus?

Answer for yourself: If this was so, then should we look at the Jesus story not as a biography at all but a consciously crafted vehicle for encoded spiritual teachings created by Jewish Gnostics?

As in the Pagan Mysteries, initiation into the Inner Mysteries would reveal the myth's allegorical meaning. Those uninitiated into the Inner Mysteries had mistakenly come to regard the Jesus myth as historical fact and in this way Literalist Christianity had been created. Gnostics understood that one begins his spiritual journey with the Outer Mysteries and understood that in the beginning spiritual myths are perceived "literally" by the carnal believers but with spiritual maturity they grown to see the hidden Divine Concepts in the "allegorical" understanding of the spiritual myth!

Answer for yourself: Do the Inner Mysteries of Christianity, which the Gnostics taught but which the later Roman Literalists denied existed, reveal that the Jesus story was not a factual account of God's one and only visit to planet Earth, but a mystical teaching story designed to help each one of us become one with Christ?+

Answer for yourself: The Jesus story does have all the hallmarks of a myth, so could it be that that is exactly what it is?

After all, no one has read the newly discovered Gnostic gospels and taken their fantastic stories as literally true; they are readily seen as myths. It is only familiarity, cultural prejudice, and a lack of knowledge on our parts that prevent us from seeing the New Testament gospels in the same light.

Answer for yourself: If those gospels had also been lost to us and only recently discovered, who would read these tales for the first time and believe they were historical accounts of a man born of a virgin, who had walked on water and returned from the dead?

Answer for yourself: Why should we consider the stories of Osiris, Dionysus, Adonis, Attis, Mithras, and the other Pagan Mystery saviors as fables, yet come across essentially the same story told in a Jewish context and believe it to be the biography of a carpenter from Bethlehem?

I had been raised a Christian and a Seminary graduate and now an ordained Pastor. My studies had not only surprised me but shocked me. Despite years of open-minded spiritual exploration I still felt that it was somehow dangerous to even dare think such thoughts. Early indoctrination reaches very deep. The conclusions of my study and the evidence that I will present on this website will show you beyond any doubt that the Christ Jesus of the New Testament is a pattern for a Pagan god and that today's Christianity, unlike the earliest Gnostic Christians, is a heretical product of Paganism religions which were interpreted by Rome "literally" instead of "allegorically." The earliest Gnostic Christians did not believe in a "literal human Christ." This will be proven in this website by many infallible proofs.

This simple "key" explains the similarities between the stories of Osiris-Dionysus and Jesus Christ in a simple and elegant way. They are parts of one developing mythos.

Answer for yourself: Isn't there "indisputable historical evidence" outside of the New Testament for the existence of Jesus the man? No there is not.

Answer for yourself: And how could Gnosticism be the original Christianity when St. Paul, the earliest Christian we know about, is so vociferously anti-Gnostic? Or was he and only made to look at way by later Roman forgery of epistles in Paul's name when Rome replaced the Gnostic First New Testament with a literal version of their own in 180 C.E. (the Second New Testament)?

Answer for yourself: And is it really credible that such an insular and anti-Pagan people as the Jews could have adopted the Pagan Mysteries?

Answer for yourself: How could it have happened that a consciously created myth came to be believed as history?

Answer for yourself: If Gnosticism represents genuine Christianity, why was it Literalist Christianity that came to dominate the world as the most influential religion of all time?

THE GREAT COVER-UP

Don't be afraid of challenging the accepted Roman view of history. Winners write history and Rome won. That does not mean that they were right; only stronger. As I continued to study and looked farther back into recorded history the traditional picture of received Christianity began to unravel completely all around me. I found:

- Schism after schism
- Power struggles after power struggle by competing religious sects
- Forged documents and
- False identities of writers of later gospels and epistles
- Religious documents and letters that had been edited, added to, subtracted from and invented
- Wholesale destruction of historical evidences
- Burning of libraries and destruction of opponents records and writings

The murder of opponents in the millions

I found myself in the greatest detective story in the whole wide world. I had stumbled onto an ancient and unacknowledged miscarriage of justice. For, time and again, as I critically examined what genuine evidence remained, we found that the history of Christianity bequeathed to us by the Roman Church was a gross distortion of the truth. It was becoming increasingly obvious to me that we as Christians and followers of the Jesus of the New Testament had been deliberately deceived, that the Gnostics were indeed the original Christians, and that their mystical understanding of God and His Christ had been purposely altered and changed by an authoritarian Roman institution which had created from it a dogmatic religion which then undertook a brutally enforced cover-up; possibly the greatest and biggest cover-up in the history of mankind. This was accomplished in part by the total forgery of the Second New Testament whereby a "literal" interpretation of "the Christ" was superimposed over an earlier "allegorical" interpretation of "the Christ" by the earliest Christians.

We need to talk of Eusebius for a second. Eusebius, at the beginning of the fourth century, compiled from legends, fabrications, and his own imagination the only early history of Christianity that still exists today. All subsequent histories have been forced to base themselves on Eusebius' dubious claims, because there has been little other information to draw on. All those with a different perspective on Christianity were branded as heretics and eradicated. In this way falsehoods compiled in the fourth century have come down to us as established facts. (T. Freke and P. Gandy, The Jesus Mysteries, 1999, p. 10-12). Eusebius was employed by the Roman Emperor Constantine, who made Christianity the state religion of the Empire and gave Literalist Christianity the power it needed to begin the final eradication of Paganism and Gnosticism. Constantine wanted "one God, one religion" to consolidate his claim of "one Empire, one Emperor" He oversaw the creation of the Nicene creed which is the article of faith repeated in churches to this day. Christians who refused to assent to this creed were banished from the Empire or otherwise silenced. This "Christian" Emperor then returned home from Nicaea and had his wife suffocated and his son murdered. He deliberately remained unbaptized until his deathbed so that he could continue his atrocities and still receive forgiveness of sins and a guaranteed place in heaven by being baptized at the last moment. Although he had his "spin doctor" Eusebius compose a suitably obsequious biography for him, he was actually a monster-just like so many Roman Emperors before him (T. Freke and P. Gandy, The Jesus Mysteries, 1999, p. 10-12).

Answer for yourself: Is it really at all surprising that a "history" of the origins of Christianity created by an employee in the service of a Roman tyrant should turn out to be a pack of lies?

Elaine Pagels, one of the foremost academic authorities on early Christianity, writes:

It is the winners who write history-their way. No wonder, then, that the traditional accounts of the origins of Christianity first defined the terms (naming themselves "orthodox" and their opponents "heretics"); then they proceeded to demonstrate-at least to their own satisfaction-that their triumph was historically inevitable, or, in religious terms, "guided by the Holy Spirit" But the discoveries [of the Gnostic gospels] at Nag Hammadi reopen fundamental questions (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Gospels, 1979, p. 147).

History is indeed written by the winners of wars; both military and theological. Rome won. The creation of an appropriate history has always been part of the arsenal of political manipulation. The Roman Church created a history of the triumph of Literalist Christianity. History is not simply related, it is created. Ideally, the motivation is to explain historical evidence and come to an accurate understanding of how the present has been created by the past. All too often, however, as Rome will show us, it is simply to glorify and justify the status quo. Such histories conceal as much as they reveal.

To dare to question a received history is not easy. Many of my friends when I bounced off them what I was studying and learning from my studies over the years often reacted with fear. It is difficult to believe that something that you have been told is true from childhood could actually be a product of falsification and fantasy. The hard facts is that Rome and the early Church Fathers like Ignatius, Justin and Irenaeus have lied to us and completely fabricated historical events as well as representing their theological opponents with a pack of lies.

It is easy to believe that something must be true because everyone else believes it. But the truth often only comes to light by daring to question the unquestionable, by doubting notions which are so commonly believed that they are taken for granted. Bet Emet Ministries (Hebrew for House of Truth) is the product of such an openness of mind. When I first encountered many of these truths from my study it seemed absurd and impossible. Now it seems obvious and ordinary; especially in light of over 15 years of constant scholarly study. The Vatican was constructed upon the site of an ancient Pagan sanctuary because the new is always built upon the old. In the same way Christianity itself has as its foundations the Pagan spirituality that preceded it (we just don't know it because we are told that this "literalist" interpretation is unique when in fact it is a gross aberration of the intended "allegorical" precepts that long predated it!

CAN WE RECOVER THE MYSTICAL UNDERSTANDING OF GOD AND HIS "CHRIST" AS HELD BY THE EARLIEST GNOSTIC CHRISTIANS?

Yes! In the presentation of this knowledge it is not my intention to upset certain Christians by trying to tell them that they are wrong. I will let the facts and evidences that I present speak for me. As a Pastor who has come to a greater understanding of "truth" through years of scholarly study it has been hard to be constantly surrounded by religious untruths and lies without experiencing a certain amount of outrage at what Rome has done in clouding these truths about the earliest Christians and how we have been misled from the truth about God. Along with this is the terrible negative misrepresentation of the Gnostics by the early Roman writers. This is only made worse as one becomes aware of the great riches of Pagan culture without feeling grief that they were so wantonly destroyed in the many Roman purges of truth down through history.

Above we began this article by sharing how the Pagan Mysteries were clearly an extremely powerful force in the ancient world and that the Pagan Mysteries inspired the greatest minds of the ancient world. We have documented how these Pagan Mysteries were practiced in different forms by nearly every culture in the Mediterranean. They comprised Outer Mysteries, which were open to all and to which a "literal" understanding was applied as well as the secret Inner Mysteries known only to those who had undergone a powerful process of mystical initiation and which these religious truths were then understood "allegorically." The truth of the Mysteries lay in the "allegorical" understanding and not in the "literal" understanding. At the heart of the Mysteries was the myth of a dying and resurrecting godman-Osiris-Dionysus. The Inner Mysteries revealed the myths of Osiris-Dionysus to be spiritual allegories encoding spiritual teachings of one identifying with the myth of the dying-resurrecting Godman whereby the initiate became aware of the Spiritual Christ within instead of just living a "fleshly" existence. This was "the Gnosis" which saves from sin.

Unlike the various Pagan Mystery godmen, Jesus is traditionally viewed as a historical rather than a mythical figure, literally a man who was an incarnation of God, who suffered a cruel death, and resurrected to bring salvation to all humankind. But we saw that these elements of the Jesus story are only mythical stories inherited from the Pagan Mysteries which Rome will reinterpret "literally" and feed the world in their Second New Testament. Let us not forget that this Second New Testament is the one which replaced Marcion's Gnostic New Testament where "the Christ" was understood "allegorically".

Early Literalist Christians mistakenly believed that the Jesus story was different from other stories of Osiris-Dionysus because Jesus alone had been a historical rather than a mythical figure. This sadly cannot be proven upon serious scrutiny of the facts and evidences made available to us today. Christians will resort to forgery of existing religious writings in order to create a "historical Jesus". This "literalist" interpretation of "the Christ" has left Christians feeling that their faith is in opposition to all others in that it is unlike all the rest because it lies not in the realm of "allegory" but in the realm of "historical reality." As stated this cannot be proven; in fact just the opposite it the case. It is my hope that by understanding Christianity's true origins that we might see the link between all religions in their hunger and search for God through His Christ, Sophia, Logos, etc. Belief in the Jesus story was originally the first step in Christian spirituality - the Outer Mysteries. Its significance was to be explained by an enlightened teacher when the seeker was spiritually ripe. These Inner Mysteries imparted a mystical Knowledge of God beyond mere belief in dogmas. Asa culture in America we have inherited only the Outer Mysteries of Christianity. We have lost the inner and true meaning of Paul's Christ. Our hope is that these teaching articles can help in recovering the truth concerning the true mystical Christian inheritance, God's Christ and God's true message of salvation.

THE BIBLE...RELIGIOUS TEXTS THAT MAKE TRUTH OFTEN ELUSIVE

It must be pointed out that using the Bible for reference and quoting from it is not entirely straightforward, as there are any number of different "Bibles" in circulation. The Jewish Bible, known to Christians as the Old Testament, consists of 39 books, mostly written in Hebrew, although a few were written in Aramaic, between about 1000 BC and AD 100. The Christian Bible includes these Jewish books of the Old Testament, plus the 27 books of the New Testament, the latter written mostly in Greek.

The world Bible is derived, via Latin, from the Greek biblia, meaning books. This is an appropriate designation, as the Old Testament is not a book as such, in terms of authorship or date of composition. Rather, it is a kind of library, including an extensive range of literary styles - narrative, law, history, prophecy and poetry - put together over period of more than a thousand years. The process of writing the Old Testament could more accurately be described as editing. Older material, both oral and written) an from different sources, was collected, interpreted and collated over a prolonged period by a sizeable number of people with varying abilities) and viewpoints. Stories are often duplicated, even within one narrative, with changes, modifications and with many contradictions.

Tradition ascribes authorship of the Torah or Pentateuch - from Genesis to the end of Deuteronomy - to Moses, although no such claim is made in the text. Not only is there such variation in style, detail and approach that composite authorship is the only explanation, but also Deuteronomy ends with the death of Moses, something he would have found quite hard to write about after the event. There is, therefore, really no such thing as a definitive Old Testament and to make the processes of scholarship and research more complicated, there is no extant version of the original Hebrew canon.

Early copies of some individual books of the Old Testament, in Hebrew and dating from the sixth century AD, were discovered stored in the Cairo synagogue during the late nineteenth century. The earliest complete Hebrew manuscript still in existence, the Aleppo Codex, dates from the first half of the tenth century AD, more than a thousand years after the last books of the Old Testament were written and perhaps two thousand years after the earliest. The standard Hebrew Bible today is based on a manuscript dating from AD 1088 that is now in the St. Petersburg Library. Both manuscripts are in codex or book form rather than the traditional scroll form and are known as Massoretic texts (Encarta Encyclopedia 96).

Matters are no easier for scholars and researchers when they are tackling the New Testament, although the problems here are rather different. To begin with, early Christian writers did not expect their work to carry the same Scriptural authority as the Jewish Bible. Rather, it was intended as instruction to the newly emerging Christian congregations. It was not until the second century that the idea of a Christian canon equal to the Jewish Bible began to emerge.

The first "New Testament", consisting only of Luke's Gospel and heavily edited versions of ten of Saul's (Paul's) Epistles, was collated in the second century by Marcion. Subsequently, the mainstream Christian Church asserted the authority of all four Gospels and 13 Pauline Epistles in their entirety. This established the framework of what ultimately became the Christian canon. It was not until AD 325 at the council of Nicaea, convened by the Roman emperor Constantine I, that a consensus as to the content of the Bible began to emerge. This was ratified in AD 367, and the 27 books of the New Testament were eventually canonized by Athanasius of Alexandria. Acceptance of this Christian Scripture followed in the Western Churches (Illustrated Guide To The Bible, J. Porter).

The final difficulty with both Old and New Testaments is that most people read them translated into their own language, which adds a further level of interpretation. In some instances, they will be reading a translation of a translation and a text written in an old-fashioned format. For example, the Authorized or 'King James' Bible, first published in 1611, remains much loved for its beautiful language and is widely known in the English-speaking world. Yet the meanings of some English words have changed since the seventeenth century and others have become archaic and obsolete or, at least, are not exactly easy for the modern reader to understand.

Because of this, many of the Bibles available to this day still disagree on important sections of their text. In addition some modern Bibles have attempted to interpret the meanings of these texts in modern terms and in the process they have lost much of the original import.

These are some of the many and varied problems that scholars have to deal with when interpreting these religious texts, but perhaps the largest of them all is the deliberate changing of the texts many centuries ago to suit the creed and religious views and beliefs that were current at those times. It is quite apparent from the duplicated stories, which we will examine in a moment, that some of the scribes were happy to change the texts in order to portray their heroes in a more favorable light. This was also done in order to change more ancient beliefs and practices into more acceptable 'modern' formats.

Because of these reasons the task before us of uncovering and discerning this hidden secret knowledge in these religious texts becomes progressively more difficult. The only answer to this problem is to study hard and long and in time your efforts are rewarded as you finally cover enough ground to uncover this knowledge.

ILLOGICAL PASSAGES IN OUR BIBLES: CLUES TO METAPHYSICAL REALITIES

So many times we read in our Bible many passages that often startle and even at times horrify us, like God commanding that babies be killed in the Old Testament, or passages that defy common sense and are highly illogical let alone impossible according to natural law. Take for example the God sanctioned acts of murder and infanticide which is rampant in the Bible. In much of the Bible, especially the Old Testament, there are laws supposedly given by a loving God that command that people be killed for absurd reasons such as carry sticks or working on the Sabbath, cursing your parents, being a rebellious son, or not being a virgin on your wedding night. In addition to these crazy and immoral laws, there are plenty of examples of God's irrationality by His direct killing of many people for reasons that defy any rational explanation such as killing children who make fun of bald people, and the killing of a man who tried to keep the ark of God from falling during transport. There are also countless examples of mass murders commanded by God, including the murder of women, infants, and children. Here are some examples:

From there Elisha went up to Bethel. While he was on his way, some small boys came out of the city and jeered at him. "Go up baldhead," they shouted, "go up baldhead!" The prophet turned and saw them, and he cursed them in the name of the Lord. Then two shebears came out of the woods and tore forty two of the children to pieces. (2 Kings 2:23-24 NAB)

Make ready to slaughter his sons for the guilt of their fathers; Lest they rise and posses the earth, and fill the breadth of the world with tyrants. (Isaiah 14:21 NAB)

"Then I heard the LORD say to the other men, "Follow him through the city and kill everyone whose forehead is not marked. Show no mercy; have no pity! Kill them all – old and young, girls and women and little children. But do not touch anyone with the mark. Begin your task right here at the Temple." So they began by killing the seventy leaders. "Defile the Temple!" the LORD commanded. "Fill its courtyards with the bodies of those you kill! Go!" So they went throughout the city and did as they were told." (Ezekiel 9:5-7 NLT)

But if this charge is true (that she wasn't a virgin on her wedding night), and evidence of the girls virginity is not found, they shall bring the girl to the entrance of her fathers house and there her townsman shall stone her to death, because she committed a crime against Israel by her unchasteness in her father's house. Thus shall you purge the evil from your midst. (Deuteronomy 22:20-21 NAB)

The last example really get me. It appears if you are a man then it is "ok" to fornicate, but if your a woman then such an action can "kill ya". This sure does not make sense since it takes "two to tango" and such decrees supposedly commanded by God sure brings in doubt the concept of a "Loving God".

And then we have this example that says that anyone who works on the Sabbath is to be put to death.

The LORD then gave these further instructions to Moses: 'Tell the people of Israel to keep my Sabbath day, for the Sabbath is a sign of the covenant between me and you forever. It helps you to remember that I am the LORD, who makes you holy. Yes, keep the Sabbath day, for it is holy. Anyone who desecrates it must die; anyone who works on that day will be cut off from the community. Work six days only, but the seventh day must be a day of total rest. I repeat: Because the LORD considers it a holy day, anyone who works on the Sabbath must be put to death.' (Exodus 31:12-15 NLT)

Let us think a second. This decree above about working of the Sabbath, if extended to Christianity, will accomplish the extermination of all Christians who don't keep the Sabbath anyway let alone the Muslims. That will be almost everyone of them since Christianity and Islam have created their own "Sabbaths" and substituted them in place of the Biblical Sabbath which is practiced yet today by Israel.

The problems for the "thinking believer" are endless when you really look at this Bible as a "Divine Revelation" of God and one that is to be approached "literally". That should make you wonder with the common sense you have something more than a "literal" interpretation is meant when reading these parts of the Bible. Sadly, too few do and they dance with snakes and drink poison. I guess you could say that a "literal" interpretation is deadly to a Spiritual Book but being conditioned since childhood millions of people read such passages never knowing that a metaphysical reality is intended behind such verses and were never meant to be taken "literally" or "historically".

- The Bible, especially the Old Testament, is filled with numerous stories of animal and human sacrifice. God, we are told, likes the pleasing aroma of burning flesh. Animal sacrifice is much more common than human sacrifice, but both occur and are "pleasing to the Lord".
- Except for murder, slavery has got to be one of the most immoral things a person can do. Yet slavery is rampant throughout the Bible in both the Old and New Testaments. The Bible clearly approves of slavery in many passages, and it goes so far as to tell how to obtain slaves, how hard you can beat them, and when you can have sex with the female slaves.
- Rape is one of the most heinous crimes imaginable. Yet few people know that the Bible often condones and even approves of rape. How anyone can get their moral guidance from a book that allows rape escapes me.

Maybe we are misunderstanding these passages since we are today looking at all of them "literally" instead of "allegorically". Maybe if we had a knowledge of the prior existing ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred texts of the ancients they would then shed light on these problematic passages in our Bibles. Maybe if we possessed certain "keys" to correctly interpreting our Bibles correctly then these irreconcilable and horrific passages might possess a deeper "Spiritual Meaning" as their intention; an intention which we totally miss when we look at them "literally".

If we are to consider the Laws of the cosmos and science then the Bible often contradicts these Laws of the cosmos that God Himself instituted which are eternal. This is most problematic because it makes it appear to the "thinking believer" that the God who instituted these laws in the cosmos in the first place cannot abide by them or even say the same things twice. For example in Genesis, the Earth is created before light and stars, birds and whales before reptiles and insects, and flowering plants before any animals. The true order of events was just the opposite. God creates light and separates light from darkness, and day from night, on the first day. Yet He didn't make the light producing objects like the Sun and the stars until the fourth day. Then it says that "the evening and the morning" occurred on the first day but there was no Sun to mark them and separate these periods of "light" and "dark" at this time. Again, plants are made on the third day before there was a Sun to drive their photosynthetic processes. And of course in Genesis 1 the entire creation takes 6 days, but the universe is at least 12 billion years old, with new stars constantly being formed today in an endless path of creation.

One more example will suffice. Noah is told to make an ark that is 450 feet long that is to house "every male and female species" of animal on the Earth. Again, this is physically impossible. A modern day aircraft carrier is not large enough to hold such a collection of animals, 2 of every species of animals, that is mentioned in the Genesis account. Something else must be intended to be understood here which escapes the thought of "literal exegesis" of these texts.

This is just the "tip" of the iceberg when considering the incongruities that abound in this Bible. Honestly, no one picks up the Bible and reads it without a desire to "understand it" but it defies logical understanding almost consistently by most who read it. But so did the ancient Spiritual Wisdom by those who attempted to read it, who like ourselves today, don't possess the "keys" to its proper elucidation. We are missing something here.

Yet God expects us to use our minds in understanding this cosmos and even His reality let alone this Bible that expresses it. Such a revelation should make sense to us but when we read passages like Jesus walking on water then we have to scratch our heads at this "circus stunt" which glories not the Father but Jesus only; an action contrary to the very words that come from the mouth of this Jesus where he says he only came to "glorify the Father". Again, we are missing something.

I hope you can admit by now that by taking all of these events "literally" creates for us insurmountable problems; problems that immediately vanishes when one come to understand the "keys" to the allegorical interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom as well as our Bible which contain often the same ideas, events, and Spiritual principles "coded" in the from of allegories, metaphors, similes, symbolisms, which are totally senseless when taken and interpreted "literally".

Problems arise in reading this Bible when beliefs are taken to be the "literal" Word of God. This then puts the believer in the position of being in conflict with sound science and the laws of the cosmos. There are many Bible Passages that have been interpreted "literally" by some groups and "symbolically" by others. This generally leads to conflict, and has historically led to many church schisms down through history and even the murder of of those of opposing beliefs.

Since the mid-1800's, the system of theology known as Dispensationalism has exerted great influence on how many Christians view the doctrines of ecclesiology, eschatology, and how they approach and "interpret" their Bibles. Today, America is heavily influenced through Dispensationalism and a Dispensationalist interpretation of Scripture. Dispensationalism says : "we interpret OT history literally and OT prophecy literally. Covenant theology says it interprets OT history literally and OT prophecy figuratively/symbolically. Therefore Dispensationalism is the more consistently literal of the two." What this quote fails to take into account is the whole area of typology in Scripture. A proper understanding of typology will show that in fact the supposed literal prophecies to Israel in the OT are typological, not literal. So Dispensationalists can cite hundreds of prophetic verses from the OT which they think will be literally fulfilled, all the while ignoring the typological hermeneutical principles which are ratified in the life of a symbolic Christ (as opposed to forced hermeneutical principles).

The difference between an "allegorical" and "literalistic" interpretation of our Bible is crucial to creationism and many other "science versus religion" issues. Given its claims to be the infallible Word of God ("All scripture is inspired by God, and useful for teaching...", etc.), it's fairly important whether the Bible is entirely accurate or not. However, perfect accuracy requires neither precision nor strict literalness throughout. No one would argue that parables describe actual events. Similarly, there are literary techniques such as metaphor, allegory, simile, or hyperbole which, taken as literal statements, cause irreconcilable problems. There are seeds smaller than mustard seeds, but anyone reading the context will realize that Jesus wasn't giving a lecture on botanical world records when he supposedly said that. Much of the problem lies in distinguishing between such a literalistic interpretation and a "allegorical" view many "uninformed" Christians mistaken maintain dismisses the accuracy of the Bible. What they don't know yet is that "allegory", when properly understood and interpreted, accomplishes just the opposite; it maintains the very accuracy of the Bible when a mistaken "literal" interpretation destroys the integrity of the Bible. You need to think of this last statement.

I have found that in order to "interpret" this Bible correctly we have to study this Book, its authors, their culture, and the current methods of writing used by these ancient Spiritual Masters who gave us these Scriptures in the first place. To try to interpret our Bibles by the standards of our current society, through heavy Dispensational bias, let alone our newspapers and television news programs, is absolutely foolish and guaranteed to lead to gross error.

Now we need pay close attention to what is said in order to understand these principles laid before us. The student of the allegorical language is nearly always given a clue; one, yet, which at first sight might seem to be rather strange. This clue consists of an additional "veil", "cloak", "disguise", "cover" or "blind" which tends to increase confusion in the texts in order to repel those who regard as purely literal those portions of Scripture which are potentially dangerous because power bestowing knowledge is both "revealed" and "concealed" in these Biblical passages as well as other nation's Sacred Books. Those who seek the hidden wisdom should guard carefully against this repulsion, whether it is aroused by statements which are unthinkable, unimaginable, inconceivable, incredible or impossible, or by stories which offend logic and one's sense of justice, decency and morality. Unfortunately many people are turned away from these Scriptures, and even from religion itself, by the discovery of these characteristics or by the "literal" reading of these Scriptural texts. This is sad. The study and exposition of the sacred language used in the nation's Sacred Books is therefore of great importance to us if we hope to understand our Bible that is 2,000 years old or the ancient Spiritual Wisdom contained in it which can be shown to have existed over 10,000 years ago.

To illustrate how these keys can be applied, let us digress briefly to examine certain incongruities in the Bible in order to express our premise and at the same time suggest possible resolutions of the problems which they admittedly present. These are but "representative" examples of the thousands of veiled similar passages in our Bibles which are today sadly misinterpreted by a vast Christianity not possessing the "keys" to the proper interpretation of is own Spiritual Book which has mistakenly shaped 1/3 of the world for over 2,000 years. The blood of millions is the price for such ignorance when well-meaning Christians have approached this book devoid of the "keys" of its proper interpretation since the 2nd century that coincides with the rise of Roman Orthodoxy and their enforced "hermeneutic" of these "radically reinterpreted" texts at the hands of these Early Latin Fathers. If we were to deal with these examples in detail we could write over a hundred books but a few short examples will suffice to open the minds of the reader to passages originally taken "literally" in Christianity which were never intended to be understood that way at all.

Certain admittedly difficult biblical passages are:

- Mentioned earlier is the reference to "literal" days of creation; in particular that three days and nights of creation pass before the Sun is created (Gen. 1:1-19). People will argue with you for years that these are "literal" days but if they had the knowledge and had previously studied the ancient Spiritual Wisdom then they would not be so "hard-headed" and "obstinate" in such a foolish stance. They would have come to see that in these texts universal creative epochs, ages, periods, and times of activity and dormancy are intended rather than the supposed alternations of a "literal" 24 hour day and night on a single planet is implied. Applying the Fourth of the Four Keys of interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom from the pervious article, that some physical objects, as also certain words, each have their own "special symbolic" meaning, then we see that the "days and nights" of creation refer to alternations of periods of creative activity or "day" and quiescence or "night." These are often referred to by their Sanskrit names of Manvantara (activity or manifestation, the "breathing out of God") and Pralaya (rest or dissolution, the "breathing in of God") respectively by many of the ancients. In other words, God "works" and "rests" but we should know this from a simple reading of Genesis. All world religions knew this; it is us who don't today who adhere staunchly to a "literalistic" interpretation of our Bibles. Scientific evidence, which reveals the Laws of God's cosmos to us, corrects such a foolish interpretation of the Bible and again points us in the right direction that something other than a

"literalistic" interpretation is intended and needed to understand the metaphysical reality that lays behind this text. God made these Laws of the cosmos, and us never forget that "men" give other "men" the ways of interpretation of these sacred texts; some being more correct and better than others. Discernment and knowledge is required. Here again, the allegorical understanding of the texts gives us the Mind of God on the matter, not the "literalistic" interpretation of fundamental Christianity.

- Again mentioned earlier we saw that often Deity instructs massacre and extermination (Gen. 7:4 & 23, 19:13, 24-25; Exod. 22:20); even of infants. Hard to reconcile for us is the Love of God and supposedly His wrath. It has never entered our minds that these acts of atrocity which litter our Bible and which are laid at the foot of God are but personifications and metaphors of the enemies of our Soul and are nothing more than the personified powers of the flesh who is the real enemy of the Israel of God.
- The Bible states that the sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation (Exod. 20:5). This has been a problematic passage it seems forever if taken "literally" but when understood "allegorically" according to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom such problems vanish. The ancient Spiritual Masters have always taught that in the succession of reincarnations each human life is as the "father" of those which follow, these later "reincarnations" being referred to as its "children". Seen in this light character developments are transferred and sowing and reaping occur from life to life under the law of cause and effect or karma.
- Another example is the Biblical story of the defeat of Sampson by cutting off his hair, and his destruction of the temple by leaning his weight on the pillars (Judg. 16:17-30). To the ancients who wrote these Sacred Stories hair is the symbol of the effective relationships between the Spiritual Soul and the mind-brain. When this is severed the power and the guidance of the inner Self are lost to the outer self, who becomes a slave to "matter", his senses, and the animal nature personified as the Delilah of the story. The ancient Spiritual Wisdom personified "matter" as the feminine aspect of creation. When we consider the Nazarenes, an ancient monastic group in Palestine, their custom was to allow the hair to grow long. Now this is important. When one attains and achieves an equilibrium between the pairs of opposites (the pillars), limitations (the temple) upon consciousness are dissipated and undesired qualities (the Philistines) are destroyed. Now your getting the idea hopefully that behind what we think was "literal" events are in reality not; the Sampson character being a Sungod of such, a personification of Living masculine energy, who is defeated by "incarnational matter". The flesh conquers the Spirit; that is until the Spirit is awakened "from the deadness" of "matter".
- Elijah goes to heaven in a chariot of fire (2 Kings 2:11). I bet you can figure this out now. The ascension of the fiery, creative force of Spirit/Soul which has incarnated in "matter" over the flesh and animal nature which houses our Soul enables the individual to ascend upward in a higher Spiritual state of consciousness which is again personified as Heaven.
- Jonah enters the belly of a great fish and remains unharmed for three days and three nights (Jon. 1:17). This refers to the internal "born again experience" of an initiate or candidate of the Spiritual Mysteries who has withdrawn from the fleshly body (the ship), who enters the underworld (the sea), and is then elevated into full Spiritual awareness (the fishes...pisces...symbol of the Spiritual birth, and thereby attains to Christ-consciousness. After the passage of sufficient time (generally three days and three nights), the aspirant returns to the body (is delivered to dry land). Known to most Christians until they study the Mysteries of Eleusis, this is the actual sequence of events of the initiate in the Mystery Religions where he visits the upper Heavens as described by Paul in the New Testament. This was his "graduation" exercise; an outer body experience where he conversed with God and the gods/goddesses in a heightened Spiritual awareness in the Heavens; thereby later awakened without fear or ignorance of the Spiritual Life that awaits him on the other side of death of the biological body. Belief in God then was not based on "faith" alone; but one "experience".
- Tribute money is found inside a particular fish (Mart. 17:27). This refers not to a literal coin but rather to the Spiritual truth that all the necessities (the tribute money) for Spiritual, intellectual, and even physical living are to be found in the Divinized aspects of human nature (the fish). We deal with the tension between the two births of mankind, one, and "natural one" in Virgo and the second one, a Spiritual birth, in Pisces, on our Egyptian-Christian website. One should learn to draw upon the Christ-power within for all his Earthly needs.
- Lazarus is raised after being dead for four days (John 11:39-44). Death symbolizes total Spiritual unawareness and the ancients taught that incarnation of the Soul into "matter" was likened to a death of the Spiritual awareness that the Soul once had prior to its incarnation. That is why the incarnated Sungods were always either "mummified" or born in "swaddling" clothes; incarnation of God and the Divine Life into "matter" was actually a "death" of Spiritual awareness. That is why Osiris is depicted always as a "mummy" which symbolized the limitations imposed upon the Spirit/Soul by "incarnated matter". Miraculous restoration to life implies the Soul's awakening toward its Spiritual essence and its recovery by virtue of the action of the interior Divine power and presence (the Christ). This is described by Paul as a resurrection from the dead which is intended to be our experience while we yet life and again this is the same thing as saying that "Christ is being formed in us". The period of death refers to the time during which the body of the candidate is unconscious (figurative death) while initiation is being conferred in the ancient Mysteries as well. In the ancient Mysteries being dead metaphorically described the condition of the uninitiated, while being resurrected was to pass through the sacred rite or to be "raised" to a higher Spiritual awareness and consciousness.

- The "flesh of Christ" is "meat", and the "blood of Christ" is "drink", their consumption being essential to life (John 6:47-58). Quite clearly our Lord was not exhorting humankind to become cannibals and consume human flesh and blood when he said*: "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me."* The words "flesh," "blood," "eateth" and "drinketh" are not used in the usual sense and are not "literal" in spite of the Roman Catholic dogma of transubstantiation. They are symbolic, metaphorical, and are so used in order to convey a hidden under meaning. When we read the ancient Spiritual Wisdom we learn the "keys" to the proper interpretation of such words as "flesh," "blood," "eateth" and "drinketh". The flesh of Christ may be interpreted as Divine truths, Spiritual laws, or that in which he is clothed, by which he is covered and through which he as the Logos is made manifest. The time comes and is hastened as "the way of holiness" is entered upon by mankind; when the human intellect absorbs Divine knowledge, becomes illumined, enlightened, and inspired by the interior discovery and revelation of Spiritual truths. This experience in heightened Spiritual consciousness is symbolized and allegorized as if eating the flesh of Christ. Bread is also used to describe this knowledge of Divine laws, processes and purposes. Eating consecrated bread is an allegory for the reception, absorption and application to life of that knowledge, gnosis, sophia, esoteric wisdom. But bread has another meaning for the ancient Spiritual masters. Bread is also a symbol of the cyclic regeneration of life after each return to the seed state. The blood of Christ is the ever-outpoured Divine Life by which the Universe is sustained and without which it could not live. The life-force does, indeed, perform a function for the universe and all it contains which closely resembles the life-sustaining office which human blood performs for the physical body. Leviticus even teaches us that "Life is in the blood". Normally one is unaware either of the outpouring and omnipresence of this Divine Life, or of the fact that it is the Spiritually sustaining life within us all. At a certain stage of the evolution of the human intellect, this fact is intuitively perceived. Such realization by the aspirant can be hastened by means of certain Spiritual practices, meditation and prayer, and by the aid of a Adept or Master, the hierophant and other officiants in the sacred initiatory rites of the temples of the greater Mysteries. But these are hard to find today in this Western hemisphere dominated by Christianity. Ultimately full knowledge may be gained of the outpouring of the Christ-life into the universe and human beings if one is diligent in his study and meditation and silence/prayer; the fruit of which is their internal identification and unity with that Divine life its Divine Source within oneself. This attainment of increased Spiritual consciousness and awareness along with one's unity with God is described symbolically as drinking Christ's blood. This "allegorical drinking of Christ's blood" occurs when one both consciously and subconsciously comes to "know" that "there is one Mind, one Law, one Principle, and one Substance in the cosmos, and that he is 'one" with all that there is". Our Lord may be assumed to have been referring to a state of consciousness of unity with the cosmic Christ and his outpoured life rather than to an act of physical nutrition. Once this symbolic eating and drinking, this Spiritual "agape", has occurred, then the process can be initiated in others who in their turn, starving for truth, can be fed on these ancient Spiritual truths. As the incident of feeding the five thousand (Mart. 14:15-2 1) allegorically tells, in this ministration there is not, neither can there be, any loss. On the contrary, there is more of Spiritual wisdom, knowledge and upwelling Spiritual vitality afterward than before.

Well, these are but a few examples of Spiritual realties that lie behind the Scriptural texts we read and so often either are stumped as to their true meaning or mistaken taken "literally". With all my energy I behove the reader to begin a serious study of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and in so doing restore the "keys" to the proper interpretation of the Bible to his life and family. One can consult our recommended book list for good books to help you being your Exodus from "theological error" and enter into the "Promised Land" of Spiritual truths as God intended.

THE ANCIENT SOURCES OF DIVINE KNOWLEDGE AND THE DANGER OF ITS MISINTERPRETATION

In our current study we are becoming enlightened to the existence of Divine Spiritual allegories lurking in our Bibles behind stories we have read our whole lives and which we have mistakenly believed to be "literal" and "historical".

Answer for yourself: What is the source of the knowledge which is thus both "revealed" and "concealed" beneath the veil of allegory and symbol in the Scriptures of the world and likewise in our Christian Bible?

Throughout the ages there have been aspiring men and women who have sought to solve the mysteries of life and death as found since ancient Egypt and down through the corridors of ancient history. Some have done a better job in this capacity that others and their legacies are left for us to gather and gleam Divine Truths from within them. There have also been illumined men and women who, having solved those mysteries, have given their solutions to certain carefully selected disciples. These disciples in their turn have delivered a portion of this knowledge to the world. Christianity is not the only bearer of this Divine Knowledge; albeit in a form that is hardly recognized as it was originally intended because of its over emphasis in the "literal" interpretation of the Christian Bible. In the East it is called Brahma Vidya, the wisdom of Brahma, the Supreme Deity. Greek philosophers of the Neoplatonic schools, notably Ammonius Saccus and his disciples, referred to this knowledge as "Theosophia, or Divine Wisdom. It was also known as "gnosis," meaning directly perceived Spiritual knowledge, and those who had entered into first-hand experience of it were known as Gnostics or knowers. In English it is known as Theosophy, the Ancient Wisdom, the Ageless Wisdom and the Wisdom Religion.

As mentioned earlier certain power-bestowing teachings were regarded as potentially dangerous and were, therefore, either withheld or veiled from the common man. As general knowledge has since advanced, some of these teachings have become public knowledge; and not for the better of the human race. Nevertheless direct experience of them still remains an interior secret, an esotericism, which can be personally realized but never fully conveyed to others. The way to such knowledge is also both revealed and concealed in the Scriptures and mythologies of human culture. This "narrow way" has from the earliest period of human occupation of the Earth been followed by a small number of spiritually awakened human beings. Guidance concerning this spiritual way of life and descriptions of experiences through which the Soul passes and of the tests, ordeals and triumphs of the neophyte, I found upon my studies of comparative religion as well as the ancient Spiritual Wisdom run like a silver thread through the tapestry woven by the inspired authors of the World's Sacred Scriptures and mythologies of ancient peoples. This Divine knowledge was never limited to but one people but shared by the Creator will all humanity since the beginning of time. In one interpretation of them, the initiatory, the great figures, heroes, prophets, apostles, saviors and their adversaries, represent followers of the ancient way at various stages of attainment, acquirement, accomplishment, or failure. The accounts of the lives of such people as Jacob and his twelve sons, the twelve tribes of Israel, the twelve disciples of Christ, and Hercules and his twelve labors, etc., have proved extremely instructive to those who can pierce the veil of allegory beneath which the secrets of discipleship and initiation are concealed.

The teachings of the Ageless Wisdom are thus to be found at the heart of the great world faiths as a group of central doctrines common to them all; many of which we find in our Christian Bibles today albeit too often misunderstood and misinterpreted. The Ancient Wisdom is indeed the oldest of all religions, having from the first included the highest and noblest conceptions of the Soul of humanity which have ever been presented to or recognized by the human mind and knowledge of the nature of the Divinity within the human species. Theosophia is the wisdom of divine beings and carries with it the idea that Divine Wisdom has been and can be attained by human beings as the natural and legitimate goal of their Soul's Spiritual evolution in this material plane of current existence.

This universality of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom which parallels that in the Christian Bibles is revealed by an examination of the Sacred Books of various religions and the original sayings of the world's greatest teachers, for singular uniformity of Divine Thought is found in them all. One might readily suspect that this uniformity is something more than a coincidence, apart even from the consideration that there can only be one truth. The highest and best teaching must always approximate to this and therefore present a considerable amount of similarity when we strip it of all merely differences in the modes of its presentation. The Ancient Wisdom provides an actual basis for this parallelism by disclosing the existence of a hierarchy of initiates and Adepts, who preserve from age to age and transmit the esoteric teachings which otherwise might have been entirely lost.

There are several considerations which would point to the existence of such a hierarchy and to its being the original source from which all great teachers have derived their knowledge. The theory that there does exist a unifying truth, an esoteric knowledge or Theosophia, within the reach of every member of the human family, its attainment being the natural goal of its development, carries with it the idea that such relatively secret knowledge must have its living representatives.

As H.P. Blavatsky stated:

- The Secret Doctrine (or Theosophy) is the accumulated wisdom of the ages and its cosmogony alone is the most stupendous and elaborate of all systems-the facts which have actually occupied countless generations of initiated seers and prophets to marshall, set down and explain- are all recorded on a few pages of geometrical signs and glyphs. The flashing gaze of those seers has penetrated to the very kernel of matter, and recorded the soul of things there, where an ordinary profane observer, however learned, would have perceived but the external work of form. The Secret Doctrine is an uninterrupted record, covering thousands of generations of seers, whose respective experiences were made to test and verify the traditions, passe d on orally by one early race to another, of the teachings of higher and exalted Beings who watched over the childhood of humanity. . . They did this by checking, testing and verifying, in every department of nature, the traditions of old, by the independent visions of great Adepts; that is to say, men who have developed and perfected their physical, mental, psychic and spiritual organizations to the utmost possible degree. No vision of one Adept was accepted till it was checked and confirmed by the visions - so obtained as to stand as independent evidence - of other Adepts, and by centuries of experience (Secret Doctrine 1:316).

But there accompanies this ancient Divine Wisdom and Esoteric Spiritual Wisdom a danger of its misunderstanding and misinterpretation. We have mentioned it before that certain of these Divine teachings, if thoroughly grasped, can prove to be sources of thaumaturgic and magical power. To preserve and convey this power-giving knowledge, a peculiar language was invented by its discoverers. By means of pseudo-history, allegory and symbol, this information is at the same time both "revealed" and "concealed". Humanity's unawareness of Spiritual and esoteric teachings is due, however, not only to their protective concealment within Scripture and mythology, but also to its lack of interest in them.Humanity at this phase of its evolution is, not unnaturally, more interested in the material world, its pleasures and rewards than in the quest for interior enlightenment, the attainment of which, it may be added, demands a measure of renunciation. Sports, gambling, indulgence in alcohol and sex and the attainment of money and power, tend to absorb many people's interest, inevitably leaving little room for the higher culture and for aspiration to Spiritual unfoldment which ironically is the very purpose of their Soulish incarnation and "crucifixion on this cross of matter" as declared by the ancient Spiritual Masters.

When, however, a person seriously turns from worldly things to a real quest for knowledge, that knowledge is always to be found. Even then, full perception cannot be reached without due preparation. Just as one cannot take electricity out of the air and immediately use it, so Spiritual enlightenment demands self-education and training before it can be discovered, harnessed and used by the "truth-seeker". While certain aspects of esoteric lore are admittedly reserved because they are a source of great power which could be harmfully employed, the majority of people remain uninformed because they have neither seriously sought Spiritual understanding nor proved ready to undergo the training necessary for its attainment.

In order more fully to understand the reasons for the universal practice of veiling certain ideas in allegory and symbol, as we find today in our Christian Bibles which as stated is so tragically misunderstood as if "historical" and "literal" accounts, it is necessary to know both the true nature of human beings and their capabilities. Concerning human nature, the apostle Paul's definition conforms to the most ancient teachings:

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?º (1 Cor. 3:16) and ye are the temple of the living God" (2 Cor. 6:16).

The living God, the pure Spirit in human beings, is not a separate individuality but a ray of the one infinite ocean of light, the universal Godhead. Man per se is an invisible entity. What we see of him in and through the body is merely the manifestation of the inner man, because man essentially is a Living Spiritual Energy -- a Spiritual, intellectual, and psychomaterial energy, the adjective depending upon the plane on which we choose to discern his actions, for indeed he may be said to exist on all planes, inner and outer.

Though man is an invisible entity, he needs a physical body in which to live and with which to work upon this physical plane. Man is in reality a pilgrim of eternity. He came forth from the invisible part of cosmic being in aeons so far bygone in the past that mankind, except the great sages and seers, has lost almost all understanding of his Divine origin. He came out of the womb of cosmic being as an unself-conscious "god-spark" as a "smaller Sun of a much larger Sun (God), and after his "fall" from Heaven into "matter" down this "Ladder of Heaven", called "Jacob's Ladder" in the Bible, he finally became man, a self-conscious entity; and here we are. Future aeons of time will bring forth even on this our Earth, into a far more perfect manifestation than at present, the locked-up faculties and powers existent in every human being; and in those days of the far distant future man will walk the Earth as the "god" that he already is; and he will walk this Earth communing with his fellow gods, for he will then have brought forth the godlike powers now unevolved but nevertheless within his essence.

This knowledge of this indwelling potential invisible Sun and "Living Energy" places great power within reach of its possessor, for if the Divine ray within human beings becomes an active influence in their physical individuality, it endows individuals with God-like powers (Gen. 3:5).

Gen 3:5 5 For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil. (KJV)

Ralph Waldo Emerson said: "The highest revelation is that God is in every man." Plato said we are "gods in an animal body". Such, briefly, is a human being-pure Spirit enshrined in a physical body and operating through a human mind. Paul again says:

"The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. . . . Behold, I show you a mystery" (1 Cor. 15:47-51)

An individual's capabilities include the ability to bring about the manifestation in the outer self of the purely Spiritual aspect of human nature. The human being then becomes endowed with superhuman powers, including those of almost irresistible will, supersensory faculties and supernormal physical capacities. Used for the benefit of others, these can be of value. Misused for personal or national gain at the cost of others, they can be extremely harmful. A wonderful possibility and a very grave danger are, however, associated with these enhanced powers. The possibility is that an individual may use them to gain still greater knowledge which can be placed at the service of others. The danger is that, blinded by conceit and a passion for domination, the person may be tempted to use his or her increased faculties for destructive purposes. In order that the danger may be reduced to a minimum and the power-giving knowledge be preserved and made available to humankind, it is formulated and delivered in a very ancient language composed of allegory, parable, imagery and symbol. This knowledge lines the pages of our Bibles and the other Sacred Books of the world; all of which teach this same message concerning the Divinity of mankind through allegory, myths, legends, metaphors, similes, symbols, etc. Failure to understand this message in our Sacred Book, the Bible, and in its place read these Spiritual allegories which are pregnant with Divine metaphysical truths, is tragic to say the least and only postpone and thwart the Spiritual evolution of our Souls.

THE ANCIENT WISDOM IN OUR SCRIPTURES RESTORED.....THE SALVATION OF OUR BIBLES

"All religions bear traces of the fact that they arose during the intellectual immaturity of the human race – before it had learned the obligations to speak the truth. Not one of them makes it the duty of its God to be truthful and understandable in his communications" (Friedrich Nietzsche, German philologist and philosopher (1844-1900)

Make no mistake about it; the Creator has "spoken" to mankind on this planet. The problem we face today is if our Spiritual Authorities in Christianity, from the 2nd century downward to our time today, has told us the truth of His message and repeated it correctly as they learned it from those who both taught and came before them. This is the $64,000 dollar question and lengthy study is required before one can be certain of the answer. Most Christians today are totally unlearned about the passing of this religious baton at this crucial junction of world history, where we find the clash between the Western and Eastern Hemispheres involving both their philosophies as well as their "religious belief systems". We grow up in the Western Hemisphere, most likely as Christians, never having one doubt that our Christian indoctrination, from childhood onwards, might not possibly be the "truth" as it had existed for thousands of years earlier before the 2nd century B.C.E. It never dawns upon us that a tragic "reinterpretation" of Ancient Spiritual Wisdom might have occurred in the history of emerging Roman Christianity and that we might not be aware of this gross "reinterpretation" of ancient Sacred Scripture today. Other world religions will tell us that this is just what happened but their voices are downed out by the constant drone of Christian rhetoric and proclamation of a "good news" completely devoid of its proper hermeneutic. Realization of such a blatant contradiction of historic Spiritual Wisdom by Christian re-interpretation of the Ancient Spiritual Knowledge and Divine Scripture hinges upon the reader seeing the evidence for such a deviation from prior existing Spiritual Realities for himself and see how these same stories we read in our Bibles today existed and were understood over 1,800 years ago. This will come in the following articles. The problem that meets us right up front is the fact that for most Christians they never have seen the other side of interpretation of these Sacred texts that they read and have inherited. That can change now if you have the courage to devote yourself to this very important and informative study.

It is apparent from all the contradictory teachings of the many denominations and cults of Christendom, that they all cannot be right. For the most part, each claim to use the Bible as the source of their teachings. Both may claim the Bible as the source of their belief. It is a fact that many different sects of "Christendom" use the Bible to prove contradictory teachings. 1 Corinthians 14:33, says "God is not the author of confusion." But something or someone is to blame for this lack of Scriptural Unity and diversity in religious dogmas in over 2000 different Christians denominations as well as their gross misinterpretation of these ancient Sacred Texts which have come down to us preserved in our Christian Bibles. Clearly God did not give mankind a Revelation of Himself, expressed first in oral traditions and later committed to writing, in order to confuse mankind and blur not only His Image but His message to mankind as well. Rather, He revealed Himself to the whole Cosmos and later allowed this Revelation of Himself to be recorded in such a way as to be clear and not be complicated and misleading. At least that is how it was in the beginning. However, the problem we find today is that down through history sinful and fallible men have ignored this Spiritual Revelation of God given in antiquity and have, through successive generations, relied more upon their "own understandings" of God and given mankind what they desire He "say" and this is passed off to the unsuspecting as "God's Word" accompanied with their "trustworthy" interpretations of it. In so doing these "leaders of the blind" contradict the unchanged interpretation of this ancient Divine Revelation as it has existed from nation to nation for thousands of years. Lost in this translation of the Divine to mankind is the earliest understanding of God made real to humanity in the beginning of time. That is not a acceptable hermeneutic but without knowledge of the ancient interpretations of these Sacred Scriptures of antiquity you will never know.

The great need today then is determining what the Bible really teaches. The proliferation of over 2000 different competing Christian denominations has not helped in this endeavor at bit. Determining what these Sacred Texts say for "certain" entails the restoration of "the correct method of interpretation" of these Sacred works. We must go back into ancient history and look at their very foundation; first orally and then later when written. We must look at the fountain head of such a Divine Teaching as it existed in its beginning and genesis. If the Bible is the Word of God and God's revelation to man, then surely God would not give us His revelation without a way to accurately discern what He meant. The "keys" to unlock this Bible, and the Sacred Scriptures and Wisdom on which it is built, has to have been given to somebody, somewhere, at sometime or else this paints God as an irresponsible Father which no one should dare trust or believe.

Ironically when we begin to study to find out the truth of these matters we find that behind the Bible we inherited in this Western Hemisphere lies an almost ancient Eastern Spiritual Wisdom that predated the Bible by thousands and thousands of years. The problem is that it this ancient Spiritual Wisdom meant something entirely different to the ancients for thousands of years than it would to the emerging Roman Catholic Empire during the 2nd through the 5th century when they "reinterpreted" almost the whole corpus of Divine genius of the ancients. We find "similar stories" and "similar wisdom sayings" in the mouth of spiritual representative (avatars) the world over that we later find in our "Jesus Story"; event and sayings that were never confused in the minds of the teachers and recipients as has been the Bible as given to the world through the hands of Roman exegesis and interpretation. The religious dogmas of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom meant one thing then; later during the 2nd through the 5th century they would come to mean something entirely different to Rome.

One need look no further back into religious history to Ancient Egypt to find the "keys" lacking for correct interpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom as well as our Bibles today. The word "interpretation" means to arrive at the original meaning the writer intended when he penned the words. The original meaning the author intended is "the correct interpretation" and this must be recovered and understood before you can apply it or make application of these ancients passage in your life. A faulty interpretation will produce a faulty application and therefore it is vital to correctly interpret the Scriptures we have inherited regardless of the interpretation placed upon them by Rome who denied both the Jewish and Egyptian Religious revelation. Here lies the problem.

Man has for various reasons misinterpreted God's word and left many in a state of confusion. The problem today is not, that God did not give us a method of interpretation. God gave mankind not only this Revelation of Himself long ago but at the same time provided humanity with the "keys" to interpret such revelation of the Divine. This "symbolical" interpretation of the Divine, over time, began to be lost to the minds of men as nation rose against nation and this precious knowledge of the correct interpretation of the ancient Sacred Texts began to be lost and buried under the ashes of wars. With new pressures exerted by new conquerors man has refused to use this "Soul Symbolism" and over the last 2,000 years or more has not been diligent in seeking it (at least in this Western Hemisphere)! It is the purpose of these articles to show that we can properly and accurate know what is God's word and once again interpret it correctly. The confusion in understanding God's word is the result of unlearned men handling the word of God. This does not mean one has to be a scholar to understand and properly know God's truth, but it means that anyone applying proper biblical principles of interpretation can accurately understand what God has said. We only need to know the "symbols" and what "they meant way back then" when they were first understood and taught to mankind by the Divines among humanity. Only when we unlearn the "errors" we have been given and replace them with this "higher truth" can we ever hope to accurately discern what is right and wrong and spot the false teachings lying secretly within God's Word that came to us through the forgeries of Rome. Only then can we positively know if what one's church or teacher is presenting is God's word and the highest Divine Truth or the word of man pawned off as the "Word of God" to the unlearned and Spiritually immature. It is certainly not the mystery that so many try to make it out to be.

It is therefore the responsibility of every person who claims the name of Christ to not be misled. But this is not as easy at it appears at first; your personal study whereby you recover the "keys" necessary to interpret this ancient Spiritual Wisdom is most necessary if you ever hope to understand our "Jesus Story" correctly along with many of the Old Testament stories as well.

It is a fact that the writers of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, from the beginning of recorded history down until the second century C.E., could never have dreamed that their lofty Sacred Scriptures and Spiritual volumes, which cloaked "high Spiritual truth" in the disguise of allegory and metaphor, would have ever ended up so misunderstood, misinterpreted, and outright twisted as they have over these last two thousand years at the hands and influence of Roman Orthodox Christianity. These ancient Spiritual allegorical constructions that dramatized Divine Spiritual truth have so sadly today miscarried the Divine intent of the Creator, as well as the original intent of their writers, that few if any modern readers and "parishioners", by casual reading of our Bibles today, ever recover the "keys" necessary for the proper interpretation of these Sacred passages that we have inherited today in our Christian Bibles. The problem is that we have lost today the "keys" to interpret the symbolisms we read in these texts. It is just that simple.

This failure to interpret our Bibles correctly and apply the correct intended hermeneutic, or proper interpretation of these Ancient Spiritual Texts, can be laid partly upon the reinforced stupor of our Seminary graduates who are conditioned today through fundamentalism with the finest "mind control" and "tunnel vision" that organized religion can muster today. If one finds the courage to "think outside the box" as well as "read outside the box" and question the "status quo" of this inherited Scriptural tradition then such a one often invites ostracism and this can be very damaging to the seminarian's goal of pastoring a church one day. A "free thinker" is a severe liability to organized ecclesiastical religion and that is why the corridors of Church History is lined with their bones and ashes today. I learned long ago while in Seminary that orthodoxy is no guarantee of truth. Truth is the degree to which a statement corresponds with reality. Reality is limited to that which is directly perceivable through our natural senses or indirectly ascertained through the proper use of reason. God gave us minds for a reason and expects us to use them when reading and studying the Bible and other Sacred writings. If things don't "add up" and seem "improper" or "contradictory" then our Creator expects us to recognize that fact and respond accordingly by looking deeper for the answers for those things we seek.

There was a time in early human history when enlightened men possessed true knowledge of the Divine realm quite unlike today when gross misinterpretation of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom is the rule of the day. Though zealously guarded from the unworthy by the Priesthoods, such heightened Spiritual Knowledge was in existence in the ancient day. Today, the zeal for publicity and full-disclosure of "news" seems to be the norm in our society and this makes it hard to understand why such heightened Spiritual Knowledge was kept esoteric and hidden from public view. Such Spiritual Knowledge was deemed by its guardians so precious that it could not be disseminated loosely to the undisciplined and unworthy. Thus the rise of "secrecy" concerning it along with "secret societies" that safeguarded such elevated Spiritual Principles. At the same time, however, it was not withheld from any worthy aspirant. As time passed, however, this priceless legacy of knowledge was threatened with extinction, its pursuit became forbidden, its devotees attacked and blotted out by the powers that be that found such information and Spiritual Knowledge threatened to their "might makes right" physiology.

Basically you could say that this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of which I speak was a "symbolic wisdom". This "Spiritual Symbolism" lies at the heart of the Ancient's "Soul Science". Symbols are very much a part of our daily lives -- the letters of the alphabet, numbers, names, corporate and national emblems, and religious and secular rites, for instance. There seems to be an inherent propensity in human nature to make and use them. The sacred sciences of antiquity were all recorded in symbols that sum up certain esoteric principles and therefore form a mystery language. Most symbols condense a number of meanings into one and can be interpreted in either a cosmic or a human sense. The "keys" to interpreting the ancient symbols, which were the foundation for the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom, unlock the nature of things will give us some answers to the questions we ask: What is life? Where did I and the world come from? Where am I going? What really is the true nature of things?

Lets look at some of these simpler examples to get the idea:

- Some of the ancient geometric symbols addressed cosmogonical questions. The circle, for example, can represent space -- not empty space, but the space referred to in Genesis as "the waters of space." Beyond this is infinity, which cannot be expressed by any form or shape. The perimeter of the circle indicates infinity in that it is beginningless and endless. If we put a point in the middle of this circle of space, we have the first stirring of spirit. The Pythagoreans would refer to this point as the Logos.
- The circle can be equated with the egg, a sacred symbol in the cosmogony of every people, representing the entire cosmic process by which worlds and living beings are born. Now you know why "eggs" are connected with the rebirth of Spring at the Vernal Equinox. The egg, you see, contains the positive and negative forces which together produce manifested life. When the circle is shown as a spiral, it represents evolution, eternal change and growth. The circle with a horizontal diameter signifies divine Mother Nature. When the horizontal line is crossed (intersect) by a vertical line, we have the symbol of Father Nature added, the two together forming a cross and representing the manifested universe. Generally, a vertical line stands for spirit, and a horizontal line matter. This is symbolic of the Descent of the Deific Mind into matter; the Christ incarnated into humanity as understood in all the ancient nations.

- The same idea is represented by the equilateral triangle and the Trinity. The upper point of the triangle, in the same sense as the point in the circle, is the unity, the one life, from which springs a duality of spirit and matter which can be expressed as energy and substance, positive and negative, or force and matter. This duality manifests from a unity which contains both spirit and matter and which is the source of all. We call this "God".The two sides of the triangle denote duality, and, notice this, the base of the triangle is the offspring of spirit and matter, being either the inner cosmos or man -- for in the process of manifestation, whether of human being, planet, or sun, these three forces over an immense period of time together emanate physical matter as we know it.

- The cross symbolizes eternal life and is used in various religions with slight differences. The Christians took it from the Gnostics and Kabbalists, who took it from the Egyptians (the ankh); also present in the Mediterranean area were the Latin or Roman cross and that of Buddhist missionaries from India. The cross, the cross of "intersection" of Spirit and matter, or as it was also called, the "cross of crucifixion", found in the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom long before the Jewish race or the thought of a "Jesus" ever dying on an old rugged cross, actually signifies the incarnation of Divinity, the "Word (Logos) made flesh" -- crucified on the cross of matter (the Descent of the Soul into the flesh of mankind). You just read the whole "Jesus Story" and all the Sungods wrapped up into one; they all are symbolic for the Descent of the Soul into matter (humanity). In his letters, St. Paul dwells much on the Christ in us being crucified, and many religions have the story of crucified saviors. This is but a symbol, a picture if you will, of God coming and tabernacling in matter (eventually humankind).
 - The book of Zohar - a complex and profound book – contains the wisdom of Kabbalah in its entirety. It tells us of the complete path a person must go through from the moment his souls finds its place in a corporeal body; the time he lives along with it in the corporeal world, and how he ends his life, continues to exist as a soul without a body, and how it descends to this world again. Thus, many life cycles go by and we call them “reincarnations” of the soul. The Zohar speaks of the path each soul goes through separately, and the way that all the souls go through as humanity, starting with the descent of the soul to the body for the first time, through all the cycles that this soul goes through, and ending in the state where the soul, along with the body, comes to a state where man feels his existence in the whole system of creation, and life and death cease to exist for him, and he becomes an active part of a complete eternity. That is the situation we must all come to.

- The oldest Egyptian cross, which was also the Greek cross, has both lines of equal length. The horizontal line represents the feminine or passive principle of nature, and the vertical line the energy side, a symbol of dual generative power. Siva, Jehovah, and Osiris are all symbols of the active principle in nature: forces that provide for the formation of matter, its destruction and/or regeneration.
- One variation of the cross is the swastika. Swastika is a Sanskrit word meaning "well-being" or "auspicious," and there are said to be seven keys to its inner meaning. This symbol is found in India, China, Tibet, Thailand, Japan, the Americas, Greece, Rome, and among early Christians. In Scandinavia it was known as Thor's Hammer; in India as Vishnu's discus or as the Jaina cross; in Buddhism it is a "wheel" denoting eternal motion and stands for evolution. Representing spirit-matter, its central point is the god principle, and its four arms represent in succession birth, life, death, and immortality.
- Another form of the cross is the Hebrew letter "tau", the handled cross, called in Egypt the "ankh", which ages before had been used there, and was placed on the breasts of their mummies. Used by the Romans, it represented immortality. It has also been found on the backs of some of the mighty statues on Easter Island. Its meaning is similar to that of the swastika, except that it represents a higher plane of being: the primordial movements and states of cosmic being.

This short summary of "symbolism" was to make the point to the reader that from times immemorial, knowledge superior to that of our present age has been preserved in symbol, sacred allegories, and myths. This ancient "symbolism" formed a secret wisdom handed down from person to person and from age to age. There appears to be a system of symbols with "similar interpretations" that is common to all religions around the world. According to H. P. Blavatsky, there never was, nor can there be, more than one universal religion, for there can be but one truth concerning the Divine. When you do the studies, like we showed in the series of the uranograph as well as "personified astro-theology", and come to the awareness that behind all of this "Soul Symbolism" the world over lies this one similar Cosmos Message as interpreted through astronomy on its most foundational level, from nation to nation, then you can see how the spiritually gifted among each nation down through history came to the same understanding concerning these "symbols" because there is only One God and only His "One Truth". The symbolism of every people reflects the same spiritual principles, and the symbolism of all mythologies and this allegorical and metaphorical "symbolism" which is hidden in our Bible stories has a scientific foundation and substance reflecting spiritual potentialities.

The gift and then the loss of this primal wisdom, along with the "keys" to the proper interpretation of this Spiritual Symbolism in the Sacred Scriptures of old are the two most momentous events in human history. At one time this "Soul Science" was world wide but today in the Western Hemisphere this "enlightened" path for our Soul and its Spiritual evolution has gone out. Instead of this higher Metaphysical Spiritual understanding and interpretation of the ancient Sacred Wisdom we grow up with a debased supposed "literal-historical" interpretation of these ancient religious myths and "Christ Story" which not only destroys their rightful interpretation as "Patterns" for our Soulish Evolution but robs each child of God his personal involvement in this Spiritual evolution of the "Christ" within him. Rome made sure of that when they relegated this "Christ" to but one person; conveniently for them who was absent and was "gone" to Heaven and was a long, long way away. Instead of realizing that these ancient Divine stories of Sungods and Christs were but for our "examples" we were taught to look to another who never comes and the "Christ within" is deprived of its intended Spiritual Evolution within each child of God. The Christ awaits "his coming" in each of us daily. Gone is the ability of God's "anointeds" and "messiahs" and their impact upon the whole world as we were taught to wait for a "superman" to come from Heaven when all the while this "God-man" slept within the heart of every child of God awaiting his "resurrection".

Eph 5:14-15 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, (KJV)

But there is good news on the horizon. This age in which we live is experiencing a "re-awakening" of this Spiritual Wisdom that lies behind the mistaken "literal-historical" interpretation of our Bibles in the Western Hemisphere. The lingering "Dark Ages" in which we yet live is slowly giving way to the light of progressive Spiritual enlightenment concerning the proper interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures of old. Advances in modern scholarship along with the ever increasing fruits of archeological research is unearthing before us on a daily basis these "keys" for proper Biblical interpretation which we so desperately need since living in the wake of the Roman "inherited" traditions of Orthodox Christianity.

H.P. Blavatsky says:

The Secret Doctrine was the universally diffused religion of the ancient and prehistoric world. Proofs of its diffusion, authentic records of its history, a complete chain of documents, showing its character and presence in every land, together with the teaching of all its great adepts, exist to this day in the secret crypts of libraries belonging to the Occult Fraternity. This statement is rendered more credible by a consideration of the following facts: the tradition of the thousands of ancient parchments saved when the Alexandrian library was destroyed; the thousands of Sanskrit works which disappeared in India in the reign of Akbar; the universal tradition in China and Japan that the true old texts with the commentaries, which alone make them comprehensible – amounting to many thousands of volumes – have long passed out of the reach of profane hands; the disappearance of the vast sacred and occult literature of Babylon; the loss of those keys which alone could solve the thousand riddles of the Egyptian hieroglyphic records; the tradition in India that the real secret commentaries which alone make the Veda intelligible, though no longer visible to profane eyes, still remain for the initiate, hidden in secret caves and crypts; and an identical belief among the Buddhists, with regard to their secret books. The Occultists assert that all these exist, safe from Western spoliating hands, to re-appear in some more enlightened age ... (Secret Doctrine, 1:xxxiv)

We need to talk. Over my twenty years of study I uncovered some most amazing things. For one thing hidden inn our New Testament is a lot of Spiritual Truth as well as Spiritual Untruths forged by the pens of Rome. To say it is contradictory is a gross understatement. But this "Secret Doctrine" and "Soul Science", which is tracked back to ancient Egypt, is the very foundation for our "Jesus Story" as well as the stories for all the other later nation's Sungods as well. The "events" and "logia" or "sayings" of these "Saviors" are basically the same from beginning to end.

Answer for yourself: Why is this? This is because these "savior stories" are but personifications of the path of the Sun, a symbol of the living Energy of the Cosmos, God, which is in itself the symbolic story of the Descent of the Soul, the "Krst/Karest/Christ" into matter (mankind). It take a lot of study to get to this awareness but you can and along the way you see that the Ancient Spiritual Masters had this Spiritual Knowledge long before the rise of Rome who would ensure that this knowledge is lost to mankind. But more amazingly when you look to Judaism and the reading of the Torah portion as it is read once a year in Israel, then if you look you see that the quotes of the Old Testament passages in this "yearly Torah reading" follow in almost the exact chronological sequence (over 90% of them in order) as found in the "Jesus Story" from Matthew chapter 1 through Matthew chapter 28. That's right, Judaism, who does not believe in a "Christian Jesus", has within its very books Sacred Books this same "Salvation of the Soul" as revealed from Equinox to Solstice to Equinox to Solstice on a yearly basis and this is itself the very foundation for the Biblical Festivals of Israel. The Biblical Festivals of Israel are usually interpreted "historically" through the eyes of an emerging Jewish nation, and every nation did the same things to this "Soul Science" but it goes much deeper than this. Hidden beneath his "story" is the Metaphysical Reality of the Salvation of the Soul of mankind. First told through the Stars and Sky above (the Sky is called Heaven), then told through Mother Nature who dances in step with the Celestial Cosmos, then mankind personified these workings of God's Cosmos and out comes these "Solar Savior" stories. These were all "allegorical" and "metaphorical" ONLY up until the rise of Rome in the 2nd through the 5th century and allegory will give way to an assumed "literal-historical savior" at the point of a sword by the greatest religious-political army existing then in the world; Rome. This true "Salvation of the Soul" of mankind has been made aware to mankind from nation to nation and from religion to religion since the beginning of recorded time. Everything was fine up and until the 2nd through the 5th century when Rome will decided to worship the god of forces over the God of love and His Laws (Torah) and this necessitated the destruction of not only the Laws of God but the Jewish people whose very presence condemned this aberrant religious interpretation of this ancient Soul Science as well as its Roman politics and military agendas. It is time that these long-hidden Spiritual Truth be restored to mankind and I hope to serve my part in doing so.

This colossal ineptitude in Biblical interpretation, prolonged over sixteen centuries, is slowly coming to an end. The mistaking of religious myth, drama, and allegory for supposed "literal history" is coming to an end. The hope of our continued Spiritual awakening lies not only in scholarship and archeology but in the progress made over these last two centuries in the study of Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology.

As your study in these above disciplines increases then you begin to be overwhelmed by the thought that for for sixteen centuries the best intelligence of the Western Hemisphere (by that I mean Christianity) took the ancient sages and their Books of Spiritual Wisdom, which were in all cases the spiritual dramatizations and allegories of the experience of the human Soul incarnated upon earth, for objective historical narratives of assumed "literal-historical" personages. Oh what a tragic error in interpretation of these sagacious Spiritual Masterpieces of symbolism and pictures for our Soul's growth. You need to read the previous sentences again and let it hit home. Imagine, if you will, as the stark reality of this truth as it hits home in your mind and heart, as your studies advance in Comparative Religion and Mythology, and as you see for yourself because of your studies, that a Christian civilization such as ours, covering one third of the globe and influencing 2.5 billion people, and boasting itself as the highest example of attainment in culture in the whole world with all its technological achievements, has for over sixteen centuries taken its moral and spiritual guidance from a Black Leather Book which never did it have the correct meaning of its true content or slightest inkling and correct interpretation. No wonder our country and the fruit of its influence in the world is so messed up! No wonder we cannot build prisons of our Christian Nation quickly enough; the fruit of such a tragic misinterpretation of this Soul Science by Christianity cries out to us daily "Something is Wrong"!

This superior Spiritual Knowledge, handed down to disciplined pupils in the Mysteries of old was transmitted from generation to generation first by oral teaching and preserved only in memory. But later, lest it be lost or corrupted, it was entrusted to writing. Thus the need for the creation of the Sacred Books and Scriptures of antiquity. So highly were they held in the esteem of the ancient Spiritual Masters that when in later epochs their true origin and character was being forgotten, they were exalted to the position of authentic obsessions and regarded as is originating from superhuman realms. In fact these "Sacred Writings" often became the object of worship along with God. It would appear that the more esoteric they became esteemed paralleled the continued loss of the "keys" for their proper interpretation. This led to the theory of their divine dictation to "holy men of old" which only further led to the bowing of the rational mind before them. Of course the "interpretation" of them were given by Rome since they had possession of this Sacred Wisdom; let us not forget that they won the "wars" and in so doing influenced the religions of their conquered territories. And to question these Sacred Writings along with later "interpretations", or should I say "misinterpretation" of their recondite symbolisms, soon relegated one to the company of infidels or at best one "demon possessed". Fire was the antidote for such a "non-believer". If you think I stretch the point I dare you to read The Dark Side Of Christian History, by Helen Ellerge, a book I read along with by Baptist History class in Seminary. Somehow the Seminary left this part out of our glorious Church History.

This sad scenario is most tragic for we pay the price of it daily in our lives when a "literal and historical", instead of a purely spiritual and typical interpretation of the Bible, was broadcast to the common man and such an erroneous interpretation continues today unabated on street corners throughout our nation as well as over hundreds of channels on televisions and radios. This erroneous indoctrination appears to know no limits or bounds. The evidence continues to mount high that the taking of ancient ritual dramas and scriptural myths for objective history and the figures in them for "supposed" human persons who are our "saviors" is received without understanding by the vast majority of the "common people" while all the while such an interpretation of these Sacred Texts is increasingly repudiated by modern scholarship on a daily basis.

Corruption in politics or in economic or social life greets us daily on the front of our newspapers and seems to be the very day norm in our country. Many Christian clergy excuse this because of the imperfection of human nature, and in a measure can be pardoned by many. But designed corruption in religion is beyond pardon and forgiveness in my estimation. Dishonesty and insincerity in worldly dealings may entail disaster of greater or minor degree and we have seen the sad fruit of such deceptions in wars throughout the history of nations down through history. In religion, however, such designed dishonesty is fatal to the intended Divine Spiritual Maturation of our Soul. In the opinion of many there is one domain in which untruth is intolerable and unforgivable, and that is in the field of the human Soul's endeavor for Truth; we call this "religion". Whether stupidity is the culprit or sinister design, or both, have been the cause of the loss of the true original meaning of these ancient Sacred Texts we inherit in our Bibles it does not change the fact that we have lost the "keys" to understand correctly our inherited Sacred Scriptures in our Bibles. And who knows unless they "read outside the box" and don't hold your breath for your Pastor to recommend doing so. I can recall that our Senior Pastor mentioned a book in the pulpit one Sunday, evidently a book he never read, and I proceeded to read the book and incorporate some of its ideas in classes in the church and when news of this got back to him I was told to "stop it". Enough said.

When once consults the quotes of the Early Church Fathers then the motive for such a desecration of Divine Truth and the purposeful loss of the "keys" so necessary for the proper interpretation of the ancient Sacred Spiritual Wisdom become glaringly evident. Lets take a peek at the incriminating quotes of the Fathers of our Christian Faith as it was molded by them in the early Gentile Church's separation from Biblical Judaism and its teachings of God. I wish to demonstrate this for the reader by one quote among hundreds:

By the end of the 5th century, the destruction was so complete that Archbishop Chrystostom could boast: "Every trace of the old philosophy and literature of the ancient world has vanished from the face of the earth" (The Christ Conspiracy: The Greatest Story Every Sold, Acharya S, Adventures Unlimited, 1999, p. 357).

The reasons for keeping certain documents hidden or even destroying them are sometimes purely negative. Conquerors or usurpers wishing to destroy a people's heritage, which is underpinned by their religious values and beliefs, have often burned its books, as did Shih Huang-ti in China in 213 B.C.E., the Spaniards in Mexico in 1520, and the Nazis in the 1930s. The destruction of the records of rival pagan religious and philosophical schools by the early Christian Church was another act of deliberate vandalism. The fate of the Alexandrian library in Egypt tells a similar story.

The Alexandrian library in Egypt was the most famous library of the ancient world. It formed part of a research institute known as the Alexandrian Museum (or temple of the Muses). The library and museum were founded and maintained by the long succession of Ptolemies from the beginning of the 3rd century B.C.E. An auxiliary library was established about 235 B.C.E. in the Serapeum, a temple dedicated to the god Serapis. The Alexandrian library systematically collected together the knowledge of the ancient world, and at its peak it is estimated to have held 400,000 to 700,000 scrolls and papyri.

Alexandria was a cosmopolitan city of Greeks, Egyptians, Romans, and Jews, and a prosperous trade centre between East and West. Its library promoted and nourished the intermingling of different cultures and spiritual traditions, and for a time Alexandria became the greatest centre of learning in the ancient world. It was the centre of ancient mysticism in late antiquity, and the birthplace of the most celebrated schools of Gnosticism (a syncretistic movement that included all the systems of belief prevalent in the first two centuries of the Christian era).

Ammonius Saccas, the founder of Neoplatonism, began teaching his synthetic theosophic philosophy in Alexandria in the 3rd century C.E. His pupils included Origen and Plotinus; the latter was succeeded by a series of other well-known neoplatonic philosophers, including Iamblichus, Porphyry, Hypatia, and Proclus. Other famous names associated with Alexandria are Philo Judaeus, who synthesized the Old Testament with Greek and Pythagorean philosophy, and Clement, who imported many Gnostic ideas into Christianity.

The repeated destruction of the Alexandrian library dealt a great blow to the preservation of the ancient wisdom.

- Julius Caesar is sometimes said to have burned the library during his invasion of Alexandria in 47-48 B.C.E. However, the prevailing view today is that after he had set the enemy fleet on fire, the flames spread, and some 40,000 to 70,000 scrolls stored in a warehouse adjacent to the harbor were accidentally destroyed.
- In 272 C.E. the Alexandrian museum and main library were ravaged in the civil war under the Roman emperor Aurelian. Most of the alchemical and hermetic works of the Egyptians were burned by order of Emperor Diocletian after suppressing a revolt in Alexandria in 296 C.E. (Secret Doctrine, 2:763; H.P. Blavatsky Collected Writings, Theosophical Publishing House (TPH), 1950-91, 11:549).
- In 380 C.E., Emperor Theodosius II banished paganism from the Roman Empire, which at that time included Thrace, Macedonia, Crete, Syria, and Egypt. Theophilus, the Christian Patriarch of Alexandria, set about obliterating all vestiges of pagan shrines.
- In 391 C.E. a Christian mob razed the Serapeum to the ground, along with its irreplaceable collection of classical literature. The stone from the temples was used to construct new Christian churches, and Theophilus was later honored as a saint.
- Neoplatonism flourished in Alexandria until 415 C.E., when a Christian mob, inflamed by Cyril, Patriarch of Alexandria, brutally murdered Hypatia, an esteemed philosopher, mathematician and astronomer. Like his uncle (Theophilus), Cyril was made a saint. The murder of Hypatia has been called the death of the pagan world and the beginning of the dark age. By this time, the Mysteries in the West had long been in decline, due to both persecution from without and degeneration from within. Grace Knoche writes: 'Aside from the suppression of everything non-Christian, much of what had once been held beautiful and holy in the Mysteries – the sacred ritual of the union of the aspiring soul with the higher self – had become orgies of the most degraded sort' (The Mystery Schools, Grace F. Knoche, TUP, 1999, 66).
- In 529 C.E. Emperor Justinian closed the last philosophical school of Athens, the Academy founded by Plato.
- The final deliberate destruction of the Alexandrian library is often said to have taken place in 642 C.E. when the Arabs conquered Egypt.

And the light of true Spiritual Knowledge was to go out and was dimmed with such representation to almost an indistinguishable level; a level at which it languishes yet today. In the middle of this repeated destruction of the world's Ancient Spiritual Knowledge, we find a key figure; Constantine. In the early 4th century C.E., orthodox Christianity, based on a "literal interpretation" of selected ancient "spiritual wisdom" and its personifications which were "literalized", dating from the 2nd century C.E., was made into the "state" religion by the Roman Emperor Constantine. This gave it the power it needed to begin the final ruthless suppression of this ancient Soul Science (reinterpreted by Roman Christianity as "paganism" and "gnosticism". This is what happened in a nutshell.

H.P. Blavatsky writes:

The days of Constantine were the last turning-point in history, the period of the Supreme struggle that ended in the Western world throttling the old religions in favour of the new one, built on their bodies. ... [The period] beginning with Buddha and Pythagoras at one end and the Neo-Platonists and Gnostics at the other, is the only focus left in History wherein converge for the last time the bright rays of light streaming from the aeons of time gone by, unobscured by the hand of bigotry and fanaticism. (Secret Doctrine, 1:xliv-v)

By the end of the 5th century, the destruction was so complete that Archbishop Chrystostom could boast:

'Every trace of the old philosophy and literature of the ancient world has vanished from the face of the earth' (The Christ Conspiracy: the greatest story ever sold, Acharya S, Adventures Unlimited, 1999, 357).

It is the purpose of Bet Emet Ministries and our articles to set forth to the truth-seeker the extent of the loss of this proper interpretation of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom at the hands of later anti-Jewish and antinomian (anti-Law) incompetence which goes today by the name of Orthodox Christianity. And, God willing, I hope to do this by contrasting today's present defacement of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom which lies at the very foundation of our sacred Christian dogmas which were so tragically re-interpreted back then and which have come down to us awfully mistranslated and monstrously altered at the hands of Orthodox Roman Christianity, as well as her Protestant daughter, with the past glory of this Sacred Soul Science taught in Ancient Egypt on down through recorded history as it was first fashioned and once first taught and expected to be understood by all the whole of mankind forever. This will entail the task of revealing for the first time the hidden meaning of the body of archaic Scriptures by providing its radiant proper interpretation of these ancient religious myths and allegories, fables and dramas, astrological pictographs, uranographies, and hidden symbolisms which are mistaken today for "historical narratives" in our Bibles. This will not be an easy or quick study by any means but a true one. Called for by every reader and truth-seeker and normative Christian is a complete "unlearning of lies" and our childhood incoordinations which has so tragically wrecked our faith from its intended glory. Called for as well is a total restoration of the the entire mass of antique mythology and legend behind the Biblical Scriptures as we look at them one after another and put this "theological puzzle" in true perspective once again. Make no mistake about it, behind our religious dogmas and doctrines lies the most elevated Science and Physics known to mankind and it takes my breath away to know that ancient Egypt had this unbelievable understanding of God and the working of this Cosmos which is our home. Make no mistake about it; Ancient Egypt had the "keys" to this Spiritual Wisdom and the recovery of the ability to read the Egyptian hieroglyphics through the discovery of the Rosetta Stone is revealing Christianity and its "salvation doctrine" as anything but a truthful representation of Divine revelation of the Soul and its intended "salvation" in this Earthly existence.

I will show the reader how early Christianity changed religious myth and allegory over into an assumed factual history" at the point of a sword. Along with this is the unveiling of the extent of this Roman forgery and let us not forget that early Roman Christianity was not called the "Forgery Mill" for no reason. Our task for both the teacher and the student here is not hard but it is of a large scale. We will come to see, as our studies advance, how both third century ignorance as well as "evil design" of emerging Roman Christianity was behind the loss of the "keys" for the proper interpretation of this ancient Sacred Soul Science as taught by ancient Egypt and later the Jews. It will become apparent that all that what is necessary for us to restore these ancients Spiritual Truths is to convert these Roman supposed objective histories back again into the mythical topologies and symbolisms as they were originally taught and understood for thousands of years before the rise of a Roman Empire. Our task is now to convert alleged objective history back to its original mythology, and then to interpret it as enlightened theology as did the ancient Spiritual Masters who gave the world these Divine Concepts in the beginning of time. This sounds easy but it won't be. Let me tell you why.

We are faced with demonstrating to an uncomprehending Christian world, estimated to be 2.5 billion people, who has been misled and mistaught for over sixteen centuries. Their are unaware that their Sacred Biblical Scriptures are totally misunderstood by the vast majority of their clergy and are much more precious as myths than as an assumed alleged history. You could get burned at the stake for such a statement and many have down through Christian history. One only needs to look at the Gnostics and their demise to make my point. At stake is not only our idea of an "historical Jesus" but the very ingrained Roman Road of Salvation message which Rome connected to this story of their own imagination. Let we forget it is this Roman Road Salvation Message that states emphatically that it is through this "literal-historical" person, this Jesus Christ of Christianity, that man can "go to Heaven". Let me summarize it:

- Jesus is the only way of salvation because He is the only One who can pay our sin penalty (Romans 6:23).
- No other religion teaches the depth or seriousness of sin and its consequences.

No other religion offers the infinite payment of sin that only Jesus Christ could provide. No other "religious founder" was God become man (John 1:1,14) – the only way an infinite debt could be paid.

- Jesus had to be God so that He could pay our debt.
- Jesus had to be man so He could die.
- Salvation is available only through faith in Jesus Christ! "Salvation is found in no one else, for there is no other name under heaven given to men by which we must be saved" (Acts 4:12).

Judaism has denied this "ONLY method of salvation" through this "Christian Jesus" for over 2000 years for a reason and ancient Egypt long before that. After Seminary, in trying to come to terms why my Christian Bibles don't translate accurately the Hebrew Old Testament which is grossly misquoted and mistranslated in the New Testament in constructing this "literal-historical" Roman Road Salvation message I was was devastated to come to see my Christian Bible was a collection of "forged" texts to make it appear as if this Romanized "historical Jesus" was the "fulfiller" of prophecy when the true Hebrew Texts said entirely different. But few know this and fewer still ever look at such textual comparisons. This task of restoring the intended "Divine Original Meaning" to our Christian Scriptures can only be done by showing that as myths, in their original intended meanings, that this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom (long before Rome's later literal "reinterpretation" of it) illuminate and exalt the mind and Soul of mankind to unparalleled Spiritual heights, while as assumed "literal-history" they are neither honest to the non-Christian historical record, the earlier Hebrew texts, or the ancient Egyptian Religion from which they were taken originally. But centuries of inaccurate indoctrination of the Christian Scriptures have so colored and duped the modern mind that the effort to restore the Scriptures to their primal mythical status will be met with the objection that doing so will render the Bible as valueless. Nothing could be further from the truth as I hope to show the reader in the forth coming articles. Many will fear that such a restoration of the true Bible interpretation of these Sacred Scriptures and religious myths, passed down through history to a conquering Roman Empire, will appear at first to "destroy" the Bible but ironically the opposite is the truth. Instead of a "death to the Bible" it is the real salvation of the Bible; a book derided by many because of this erroneous Roman interpretation of its own texts that is ludicrous to the "thinking believer" and those possessing knowledge of Comparative Religions and parallel mythologies that read identically when compared to our "Jesus Story". But indoctrination of this "only way to Heaven" religion has seen fit to make this a remote possibility for when you are constantly told that only you have "the truth" then few look elsewhere for confirmation of this "Christian Salvation" being falsely assured that such is not necessary. Restoration of the Bible to its true hermeneutic is the "salvation for our Bibles".

I expect responses to my attempt to share with the readers this proper Bible hermeneutic will illicit responses that run the gamut between "marvelous" and "wonderful", to even having such efforts being labeled the fruits of one who has "lost his salvation", one "damned to hell", or at best one who is "demon possessed". Ridicule, contempt and flat rejection has been down through history the greeting received by many who proclaimed the Bible as mistaken myths to which its true interpretation has been lost.Yet nothing is easier than to demonstrate that Bible material taken as history, from cover to cover, is the most exact nonsense in which the untrained mind could aspire. Anyone with an analytic mind and possessing the "keys" of interpretation of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom can see through such childish interpretations of the Bible given us by Rome. The problem is that we grow up in our Christian Churches never exposed to these "keys" for necessary correct interpretation of our Bibles. The Voltaires, Paines, Ingersols and the freethinkers have done this successfully enough down through history; it is us today who are in the dark. One only has to read Augustine to see this truth:

- That which is known as the Christian religion existed among the ancients, and never did not exist; from the beginning of the human race until the time when Christ came in the flesh, at which time the true religion, which already existed began to be called Christianity.* (Retractt. I, xiii, cited by Dr. Alvin Boyd Kuhn in his Shadow of The Third Century, Elizabeth N.J.: Academy Press, 1949, p.3). Please take the time to re-read this quote above from Augustine.
- Added to that is further quotes from our esteemed Church Fathers that Jesus had "two births"; impossible for a human being but not for a "myth" that is teaching a deep Divine Truth. Toward the end of the second century, Clement of Alexandria was known to have cited various opinions of concerning Christ's birth date, the two most prominent of which were January 6th and December 25th. Later in the fifth century, Augustine commented: "For He (Jesus Christ) is believed to have been conceived on the 25th of March (Spring Equinox), upon which day He also suffered... but He was born according to tradition upon December 25th" (Winter Solstice) (De Trinitate, Augustine). He is speaking about Astronomy and the path of the Sun and not some "baby away in a manger". It would appear that the birth of this supposed human being was connected with the stars and astronomy at its very core; a study for another day and it is available on this website as well as others.

But these great men, the Voltaires, Paines, Ingersols and the freethinkers of the world, in restoring the truth to the "Jesus Story" have failed in one big regard. Having disproved the Bible as history, they have not redeemed it as spiritual mythology which is intended to lighten the path of the Soul in this physical existence. The world awaits this work of restoration and proper interpretation, and only when it is supplied will the full force of the tragedy be seen in all its horror; the mistaking of Spiritual Allegory for supposed "literal-history" be grasped by 2.5 billion people on this planet possessing the "wrong set of keys" to interpret their Bibles. The loss or corruption of this hoary interpretation of Ancient Scriptures precipitated the West into the Dark Ages, and a main factor in this disaster was a general loss of the importance and proper use of myth by the ancients in the Scriptures they penned. The use of myth and symbolism in the Ancient Scriptures would, in time, pass from common knowledge. When the esoteric and hermetic suggestiveness of the myth was lost, the inner essence of esoteric wisdom was cast adrift on the sea of forgetfulness. With its hidden significance gone, the Ancient Scriptures often read as nonsense. And so it has stood till this day.

We need to close with some thoughts on the use of myths. To declare a Biblical narrative and story, formerly believed to be historically true in "key theological places" to be "only a myth", will be regarded by many as relegating the Bible as worthless. Nothing could be further from the truth. This attitude of mind toward the myth is itself the sign and seal of the Spiritual darkness of this Christianized age in which we live. For, as I said at the beginning of this article, ancient sagacity could hardly have assumed that any succeeding age would prove so Spiritually dull as to take the outward form of its Spiritual allegories for factual occurrences, or suppose that their formulators as well as their students believed them to be true objectively. He speaks of us who fill the pews of Christian Churches today. Make no mistake about it, these religious myths are fanciful creations and entirely fictitious. They are fables of events which, as events, never happened in our current "historical sense" But equally true is that their aim was never at any time to deceive anybody. It was never imagined that anybody would ever "believe" these Spiritual Myths in a "literal" fashion or that their representative "saviors" were ever "literal" or "historical" people whose "crucifixions" were on "literal wooden crosses". Understood, but not by us today, is that these saviors and their crucifixions on crosses were "in the Heavens"; pure Divine Allegory at its best which described the Descent of the Soul into matter (mankind) which was patterned for us in the visible and natural workings of this Cosmos. God speaks through His visible Cosmos and its workings which has Astronomy as its blackboard of instruction for these "invisible Spiritual Truths".

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

Nevertheless the myth was designed to tell a Divine Truth and in so doing remove all opportunity of its desecration. All went well as long as this Ancient allegorical interpretation existed and was transferred orally. Only when it began to be written down did "forgers" see their opportunity to deceive the "unlearned". As you are beginning to see the purpose of Myth was not falsehood, but sublime truth. Outwardly it was not true, but at the same time it portrayed the full depth of invisible Spiritual Truth. It was not true for its "characters," but was true for all of mankind. These Spiritual Myths were mankind's examples. It was only a myth, but it was a myth of something that had a "certain" intended meaning by it crafter. It used a false story to relate a much higher invisible Spiritual Truth. While this myth never happened "literally" or "historically", it is the "Pattern in the Mount" of all things that have happened and will happen; first in Heaven and then in mankind on the Earth. These Divine Myths are the foundation for all Soul Science.

No matter how conclusively the data that I will share will prove these facts of which I speak, it will probably remain forever incomprehensible to unstudied folk that whole bodies of ancient mythology and spiritual typology, suddenly became metamorphosed into alleged "literal-history" between the 2nd through the 5th century at the hands of the forgers of the Second New Testament. It was then that the the earlier Gnostic "First" New Testament was "altered" and "edited" in creating a "historical savior", to which a new "interpretation" was created four our redacted Romanized Jesus as depicted in our New Testaments today. The evidence will speak for itself; you just have to see it for yourself. When it dawns upon the student and reader that this early gift of Divine Wisdom, given mankind to aid humanity in is historical evolution, was totally miscarried into tragic nonsense through the simple mistake of taking Spiritual allegory for literal history, a hopefully humbled and repentant Christian world will bow its knees to this higher truth and adjust their lives before God accordingly.Never has such "religious darkness" been called "light" except by the unenlightened in the Christian fold and they number 2.5 billion people. Unbelievable!

It is almost laughable that such a travesty of miscarriage of interpretation of Sacred Spiritual Truth could occur yet has occurred had not the tragic fruits of such a purposeful misinterpretation of the Ancient Divine Wisdom extracted such a terrible price upon humanity down through the Dark Ages. Farcical is the startling thought that a modern culture like Christian America, boasting its superiority over any antecedent one, can be guided in its ethical life by a Book of which it is now possible to affirm that not the most elementary sense of its message has ever been apprehended correctly by those who steer Orthodox Catholic or Protestant Christianity which undergirds such a nation's politics and world affairs let alone the steering of individual Souls. Therefore, the pronouncement can be made and supported that the Bible is yet today still a sealed book as it was intended to be unless one possesses the "keys" to its rightful interpretation. These forthcoming studies and article will vindicate that declaration by setting forth the hidden meaning of ancient scripture maybe for the first time in your life.

Gross misinterpretation cannot be seen as such until its product has been set down alongside a true rendering of these Sacred Scriptures. The crudeness of a literal and historical translation of the sense will only be brought into glaring light by being held up against a background of the clarity and dignity of a true spiritual meaning. I take no credit for this because I had to learn it from others who possessed this knowledge before me. This expose of current Christian interpretation of its Sacred Scriptures is was made possible purely by the discovery of clues and "keys" to the old scriptures hidden deeply in the volumes of ancient literature, which had escaped the notice of the long line of exegetical inquirers. Amazing as it might appear at first to the reader, at a period remote enough to be coexistent with the times incorrigibly marked as "primitive" by Christian historians, the ancients possessed books of such exalted spiritual and intellectual content as to lie yet beyond the comprehension of vaunted modern intelligence! Modern pride, supported by our Christian faith, must face the hard facts that come in the current expose: supposed "primitive" and branded "Pagan" peoples by Christianity possessed books of a higher Spiritual Wisdom than which later Christianity will present to the world as the supposed "Only" path to God. And we and our intelligences given to us by God fell into the trap of our forefathers who also lacked these "keys" for proper Scriptural interpretation.

No longer can we read this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and say that if the myths made no sense to us, it was proof that there was no sense in them to be gathered and are but child's play. It is we who are the simple-minded children lacking Spiritual insight. And given time as our studies advance the the "keys" are restored for proper interpretation of the "Jesus Story", as well as all Ancient Spiritual Wisdom, we will in time come to see just how far we have strayed from God's intended path for our Souls and the childishness of Divine Truth that we have allowed ourselves to be fed to our Spirits and Souls instead of "Strong Meat". Ecclesiastical zealotry, blinded by mistaken "literalism", has rendered God's Revelation ridiculous. It is time we declare war on Spiritual Untruth and settle for it no more. Only in such way can Spiritual Truth be vindicated and restores as God would have it because it is the salvation of our Bible.

THE HIDDEN TRUTHS THAT LAY BEHIND OUR BIBLICAL ACCOUNTS: EGYPTIAN SPIRITUAL & METAPHYSICAL MYTHS AS ARCHETYPES OF SPIRITUAL REALITIES

It will be disconcerting for some to learn that behind many of our Biblical stories and accounts in traditional Scripture lay Egyptian myths that attempt to relate and explain metaphysical realities to the finite minds of people. One only has to begin a serious attempt to study the origins of many Old and New Testament accounts to find that behind them lay a mythological nature.

First a little must be said about "myths". Let us define the word.

- Myth is a traditional or legendary story, usually concerning some superhuman being or some alleged person or event, with or without a determinable basis of fact or a natural explanation, especially a traditional or legendary story that is concerned with deities or demigods and the creation of the world and its inhabitants. This traditional story is of unknown authorship, ostensibly with a historical basis, but serves usually to explain some phenomenon of nature, the origin of [humanity], or the customs, institutions, religious rites, etc. of a people; myths usually involve the exploits of gods and heroes.
- Myths (both old and new) are heroic stories considered by most people as having never occurred. Yet this does not mean that myths are "false," but only that to understand them we must separate their metaphysical truth from literal reality.
- Myths the world over tend to express certain common themes: those relating to cosmogony, the creation of the universe or the earth with its solar system, humanity, plants, and animals, other aspects of nature, and the theory of their origin, as well as myths of a second creation following a disaster, frequently a flood; to theogony, the origin of the [deities] and their genealogy, especially the Great Mother, pairs of deities (often brother-sister/husband-wife), and triads with the addition of a child; to etiology, the study of causes and beginnings in general; and to the struggle between or among opposing forces, especially dualistic elements as good-evil, light-dark, or heaven-underworld. Myths are also shaped by personification, that is, the endowment of aspects of nature, inanimate objects, or qualities and abstractions with human form, attributes, and characteristics. This is closely related to anthropomorphism, the assigning of human shape, qualities, and concepts to a deity, animal, plant, or other object. By means of deification, humans and personifications were elevated to the position of a deity.
- Other myths explain social traditions, customs, religious beliefs and practices, and the mysteries of life and death. Myths and legends pass from generation to generation, enriching the lives of all who listen, giving them value and a sense of security, and linking them with their ancestors before them, and wisdom heroic and divine.
- Many scholars believe that myths of the ancients represent one of the most profound achievements of the human spirit, the inspired creation of gifted and unspoiled minds, uncontaminated by the current scientific approach and analytic mentality, and therefore open and prone to profound cosmic insights which are veiled to modern thinking man with his inhibiting definitions and impassive soulless logic.

- There are whole schools of modern mythologists who argue that ancient myth is closely bound to rite and ritual; that myth was, as it were, nothing other than the "rite spoken"; and that myth and ritual were practically two sides of the same cultic coin. On the other hand, there are historians of religion who claim that the ancient myths were primarily etiological in character - fictitious tales evolved for the purpose of explaining the nature of the universe, the destiny of humanity, and the customs, beliefs, and practices current in their days, as well as the names of holy places and out standing individuals.
- On a deeper level there are psychologists who see in the ancient myths depositories of primordial archetype motifs which reveal and illuminate man's collective subconscious (Most beliefs surrounding death show fundamental similarities in that the dead went to an afterworld, which might be an underworld beneath the earth, an island paradise, a [hall of heroes], or the moon, and a number of mythologies linked death to a cycle of rebirth, somewhat parallel to that occurring in the Heavens and in Nature and vegetation). Imagination, superstition, and embellishment mingle freely with observation when we look at myth. Some myths are used to teach; some are 'just' for entertainment and storytelling.

We should be tipped off to the fact that the Bible is a book of "myths" if we are alert in reading the Bible when we notice contradictory accounts in the Bible of the "same" event. This fact alone should make us want to know "what is behind the story" we are reading at the time. Truth always lies behind "myth". Inquiring minds "want to know". Well that is me and I hope it is the readers as well.

Behind some of these contradictory accounts and inconsistencies we find ongoing propaganda wars between the kingdoms of Judah and Israel as they wrestled among themselves for supremacy. On other occasions, an early version of a story can be shown to be chronologically replaced by a later version. This was particularly true in the Creation and flood accounts, where early Egyptian influences on Israel came into conflict with later Babylonian sources. The later Babylonian "interpretations" would eventually replace the earlier Egyptian "interpretations" of the events in question.

As one studies increase he can be on the look-out for Biblical stories that closely parallel these earlier myths and legends from neighboring cultures like Egypt and Babylon. Truly there is "nothing new under the Sun" when it comes to religion because basically all world religions have come from but one; namely, Egyptian religion. If you come to understand Egyptian religion and religious ideas you can trace them along with their "reinterpretations" down through history; even into our Christianity today. While in some cases the influences were obvious, as with the Babylonian flood myth, in many cases the task will be quite difficult and will require the deciphering and correct interpretation of Egyptian myths which is not always easy given our limited knowledge of Egypt up until the last 150 years with the discover of the Rosetta Stone and the recovery of the ability to read the Egyptian heiroglyphics. Even more important because of the biblical emphasis on monotheism, the keen reader will notice how the authors of these later Scriptures tried to eliminate references to or symbols of deities other than the Hebrew god.

Answer for yourself: How was this done? These changes were made by transforming foreign deities into human characters whereby they were given a pseudo-historical existence as well as sometimes changing the locale of the story. Let me give you some examples. The Egyptian "Hathor" becomes the Greek "Aphrodite" and the later Roman "Venus", the Egyptian "Amon" becomes the Greek "Zeus" and the later Roman "Jupiter" and so on. The same things were done to the earliest principles and theological dogmas that were first understood by the Egyptians who studied the Cosmos and Nature for thousands of years and in so doing extrapolated these Divine Truths in the first place. Over time all things "change" and that is where we are today in Christianity.

You may recall being taught in school that Western (white) civilization is founded upon the ancient Greek civilization which seemed to suddenly appear. What European historians are trying to diffuse, hide, or deny is that the Greek civilization was primarily the offspring of the advanced Black African Civilization of ancient Africa's Nile Valley, which preceded it by thousands and thousands of years. Even Greek legends related that Egyptian and Phonecian conquerors ruled all or part of Greece until the 14th or 15th century B.C. Thus we find that the Nile Valley civilization of Egypt and Nubia was already old before Europe was born. The pyramids of Africa's Nile Valley were hoary with age when the tribes of norther and central Europe were making their first stone hammers. Nile valley civilization also existed before the Western Asian civilization of the Tigris and the Euphrates rivers.

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

Kamite or Egyptian civilization originated from Ethiopia and Diodorus said the Egyptians were the earliest of civilized men, and that they not only colonized Egypt but it was from there that they diffused Ethiopian culture throughout the whole world. Albert Churchward, in his The Signs and Symbols of Primordial Man states that "Thus we can see that African colonies went forth and settled in all parts of the world, leaving the proofs in language, myth, and the hieroglyphics, in religious rites. The symbolical customs and ceremonies in far off lands are still extant among races by whom they are no longer read or understood, but which can be read in Egypt (p. 284).

Think of what you just read. Religious rites and ceremonies from Egypt were taken into all the world and over time the "keys" to their proper interpretation were "lost, no longer read or understood correctly"!

Answer for yourself: Could that have happened to us who are reared as Christians today with traditional Christian dogmas and doctrines and we not know that? Could it be that what we read and study and recite and cherish in our Christians Churches we have got "all wrong" a lot of the time? Could we be wrong on such doctrines as "atonement, salvation, forgiveness, eternal life, messiah and this Jesus Christ"? Well the thought of this was so frightening to me that I had to know for sure so I dedicated my life some twenty years ago to make sure I was "right" as a Christian and the years of my repentance and finally my resignation as a Pastor of a large Christian Church is the result of such an eye-opening scrutiny of my faith. Dears ones, we are so far off from the truth as Christians it is almost beyond belief. And you study of Egypt and their religion and its "reinterpretations" down through history from nation to nation will be proof positive of what I say. The "story" of God as understood by these Spiritual Masters in Egypt change over thousands of years and we never know of this because we never possessed the knowledge of what the "real" was before the "counterfeit".

As you might expect, the versions of the later stories usually disguised the true nature of the truth or the Biblical story, making it difficult to identify the earlier mythological source. Of course this was the agenda of the writers and some accomplished this agenda better than others. Nevertheless, in many instances the editors overlooked some of the telltale signs of these earlier sources and, even in disguised form, it is often possible for the knowledgeable reader to strip off the disguises and see what mythological elements the biblical authors attempted to mask and keep hidden from the reader in order to make it look as if their "god" is the real "god" and their story the "original" when in fact it but a retelling of the original with some "changes".

And lest we forget there are also stories in the Bible that simply are not true. We know this today for certain because we have in our possession today archaeological data that indicates without a doubt that events described in the Bible as happening within a particular time frame couldn't have occurred at the time indicated. Several of these stories describe Israel's destruction of enemy cities during the campaigns into the Transjordan and Canaan. The archaeological evidence shows that many of those cities didn't exist in the time of Biblical lives of the characters identified Biblically as "Moses" and "Joshua".

What should concern the "truth seeker" and reader of Bet Emet Ministries is how Egyptian mythology and literature strongly influenced much of the early biblical history, especially with regard to Creation and the flood as well as the patriarchal narratives, a subject that has been irresponsibly ignored. The lack of attention to Egyptian influences on the Bible by both biblical scholars and Christian or Muslim Egyptologists is unfortunate. A conscious and deliberate effort exists to keep the two spheres separate in spite of the fact that the Bible shows a long and continuous relationship between ancient Israel and Egypt. This has been ignored long enough and the insightful reader will begin to look to Egypt to find the true origin for much that is presented in the Bible as "Jewish". Let us not forget that this Bible places Israel's formative years in Egypt, living an Egyptian life-style, educated in Egyptian ideas, and dwelling there for centuries before the Exodus. It describes Joseph as prime minister of the nation and married to the daughter of the chief priest of Heliopolis (biblical On), one of the most influential Egyptian cult and educational centers. His two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, were half-Egyptian and educated as Egyptians. Ephraim not only became heir to Joseph and founded the kingdom of Israel but is listed as one of the Hebrew Pharaohs; Manasseh had the largest territorial base of all the tribes.

Moses, according to the biblical account, was raised and educated in the Egyptian royal court, and many members of his tribe, Levi, have Egyptian names. King Solomon married a pharaoh's daughter and built an Egyptian temple in Jerusalem for her. Common sense dictates that she had a large entourage of Egyptian priests and servants to administer to the temple's needs. Jeroboam, when he fled from Israel to escape Solomon's wrath, dwelled in Egypt before leading Israel away from Judah.

And historically, Egypt had a powerful cultural influence on Canaan from well before the Exodus to late in the first millennium B.C. An eighth-century seal of a Hebrew official from the court of King Hoshea of Israel (c. 730 B.C.), for example, shows the official dressed in typical Egyptian garb and standing over an Egyptian winged-disk icon, indicating that Egyptian ideas heavily influenced the royal court of the kingdom of Israel.

As we go through the Creation and patriarchal stories, the educated reader easily sees how Egyptian mythology significantly influenced Hebrew interpretation of and beliefs about its earliest history. These influences bring us to the question of the origin of Hebrew monotheism.

Answer for yourself: How, when, and where did Hebrew monotheism originate?

Biblical monotheism appears to have gone through an evolution that finds its origins in Egypt. In the earliest stages of Israel and its evolving monotheism, the Hebrews imagined an all-powerful Creator deity, but evidence of belief in other deities remains buried in the stories, most obviously in the form of "Emanations" from this One Absolute Creator; we call them "angels" today. The Gnostics called them "aeons". I never cease to be amazed that we can accept as true "angels" but when we read the same things expressed by the Gnostics as "aeons" then they are labeled as "heretics". This ideas of "Emanationism" appears to be the primary form in which Hebrew monotheism originated and the form in which it has fundamentally survived even into present times. The three major monotheistic religions, Judaism, Christianity, and Islam, still believe in a host of supernatural beings, particularly angels and the devil. They are beings created by the one all-powerful Creator just as the Egyptian deities were the product of the one all-powerful Egyptian Creator. The similarities of these various "Emanations" are endless and no less startling are the similarities between the Egyptian "Karast" and the Christian "Christ" as again but "Emanations" or attributes of Deity that come from this One Absolute whom we call God.

The idea of an all-powerful Creator who brought forth other supernatural beings or other "Emanations" from Himself has its roots in ancient Egypt. There it was a central belief in most religious cults that a single Creator was responsible for all of existence, including the appearance of other deities. The other nations of the Near East had no similar theology. It is the Egyptian views that initially influenced Hebrew understanding of the first times, and we will see that many of these Egyptian Creation myths are replicated in biblical history.

Over time, however, the nature of the theology changed. Whereas Egyptians also worshipped the many other deities created by the prime Creator as "Emanations" of Himself, by the time of Moses, there is a new emphasis in which this Creator deity is deemed to be the only god to be worshipped. As we study we find the reason for this is the over-emphasis of Osiris worship in the days of Moses. This is understood also as "Godman" worship similar to the "Jesus worship" in Christianity today. It always humors me to understand that in response to this unbalanced worship of the "Godman" (instead of the One Absolute God) which Moses encountered during his rulership as Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty in Egypt that he chose to respond by closing down all the Temples in Egypt and enforced mandatory worship of the One Absolute Invisible God called Aten; thus the parallel is that if Moses were alive today and President of the United States that he would close down all the Churches that worship this "Jesus" today (THINK).

No one, for instance, ever worships God's angels. This view is reflected in the biblical command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." The idea that only one deity among many should be worshipped is known as henotheism rather than monotheism. But there is no difference worshipping "angel" than "Jesus" because in the last analysis we find them both to be but " manifestations" or "Energies/Powers /Forces/Neteru" of the ONE God since all have "manifested" from this ONE. Now you better understand the statement made above about Moses closing down all churches that "worship this Jesus".

Fora brief time in the mid-fourteenth century B.C., Egypt experienced a form of authoritarian monotheism under a pharaoh named Akhenaten whom many believe to be the Biblical Moses. A full understanding of Akhenaten's theology has yet to be developed, but its existence in a time when Israel was likely still in Egypt raises questions about what influence his ideas had on the educated Hebrew people in his realm. Biblical and Christian Egyptological scholars go out of their way to build an unbreachable wall between Akhenaten and Moses, but it does not rest on solid factual foundations. The result of such religious prohibitions by Akhenaten/Moses eventually produced eventually the Exodus which resulted from a volatile religious feud between Akhenaten's successors, who reinstated the traditional beliefs, and his followers, who lost control of Egypt after his death.

History records for us that the Hebrews depicted in the Bible never embraced a pure monotheism, nor was there a single universal religion as we find in Egypt. It would take the Babylonian captivity to produce a pure monotheism in the Israelites. Many important biblical characters in post-Exodus times, for instance had names ending in "Baal," who was a major Canaanite deity. Gideon, one of the most famous of the early Judges, also was known as Jerub-baal, and Saul, first King of Israel, had a son named Esh-baal and this son succeeded him on the throne. These Baal names became an embarrassment to the final redactors of the early Bible books and they either added fictional glosses to the text to explain the apparent inconsistency or they changed the Baal name to "Bosheth," a Hebrew word meaning shame.

Belief in other deities goes farther than naming conventions. For example, Solomon had many non-Hebrew wives and he built many religious shrines for them so they could worship their own non-Hebrew deities. Later scribes attributed the breakup of Solomon's empire to a punishment by God for his apostasy. And Jeroboam, first king of Israel after the break from Judah, not only set up golden calves at cult sites, but established rival temples to the one in Jerusalem. And, throughout the period of the monarchy, biblical writers tell us that the Hebrews constantly succumbed to the religious influences of the Canaanites and Philistines.

Under King Josiah (640-609 B.C.), many severe religious reforms were instituted and strong opposition to idol worship emerged. Whether pure monotheism became part of Hebrew religion at this time we can't know for sure. But, by this time, the earlier beliefs had become embedded in Hebrew traditions and writings. Ultimately, a single redactor or, most likely, a school of redactors sometime after the fifth century B.C. gathered the main sources and traditions together and produced the first version of biblical history in its present form, editing as best they could to eliminate inconsistencies between monotheism and earlier religious beliefs. From this we get the Documentary Hypothesis (JEDP) which shows us the multiple source thesis which explains this Hebrew collection of stories and traditions that later become the Hebrew Scriptures.

It is in these Biblical stories that we find a long and continuous relationship between Ancient Israel and Egypt which directly links Egyptian mythology to Hebrew interpretation of and beliefs about its earliest history as a people and a nation as well as their God.

With this as a small introduction let this information settle and then let us continue our search for the truth which we can find in Egypt and their religion like no other place in the known world.

PROBLEMS WITH A LITERAL READING OF OUR BIBLE

We have maintained in earlier articles in this series that comprehension and correct grasping the meaning, of Biblical Scriptures and texts along with a proper interpretation, understanding and appreciation of the esoteric teachings contained often hidden and disguised in myth, allegory, and metaphor in our Bible depend upon a knowledge of the sacred language of the ancient writers of these Scriptures along with the "keys" for their proper interpretation then a fuller and more detailed exposition of this particular category of literature must now be given to the reader and "truth-seeker". Let it be said up front that it is recognized that to those who have up to now regarded the Bible solely as a record of historical events, the idea that it was written in allegory and symbol in order to transmit universal truths may seem strange and even incredible. But hold on for a second and your prior assumption will change.

Since the subject regarding the "keys" for the proper interpretation of our Bibles is profound, impartial examination and progressive study are essential to its comprehension. Apart from the parables of Jesus, to the vast majority of Christians the language of analogy, dramatic allegory and symbol is a little known art form. That being the case then vocabulary, grammar and composition must, in consequence, be carefully studied before the transmitted ideas can be perceived and wholly understood as intended by the writers of these Sacred Scriptures and framers of the Divine Wisdom found yet today in our Bibles. If we approach our Bibles and come away with a different "interpretation" of the text other than that in the mind of the writer or teacher whom these Scriptures record then be not mistaken; we are wrong in our opposite opinions and conflicting interpretations of these same texts. Time, too, is always required in order to become accustomed to an unfamiliar method of presentation and previously unknown aspects of truth. So to comprehend correctly this Bible will take time on your part.

Answer for yourself: But what better thing can you give God but a hungry heart for Divine Truth that is fulfilled by your personal diligent study and pursuit of Divine Truths by your Soul?

Deut 4:29 29 But if from thence thou shalt seek the LORD thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul. (KJV)

The language of allegory and symbol may be regarded as an art form. One, therefore, similarly needs to acquire by practice the ability to appreciate its many and varied metaphors and emblems and to discover their secret meanings. Without such preparation, allegories and symbols may be wrongly regarded as unnecessary obstructions and their interpretations as arbitrary or, at best, far-fetched. Since profound truths are conveyed and Spiritual experience, knowledge and power can be obtained by the successful interpretation of the Bible, the student's preparations in restoring the "keys" for proper Biblical interpretation must in their turn be not only intellectual but Spiritual as well.

Now it is important that you grasp what I say next. I never have said or maintain that the Bible never has any "historical" parts in it; only than often what we mistake for a "historical narrative" is anything but that. Discernment is the "key" and this "key" only comes from the study of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom itself when one learns these "keys" for himself. That is why in earlier articles I recommend some of the best writers in this field which can teach you the secrets behind the Biblical texts and in so doing give you the "keys" for the Bible's correct interpretation; an interpretation that flied in the face of 1,800 years of traditional Roman Christian interpretation of these same texts.

While many of the incidents in the Bible are doubtless founded upon fact, nevertheless, great wisdom and enlightenment are to be discovered within the Scriptural record of historical and pseudohistorical events. When, however, statements are made which could not possibly be true, three courses of action present themselves:

- We can accept them unthinkingly in blind faith,
- We can discard them as unworthy of serious consideration, or
- We can study them carefully in search of possible undermeanings and revelations of previously hidden Divine and Spiritual Truths.

Let me share an incident in Scripture and elaborate on it in order to express a Divine Truth. Incidents such as the passage of three days and nights and the appearance on Earth of vegetation before the creation of the sun (Gen. 1:13-16), and the action of Joshua in making the sun and moon stand still (Josh. 10:12-14), cannot possibly have occurred "historically" because these same Scriptures teach us the God "changes not" and visible observation of the workings of God's cosmos reveals unbroken Laws of Nature that bring into high suspicion the "literal" reading of the two above texts. Photosynthesis operates by God ordained Natural Laws and the existence of vegetation the absence of the Sun is an impossibility according to the Laws of God. Something else is meant by this verse. Making the Sun and Moon stand still is a celestial impossibility given again the Eternal Laws of the cosmos. Something else is meant by this passage than a "literal" and "historical" rendering.

If, however, the intention was not to record supposed astronomical or historical facts and events alone but also to reveal abstract, universal and mystical truths and to give guidance in finding and treading "the way of holiness" (Isa. 35:8); and if, furthermore, night, Sun and Moon are but concrete symbols of abstract ideas, then the outwardly meaningless narrative may reveal inward truth and enlightenment concerning the Soul of mankind. Before that truth and light can be perceived, however, the veil of allegory must be lifted, and in so doing only can these symbols be interpreted correctly.

We mentioned this before in earlier articles. For partly in order to render abstract ideas comprehensible by expressing them in concrete form and also to safeguard the truth and yet reveal it when the time should be proper, the teachers of ancient days deliberately concealed within allegory and symbol the deep, hidden wisdom of which they had become possessed. Other reasons for such unveiling were to evoke wonder and so initiate inquiry into these Divine Truths by mankind; to preserve for posterity profound Spiritual and therefore power bestowing truths; and to conceal from the profane knowledge which could be misused, even while revealing it to the selfless servant of humanity.

The Spiritual acumen of the authors of the Scriptures allowed them to see Eternal truths mirrored in events in time. For them, illumined as they were, every material happening was aglow with Spiritual significance. They knew the outer world for what it was; the shadow of a great and higher Spiritual reality. Plato teaches us this in his "Cave Analogy" and ancient Egypt taught this in the very core of their ancient Religion of metaphysical and Spiritual truths which was founded upon the Divine Principles of "So Above, So Below". Their records of the history of the universe and of the Earth which happen to be the very Sacred Scriptures of the world portray far more than events in time; they reveal in concrete and therefore more readily understandable form Eternal truth, ultimate reality, universal occurrences. Sometimes the real was more visible to them than the shadow.

Answer for yourself: Did you understand the last statement? For the ancients possessing this Sacred Wisdom Religion along with the "keys" that opened the Divine allegories and revealed their hidden Spiritual Truths then real, or the invisible Spiritual Reality was more real to them than the shadow; the shadow being the physical world this is but a blurred image of the real.

Matt 6:10 10 Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. (KJV)

Heaven is the reality; Earth is but the "shadow". Thus, as we should expect, tells us why history as being the focus of Divine Scripture had to take second place. At other times, however, we can find instances when the record of physical events predominated but through it all the focus of the ancient Wisdom in every nation was not meant to be seen ultimately in a "historical" and "literal" way. In order to interpret our Bibles correctly we must be aware of this concept, purposes and the method of the ancient writers who gave mankind these Sacred Scriptures and this "concept" is the very "overall key" to the mystical study of the Bible. This general premise is the very clue to the discovery of the inexhaustible treasures of wisdom and truth concealed within the confines of our Christian Bible.

The spiritual teachers of long ago, by using historical events as well as allegories and symbols, proved themselves able to overcome the limitations of time. They recorded history in such a way as to reveal to readers of both their own and later times the deeper truths of life. Even thousands of years after their deaths, such teachers are able to give to humankind both guidance along the pathway of Spiritual illumination and the solutions of human problems. Such study into the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books of the world will reveal to the student that concealment from the profane of truths which they desired to impart to the worthy and to the worthy alone, is beyond any doubt. The motive was, as earlier stated, to safeguard both the individual and humanity from the dangers of premature discovery of the latent powers within mankind and possible misuse of such Spiritual knowledge which could bestow supernatural intervention into human affairs. Thus came into existence the legends, the mythologies and the Scriptures of the world, many of them being pregnant with Spiritual and esoteric ideas which lay among the pseudo-histories of the nations that previously possessed this arcane knowledge which is basically lost today.

In addition to its value as a vehicle for hidden wisdom, the sacred language of Scripture and the "keys" to its proper interpretation can prove helpful in solving otherwise insoluble Biblical problems. While belief or faith in the possibility of supernatural intervention makes some Scriptural statements credible, nevertheless, physical laws and astronomical facts cannot be changed. The immutability of God (that He does not change) is clearly taught throughout Scripture in countless passages.

Mal.3:6 " I the Lord do not change".

Other Scriptures in our Bibles attest to this Divine Law; one only has to look at Numbers 23:19; 1 Samuel 15:29; Isaiah 15:29; Isaiah 46:9-11; Ezekiel 24:14; and James 1:17. The Laws of Science teach us the fact that if anything changes it must do so in some chronological order. There must be a point in time before the change and a point in time after the change. Therefore, for change to take place it must happen within the constraints of time; however, God is eternal and exists outside of the constraints of time (Psalm 33:11; Psalm 41:13; Psalm 90:2-4; John 17:5; 2 Timothy 1:9). As finite beings constrained by time and space, it is really impossible for us to understand and comprehend an infinite God who exists outside of the constraints of time and space. Therefore, in communicating to us in the Bible, God gave man the idea to use what are called anthropomorphisms. This simply means that we have a human term being applied to God or that God is being described in the terms of human emotions or characteristics so that we can understand and relate to Him.

Admittedly some miracles, as recorded in the Bible and if taken "literally", strain almost beyond reasonable limits one's power to believe them. The hydrostatic pressure exerted in dividing and holding back on either side of a dry bed the waters of the Red Sea, itself a small ocean (Exod. 14:21-31) and the river Jordan (Josh. 3: 14-17) must have involved the use of almost incalculable energy. Nevertheless, if direct theurgic action is presumed to have occurred, then these "miracles" would not have been impossible.

The heliocentric system, however, cannot be altered. The Sun is at the center of our solar system, for which it is the source of light. Planets throughout their orbital motion around the Sun revolve on their axes, without which rotation there could be no alternation of day and night. Yet in the first chapter of Genesis, it is plainly stated that there were three days and three nights before the Sun, moon and stars were created. This would have been an astronomical impossibility.

In the New Testament, also, difficulties are met if a literal reading of certain passages is accepted. In the case of Jesus, some of the Evangelists affirm an immaculate conception and a virgin birth (Matt. 1:18, Luke 1:34-35). This event, if taken literally, again because of the Laws of Nature and Science reveal to us that this, if taken "literally" is a virtual impossibility. Something else much have been intended in such a dogma which escapes us if we approach such an ancient teaching as if "literal". The genealogies of Jesus as given in the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke are totally different and can hardly apply to the same person. St. Matthew traces Jesus' descent through Joseph, which is entirely meaningless in the case of a virgin birth. St. Luke, however, traces the genealogy through Mary. Furthermore, the events of the night before the Crucifixion of Jesus are too numerous to have occurred within the prescribed time. Here is a list of them: the Last Supper; the agony in the garden; the betrayal by Judas; the questioning, first before Annas and Caiaphas, second before the Sanhedrin, third before Pilate and finally in the Hall of Judgment-regardless of the fact that the courts did not sit in the middle of the night; the visit to Herod (recorded only by St. Luke); the return to Pilate; Pilate's speeches and his washing of his hands; the scourging, the mocking and arraying of Jesus in a purple robe; the long and painful bearing of the cross to Golgotha, followed by the Crucifixion-all these events could not possibly have occurred in so short a time. According to the estimated chronology as given in the Oxford Cyclopedic Concordance, the arrest of Jesus occurred at midnight on a Thursday, and the Crucifixion at 9:00 A.M. on Good Friday. I hope the "truth-seeker" can see for himself that most, if not all, of these difficulties in our Bibles and its texts disappear if one assumes that the author's intention was less to record history than to reveal cosmogonical, solar and planetary ideas and to describe mystical and psychological conditions and experiences.

Down through history Christianity has tried to explain these supposed "literal" miracles as facts of reality in time. One explanation given of these incongruities and disagreements is that they were not contained in the original writings. Later interpreters, editors and translators are, by some Biblical scholars, held responsible for a number of them. Belief in the literal verbal inspiration of the Bible has been applied, it is said, to these altered and translated versions and not to the original texts. While doubtless there is some truth in this view, many of the criticisms can successfully be met and most of the problems solved if the existence of the sacred language is accepted and its symbolism applied in interpretation of the Scriptures. Now pay attention to what is said next. The words of Moses Maimonides, the Jewish theologian, historian, and interpreter of the Hebrew Scriptures, serves us well to listen and heed them:

"Every time you find in our books a tale, the reality of which seems impossible, a story which is repugnant to both reason and common sense, then be sure that the tale contains a profound allegory veiling a deeply mysterious truth; and the greater the absurdity of the letter, the deeper the wisdom of the spirit."

It truly is a shame we don't know this fact in Christianity; had we and approached our Bible and its interpretation "allegorically" instead of always beginning and adhering with the "dead-letter" of literalism then mankind's Spiritual evolution would be quite farther advanced today than it is.

Let us now continue our study as we examine the early history of Biblical interpretation. Let us not forget that in so doing we should always remember what we have already seen in previous studies; namely, that the "Jesus Story" in our Bible is the very same story as found paralleled from the earliest times of recorded humanity from ancient Egypt onward and can be traced through almost every nation and every religion of mankind since them when viewed with the proper "keys" to each nation's own particular depiction of this metaphysical reality into which mankind is born. We continue our study now by looking into the history of the interpretation of our Bibles to see for ourselves that the earliest understanding of our Bible was never "historical" or "literal" by the earliest "Christians" and fathers of our Christian faith. We will see that over the centuries the "accepted" and recognized proper way to interpret the Bible changed; from an "allegorical" and "metaphorical" interpretation to a later "historical" and "literal" understanding which again parallels the early Church's loss of the "keys" to the interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom.

THE TENSION BETWEEN THE "ALLEGORICAL" & LATER "LITERAL" INTERPRETATION OF THE ANCIENT DIVINE WISDOM IN THE BIBLE TODAY

Let us never forget that religious movements tend to embrace two opposing poles, which I call "Allegorical Gnosticism" and "Literalism", with particular individuals inhabiting the whole spectrum between the two extremes. This classification is important because Gnostics from different religious traditions (Gentile and Jewish) have far more in common with each other than they do with the Literalists within their own tradition. While Literalists from different religions clearly hold conflicting beliefs, Gnostics from all traditions use different conceptual vocabularies to articulate a common understanding. When this "literalized" form of Christianity was adopted as the official religion of the brutal Roman Empire, the original mysticism of the followers of Jesus was distorted almost beyond recognition and formed into dogmatic creeds of what was to become the "imitation church." When this "literalized" form of Christianity was adopted by Rome at its official religion the original Christians and followers of Jesus were violently suppressed, their scriptures burned and their memory all but erased by the fires of Rome. The Roman Church fabricated its own account of the origins of Christianity, still believed today, which dismisses the first Christians as a minor cult of obscure heretics. Western Christianity would win the war both with Israel and the Jews; both theologically and militarily. With this comes a "New Divine Revelation" from Roman pens which challenges and replaces the wisdom and religious beliefs of the Jews which existed over two thousand years ago and beyond as far back as Egypt. Sadly Western Christianity will triumph over the "Gnosis" of the ancients and Judaism; the religion of the historical Jesus. Soon Rome is re-interpreting existing "religious allegories" in a "literal" sense and creating their own religious literature (the New Testament) in response to existing Gnostic religious writings which will tell the world a story about a "Literal Divine Christ" which is untrue to both the existing Gnostic understanding of God as well as His "Christ." This website is the story about the Roman re-interpretation of these prior religious beliefs and understandings of God (Gnosticism and Judaism) which finds ultimate expression in the Roman New Testament.

The sad reality that faces such a student who undertakes such a serious study of the New Testament is that you will see that much that you have been "literally" taught and accepted most of your Christian life from the pages of this New Testament is the false "reinterpretation" of Divine Truths best explained and understood when left as "allegory" and "myth." You will see that most of Christian sacred doctrines has little in common with the Yeshua [Jesus[of history and his faith in God as Jew. Such hatred of the Jew and his Torah [Law] by the early Gentile and Roman Church has spawned the greatest cover-up of previously existing Divine Truth in the history of mankind; the truth concerning the Jesus of history and the expected Jewish Messiah. In the place of the Jewish Messiah we have been sold "Christ of Faith" of Rome's making. When this "Christ of Faith" is "literalized" then we encounter the counterfeit and lose the intended meaning once held by the ancients. We can lay the blame for our misunderstanding today squarely upon the New Testament which is a mixture of "theologies" that overlap and present a blurred and distorted vision not only of the Jewish Messiah but the Jesus of history as well. It is time someone deal with these issues and sorts this out for the average reader. By God's help I plan on doing just that.

QUESTIONS NEEDING ANSWERS BEFORE WE PUT OUR FAITH IN THE NEW TESTAMENT:

- How did the New Testament itself as a collection of writings come into being and what were the factors behind it?
- Why the need for a New Testament anyway since salvation was already available to the Jew and Gentile in their respective Covenants with God?
- Who collected the writings which were to be included in the New Testament, and on what principles?
- What was the religious belief and religious belief system of the person who first saw the need for a New Testament and who gave us the "FIRST" New Testament?
- How did this religious belief system of the originator of the "FIRST" New Testament differ from the religious belief system of James & the Jerusalem Church?

This is not going to be an easy or a quick study. The answers to these questions as well as many others we will encounter on this website will be only discerned by hard-nosed historical and textual research. Our object in this study is to find out what such historical and textual research reveals about the origin of the New Testament canon and its "Jesus Story" which we have been taught as Christians is to be approached with a "historical" and "literal" interpretation which Rome has maintained over the last 1,800 yeas. Only by comparison with the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the nations and the Sacred Scriptures of the ancients, from nation to nation over thousands of years, can we determine if such a "literal" and supposed "historical" interpretation of these same "religious dogmas" and "events" which are to be found repeated in the New Testament" is accurate to Divine Truth given man in the beginning of creation. We will examine in detail events surrounding the "Descent of the Soul", events involved in the "incarnation and crucifixion of the Soul and Christ" on a "cross", and we will determine by comparison with the ancient's parallels and similar religious stories and parallel myths with our own "Jesus Story" if such accounts are really best interpreted in a "literal" and "historical" fashion as Rome as maintained these last 1,800 years or if it is more correct and accurate to interpret and expound them, since they are basically identical and the same, as did the ancients; as "allegorical" and "metaphorical" in their interpretation since they express almost inconceivable Metaphysical Divine Truths that dwarfs the finite minds of mankind. Once only after we come to the point to recognize that this same ancient Spiritual Wisdom is repeated in our Bibles, both Old and New Testaments, can we begin to question the correctness of their interpretation and hermeneutic as we have been instructed by Rome and when making the comparison with how the ancients understood these same "religious dogmas" and "doctrines" the truth of the "allegorical" and "metaphorical" interpretation of our "Jesus Story" will shine through like never before. Only when we come to a point in our studies to see for ourselves this same Spiritual Wisdom and "Gnosis" of the ancient Sacred Scriptures, held sacred for thousands and thousands of years, as far back as ancient Egypt, is reproduced verbatim in our New Testament, can we honestly question as to how it should be interpreted; the Roman way or the Egyptian way which gave these Divine Concepts to mankind in the beginning of time. Only until after we see for ourselves that the earliest Gnostic followers of "the Christ", called "Chrestians" and not "Christians", long before the rise of Rome and it "literal" interpretation of this same "Gnosis", can we honestly evaluate the correctness of an "allegorical" and "metaphorical" interpretation of this same ancient Spiritual Wisdom and see the foolishness of such a supposed "literal" and "historical" interpretation of these same religious stories and events as Rome proposed and imposed upon the world for these last 1,800 years. Only then when we see the incontestible evidence do we have the right to seriously question if our accepted "literal" and "historical" interpretation of the "Christ Story" and "Jesus Story" is correct. This is no small thing for a "thinking believer".

THE TESTIMONY OF THE EARLY CHURCH AS TOWARD THE CORRECT INTERPRETATION OF OUR BIBLE & HOW IT CHANGED OVER TIME

Let us now look at what the testimony of the early authorities of Scripture had to say about the Bible being a Spiritual allegory for deeper mystical and metaphysical truths concerning the Soul and its incarnation into matter.

Although many are aware that Christianity as a religion arose in course of the first century A.D. (Anno Domini, "the year of our Lord"), not so well known to the populace at large is "by what mechanisms" the Christians eventually would come to have a differing understanding of the "the Christ" and "messiah", contra the mainstream Judaic understandings and interpretations preserved by the Rabbis. This article will explore this somewhat "overlooked" topic.

Christianity, although not so in its very beginning, would evolve over the earliest centuries of its existence to claim that its "own" understandings or interpretations of God's message or intent for His people, present in the Old Testament, and even earlier in the existing ancient Wisdom Religion of the ancients, superceded earlier Jewish understandings and interpretations preserved by mainstream Rabbis of the first century A.D. and even the Spiritual sages of antiquity which has kept basically intact the "common" understanding of the ancient world's Spiritual Mysteries and Wisdom Religion.

Answer for yourself: How did this "challenge" to prior Scriptural interpretation from ancient Egypt on down through recorded history arise? Secular Humanists and Critical Scholarship have identified "the mechanisms" which caused the birth of Christianity, that is how and by what means Christians and Christianity as we know it today came to have a different understanding of God's message via the Old Testament texts.

Let me say in the beginning that Jewish scholars who have studied the origins of Christianity have noted that Christianity was NOT born of the Old Testament, Christianity was born of Hellenized Judaism. Alexander the Great conquered the Persian Empire ca. 333 B.C.E.; over a period of some 300 to 400 years, Greek metaphysical thought and ideas about God and man's relationship with Him, captured from the invasion and conquer of ancient Egypt previously by Alexander the Great and his army, came to influence certain individuals, quarters and sects of Judaism. This should not be surprising since most "Greek" religious thought can be traced to ancient Egypt and ancient Egypt was the "teacher" of the Greeks. One only has to read a great book entitled The Stolen Legacy by George James to see this Greek assimilation of ancient Egyptian Religious thought for yourself. It is important to know this Egyptian-Greek link to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of ancient Egypt in order to understand how drastically that current Christianity today has deviated from the accepted interpretation of the "same" metaphysical story which had been cherished by mankind since its very beginning; the very "same" metaphysical story hidden today under the assumed "historical" and "literal" interpretation of "the Christ" as taught by contemporary "literalistic" Christianity today. Seeing this then it is easy to see how Christianity, then, arose from Hellenized Judaism, a form of Judaism which had come to accept certain Greek metaphysical views about God and man.

So when we read that Persia was conquered by the Greeks, and that the Greeks had conquered ancient Egypt, and then finally come to realize that Rome will later conquer the Greeks then understand that hidden in battle after battle is the assimilation of the winner of the loser's treasures; many of which were the ancient knowledge of the nation vanquished and it all can be traced to ancient Egypt and its metaphysical ideas of the cosmos. It is imperative that any "truth-seeker" read the book by George James entitled Stolen Legacy to see just how much of the world that we "think" we know today has its origin from ancient Egypt.

An important "new" concept was introduced to Hellenized Judaism via the Greeks, the employment of "Greek Allegory" to derive the "hidden meanings from the ancient religious texts"; many of which were relegated by many since not possessing the proper "keys" to their interpretation as but fables, legends, hagiographies, fairy stories, epic poetry, myths, legends, and impossible "literal" stories. The Christians, however were not the first to employ Greek allegory to expresses Divine metaphysical and Spiritual truths of a higher dimension, they were preceded by earlier Hellenized Jewish efforts. In Alexandria, Egypt, a Hellenized Jew, called Philo, attempted to reconcile Jewish scriptures with current Greek metaphysical thought. He did this via the employment of Greek allegory. His work, which survives, quotes various verses from the Old Testament, and then re-interprets these verses as reflecting Greek metaphysical concepts.

Answer for yourself: What proof is there that Christianity is not a myth created to conciliate our fears about death?

None at all. Christianity doesn't propose proof; instead it invites faith.

Answer for yourself: Faith in what? Not in facts and data, but in truth; truth which is often to be found in myth.

Myth is our most important truth. We express our deepest truths and knowledge of metaphysical realities through myth. Mankind always has.

A person can go to church his whole life and never know that from the early church up until the Protestant Reformation, allegorical interpretation was the primary method used by the church in Scriptural interpretation. It was through this allegorical interpretation of metaphysical realities that ancient man and the early Church expressed cosmic and metaphysical realities which Science had not yet revealed to the minds of man. Complex allegorical interpretations of Scripture are not very familiar to us today, however, because during the Reformation, Protestants defied the tradition by choosing to interpret according to the obvious historical meaning of the story. Since then, the modern emphasis on rational, scientific thinking leads us to read for the historical meaning as the key to Spiritual guidance in life. Roman Catholicism eventually accommodated this historical approach.

Answer for yourself: So what am I really saying here?

The ancient Spiritual Wisdom which contains story after story of the Gods and Goddesses that parallel our "Jesus Story", from beginning to end, were never meant to be understood as if real "historical" or "literal" events but spoke rather to the metaphysical reality of the Soul within mankind and its "Savior", the descended Mind of God as the Logos and "Krst/Karest/Christ" which "fell" into "matter" as well and was in like manner "crucified on the cross of matter" as had the Soul; thus God humbling Himself and "dying a death" of "material crucifixion in matter" in order that the Soul of humanity might be "saved" from the animal nature in which is has incarnated. This "crucifixion of Christ" in "matter" was in order to aid the Soul to Spiritually evolve on this plane of existence before its return home to the Father. This is a metaphysical reality believed by mankind since the beginning of time which was captured in Sacred Scripture and Spiritual myth after myth from nation to nation for over 10,000 years and which yet exists in our Christian Bible today. Today this "same story" lies totally misunderstood and badly misinterpreted by contemporary Christianity but such is not the history of our very own faith. At the earliest times the earliest Christians before the rise of Roman "literal" interpretation of the Bible saw and recognized, as had the ancient Mystery Religions, the significance of the "allegorical" interpretation of the Bible's texts which parallels the ancient Spiritual Wisdom mention over and over in the "crucifixion" of their "Gods" and "Goddesses".

Paul and other early writers speak of the divine Son of their faith entirely in terms of a Spiritual, heavenly figure; they never identify this entity called "Christ Jesus" (literally, "Anointed Savior" or "Savior Messiah") as a man who had lived and died in recent history. Instead, through the agency of the Holy Spirit, God has revealed the existence of his Son and the role he has played in the divine plan for salvation. These early writers talk of long-hidden secrets being disclosed for the first time to apostles like Paul, with no mention of an historical Jesus who played any part in revealing himself, thus leaving no room for a human man at the beginning of the Christian movement. Paul makes it clear that his knowledge and message about the Christ is derived from scripture under God's inspiration.

The sacrifice of God was always understood by the ancients and earliest Chrestians (now called Christians) in the Spiritual realm. Paul does not locate the death and resurrection of Christ on earth or in history. According to him, the crucifixion took place in the Spiritual world, in a supernatural dimension above the Earth, at the hands of the demon spirits (which many scholars agree is the meaning of "rulers of this age" in 1 Corinthians 2:8). The Epistle to the Hebrews locates Christ's sacrifice in a heavenly sanctuary (ch. 8, 9). The Ascension of Isaiah, a composite Jewish-Christian work of the late first century, describes (9:13-15) Christs crucifixion by Satan and his demons in the firmament (the Heavenly sphere between Earth and moon). Knowledge of these events was derived from visionary experiences and from Scripture, which was seen as a window; onto the higher Spiritual world of God and his workings.

The activities of gods in the Spiritual realm were part of ancient views (Greek and Jewish) of a multi-layered universe, which extended from the base world of matter where humans lived, through several spheres of Heaven populated by various Divine beings, angels and demons (positive and negative Living Energies), to the highest level of pure Spirit where the ultimate God dwelled. In Platonic philosophy (which influenced Jewish thought), the upper Spiritual world was timeless and perfect, serving as a model for the imperfect and transient material world below; the former was the "genuine" reality, accessible to the intellect (So Above, So Below). Spiritual processes took place there, with their effects, including salvation, on humanity below. Certain "human characteristics" given to Christ (e.g., Romans 1:3) were aspects of his Spirit world nature, higher counterparts to material world equivalents, and were often dependent on readings of Scripture.

Christs features and myths are in many ways similar to those of the Greco-Roman salvation cults of the time known as "mystery religions", each having its own savior god or goddess. Most of these (e.g., Dionysus, Mithras, Attis, Isis, Osiris) were part of myths in which the deity had overcome death in some way, or performed some act which conferred benefits and salvation on their devotees. Such activities were viewed as taking place in the upper Spirit realm, not on Earth or in history. Most of these cults had sacred meals (like Paul's Lord's Supper in 1 Corinthians 11:23f) and envisioned mystical relationships between the believer and the god similar to what Paul speaks of with Christ. Early Christianity was a Jewish sectarian version of this widespread type of belief system, though with its own strong Jewish features and background.

The Christian "Son" is also an expression of the overriding religious concept of the Hellenistic age, that the ultimate God is transcendent and can have no direct contact with the world of "matter". He must reveal Himself and deal with humanity through an intermediary force and energy, such as the "Logos" of Platonic (Greek) philosophy or the figure of "personified Wisdom" of Jewish thinking; the latter is found in documents like Proverbs, Baruch and the Wisdom of Solomon. This force was viewed as an emanation of God, His outward image, an agency which had helped create and sustain the universe and now served as a channel of knowledge and communion between God and the world. Now please pay attention. All these features to which I have alluded above and mentioned are part of "the language" used by early Christian writers about their Spiritual "Christ Jesus", a Heavenly figure who was but a Jewish sectarian version and "retelling" of the ancient prevailing myths and thought patterns as far back as ancient Egypt which were "repeated" again by Israel; one of but a host of nations of antiquity who had inherited this "same" ancient Sacred Wisdom and which likewise expressed it through the literary expression of the use of allegory and metaphor in their Sacred Scriptures.

Thus the reader by now is coming to see the importance of the use of allegory in the world's Sacred Scriptures. "Allegorical interpretation" is a method in which the "assumed" literal meaning of the text is superceded by an interpretation in which each element is understood to signify another. An "Allegory" is a text which requires allegorical or symbolic interpretation to discern its true meaning. Such an allegorical interpretation was widely used in the early Church, and according to Philo it was commonplace amongst the Palestinian Rabbinical schools of the 1st century C.E.. Before that time we find that Greek philosophers used allegorical interpretation to expound the writings of Homer and Plato, and these methods met with some limited acceptance amongst Jews and early Christians. Most of the Fathers (Irenaeus, Clement of Rome, Irenaeus, Tertullian, Origen, etc.) used Allegorical interpretation to expound the Christian Gospel from the Hebrew scriptures, and to interpret the Christian scriptures to the contemporary Church.

Allegorism was well established in Alexandrian Judaism, especially by Philo, who made a systematic use of it to bridge the chasm between the Old Testament revelation and the Platonic philosophy. Philo compares the literal sense of Scripture to the shadow which the body casts, finding its authentic, profounder truth in the Spiritual meaning which it symbolizes. The School of Alexandria adopted the allegorical interpretation of the Holy Scripture, believing, as had the ancients and the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of prior nations, that it hides the truth and at the same time reveals it. It hides the truth from the ignorant, whose eyes are blinded by sin and pride, hence they are prevented from the knowledge of the truth. At the same time it always reveals what is new to the renewed eyes of believers. St. Clement of Alexandria is considered the first Christian theologian (writer) who uses allegorical interpretation, giving a cause of using it in a practical way. He says that the Bible has hidden meanings to incite us to search and discover the words of salvation, which are hidden from those who despise them. Clement of Alexandria (d. 215) postulated a pervasive Spiritual sense behind the literal sense of Sacred Scripture. The truth is in the pearls which must not be offered to the swines. His disciple, Origen, adds other justifications of using allegorical interpretation to the Scriptures. Origen (d. around 254) produced the first sustained commentary on the Scriptures, and in this he followed the rule that every passage has a Spiritual, or mystical, meaning, but not every passage, especially of the Old Testament, is materially and historically true.

Some things need to be said about Origen.

Origen, born c. 185 in Egypt, came from an age that did not experience the benefits of Constantine's victory at the Milvian Bridge. In fact, it was a time when belief in Christianity could result in martyrdom, since the Christian process of Spiritual conversion was hostile to the pagan religions of the Empire. We get from his writings some of the earliest "pre-literalistic" interpretations of the Bible which will sadly be formed over time following his death. Origen's comments are priceless as hopefully the reader will agree. Origen was certainly the greatest thinker of his day, always writing to convince others of "the importance of Christian life and why a person should become a Christian." The Alexandrian school at which Origen was the instructor (dubbed the "first Christian University") attracted not only Christians but pagans, as well. Origen, over his life, will write refuting the emerging "strict literalism of Scriptural interpretation". Origen opposed the Anthropomorphites, who took literally the anthropomorphisms that the Bible attributes to God and the Soul and therefore pictured God as corporeal (Henri Crouzel, Origen, trans. A. S. Worrall (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1989), 155). The main body of Origen's work was made up of commentaries and homilies on books of the Bible, all of which generally expounded the biblical texts line by line. Much of Origen's work was destroyed after he was condemned (some argue quite unfairly) as a heretic at the Fifth Ecumenical Council. We still have 279 homilies on a variety of books such as Genesis, Judges, Jeremiah, the Song of Songs, as well as the Gospel of Luke. [18] It was the exposition of the Scriptures that was, as one scholar put it, "the centre of his life" (Gerald Watson, "Origen and the Literal Interpretation of Scripture," in Scriptural Interpretation in the Fathers: Letter and Spirit, eds. Thomas Finan and Vincent Twomey (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1995), p. 78). And Origen was extremely prolific. Epiphanius claimed that Origen produced approximately six thousand volumes during his career! (C. Bammel, "Origen's Pauline Prefaces and the Chronology of His Pauline Commentaries," Origeniana Sexta (Origen and the Bible) (Leuven: University Press, 1995), p. 495). No doubt a slight exaggeration, but his output was vast and covered most of the biblical books. Origen gave great attention to the letter of the text. For Origen, every jot and tittle was important, since each word was the very word of God. In this sense, Origen had a very high view of Scripture.

However, and this is important to note, Origen's idea of inspiration is quite different from what may be considered a modern fundamentalist approach to Scripture. For one thing, Origen did not believe that the inspiration of the Scriptures guaranteed the accuracy of the historical and scientific information in the Bible. (Ronald Heine, "Reading the Bible with Origen," in The Bible in Greek Christian Antiquity, ed. Paul M. Blowers (Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 1997), p. 132). In fact, even to produce certainty on almost certain events was extremely difficult. Origen wrote in his famous tract, Contra Celsum, "[W]e must say that an attempt to substantiate almost any story as historical fact, even if it is true, and to produce complete certainty about it, is one of the most difficult tasks and in some cases is impossible" (Origen, Contra Celsum I.42, trans. Henry Chadwick (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1965), p. 39). To Origen, there were in the Bible obvious discrepancies in both the Old as well as the New Testament that defied a "literal" understanding of the texts. Yet, since the Scriptures are inspired by the Spirit, they cannot contain errors, and at three different times in his commentaries Origen "explicitly states that inspiration implies freedom from error." Origen understood that if one approached these "problematic texts" in a "literal fashion" then one was missing the point that lays "hidden" under a presumed historical event mistakenly interpreted as if a "literal" event.

For Origen, the apparent distortion of historical information is not necessarily the result of some scribal or other literary error, but such a distortion of historical information was understood to have been purposefully put into the text by the Holy Spirit as a reminder that we must not depend on the purely historical reading. Origen writes:

"[T]he divine wisdom has arranged for certain stumbling-blocks and interruptions of the historical sense to be found therein, by inserting in the midst a number of impossibilities and incongruities, in order that the very interruption of the narrative might as it were present a barrier to the reader and lead him to refuse to proceed along the pathway of the ordinary meaning: and so, by shutting us out and debarring us from that, might recall us to the beginning of another way, and might thereby bring us, through the entrance of a narrow footpath, to a higher and loftier road and lay open the immense breadth of the divine wisdom"* (Origen, On First Principles, IV.II.9, p. 286).

Origen would go on to say:

"What may appear as errors to us are intended by the Holy Spirit, to call the reader's attention to 'the impossibility of the literal sense', and therefore signal the need for 'an examination of the inner meaning'" (Ibid., p. 287).

The "inner meaning" of Scripture, then, is what the Spirit intends to communicate in the words of the Bible, and it is the job of the interpreter to seek this "Spiritual" meaning. The "method" employed by Origen is the same used by philosophers "to find symbolic meaning in the texts of Homer and the other poets" - the allegorical method (Ronald Heine, "Reading the Bible with Origen," in The Bible in Greek Christian Antiquity, ed. Paul M. Blowers (Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 1997), p. 135).

As stated above, the existence of a secret meaning of the Scriptures is again openly confessed by Clement of Alexandria (150-220 A.D. approximately) when he says that the mysteries of faith are not to be divulged to all. Clement of Alexandria says that "since this tradition is not published alone for him who perceives the magnificence of the word, it is requisite, therefore, to hide in a Mystery the wisdom spoken, which the Son of God taught."

Origen repeatedly references Paul and his abundant use of "allegory" in the New Testament as the way "Scripture is to interpret Scripture". He desires to both "read" and "interpret" Scripture the way Paul did recognizing the deeper Spiritual meanings that lay hidden in these texts.

Answer for yourself: And why?

Its really simple. Origen does not want allegory to totally distort the historical and grammatical, giving the words an improper meaning. Allegory, then, is not a substitute for historical criticism. But it is true for Origen that we are to search for the Spiritual meaning in the text, for it is through this Spiritual meaning that the Bible becomes accessible in new historical contexts, in which the hearer of the word actually has a true meeting with the Logos of God (thus arriving at an interpretation that is unique to our day, time, and culture which is the intended message of God to man in which ever era he lives).

Not less explicit is Origen with regard to the Bible and its symbolical fables. Origen maintained that the simple people or the uneducated should be edified by the letter itself, which we call the obvious meaning or the straightforward historical sense. But this is but a beginning of a Spiritual pilgrimage of man's Soul into deeper Spiritual and metaphysical aspects hidden in Scripture as Origen understood it. Origen himself is the foremost biblical scholar of antiquity and by no means ignores the literal meaning or the importance of history, when he thinks that one existed. Origen considers "literalism" always inferior to the Spiritual or "allegorical" interpretation of Divine Scripture. Origen has said: "If we hold to the letter"..., "every man must hold these things for images, under which hidden sense lies concealed." According to Origen the understanding of the Scripture is "the art of arts," and "the science." The words of the Scripture are its body, or the visible element, that hides its spirit, or the invisible element. The spirit is the treasure hidden in a field: hidden behind every word, every letter but even behind every iota used in the written word of God. Thus, according to Origen, "every thing in the Scripture is mystery."

Agreeing with the ancient Spiritual father of mankind as far back as ancient Egypt, the earliest of Christians and Christian authorities such as St. Clement believed that allegory incites believers to discover the hidden meanings of the Scripture. Clement, who was primarily a moralist and an educator, is inclined to emphasize its pedagogical value: the symbols in Scripture work to inspire one's curiosity and stimulate the mind to discover the words of salvation. Agreeing again with the ancient Spiritual master, early Christian scholars state identically that the the biblical authors, inspired by the Holy Spirit, used allegory to keep simple Christians from doctrines they are not mature enough to handle and serve as a Spiritual stimulus to the curiosity of the more intelligent and Spiritually advanced. Finding the deeper meaning is thus the process by which God gradually leads those to whom He would reveal himself from the sensible to the intelligible world. In this way the genuine Gnostic, pondering the obscurer passages of the Bible, takes flight from this world to the other and becomes like God.

When, in addition, we read Paul's unequivocal statements that the story of Abraham and his two sons is "an allegory" and that "Agar is Mount Sinai" (Gal. 4:22-26), then, indeed, little blame can be attached to either Christian or non-Christian who declines to accept certain portions of the Bible in any other light than that of an allegory.

Nevertheless a vigorous reaction against the Alexandrian allegorism made itself manifest in the fourth and fifth centuries. Its center was Antioch, which concentrated on the literal sense of the holy Scriptures. The school of Antioch was founded by the priest Lucian, who was subsequently martyred in 312. This school stressed the literal and historical meaning of the sacred text, and, while accepting some figurative meanings in the Old Testament, opposed allegorical interpretations on the ground that the Alexandrian commentators were ignoring or denying events mentioned in Scripture which these Antiochenes assumed and believed had to be "historical realities". Thus, John Chrysostom (d. 407) rejected in general the search for allegorical meanings, but he accepted some typological meanings. Nevertheless, Theodoret (d. 458), the most prominent exponent of the later Antiochian school, took an intermediate position between the literal and the allegorical interpretation of the inspired word. The Cappadocian Fathers, Basil the Great (d. 379), Gregory of Nyssa (d. 395), and Gregory of Nazianzus (d. 389), avoided allegorical interpretations for the most part and brought out especially the literal and typological meanings of the text. Thus we see that the Antiochian Fathers used few typological elements in their writings, since their exegesis reduced this element to a minimum.

Answer for yourself: How can we summarize this?

The school of Antioch, represented above all by John Chrysostom and Theodoret, stressed the "literal sense" of Scripture, whereas the prior school of Alexandria, molded by Origen and Clement of Alexandria and which was originally carried forward by most of the Fathers of the West, labored to bring out the allegorical Spiritual sense of the Scriptural texts. As mentioned Origen saw little value in the literal sense of the Old Testament and thus he saw no need to defend its inerrancy or moral correctness. But the later Western Fathers of the Church will build their understanding of the Spiritual sense of Scripture upon at least "assumed" truth and inerrancy of the "literal" sense of Scriptural interpretation.

So the careful reader should detect a moving away from the "allegorical" interpretation of the Scriptures, which mind you we have seen, carry the same type of "Jesus Story" as did the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which is testified by the same ancient to require an "allegorical" or "metaphorical" interpretation in order to perceive correctly the hidden Spiritual Truths and realties within them. Thus the "crucifixion" of which we read need not be a "literal" story but an "allegory" of a metaphysical reality that expresses to the ancients the cosmic laws of Physics and Quantum Physics of which we are familiar today. The ancients may not have had ways to express these cosmic realties with the terms common with us today in our Physics and Quantum Physics, but no less real to them were these same metaphysical concepts which were expressed by them not in scientific journals but on Temple wall paintings and their Sacred Books of "religious myths" like the ancient Egyptian Book of the Dead, the Egyptian Bible.

Such a study of Scriptural interpretation and hermeneutic will show the reader that the Alexandrians faced the Hellenic culture, and were obliged to use even their terms to defend the Christian faith and to attract the well-educated pagans and Jews to Christianity. The Antiochenes (the Antioch church) were strongly influenced by the Jewish literalist tradition of Antioch. They were convinced that the primary level of the interpretation was the historical level. They gave attention to the revisions of the text, a close adherence to the plain, natural meaning according to the use of language and the condition of the writer, and justice to the human factor. In other words, its exegesis is grammatical and historical, in distinction from the allegorical method of the Alexandrian School. These Antiochenes, though not completely rejecting allegorical interpretation, used it very sparingly preferring the historical sense.

Answer for yourself: What should I take notice of in this short historical summary?

Notice if you will that Biblical and Scriptural interpretation in the early centuries of Christianity had remained consistent with the ancient Spiritual Wisdom as traced from the foundation of mankind and was not "changed" from the standard interpretation of the ancient Divine Wisdom since ancient Egypt and subsequent ancient nations. But that was to change over the earliest centuries of the Church.

Enter the Latin Fathers of the Church. Here we find a mixture at first of both "allegorical" and "literal" interpretations at the beginning which will over time gravitate to pure "literalism" of interpretation of the Bible. Among the Latin Fathers, Hippolytus (d. 236), the Latin commentators of the fourth century, Hilary of Poitiers (d. 367), and Ambrose (d. 397) preferred, also for dogmatic reasons, the allegory-centered approach of the Alexandrian school, while Tertullian (d. about 240) and Cyprian (d. 258) stressed the literal meaning. Jerome (d. 420) in his earlier works "preferred the allegorical meaning of Origen whenever the proper literal sense seemed to him to render a text unbecoming or ridiculous," but in his later works "he insisted more upon the literal meaning" (Steinmueller, Companion, vol. 1, p. 324). Augustine (d. 430) in his homilies "indulged in allegories, the mystical interpretation of numbers, and moral applications," while "in his theological works he adhered to the literal sense" (Ibid.). Of importance are Tertullian and Augustine being the most influential of the lot who gravitated to the "literal" interpretation over the "allegorical" in their writings; thus tipping the balance of Scriptural interpretation away from the "allegorical" interpretation of the text.

The later Roman Fathers of the Church will, for the most part, explain the "literal" sense of Scripture in defending the Faith and in theological argumentation. This neo-Patristic approach sees the "literal" sense as the "fulfillment", not only of the assumed historical truth of the Scriptures, but also of the Spiritual sense itself. So evolving away from early writers like Origen who disparaged the historical truth of certain passages of Scripture, the neo-Patristic interpreters defends the assumed historical truth of Christian texts. Rome will later, with the "dead-letter" of Biblical "literalism", take the control of Biblical interpretation for the world and this position has remained enthroned as the prime method of Bible interpretation since; especially in the Western hemisphere with the rise of Dispensationalism and its reinforced "literalistic" interpretation of all Scripture under whose influence we live in America today.

Literalism is considered by many a test of orthodoxy; the only hermeneutic by which one may correctly interpret and understand the Bible so say the Dispensationalists. Dispensational premillennialists who reject other eschatological views in the belief that they tend toward "Spiritualization" and "allegorizing" claim the distinction of being consistent literalists. Traditionally "literalism" refers to the literal hermeneutic or the grammatical-historical method of Bible interpretation as the Bible presents itself. Nowadays, the use of the world "literal" by Dispensationalists tends to mean the opposite of "figurative." This tendency to deny figurative interpretations is pursued so aggressively that some say dispensational literalism is more properly described as hyperliteralism. The conviction of a superior, literalistic approach to Bible interpretation can lead to a Spiritual arrogance leading to a feeling of infallibility. Rather than allowing Scripture to interpret Scripture, the Word of God is sifted through a literalistic filter on the theological presupposition that God shuns figurative prophetic language.

S. Lewis Johnson summarized the problem of rigid literalism as follows: "Failing to examine the methodology of the scriptural writers carefully, and following too abjectly and woodenly the limited rules and principles of human reason's presuppositions, we have stumbled and lost our landmarks along the pathway toward the understanding of the Holy Scripture. "Scriptura sui ipsius interpres" [Scripture is its own interpreter] is the fundamental principle of biblical interpretation."

I agree. Scripture must interpret Scripture, but unknown to Mr. S.L. Johnson and the vast majority of Christians in the world today who might agree with them or quote this cliche that when reading our New Testament, for example, we are reading unknowingly reading the "retelling" of the ancient Mystery Religions, and especially the "Horus Story". To the "thinking-believer" in order to interpret our "Jesus Story" and our own "Jesus H. Christ Story" correctly (the "H" stands for Horus) we must begin with ancient Egypt to understand how they interpreted their Sacred Myths which we yet read today in our Bibles and which are forced through the filter of "literalism" today which is totally foreign to the earliest interpreters of this same Bible who in the beginning of Christianity had the foresight and knowledge to correctly approach these Christians Scriptures with an "allegorical" method of interpretation. It is we who don't today. This must change.

Let us not forget the strongly worded admonition of the ancients as well as "the Christ" that is was necessary to to conceal from the profane (Mark 4:11),

Mark 4:11 11 And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: (KJV) and yet reveal to the worthy power bestowing knowledge and the mysteries of the kingdom which would be dangerous in the wrong hands (Matt. 7:6),

Matt 7:6 6 Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you. (KJV)

then the case for the for the existence and use of the sacred language and the use of allegory, myth, legend, and metaphor as the secret "code" in interpretation of the world's Sacred Scriptures would seem to be unassailable.

Answer for yourself: Now, do you see the desperate need for all Christians to come to the knowledge of the "keys" that are so necessary for the correct interpretation of our "Jesus Story", which I have consistently given clue after clue that at the heart of this "Jesus Story" is the Divine Allegory of the Descent of the Soul into "matter" and humanity?

And now for a more serious question.

Answer for yourself: Are you prepared to pass from this life believing your inherited Roman Christian and Protestant religious beliefs when your personal study will prove to you beyond any doubt that few of them have today the same "Spiritual meanings" as they existed in ancient Egypt and down through history as found in nation after nation until the rise of Roman Christianity in the 2nd through the 5th century? How many Christian religious beliefs common today, lets say about "salvation" or "atonement" of the Soul have we got wrong and lived our lives in opposite ways than God intended for mankind? You really don't know. Christianity has succeeded for centuries to "dumb-down" its adherents; that was the Plan and it has succeeded beyond the wildest dreams of Constantine and his man-made religion in Nicea in 325 A.D. Let us not forget that "the Christ" has said through the Jewish Religion:

Matt 4:17 17 From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. (KJV)

I recommend that you begin to seriously study our Websites; beginning with a comparison of Judaism vs Christianity and the reliability of our Christian texts regarding possible forgery down through the centuries. In such a study you will begin to see how prior Spiritual religious dogmas in Judaism, kept intact and maintaining their integrity since ancient Egypt, were "radically reinterpreted" by early Church Fathers as the Roman New Testament was taking shape. That is a good start for in such a study you can begin to have your "eye opened" to the truth of our Christian Religion as its now stands in the world today. It is time for a major repentance from our Scriptural ignorance and time that we:

Eph 4:13 13 ...all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: (KJV)

Mind you that as you study these truths in Judaism and beyond down through history you will eventually end up with ancient Egypt where God first gave this most glorious Spiritual understanding of Himself, this cosmos, the mankind and his role in it. You will over time in your studies come to see the "unbroken" history and preservation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom that was safeguarded by the ancient in their Scriptural allegories, myths, metaphors, similes, and symbology. Not all we read in our Bibles is to be taken "literally" to say the least. As you study and obtain these "keys" to the Bible's correct interpretation as Origen wrote, then you will see this grand metaphysical reality as intended in our Bibles, a Spiritual Reality that is tragically obscured today by a hyperliteralism in interpreting our Bible.

Blessings.....

THE TRIUMPH OF LITERAL CHRISTIANITY OVER ALLEGORICAL CHRISTIANITY #1

I can remember how startled I was many years ago when running across the following quote from Augustine.

"That which is called the Christian religion existed among the ancients, and never did not exist, from the beginnings of the human race until Christ came in the flesh, at which time the true religion, which already existed, began to be called Christianity." Augustine, Retractions 1.13.3

Over the years I would find more scholars which reinforced what Augustine said:

Discussing his search in Egypt for the source of esoteric knowledge, Gurdjieff said, "It will seem strange to many people when I say that this prehistoric Egypt was Christian many thousands of years before the birth of Christ." Of his discoveries, he said, "The Christian church, the Christian form of worship, was not invented by the fathers of the church. It was all taken in a ready-made form from Egypt, only not from the Egypt that we know but from one which we do not know. This Egypt was in the same place as the other but it existed much earlier. Only small bits of it survived in historical times, and these bits have been preserved in secret and so well that we do not even know where they have been preserved." —P.D. Ouspensky,*In Search of the Miraculous Answer for yourself: How could this be? How could the Christian Christ and the Christian religion as taught as a unique and divine Revelation from God have existed in antiquity with the Ancients?

Well if you have been a faithful reader of Bet Emet you are getting your answers. The Christian religion is centered on "the Christ" and the concept of Divine Mediation between the realm of pure Spirit and Matter. This concept has been taught since the beginning of time. We find similar concepts like "the Christ" as far back as Egypt and can trace this same concept down through recorded history and successive nations; finally calumniating with the Roman Empire. Now for an interesting fact.

Moustafa Gadalla, in his Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Ancient Egypt, on page 212 says:

"Essa is the Arabic name of Jesus and the only one used in the Koran. Essa was also the name used for Jesus by the early Christians in Egypt in the first century C.E. The name of the Jewish sect, the Essenes, indicates that they were followers of this (Essa) - Jesus"

Answer for yourself: Was this "Jesus" seen in the time period in question (first century C.E.) understood by them to be a "literal" man or was this "Jesus" understood only as an "allegorical" concept? Well that is what we are trying to determine. Keep reading please.

Gadalla goes on to say: "The name of the Jewish sect, the Essenes, indicates that they were followers of Jesus. Philo Judaeus, who wrote the earliest account of this sect around 30 C.E., called them Essaeans from the Greek "Essaios" but stated that the word was of non-Greek origin. The Essaeans were included among the Jewish divisions of Josephus' time, but he called them the Essenes, the same term used in English. However, it was recognized that the word "Essene" must have had a Semitic origin, which is Essa, "Essaioi" would theremore mean "a follower of Essa (Jesus)"

Answer for yourself: Why is what we just read so important?

Answer for yourself: Is there a substantial link between these earliest Egyptians, the later Essenes, and the even later still Christian Gnostics which were the earliest Christians? Well...yes there is a major link that is amazing but that has to wait for a while as we build our knowledge base concerning this mediation between God and man and how this Divine Intermediation was to be understood in the first place before it gets all twisted and distorted by Rome in the earliest centuries following the destruction of the Temple and the spread of Roman Christianity. The key to this whole thing as you read is that you remember what began as Divine Revelation given to the Ancients which was handed down throughout history, century after century, and which captured their Divine Truth for all time in the form of myth, symbol, and allegory will be altered by Rome and changed into a "literal" understanding of what was never intended to be understood in such ways. The result of which is idolatry today and we fail to grasp this since we are conditioned to approach the New Testament literally instead of allegorically. This will become all the more clear to you as your study progresses.

Answer for yourself: Now let us resume. Well, who was this "Essa" or this "Jesus" since these terms existed BEFORE the historical time period allotted for the supposed Jesus of history?

Answer for yourself: How could "Jesus" exist before the historical time period given for his "human birth"?

Answer for yourself: Just who is this "Essa" and this "Jesus" and how are we to understand him or it is even a "him"?

Well that is what we are trying to determine and it all goes back to whether you take these documents in the New Testament and interpret them in a "literal" sense or in an "allegorical" sense. We have seen and are constantly seeing that these earliest believers in "the Christ", "Jesus Christ", and "Jesus" did not see these terms as expressing a "literal human being" but rather spiritual and Divine Concepts that bridged the gap from the pure Spirit realm (God) and the physical realm (physical Universe).

These followers of "Essa" - Jesus (the Essenes) can be shown to be followers of this "Essa- Jesus" centuries before he was believed to be historically born!!! (THINK)!

This is a major problem for the "historical Jesus" of Rome's Second New Testament that altered the allegorical understanding of the earliest Gnostic Christian's understanding of "the Christ" as well as "Christ Jesus"! We have before us evidence testifying that a large sect of Judaism in the first century had been following "Jesus" long before his supposed birth....centuries before no less.

Answer for yourself: How come we have never heard of this before? Well simply because the ramifications of this are more explosive than an atomic bomb.

Therefore the meanings of "Essa" by the Essenes have been intentionally ignored by those who stumble onto this, especially Christian scholars, because the Essenes prove they are not following a human Christ or a human "Jesus" or a human "Joshua-Jesus" but only a Spiritual Principle that mediates between the realm of Spirit and the realm of matter. The facts are this: followers of Essa (Jesus) existed long before the time allotted to Jesus during the Romans' time we are led to believe. In other words the "allegorical" understanding of "the Christ" and "Jesus Christ" was been lost to us today and in place of this Rome would give us a LITERAL "human Christ Jesus" that never existed and give this idea "life" on the pages of a book which they controlled and constantly altered to fit their evolving theologies as seen in their successive Church Councils.

After this short provocative introduction let us begin our study in earnest.

I used to be amazed when reading the early Church Fathers and see how they incriminated themselves in their writings. The quote from Augustine above is a perfect example. All of this mind you was before I began a serious study in comparative religions. Now I have my answer or at least part of it. I was lacking something even after I discovered that the life of Jesus as taught in the New Testament was a replay of the lives of Pagan gods and goddesses since time immemorial. At that particular time in my life and my studies I was still looking at everything through the "literal" eyeglasses of prior conditioning. It would only be later, once I got into a serious study of Gnosticism, that I would discover that even with all my hard study over many years I had lacked a key element in my studies up to now.

Answer for yourself: What was that key element? It is very important that you understand what is said next.

Having read many works by respected scholars over the last two hundred years, some of which were able to be added to my library, they all seemed to approach this topic with a literal interpretation and hermeneutic. That being the case then the Jesus story when read in the New Testament seems to be only a pagan copy of pagan gods and goddesses and their exploits. It would only be once that I undertook a sustained and serious study of Gnosticism that I would began to see beneath this Western "literal" interpretation of the New Testament and come to understand what really lay behind the similarities between the Jesus of the New Testament and the parallels to the pagan gods and goddesses. Once becoming acquainted with the intended "allegorical" understanding of these gods and goddesses as the Ancients intended then I was quickly able to correctly refocus upon the previously assumed historical Jesus story of the New Testament which up to then I had interpreted "literally" as well. Since only viewing the Jesus story "literally" I had resigned it as but a cheap pagan "knock-off" but now new possibilities and vistas immediately opened to me having now acquired a through and in-depth understanding of Gnosticism and the earliest Gnostic Christians as well as how they interpreted "the Christ" and "Christ Jesus" (see the Joshua-Jesus allegory). What I had been conditioned to read and interpret "literally" in the New Testament my whole life was never meant to be understood as if it applied to a "literal" human being but through the disguise of a story told through the life of an anointed human being the earliest believers captured the "allegorical Divine Truths" since time began which were understood by them not "literally" but "symbolically" and "allegorically." I had "missed the forest for all the trees" if you get my drift.

LOSING THE TRUTH ABOUT "THE CHRIST"

Now their religious literature once collected in Marcion's First New Testament dealing with "the Christ" could be seen correctly for what Marcion intended to understood "then" in his day. No longer would I approach the whole of the New Testament (both the earliest writings and the later additions which comprise Rome's Second New Testament...ours today) with "literal" spectacles and fail to see what parts were first to be understood only in an "allegorical" sense (the earliest and First New Testament of Marcion the Gnostic). Having this "key" then when examining the later additions to Marcion's Gnostic First New Testament (Rome's refutation of it including all the forged additions over the next few centuries) it was amazing how simple it became to see this "construction of a human Christ" and also see what a huge effort and undertaking had been done to manifest a "literal Christ" and a "literal Christ Jesus" in the documents which were in 180 C.E. added to the already existing Gnostic New Testament. Not knowing that there was a earlier Gnostic New Testament and a later anti-Gnostic New Testament hampers the student and reader in being able to see the "allegorical Christ" apart from the "literal Christ." Lacking this knowledge we approach the whole of the New Testament today and see it only through a "literal" perspective as if a "unit". That means added error and later inserted "forged" writings in the names of Paul and other Jewish Apostles had corrupted our ability to understand the earlier Divine Revelation within it correctly which taught a non-literal Christ. We see sadly this "Christ" as if a human being and worship is give to this human being and this is gross idolatry but it passes Sunday after Sunday as accepted "orthodoxy" because we have been programed to see "literally" this "Christ Jesus" before or if ever we see "allegorically." We need better teachers!

In so doing this "literal" view imposed upon a prior "allegorical" book ideas and religious beliefs that are simply wrong.

When I added to this new acquired "allegorical" understanding of the earliest Gnostic Christian understanding of "the Christ" the accumulated knowledge of textual alterations to the New Testament which I had acquired over the previous ten years of study in comparisons of the Hebrew Scriptures were their purposeful mistranslation and misquotation as found in the New Testament then the puzzle's last pieces came together. I saw clearly when comparing the earliest epistles and Marcion's gospel in the First New Testament with Rome's later Second New Testament (reworked first by Irenaeus) and its repeated alterations that there was an undeniable attempt to alter the "allegorical Christ" and turn this religious concept into a "literal human being" through numerous textual forgeries. This was done mind you not only by the hands of early proto-Catholic Church Fathers but later ones as well and this forgery continued well into the fifth century. The later refutation of the earlier Gnostic New Testament (given to us by the Gnostic Marcion) by Rome altered almost beyond recognition this "allegorical Christ" which was the belief held concerning "the Christ" by the earliest Gnostic Christians. No greater deception has possibly even been perpetrated upon mankind than possibly the Roman alteration of "the Christ" and the Jewish Messianic concepts which we also find in this New Testament. They go hand in hand!

When one undertakes such a study as I have described above one finds a recurrent pattern sooner or later. Deeper spiritual truths are often lost or at least clouded by a literalistic interpretation that always follows by those who fail to study and grasp accurately the religious issues involved. It is a common pattern in the history of spirituality that dissident, nonconformist Gnostics find they have unwittingly inspired an authoritarian Literalist religion (T. Freke, and P. Gandy, The Complete Guide to World Mysticism, Piatkus Books, 1997). Religions characteristically begin with charismatic teachers who share with their students their personal understanding of the topic at hand with small groups of spiritual enthusiasts, teaching the long-lived philosophy and Divine precepts in their own unique way. Over time as the umbers of students grows these charismatic leaders find that there is too many students for them to give personal time and access. This leads to some form or organization and delegation in order to hold together the once small band of devotees. Before you know it the dilution of personal teaching and oversight by the "master" inevitably leads to aberrant interpretations and a new religion has been born. But the more the student/master ratio becomes unbalanced, the more the general level of understanding diminishes. Subtle allegorical teachings become understood in shallow, superficial, and literal ways. The trajectory is one of inevitable degeneration from the simple but sophisticated teachings of Gnosticism to the shallow but often complex teachings of Literalism. This is exactly what happened with Christianity.

Answer for yourself: Did Rome deviate from the earliest understanding of the Ancients concerning "the Christ"? Yes. How?

By now you should be putting the pieces together whereby you can see that the earliest Christians were Gnostic believers who expressed their religious beliefs in "myth" and "allegory." This applies to Divine concepts like "the Christ", "the Sophia", "the Logos," etc. These were understood neither by the Ancients nor the earliest Christian Gnostic as if "literal" people. They simply personified their beliefs and presented them symbolically and in allegories whereby these "truths" found life through the literary medium of "allegories", "myths," and "symbols." Rome will change all that when they will refute Marcion's Gnostic First New Testament and replace it with one of their own making in 180 C.E. by the hands of Irenaeus which is presented to the world as a "literal" account of a human "Christ Jesus." This is the great deviation from what the Ancients had cherished and preserved since time immemorial.

As our examination and studies progress we will resume in the second article as we examine more closely how "literal" interpretation of much of the New Testament is the real "heresy". How ironic when you come to see this; especially in light of what Rome has been feeding us for 1800 years.

More to follow as we dig this out in detail.

THE TRIUMPH OF LITERAL CHRISTIANITY OVER ALLEGORICAL CHRISTIANITY #2

A LITERAL INTERPRETATION OF "THE CHRIST" IN THE NEW TESTAMENT: IS THIS THE REAL HERESY?

In previous articles we have described how the Joshua-Jesus myth had been set in an historical context by Roman Christianity in spite of the received tradition that is was only understood "allegorically". It was inevitable that given enough time that some form of group of Christians would begin to interpret prior spiritual allegories about God and "the Christ" as if they were historical and as if they were a record of actual events. By the middle of the second century a Literalist school of Christianity had begun to emerge in Rome, with autocrats such as Irenaeus as its spokesmen. The criticisms of the Gnostics by Irenaeus, and especially by the Roman lawyer Tertullian, display the typical Roman distaste for for Gnosticism and their "allegorical" understanding of "the Christ."

The Gnostics' understanding of the Joshua-Jesus story as an initiation allegory leading to salvation through Gnosis was replaced by the Literalists' idea of salvation through belief in an historical Messiah.

We need to understand the times which we read about and especially in light that any literature we read from a previous age must be interpreted as if we lived in that time as well if we ever hope to dig the truth from its pages. Having said that then understand that in these ancient days the Pythagoreans allegorized the works of Homer in the sixth century BCE. and it would be this technique which would be taken over by Hellenistic Jews who wrote in that day and age. It was in "vogue" you might say. This "allegorical" interpretation of religious concepts was then used extensively by Philo to read Platonic philosophy into the Hebrew scriptures. To pick up this literature today and force a "literal" interpretation upon it does great damage to our ability to gleam truth from the documents. The Gnostics' understanding of the Jesus story as an initiation allegory leading to salvation through Gnosis was replaced by the Literalists' idea of salvation through belief in an historical Messiah (T. Freke and P. Gandy, Jesus and the Lost Goddess, 2001, notes on pages 35-38, p. 231).

"That which is called the Christian religion existed among the ancients, and never did not exist, from the beginnings of the human race until Christ came in the flesh, at which time the true religion, which already existed, began to be called Christianity."* Augustine, *Retractions 1.13.3

If we look at the quote from Augustine that began this this series of articles then we should see that literalists did not claim Christian teachings to be radically different from Pagan philosophy and were well aware of the similarities between the story of Jesus and the Pagan myths of Osiris-Dionysus (see the quotes from other authors). But the literalistic proto-Roman Christian teachings of the Pagan Mysteries had one unique eye-catching selling-point: the other Mystery cults had myths that may or may not have referred to actual events in the archaic past, but Literalist Christians claimed that their myth of the dying and resurrecting Godman had recently been realized in real life. This is Literalist Christianity's one claim to uniqueness, which is made by Augustine, the great spokesman of Christian Literalism. As someone who had been a follower of both the Pagan Gnostic Plotinus and the Christian Gnostic Mani before becoming a Catholic, Augustine knew there was nothing exceptional about Roman Christianity but this one incredible idea: "the Christ came in the flesh."

Christian Literalism was destined to dominate the West with an iron fist for nearly two millennia, but it began as an insignificant sect with gruesome enthusiasm for the imminent end of the world. The Gnostic myth that Jesus would appear at the culmination of time was an allegory expressing the idea that when all souls were reunited with the Consciousness of God there would be a return to the primordial state of Oneness and the cosmic drama would be over.

Answer for yourself: How did the later "literalists" and proto-Catholics change the prior Gnostic myth of Joshua-Jesus in this regard?

The literalists took this myth literally, developing the grotesque idea that Jesus was about to arrive to destroy the world and rescue a small group of Christian Literalists and condemn everyone else to eternal torment. We see this reworking of the original Joshua-Jesus myth in Matt. 16:28 and Luke 21:12-36:

Matt 16:28 28 Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom. (KJV)

Count it a blessings that this turned out to be wrong or you like myself would never have been born. Jesus' prophecies in Matthew 16:28 and Luke 21:12-36 that some of his audience would live to see the Apocalypse were, if taken literally, clearly mistaken so again we see the "literalistic" interpretation in this passage could not have been its intended meaning.

However, replacing the mythical sacrificed Godman with an historical martyr led to Christian Literalism becoming a sort of "suicide cult" which, much to the horror of the Gnostics, encouraged its members to imitate Jesus by also seeking out a sacrificial death. In the Literalist version of Christian history the Roman authorities are pictured as singling out the Christians for terrible persecution. Actually they were often appalled at Christian Literalists' eagerness to be martyred (T. Freke and P Gandy, Jesus and the Lost Goddess, 2001, p. 38-39).

Literalism replaced the enlightened Gnostic sage at the centre of a small group of initiates with a hierarchy of bishops at the head of an expanding evangelical cult. The whole purpose of Gnostic initiation was to bring initiates to spiritual maturity, where they would experience themselves to be completely free of any external authority and become their own "Christ" or "King". Literalists, by contrast, wanted to enlarge their religious powerbase and worked hard to keep their flock securely in the fold through the power of the Bishop and organizational measures coordinated from Rome. All the groups of believers were to be submitted to the mother Church of Rome. Despite the fact that in The Gospel of Luke Jesus teaches, "Everyone when his training is complete will reach his teacher's level," the Gnostic idea that Christianity was about oneself becoming a Christ became branded as blasphemous heresy (Ibid.).

The role of the Gnostic master was to undermine all of an initiate's opinions and encourage them to directly confront the Mystery of Life (God). The role of the Literalist bishops, on the other hand, was to tell people what to believe and to discipline those who disagreed. Free intellectual inquiry was actively discouraged and blind belief became exalted as a spiritual virtue. Augustine announced the triumph of Literalist

Fundamentalism, writing, "Nothing is to be accepted except on the authority of scripture, since greater is that authority than all powers of the human mind" (Quoted in D. Fidler, Jesus Christ: Sun of God, 1993, p. 180.)

Answer for yourself: Why is this such a problem? Rome was altering the Gnostic First New Testament give to us by Marcion which expressed the truth concerning "the Christ" as well as writing NEW "Scriptures" in Apostle's names by this time and deciding what was to be "from God" and what was not!

Answer for yourself: What else did Augustine say?

He also declared: "I would not believe the Gospel if the authority of the Catholic Church did not compel me." (Ibid., p. 320) [THINK]

As long as the Joshua-Jesus story was understood as a myth that has encoded and captured Divine Truths, Christians were at liberty to interpret it and change it as they felt appropriate; and they did as we see from historical evidences and the variety and evolution of Gnosticism. Once the Joshua-Jesus allegory became seen as a biography however, the development of intolerant dogmatism was inevitable. Literalists would argue fiercely for centuries over what Jesus actually supposedly did say and do, as they still do today. But, as the argument is about supposed historical events, they all agree that there is only one accurate version of what happened. And if only one version is right, that means everyone else is wrong.

Answer for yourself: But who has it?

FORGERY OF OUR BIBLES

From the large number of Christian scriptures in existence, Literalists selected four gospels to form the canon of the New Testament.

Now we need to listen to a courageous scholar. Barnstone observes that: "We can say categorically that the Bible, with the absence of sacred texts from the entire inter-Testamental period, with its acceptance of a small and repetitious canon for the New Testament, with the exclusion of all later Christian Apocrypha, and the total rejection of Gnostic scriptures, has given us a highly censored and distorted version of ancient religious literature. The impression is given that somehow Christianity sprang self-generated like a divine entity, with no past, into its historical setting" (W. Barnstone, The Other Bible, 1984, xviii.).

Burton Mack observes about the canon: "What is striking is the severe reduction of a large spirited literature to a very small set of gospels and letters" (B. L. Mack, The Lost Gospel, 1993), p. 228.)

These gospels were then declared to be the only authentic gospels and all of the other Christian scriptures were denounced as heretical by Rome.

Answer for yourself: What does this mean for us today? It simply means that the earliest "gospels", like the ones discovered at Nag Hammadi, the Gnostic Gospels that taught an "allegorical" Christ, were excluded from this "canon" and were systematically destroyed in the Roman purge of what they later decided were "heresies". That means that the earliest understanding of these Gnostic Christians concerning "the Christ" was kept from us by the substitution of a Second New Testament of Rome's making.

The four New Testament gospels which we have in our possession in our New Testaments today are variations on the Jesus myth originally used by different schools of Christian Gnosticism. Let us not forget that these earlier accounts of the "Joshua-Jesus myth" were understood "allegorically" in the beginning but later reinterpreted by "literalists in Rome" by the addition of genealogies, infancy narratives, Pastoral epistles, etc.; all with the intent of reorienting interpretation of "the Christ" as if these were historical events involving a real human being. Putting these four gospels together after they were "edited" created the illusion of there being four (albeit contradictory) eye-witness accounts of the same historical events. This belief has been undermined by the discovery that the gospel of Mark or even the "Q" gospel was the source used by both Luke and Matthew, and perhaps even John, who supposed independence of Mark is challenged today. The later triumph of Literalism has left us with the distorted impression that these gospels were always the most popular Christian scriptures, but this is not true.

In fact we don't hear anything about or any quotes from then from any Matthew, Mark, Luke and John by any Church Father until the late second century!

The names Matthew, Mark, Luke and John never appear in Justin Martyr's extant work (160 C.E.), written in the mid-second century. However, a generation later, Irenaeus (180 C.E) brings forward these four gospels as if they have been recognized as authoritative since the beginning. And if that is not enough they not only appear out of nowhere but carry the apostle's names!

Answer for yourself: Can we find any trace of the Holy Spirit in deciding that the New Testament is to include only 4 gospels? This is what you have to decide once you evaluate the evidences concerning their production.

Let us examine what Irenaeus says concerning these 4 Gospels and see if this sounds like God to you: "It is not possible that the Gospels can be either more or fewer in number than they are, for there are four zones of the world and four principal winds" (Quoted in J. Stevenson, A New Eusebius, 1957, p. 117.) Such stupidity exists in abundant amounts which you could see for yourself if you ever take time to read these early Church Fathers who everyone likes to make reference but which few have read. As Ludemann notes, Irenaeus' "artificial arguments" at least demonstrate that the idea was a novelty which needed defending (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995, p. 196). Likewise Justin has never heard of Acts (or Paul, the hero of most of that book, whom he likewise never mentions), which turns up in Irenaeus for the first time c. 175 CE. It is widely accepted that it was Marcion's set of authoritative writings that spurred the Roman Literalists to establish their own canon. (R.M. Price, Deconstructing Jesus, 2000, p. 80.)

Answer for yourself: How did these proto-Catholics and later Roman Catholics create authority of their Second New Testament? In order to promote their "new" Gospels and their Second Edition of the New Testament which now contained conflicting genealogies, birth narratives, infancy narratives, anti-Gnostic Pastoral epistles, etc., the "literalistic" bishops fabricated a lineage connecting themselves back to the fictional disciples of the gospels. They turned Paul from the "Great Messenger" of the Christian Gnostics into a bastion of Literalism by simply forging letters in his name which make him condemn their Gnostic rivals (the Pastoral Epistles for example). It's a simple trick, and it has worked marvelously for over 1800 years; that is until the recent archaeological discoveries of the last one hundred years and now the "cat is out of the bag."

Here are the facts:

- Of the 13 letters of Paul in the New Testament, seven are accepted as being largely authentic.
- Of the remaining six, the Pastoral Letters - 1 Timothy, 2 Timothy and Titus - are widely held to be forgeries.

Their sudden appearance in the late second century in the hands of Irenaeus makes perfect sense, as they turn Paul into a hostile opponent of Gnosticism. You see Irenaeus either was the luckiest man on this plant to have discovered all these writings of Paul and the Apostles that had gone unnoticed for almost two hundred years by everybody or one of the best forgers in the history of the world! Suspiciously, Irenaeus' massive work against heretics, Unmasking and Refutation of the Gnosis, Falsely So-Called, leans explicitly on a quotation from 1 Timothy 6:20 (Ludemann, Heretics, p. 135).

1 Tim 6:20 20 O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: If, as I have shown in our articles on Paul being a Gnostic, that the "true" Paul was a Gnostic and never believed in a historical and fleshly Christ, and if Timothy was a follower of Paul, then does it stand to reason that Timothy would have believed in a "fleshly" Christ like Irenaeus would have us to believe in his above reference to I Tim. 6:20?

Another key passage from the forged Pastoral Epistles is:

1 Tim 3:16 16 And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory. (KJV)

In writings like these from Irenaeus which are referenced for the first time by him and him alone we find the true beginning of the "literalist" interpretation of "the Christ" as a fleshly human being and through Irenaeus and the Holy Roman Forgery Mill we will create in 180 C.E. a "fleshly Christ Jesus" and draw up many writings carrying the names of long dead followers of the "allegorical Christ" which are made to look anti-Gnostic by the creativity of later Roman "literalists".

It was not until the last few centuries that scholarship became sophisticated enough to see through it. We have a whole website devoted to this "Pauline Problem".

THE APPEAL TO PHILOSOPHERS TO FUTHER THE FLESHLY CHRIST

Literalists also appealed to later Christian philosophers for authority for their new "literal" New Testament. They turned to such second-century writers as Athenagoras of Athens, Theophilus of Antioch and Minucius Felix of Africa. These writers actually promoted a philosophical Christianity based around the mythical figures of the Logos and Sophia. As Doherty observes: "In fact, the apologists as a group profess a faith which is nothing so much as a Logos religion. It is in essence Platonism carried to its fullest religious implications and wedded with Jewish theology and ethics" (E. Doherty, The Apologists as Platonic Philosophers, 1999), p. 276ff).

Not only were they not Literalists, they were not even particularly interested in the figure of Jesus. Athenagoras claims to go "minutely into the particulars' of Christian doctrine, yet never mentions Jesus at all". Athenagoras of Athens is concerned only with the Son of God as the Logos and never once mentions the historical Jesus in 37 chapters of his Plea for the Christians. (Doherty, op. cit., . 279). Neither does Minucius Felix, even when an adversary asks him to name someone who has actually returned from the dead. Instead he gives a list of diabolical beliefs and practices that have been wrongly attributed to Christians. These include (along with drinking the blood of sacrificed children and worshipping the genitals of priests!), worshipping a man who suffered death as some criminal as well as a wretched piece of wood (Ibid., 286). As he comments:

"These and similar indecencies we do not wish to hear. It is disgraceful to have to defend ourselves against such charges. When you attribute to us the worship of a criminal and his cross you wander far from the truth" (Minucius Felix, Octavius, Chapter 9, quoted ibid., p. 287).

Indeed, Minucius condemns Pagan Literalists who "choose a man for their worship" (Ibid., p. 289) and Theophilus ridicules Pagan Literalists for believing that Hercules and Asciepius had actually come back from the dead (Theophilus, Autolycus, 1.9.13, quoted ibid., p. 278).

Answer for yourself: Why did Literalists try and adopt to their cause writers who were so obviously promoting something quite different? Because there are no early Christian writers who defend the idea of there literally being an historical Jesus. They were desperate when countered by their religious opponents...the Gnostic Christians and other Pagan philosophers like Celsus and others. Many scholars show us today if we have the courage to read them that there were no historical disciples. There were no early Literalists. They all had to be invented.

The earliest Christian whose writings suggest he was a Literalist was Justin Martyr, 150 C.E. And yet, apart from the oft-repeated "crucified under Pontius Pilate", Justin gives us the basest details of Jesus' life (Ibid., p. 284). But even Justin still saw Christianity as a branch of philosophy and set up his own philosophical school in Rome. Justin admits the similarity of his "Christ Jesus" with that of the "allegorist" and their Gnostic Christ when he says:

Justin Martyr, First Apology, 20: "...on some points we teach the same things as the poets and philosophers whom you honour, and on other points are fuller and more divine in our teaching."

Answer for yourself: Were you aware that one of Justin's most important followers was a man named Tatian?

After Justin's death, his pupil Tatian abandoned his master's Literalism and adopted a more Gnostic religious belief, suggesting that Justin's "literalistic Christ" was seen as something of an innovation, and regarded the Jesus story as comparable to Greek myths, urging his Pagan readers:

"Compare your own stories with our narratives. Take a look at your own records and accept us merely on the grounds that we too tell stories (Tatian, Apology, 21; Doherty, op. cit., P. 282).

Tatian later abandoned his master's Literalism and became a Gnostic, as did the Church Father Tertullian.

Answer for yourself: Did you hear that? The very famous student of Justin (who was one of the first to teach a historical Christ Jesus) would denounce his teacher following his death and Tertullian no less would revert back to Gnosticism at the end of his life.

Answer for yourself: What is going on here when we find that these first advocates of a "fleshly Christ Jesus" turn from such a novel belief at the end of their lives as seen in their writings and the writings of others about them?

Answer for yourself: Should we not by now expect this; especially in light of what Augustine has already said to us?

The role of the Gnostic master was to undermine all of an initiate's opinions and encourage them to directly confront the Mystery of Life (God). The role of the Literalist bishops, on the other hand, was to tell people what to believe and to discipline those who disagreed. Free intellectual inquiry was actively discouraged and blind belief became exalted as a spiritual virtue. Augustine announced the triumph of Literalist Fundamentalism, writing, "Nothing is to be accepted except on the authority of scripture, since greater is that authority than all powers of the human mind" (Quoted in D. Fidler, Jesus Christ: Sun of God, 1993, p. 180.)

Answer for yourself: Why is this such a problem? Rome was writing these "Scriptures" by this time and deciding what was to be "from God" and what was not!

Answer for yourself: What else did Augustine say?

"I would not believe the Gospel if the authority of the Catholic Church did not compel me." (D. Fidler, Jesus Christ: Sun of God, 1993, p. 320)

Answer for yourself: Has this not happened to us as well? Has not Rome compelled us to believe a lie by forging the New Testament and by that ensuring that we never come to the truth concerning "the Christ"?

We continue in the next article in this series.

THE TRIUMPH OF LITERAL CHRISTIANITY OVER ALLEGORICAL CHRISTIANITY #3

UNTIL ROME'S SUPREMACY GNOSTICISM WAS A WORLD RELIGION AND HAD BEEN SINCE THE BEGINNING OF TIME

The traditional history of Christianity is that Literalism took the world by storm, while Christian Gnosticism remained a minor heretical fringe movement. Nothing could be further from the truth. Christian Literalism was initially a minor school of Christianity which developed in Rome towards the end of the second century. By this time Christian Gnosticism was an international movement which had spread throughout much of the Mediterranean, flourishing in cosmopolitan cities such as Alexandria, Edessa, Antioch, Ephesus, and Rome. Despite the attempts of Christian apologists to belittle the significance of the Gnostics, it is clear that in the majority of Mediterranean countries Gnosticism was the original Christianity. As Gibbon wrote in The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, the Gnostics "covered Asia and Egypt, established themselves in Rome, and sometimes penetrated into the provinces of the West". Gibbon writes with characteristic wit: "For the most part they arose in the 2nd century, flourished during the 3rd, and were suppressed in the 4th or 5th by the prevalence of more fashionable controversies" (E. Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, 1796, p. 458).

In Egypt the first Christians we hear of are the Gnostics Valentinus, Basilides, Apelles, Carpocrates and his son Epiphanes. There is no sign of any form of Christianity which resembles Roman Catholicism in Egypt until Bishop Demetrius at the end of the third century. The finding of the Nag Hammadi library, buried c.350 CE, supports this evidence!!! In Antioch the Gnostics Saturninus, Cerdo and Menander had established schools at the beginning of the second century. Now let us set the time frame for you for the next statement and hear it well. In 150 C.E. or about then we find that the Literalist Justin Martyr regrets that in Edessa, eastern Syria, to be a Christian means to be a follower of Marcion & it was Marcion, the Gnostic, who gave us the first New Testament which taught only the "allegorical Christ"! The Chronicle of Edessa notes the birth of Marcion, Bardesanes and Mani before it mentions Roman Christianity. Even Rome itself was full of different schools of Christian Gnosticism, such as the Marcellites, Marcionites, Archonites, Valentinians, Sethians, Barbeloites, Montanists and Ophites.

Literalists complained that in Persia all Christians were members of the Marcionite school of Christian Gnosticism (S.N.C. Lieu, Manichaeism, 1985, p. 39). Tertullian bemoaned the fact that Marcion's followers filled "the whole universe" (Quoted in J. Lacarrière, The Gnostics, 1989, p. 100). Let us not forget that toward the end of Tertulian's life that he would revert back to Gnosticism himself and reject all that he had once believed about a "historical Jesus". At the beginning of the third century the Christian Gnostic sage Bardesanes initiated into his school a Syrian ruler who made Christian Gnosticism the official state cult. Bardesanes was born in 135 CE in Syria. He converted the local ruler to Gnostic Christianity and between 202 and 217 there existed a Gnostic Christian state in Syria. It was subsequently destroyed by the Roman emperor Caracalla.

We have already seen that the Pastoral Epistles were forged in Paul's name and it is important to know this if we are to understand what follows next.

The forged Second Letter to Timothy has its phoney Literalist Paul complain, "All Asia has turned against me," which tells us that in the late second century the writer of these Pastoral Epistles bemoans the fact that "all Asia" was dominated by Gnostic Christianity!!! (THINK)!

As if that is not enough we find that The Epistle of Polycarp laments that "the great majority" of Christians embrace the idea of Jesus not existing in the flesh."

The school of the third-century master Mani became a world religion in his own lifetime. The Living Gospel of Mani opens with words that deliberately echo those of Paul: "I, Mani, the Apostle of Jesus..." In Maul's work a constant battle is fought between the "New Man" and the "Old Man", terms which are clearly borrowed from Paul (Lieu, op. cit., p. 18). Eventually reaching from Spain in the West to China in the East, Manichaeism flourished for 1,000 years. Although Manichaeism had spread across the Western world by the fourth century CE (Augustine, for example, was a Manichean for nine years before his conversion to Literalist Christianity in 386 CE), it suffered harsh persecution under Theodosius at the end of the fourth century. By the sixth century it was anathematized, its leaders were beheaded and their followers murdered or exiled Lieu, op. cit., viii). In the East, however, Manichaeism spread eastward along the Silk Road and became the state religion of the Uigur Empire (eastern Iran) in 762. Manichean apostles appeared at the Chinese imperial court in 694 and according to Portuguese reports the religion was still surviving in southern China in the seventeenth century. Our knowledge of Manichaeism has been revolutionized by the discovery in Turkestan in 1902 and Egypt in 1930 of a vast number of previously unknown Manichean texts in Coptic, Iranian, Turkish and Chinese. Mani was a great eclectic who synthesized the Gnosticism of different religious traditions in an attempt to create a truly international form of spirituality which would "embrace all humanity". His followers taught that "Judaism, Paganism, Christianity and Manichaeism are one and the same doctrine" (Lieu, op. cit., p. 108).

Answer for yourself: Can you by now see how that could be? It depends again upon interpretation of religious dogmas handed down since the Ancients. If one interprets these prior myths "allegorically" like they were intended then there are unbelievable similarities between these faiths; however, if one interprets key allegorical concepts "literally" then great division arises. Mankind has always knew that there existed within him a mediation between the Spiritual and Invisible realm of God and the realm of the visible realm of matter. If one understand this Spiritual Dynamic which almost defies expression in an symbolic or allegorical fashion then there is great similarities between these different faiths but it is only when we try to "literalize" this Spiritual concept and give it human manifestation that we run into a concrete wall. God was right when he said:

Exod 20:4-5 4 Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: 5 Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: (KJV)

CHRISTIAN LITERALISM WITH THE SUPPORT OF ROME DESTROYS DIVINE TRUTH

Over the course of the third century, despite the flimsiness of its claims to be the authentic Christian lineage, Literalism grew in popularity in Rome and the West, though Eastern Christianity remained overwhelmingly Gnostic. Eventually, however, it was inevitable that the simplistic certainties and offer of vicarious atonement of Christian Literalism would attract more adherents than Christian Gnosticism, with its puzzling promise of Gnosis through mystical transformation of the inner self.

As Literalists grew more powerful, so did their bitter attacks on all other Christian schools. In response, Christian Gnostics condemned Literalists for establishing an "imitation Church" which no longer taught the secret Inner Mysteries. Some Gnostics, such as the Valentinians, tacitly went along with Literalism in an attempt to heal the ever-growing rift. Other Gnostics, such as Clement of Alexandria and his successor Origen, paid little attention to the idea of an historical Jesus, and remained Platonists and continued to teach the Gnosis in their Christian school of philosophy. I & II Clement do not contain any reference to the historicity of Jesus of Nazareth. Clement quotes many gospel verses (and many which I cannot find in the gospels), but they are nearly all 'teaching' sayings rather than historical events. This in itself should be a concern to the evangelicals: if references to events from Jesus life from the gospels were reproduced in Clement it would not necessarily demonstrate the historicity of Jesus, only that Clement was familiar with the NT writings; but the fact that even this minimum level of acquaintance is not demonstrated by Clement in his writings is a clear problem. What we find is that over time after the writing and promotion of the 4 Gospels is that people start to quote the Gospels as stories about the historical Jesus. And in the minds and hearts of the people the stories become "fact" as if this personage really had existed. Over time when this idea is still being challenged select Christian clerics will resort to forgery to substantiate their belief in a historical Jesus Christ and we see this so clearly in the historical examples of the forgery of Josephus (article 1 and article 2) and others.

THE INFLUENCE OF MYSTERY CULTS UPON THE PROMOTION OF A HISTORICAL JESUS

Christianity grew in popularity as part of a general upsurge of interest in Mystery cults, such as the Mysteries of Mithras. Over a period of 350 years Mithraism developed from a little-known Persian cult into the dominant religion of the Roman Empire, until at the end of the second century CE it was adopted by the emperor Commodus. Mithraism first appears on European soil at Tarsus in the middle of the second century BCE.

Answer for yourself: Where was Paul born? That should explain Paul's religious synthesis found in "his gospel".

According to Plutarch, Romans were first initiated into the cult by followers brought back from the campaign waged against Mithradates (note name) by the Roman General Pompey in c.64 BC (Plutarch, Life of Pompey, 24). After Commodus (emperor 180-192 CE) was initiated into the cult there was an explosion in the building of Mithraic sanctuaries across the empire (F. Cumont, The Mysteries of Mithras, 1903, p. 83). The cult of Jesus followed a similar trajectory from persecuted minority cult to imperial patronage over a similar time-scale.The Jewish Jesus cult followed in the footsteps of the Persian Mithras cult, growing in popularity from its conception at the beginning of the first century until 350 years later, in the middle of the third century, it had large numbers of followers throughout the Roman Empire and was adopted by the emperor Constantine. Within 50 years Christian Literalism was the party line of a totalitarian state which dictated to its citizens the one religion that they were permitted to follow. In the mind of Theodosius, Christianity and citizenship were coterminous and anyone who denied Christ automatically made himself an outlaw of Roman society. As Campbell observes, "In the reign of Constantine, Christianity was accorded equal status with the pagan religion of the empire, but half a century later in the reign of Theodosius (379-395) it was declared to be the only religion allowed, and with that the period that has since been known as the Dark Ages was inaugurated by imperial decree" (J. Campbell, Occidental Mythology, 1964, p. 389; S.N.C. Lieu, Manichaeism, 1985, p. 112).

A common Literalist reaction to the idea that Jesus is a mythical figure is to question its huge success and the rise of Christianity if Jesus is only a myth. This is a valid point that needs to be addressed.

Answer for yourself: How do you explain the rise of Christianity without it being founded by an inspirational leader?

Mithraism provides us with the answer. Christianity became the dominant religion in the ancient world without there being an historical Jesus in exactly the same way that Mithraism, a few decades earlier, had become the dominant religion in the ancient world without there being an historical Mithras. Mithraism was inspired by charismatic leaders, but none of them was Mithras. In the same way Christianity was inspired by charismatic leaders amongst the original Christians, but none of them was Jesus. In fact the myth of Jesus was partly based on the myth of Mithras. The two stories are so similar that Literalist Christians claimed that in an attempt to confuse the faithful, the Devil had created the Mithras story by mimicking the life of Jesus in advance of his birth! Tertullian writes: "The devil, whose business is to pervert the truth, mimics the exact circumstances of the Divine Sacraments. He baptizes his believers and promises forgiveness of sins from the Sacred Fount, and thereby initiates them into the religion of Mithras. Thus he celebrates the oblation of bread, and brings in the symbol of the resurrection. Let us therefore acknowledge the craftiness of the devil, who copies certain things of those that be Divine." (Quoted in W. Kingsland, The Gnosis, 1937, p. 99; C.W. King, Gnostics and their Remains, 1887, p. 123.) Justin Martyr accuses the Mithraists of mimicking the Eucharist even down to the commemoration "This is my body .. This is my blood ... Do this in commemoration of me." (Justin Martyr, First Apology, 1.66). Not only would Rome mold the "allegorical Christ" into a "historical Jesus" but at the same time incorporate many religious tenants within such a religious system that come right out of their own sun worship. This website just linked will reveal to you how the "historical Jesus" as depicted on the pages of the New Testament is the replay of Sun Worship that has been "literalized" when again such religious beliefs were best understood by the Ancients in ONLY an "allegorical and a symbolic fashion" as a representation of "the Divine". If you in your studies come to understand this tragic departure from an allegorical understanding of God to a literalistic understanding of God then you realize just how much Divine Truth we have lost due to Rome which the Ancients possessed and just how far we have strayed from God today!!!

It seems extraordinary that the Roman world embraced the Mysteries of Rome's enemies, the Persians and Jews. But the vast majority of inhabitants of the empire were not Romans, of course, and had little sympathy for them. The cults of Mithras and Jesus spread so successfully precisely because they fed on conquered peoples' resentment of the Romans and represented a form of acceptable dissent. Roman emperors were concerned above all with uniting their disparate colonies. Mithraism, Christianity and other popular Mystery cults were adopted by the state, regardless of their national origins, in an attempt to bring coherence to a fragmenting empire. Christian Literalism was an ideal candidate for the job. It was exactly what a Roman despot like Constantine required - a populist and authoritarian religion which had freed itself of Gnostic radicals.

Although Christian Literalists rejected the Gnostic Inner Mysteries of Christianity, they continued unwittingly to portray Christianity as a Mystery cult.

Phrases such as "This is known to initiates" continued to be routinely used, but they were now little more than empty words. The phrases "Mysteries that make men freeze with awe" and "This is known to initiates" are repeated in many of the Greek sermons written in the fourth and fifth centuries (J. Campbell, Papers From the Yearbook, 1955), p. 367). With Paganism out of the way, Christianity no longer had to hide its debt to the Mysteries. As Christian Literalism grew in power it adopted more of the trappings of the Pagan Literalism it replaced. Christianity's ritual processions were identical to those of the Pagan cults. Christian initiates were led naked to baptism and afterwards they put on white garments and a sign of the cross was made on their foreheads with oil. The procession then returned to the Basilica with each initiate carrying a candle and in the Alexandrian liturgy also wearing a crown. As d'Alviella states: "It is precisely the Eleusinian procession where the Mystics dressed in white, wearing a crown on their heads and carrying a torch in their hands, pass by singing hymns on their way to the sanctuary" (G. D'Alviella, The Mysteries of Eleusis, 1981), p. 114.) The descriptions of this procession by the Christians Chrysostom, Cyril and Dionysius the Areopagite could be placed next to those of Pagan authors like Claudius, Themistius and Plutarch. Although Jesus had specifically said, "Call no man father", Christian Literalists adopted the Mithraic practice of calling priests "father".

Matt 23:9 9 And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven. (KJV)

In imitation of the Mithraic bishops, Christian bishops wore a "mithra" or "mitre" and carried a shepherd's staff. Eventually the Bishop of Rome took up the title Ponifex Maximus, the ancient name for the Pagan high priest, a title still held by the Pope today. At Ephesus there was the Temple of Artemis, the Great Mother Goddess of Asia Minor, the largest temple ever built by the Greeks and one of the seven wonders of the world. It is no surprise that Theodosius II summoned the council to the city where, only a few years earlier, the Pagan "Mother of God" had previously been worshipped (J. Campbell, Occidental Mythology, 1964, p.410). Soon after the council, legends began to be created that Mary and John retired to Ephesus after the crucifixion.

THE ROMAN ATTACK ON GNOSTICISM AND ALLEGORICAL CHRISTIANITY

As their confidence grew, Literalists' attacks on Gnostics became ever more virulent, creating the distorted picture of Christian Gnosticism still prevalent today. In a classic case of psychological projection, the Gnostics were misrepresented as the diabolical heretics that the Literalists had actually become. Although it was Literalists themselves who were preaching an exclusive religion and arrogantly condemning all other faiths as evil, they accused the Gnostics of being "puffed up" sectarians and named themselves the "Catholic" or "Universal" Church. Although Gnostic philosophy teaches "All is One" and Literalists preach an irreconcilable war between God and the Devil, Literalists portrayed themselves as "mono-theists" and the Gnostics as "dualists".' Although it was Literalist Christianity that had begun as a suicide cult, teaching its adherents that the way to salvation was to actively seek a martyr's death, its later followers vilified the Gnostics as world-haters (Tertullian, Apology, 50).

Christian Literalists turned their caustic polemics equally against Paganism, which was denounced as a barbaric cult of bloody sacrifice. I find this deeply ironic given the fact that Christian Literalist believe that God had sacrificed his only Son as the sole way of getting the rest of out of hell. When taken literally, it is difficult to imagine a more barbaric idea than that! And for all the undoubted barbarism of Pagan Literalists, it was Christian Literalists, not the supposedly primitive heathens, who presided over the collapse of Western culture into the aptly named Dark Ages. Gibbon's original intention in The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire was to end with the destruction of Rome by Alaric the Goth and his horde of "barbarians" in 410 CE. However, on discovering that Alaric was a Christian, the "barbarians" were bands of Christian monks and it was Pagans who were hunted down and killed whilst Christians remained safe in their churches Gibbon changed his plan. Instead he continued his work until the fall of the Holy Roman Empire at the Reformation.

This disastrous collapse was precipitated at the end of the fourth century when Christian Literalism, now the only legal religion in the Roman Empire, launched a brutal crusade to completely eradicate its old rivals, Christian Gnosticism and ancient Paganism. In an orgy of violence, armies of fanatical Christian Literalists tore down the architectural wonders of the Pagan world. They built infernal bonfires of books containing the spiritual wisdom and scientific knowledge of the ages. They subjected to grisly torture and a painful death philosophers, priestesses and scientists - anyone who disagreed.

Let us look at a few short examples of the eradication of the earliest teachings concerning "the Christ" as believed by the earliest Christians by Rome before they took over and redefined "orthodoxy":

- "We shall believe in the single Deity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, under the concept of equal majesty and of the Holy Trinity. We command that those persons who follow this rule shall embrace the name of Catholic Christians. The rest, however, whom We adjudge demented and insane, shall sustain the infamy of heretical dogmas, their meeting places shall not receive the name of churches, and they shall be smitten first by divine vengeance and secondly by the retribution of Our own initiative, which We shall assume in accordance with the divine judgement." (Emperor Theodosius, The Theodosian Laws, A.D. 380, quoted on pp.27-28 of Helen Ellerbe's The Dark Side of Christian History, pub. A.D.1995).
- "Orthodox Christians assembled the Bible not to bring all the gospels together, but rather to encourage uniformity. From the plethora of Christian gospels, Bishop Irenaeus compiled the first list of biblical writings that resemble today's New Testament around 180 C.E. By 393 and 397, Bishop Athanasius had a similar list ratified by the Church councils of Hippo and Carthage. By prohibiting and burning any other writings, the Catholic Church eventually gave the impression that this Bible and its four canonized Gospels represented the only original Christian view. And yet, as late as 450, Theodore of Cyrrhus said that there were at least 200 different gospels circulating in his own diocese. Even the Catholic Encyclopedia now admits that the "idea of a complete and clear-cut canon of the New Testament existing from the beginning... has no foundation in history." (Helen Ellerbe, The Dark Side of Christian History, p.16, pub. A.D.1995).
- "You know, it's very interesting to think of the history of Christianity. During the first five centuries, there were lots of Christianities, lots of ways of being Christian. And then, in the period of Theodosius in the fourth century, the only religion allowed in the Roman Empire was the Christian religion, and the only form of Christianity allowed in the Roman Empire was the Christianity of Byzantium's throne." (Joseph Campbell, The Power of Myth, p.248, pub. A.D.1988).
- "From the very first centuries, what was to become Christian orthodoxy vehemently suppressed those Christians of psychic, shamanic, or visionary temperament called the Gnostics. The authorities of the early institutional Church soon established a strict orthodoxy of doctrine against to which all contrary views were stigmatized as heretical. When in 313 the Emperor Constantine made Christianity the official state religion, attempting to syncretize it with various sun-god cults, Christianity was left to deal with the many cults that swarmed within the Roman Empire. The monotheistic zeal to convert and eradicate the diversity of polytheism gave the Church an authoritarian character that has plagued the West ever since with schisms, councils, inquisitions, and witch-hunts..." (Roger J, Woolger, Other Lives, Other Selves, p. 71, pub. A.D. 1987).
- "It may truly be said that the blackest and bloodiest records that history can show us are the attacks of the Orthodox Church upon the Gnostic mystics." (Frances Swiney, quoted by Lloyd M. Graham in Myths & Deceptions of the Bible, p.446, pub. A.D. 1991).
- "The persecuted primitive Church of the second century was to become in the fourth century itself the persecutor, and whereas in the earlier period Gnostics had been able to engage in theological dispute with the orthodox, later they were sought out, excommunicated, and sometimes burnt alive for their heresy." (Stuart Holroyd, The Elements of Gnosticism, p.22, pub. A.D. 1994).
- "... Christians burned down one of the world's greatest libraries in Alexandria, said to have housed 700,000 rolls. All the books of the Gnostic Basilides, Porphyry's 36 volumes, papyrus rolls of 27 schools of the Mysteries, and 270,000 ancient documents gathered by Ptolemy Philadelphus were burned. Ancient academies of learning were closed. Education for anyone outside of the Church came to an end..." (Helen Ellerbe, The Dark Side of Christian History, p. 46, pub. 1995).
- "When the great library at Alexandria was ransacked by Christian fanatics in 387... an inestimable wealth of gnostic literature must have been destroyed. Until the nineteenth century the main source of knowledge of Gnosticism was, ironically, in the writings of the Church Fathers, who in their refutations summarized gnostic texts and often quoted at length from them. In the nineteenth and present centuries a number of original gnostic texts came to light, the most sensational find being an entire library of fifty-two texts discovered at Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt in 1946. These, scholars later ascertained, had belonged to an ascetic Christian community which, fearing discovery by the ecclesiastical authorities and the consequences of being charged with heresy, had sealed up their forbidden library in a large jar and buried it in the sand beneath a cliff near their monastery in about the year 360." (Stuart Holroyd, The Elements of Gnosticism).

Freke and Gandy in their Jesus and The Lost Goddess states that "Rome did not stop until they had cut the head off Western culture, leaving it to wander like an amnesiac in an ignorant stupor. They did not stop until they had cut the heart out of Western spirituality, bleeding it dry of its mystical vitality. The corpse of a religion which remained offered nothing but hope of a better afterlife in return for blind belief in its irrational opinions and unquestioning allegiance to power-crazed popes. This tyrannical empire of the soul extended the arm of the state right into the inner sanctum of every individual, denying the right to spiritual autonomy and compelling all to acquiesce or burn. Yet despite this ruthless persecution, Gnosticism survived. It can be suppressed but never eradicated. It is the spontaneous expression of the natural inquisitiveness and enthusiastic exuberance of the human soul. It is the unquenchable thirst for truth and the undeniable urge to enjoy. It is the spirit of liberty, equality, love and insight. It is the force of life. It always reasserts itself" (T. Freke, and P Gandy, Jesus and The Lost Goddess, 2001, p. 45-46).

THE TRIUMPH OF LITERAL CHRISTIANITY OVER ALLEGORICAL CHRISTIANITY #4

Most Christians today believe that the gospels of the New Testament present an essentially accurate account of the life of a "historical" Jesus Christ, the 'only-begotten Son of God', who was born of a virgin, wandered Galilee as a preacher and miracle-worker at the start of the 1st century, died on a cross to redeem the sins of mankind, and then rose from the dead three days later and ascended into heaven. However, as proven on several of our other websites revealing the falsification of the New Testament (that the depiction of the Jesus as found in the New Testament is founded upon a literal interpretation of Sun Worship as well as the purposeful mistranslation and misquotation of the Hebrew Scriptures in presenting a false Jewish Messiah) along with presenting the evidences revealing how the four gospels contain such glaring inconsistencies and contradictions that they are clearly not reliable historical reports. So if they are the 'word of God', then God must be terribly confused! I cannot be a perfect absolute Entity such as our Creator cannot get the story straight; we need to look to mankind and especially men with agendas for such a work. Let us take a serious tour of the New Testament and the "Chrsit story" for a moment; one which we should all be familiar by now.

The Gospels of Matthew and Luke go to great lengths to show that Jesus is descended from the line of David, as the promised messiah must be according to Jewish beliefs. But apart from agreeing that Jesus was fathered by Joseph, the two genealogies bear no resemblance to each other at all; Matthew lists 28 generations and Luke 43. Furthermore, their relevance is unclear since the authors of the two gospels also say that Jesus was born of a virgin who was impregnated by the Holy Spirit. The virgin birth narrative, as applied to Jesus, is not new and the teaching of a virgin birth was given to many men down through history in order to set them apart from mortals due to the extinguishing achievements accomplished in their life as well as giving them after their death a bigger legacy than already acheieved. The virgin birth teaching is a hoax as any serious study reveals and finds it origin in personified Sun Worship and not Judaism or Jewish Messianism. It is important to note that what we believe to be the earliest Gospel of Mark which provided the foundation for the other writers of the Gospels fails to mention the virgin birth. Not only that but Paul is completely silent upon any possible virgin birth for his Jesus Christ and we don't find any mention of the virgin birth in any New Testament writings until after Irenaeus after 180 C.E. when we find the Roman refutation of the Gnostic's First New Testament given to us by Marcion. And lastly we again find no virgin birth teachings included in the Gnostic gospel of John. This is all the more surprising that we find no mention of Jesus' family descent or the virgin birth in the earliest writings which framed the first New Testament (Pauline literature, and earliest Gospel of Mark which according to the Synoptic Problem and its solution provided the framework and the text for the writing of the later Gospels which would come much later).

The Holy Spirit was traditionally regarded as feminine. Hence the wry comment made in the apocryphal Gospel of Philip (25): 'Some said "Mary conceived by the holy spirit." They are in error. . . . When did a woman ever conceive by a woman?'

The writer of the Gospel of Matthew tells us that Jesus was born during the reign of King Herod, who died in 4 BCE (before common era). But the writer of the Gospel of Luke states that Jesus was about 30 in the 15th year of Tiberius' reign, implying that he was born in 2 BCE, i.e. after Herod's death. This writer of the Gospel of Luke is mistaken on several things as we see when he then contradicts himself by stating that John the Baptist and Jesus were miraculously conceived six months apart in the reign of Herod, but that Jesus was born at the time of the census of Quirinius, which took place in 6 CE (common era), thereby creating the miracle of a ten-year pregnancy!

Answer for yourself: How can this be? Are we finding such conflicts because people cannot remember or because the Holy Spirit fogot to sort it out or is it possible that these writers are crafting a "historical Jesus" out of thin air and ascribing to him literal events which never happened in their refutation of the prior Gnostic New Testament that taught only an allegorical Christ?

The Gospels of Mark (the earliest Gospel used to frame the others according to the solution of the Synoptic Problem) and John do not contain any nativity story, while the nativity stories given by Matthew and Luke have nothing in common except the names of Jesus' parents and the location of his birth in Bethlehem.

Answer for yourseld: Are you aware that the First New Testament given to us by the Gnostic Marcion contained no nativity stories nor did it contain any virgin birth materails?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that these "natavity stories" are taken right from Sun Worship and the personification of Sun Worship and were never literal events in the life of the New Testament Jesus?

John however says that Jesus is from Galilee and that the Jews rejected him because he was not from Bethlehem. Only Matthew mentions the guiding star, the three wise men and Herod's murder of all the infant boys in Bethlehem, while only Luke mentions the Roman census, the appearance of angels to the shepherds tending their flocks (in the winter?!) and the shepherds' visit to Jesus.

Matthew says that Joseph and Mary lived in Bethlehem, while Luke says that they lived in Nazareth. Matthew says that they fled to Egypt immediately after Jesus' birth and then went to Nazareth when Herod died, while Luke says they remained in Bethlehem following Jesus' birth so that he could be presented in the temple of Jerusalem eight days later. Only Luke mentions Jesus' amazing exhibition of learning in the temple at the age of 12.

The scene where Jesus drives the traders and moneychangers out of the temple is placed at the beginning of John's narrative but at the end of Matthew's. Mark has Jesus teaching only in the area of Galilee and not in Judea, and only travelling the 70 miles to Jerusalem once, at the end of his life. Luke, however, portrays Jesus as teaching equally in Galilee and Judea, while John's Jesus preaches mainly in Jerusalem and makes only occasional visits to Galilee. There are major discrepancies regarding the names of the disciples. According to Mark, Matthew and Luke (the synoptic gospels), Peter, James and John are Jesus' closest followers. In John's gospel, however, Peter plays only a minor role and James and John are not even mentioned, but there is mention of Nathenael and Nicodemus, who make no appearance in the other three gospels.

Even the events surrounding the all-important crucifixion are not uniformly recorded by the gospels. Matthew and Mark say that Jesus was both tried and sentenced by the Jewish priests of the Sanhedrin, Luke says that Jesus was tried by the Sanhedrin but not sentenced by them, while according to John, Jesus did not appear before the Sanhedrin at all. Jesus then goes to his death by crucifixion -- yet Paul and Peter say he was 'hanged on a tree' (Galatians 3:13, Acts 5:30, 10:39). John places Jesus' death on the eve of the Passover, whereas the other gospels place it on the following day. The story of a centurion piercing Jesus' side with a spear is found only in John's Gospel. The gospels give three versions of Jesus' last words: 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?'* (Matthew and Mark); 'Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit!' (Luke); and 'I thirst. . . . It is finished' (John).

- This is a mistranslation of the Hebrew. It should read: 'My God, my God, how thou dost glorify me!' [1]

In John's Gospel there is only one woman visitor to Jesus' tomb, in Matthew there are two, and in Mark three, while Luke writes of numerous women had who had followed Jesus from Galilee. According to Mark, when the three women disciples found the empty tomb they saw a young man in a white robe inside, while Luke relates that 'two men in dazzling apparel' suddenly appeared. Matthew, however, paints a far more dramatic picture:

> And behold, there was a great earthquake; for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven and came and rolled back the stone, and sat upon it. His appearance was like lightning, his raiment white as snow. (28:2)

In Matthew the resurrected Jesus appears to his disciples in Galilee, where they have been sent by divine decree. According to Luke and the Acts of the Apostles, on the other hand, the risen Jesus appeared in and around Jerusalem, and according to Acts the disciples were expressly forbidden to leave Jerusalem. The earliest versions of Mark's Gospel end with the fear of the women at their discovery of the empty tomb (16:8). The 'long ending' in which the risen Jesus appears to his disciples, was added later but is now included in nearly all editions of the New Testament. The last chapter of John's Gospel, containing Jesus' post-resurrection appearances, is also a later addition. Luke's Gospel is the only one to include an appearance in Jerusalem in which Jesus convinces his disciples that he is not a mere phantom by inviting them to handle his flesh and bones and by eating a piece of broiled fish!

Matthew and John ignore the ascension of Jesus. Luke mentions it only in one brief verse, a sort of postscript not found in some manuscripts, and it receives an equally cursory mention in the verses later added to Mark's Gospel. Luke places the ascension on the day of the resurrection, and Acts 40 days after (1:3). During his ministry, Jesus repeatedly predicts that the apocalyptic Last Judgement will occur within the lifetime of some of his contemporaries, but nearly 2000 years later the Second Coming has still not occurred, though some fundamentalists continue to proclaim -- rather optimistically -- that 'the end is nigh'!

THE GNOSTIC LEGACY AND ITS PHASES

It would be interesting to give an exposition of the Gnosticism that for some of the earlier centuries agitated the Christian Church; it will suffice for my purpose here to say that its manifold phases were attempts to reach satisfactory conclusions on the great subjects of man's relations to his Maker, to his fellow-men, to himself, and to the universe--to solve the problems of time and eternity. The Gnostic philosophers in the church show the results of blending the Oriental, the Jewish, and the Platonic philosophies with the new religion. "Gnosticism, was a philosophy of religion," and Christian Gnosticism was an effort to explain the new revelation philosophically (Baur, Ch. Hist. First Three Cent., I, pp. 184-200, Baring Gould's Lost and Hostile Gospels, p. 278). But there were Gnostics and Gnostics. Some of the Christian Fathers used the term reproachfully, and others appropriated it as one of honor. Gnosis, knowledge, philosophy applied to religion, was deemed all-important by Clement, Origen, and the most prominent of the Fathers. Mere Gnostics were only Pagan philosophers, but Christian Gnostics were those who accepted the revelation of "the Christ"as a new and divine revelation, and interpreted it by those principles that had long predated the religion of the Jews. The Gnostics were the first regular commentators on the New Testament. The Gnostics were also the first practitioners of the higher criticism. It (Gnosticism) may be regarded as a half-way house, though which many Pagans, like Ambrosius or St. Augustine, found their way into the church." The Valentinians, Basilidians, Carpocratians, Manichæans, Marcionites and others were Christian Gnostics; but Clement, Origen and the great Alexandrians and their associates were Gnostic Christians. In fact, the Gnostic theories sought a solution of the problem of evil; to answer the question, "Can the world as we know it have been made by God?" "Cease," says Basilides (Stieren's Irenæus V, 901-3. Clem. Strom. IV, 12), "from idle and curious variety, and let us rather discuss the opinions which even barbarians have held on the subject of good and evil. I will say anything rather than admit Providence is wicked."Valentinus declared, "I dare not affirm that God is the author of all this." Tertullian says that Marcion, like many men of our time, and especially the heretics,

"is bewildered by the question of evil." The generally accepted Gnostic view was that while the good would at death ascend to dwell with the Father, the wicked would pass through transformations until purified. Says Prof. Allen: "Gnosticism is a genuine and legitimate outgrowth of the same general movement of thought that shaped the Christian dogma. Quite evidently it regarded itself as the true interpreter of the Gospel." Baur quotes a German writer as giving a full exposition of one of the latest attempts "to bring back Gnosticism to a greater harmony with the spirit of Christianity." Briefly, sophia (wisdom), as the type of mankind, falls, rises, and is united to the eternal Good. Baur says that Gnosticism declares that "either through conversion and amendment, or through utter annihilation, evil is to disappear, and the final goal of the whole world process is to be reached, viz., the purification of the universe from all that is unworthy and perverted." Harnack says that Gnosticism "aimed at the winning of a world-religion. The Gnostics were the theologians of the First Century; they were the first to transform Christianity into a system of doctrines (dogmas). They essayed to conquer Christianity for Hellenic culture and Hellenic culture from Christianity (Outlines of the Hist. of Dogma, pp. 58,9).

Differing from the so-called "orthodox" Christians on many points, the three great Gnostic sects of the Second Century were in full agreement with Clement and Origen and the Alexandrine school, and probably with the great majority of Christians, in their views on human destiny (the Basilidians, the Carpocratians, the Valentinians). They taught the ultimate holiness and happiness of the human family, and it is noteworthy that though all the Gnostics advocated the final salvation of all souls, and though the orthodox fathers savagely attacked them on many points, they never reckoned their Universalism as a fault. This doctrine was not obnoxious to either orthodox or heterodox in the early centuries.

But by the fourth century the Roman Church in the West had condemned anything Gnostic as heresy but in the Eastern Church, based in Constantinople, the original Christian spirit survived a little longer. Sages such as Basil of Caesarea, Gregory of Nyssa, Gregory of Nazianzum, Evagrius of Pontus and Diodochus of Photice continued to teach the oral tradition of "private secret teachings" to those initiated into the Inner Mysteries of Christianity."

Lets look at one example. Basil of Caesarea, On the Holy Spirit, 28.66, states: "...which our holy fathers have preserved in a silence ... to safeguard the sacred character of the Mystery. The uninitiated are not permitted to behold these things, their meaning is not to be divulged by writing it down". These sentiments can be exactly paralleled by Pagans writing about their Mysteries. These Christian mystics and Christian Gnostics understood the Bible allegorically, explaining that, ultimately, the secrets of the scriptures can only be revealed "thanks to the Gnosis". They emphasized devotion to Mary as the manifestation of Sophia and taught that the goal of Christianity was "to become God" (Selecta in Psalmos, op. cit.). Devotion to Mary found its supreme expression in the Byzantine liturgy. Eastern Mariology was to exert a decisive influence on the West in the medieval period (J. Pelikan, Mary through the Centuries: Her Place in the History of Culture, 1996), p. 105) . It is also significant that the great basilica built in the new Christian city of Constantinople was named "Hagia Sophia"'. Like Aristotle, who noted that initiates attend the Mysteries not to learn something, mathein, but to experience something, pathein, so Basil of Caesarea distinguished between the public teaching of the Church and the deeper meaning of biblical truth which could only be apprehended through religious experience and expressed in symbolical form. (K. Armstrong, op. cit., 133-4).

All the great themes of mysticism elaborated by Origen were continued in the work of the Cappadocians, Basil (329-379), his brother Gregory (335-95) and Gregory of Nazianzum (329-91). Gregory of Nyssa coined the paradoxical phrase "dazzling darkness" for God, writing that every concept of God becomes a false idol which cannot reveal God himself (Gregory of Nyssa, Against Eunomius, 3). Basil of Caesarea made the same distinction as Philo between God's essence, ousia, and his activity, energias, in the world. "We know our God only by his energias but we do not undertake to approach his ousia" (Basil, Epistle, 234.1.) As Armstong notes, this would be the keynote of all future theology in the Eastern Church (K. Armstrong, A History of God, 1993, p. 135). Evagrius (d. 399) and Diodochus (early fifth century) were both Eastern "Hesychast" mystics whose writings continued the Gnostic tradition of Clement and Origen. Just as Clement called the Christian "the true Gnostic" (Clement, Strom., 7.1), Evagrius writes that the secrets of the scriptures can only be revealed "thanks to the Gnosis" (Selecta in Psalmos commentary on verse 16, Psalm 138). More categorically, he asserts: "It is Gnosis that heals the mind" (L. Bouyer, The Christian Mystery: From Pagan Myth to Christian Mysticism, 1990, p.219).

In the West, the spirit of Christian Gnosticism was smuggled back into the mainstream Church via mystical writings attributed to Dionysius, a co-worker of Paul (Acts 17:34).

Acts 17:34 34 Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them. (KJV)

Today these treatises are generally thought to be the work of an unidentified sixth-century monk who deliberately took the pseudonym "Dionysius" to claim authority for what would otherwise be condemned as heretical works. The writer is thought to have been a pupil of the Pagan Gnostic Proclus, the last master of the Platonic Academy, which the Christian emperor Justinian had forcibly closed down in 529, ending a prestigious 1,000-year history. However, in the light of the fact that the Gnostics were the first Christians, it is possible that this view will come to be seen as mistaken and that these texts are at least based on the works of a first-century Gnostic master, as they claim to be.

It is important to again not that this Dionysius is unconcerned with an historical Jesus. His Jesus is a symbolic representation of the Logos. Adolf von Harnack wrote that for Dionysius "the historical Christ is a symbol of the universal purifying and sanctifying activity of the Logos and little more" (quoted in Pseudo-Dionysius (1987), 20). According to Dionysius, there are two Christian gospels, the familiar teachings of the Church and a secret gospel, which is "symbolic and presupposes initiation" and "must never be divulged to the uninitiated" (Dionysius, The Divine Names, 1.597c. 296.58).

Answer for yourself: What could be so damaging that it was never to be divulged to anyone other than "initiates"? The fact that there is no historical Christ Jesus.

There is a useful resume of this in K. Armstrong, op. cit., p. 147. He eulogizes the wonders of the "divine enlightenment into which we have been initiated by the secret tradition of our inspired teachers" (Ibid., 1.592b, 296.52). The narratives and symbols of Christianity have one meaning to the uninitiated and another to the initiated:

"Don't suppose that the outward form of these contrived symbols exists for its own sake. It is a protective clothing, which prevents the common multitude from understanding the Ineffable and Invisible. Only real lovers of holiness know how to stop the workings of the childish imagination regarding the sacred symbols. They alone have the simplicity of mind and the receptive power of contemplation to cross over to the simple, marvellous, transcendent Truth the symbols represent."
(Dionysius, The Letters, l,105e-d).

These writings were extremely influential. No other works were so frequently translated or had so many commentaries written on them, apart from the Bible and The Consolations of Philosophy by Boethius, which was another text through which the spirit of Gnosticism survived in the Dark Ages of Literalism. (Pseudo-Dionysius, op. cit., 33ff). Both Alfred the Great and Queen Elizabeth I made translations of it. Chaucer and Sir Thomas More wrote imitations of it. Its influence is to be found in the oldest English poetry of pre-Conquest times and is marked in Chaucer, Gower, Spenser and many other later poets. In Italy, Dante makes Thomas Aquinas point out the spirit of Boethius in Paradise. Dante's Divine Comedy is in fact a great elaboration of the Neoplatonic concept of the ascent of the soul to God, ending with a reference to Boethius' "the love that moves the sun and other stars" (Paradiso). Condemned for heresy by the Christian emperor Theodoric, Boethius describes languishing in prison, where he is visited by Sophia herself, who instructs him in philosophy. Despite his vision of the Goddess and never mentioning Jesus once, due to the immense popularity of his writings Boethius was later claimed by Christian Literalists as one of their own. As Watts observes, "Was Boethius a Christian, and if so why does the Consolation lack all reference to the faith that should have been his greatest consolation in the hours of imprisonment and pending death?" (V.E. Watts, intro, to Boethius, The Consolation of Philosophy, p. 14). As for the man himself, Theodoric had him tortured and then bludgeoned to death for heresy.

Despite the Literalist Church's unrelenting attempts at suppression, some "heretical" schools of Christian Gnosticism continued to teach. Paulicians survived into the tenth century, Manicheans into the thirteenth and Simonians into the fourteenth (K. Rudolph, Gnosis: The Nature and History of Gnosticism, 1987, p. 374; Y. Stoyanov, The Other God: Dualist Religions From Antiquity to the Cathar Heresy, 2000, p. 39). As Toynbee writes, "The substantial identity of the Paulician, the Bogomil and the Cathar faith is not in doubt. The common features are too similar and too numerous to be explained away as fortuitous, and it is clear that we are in the presence of a single religion masquerading under different names in different places" (A. Toynbee, A Study Of History, 1939, p. 624). In the Balkans, from the tenth to fifteenth centuries the Paulicians flourished as "Bogomils", meaning "Friends of God" - the traditional name for Gnostics first used by the Pythagoreans. The Paulicians praised Paul as ?the Apostle', professed a Docetic Christianity and worshipped Mary not as the mother of Christ but as the Heavenly Jerusalem (Stoyanov, op. cit., 105). The Bogomils are thought to have arisen from a sect of Paulicians from Asia Minor who in c. 872 were compulsorily settled in Macedonia. Despite intense persecution, the Bogomils retained a powerbase in Serbia and Bosnia until the fifteenth century (Rudolph, op. cit., p. 375). The Bogomils even had their own Gnostic Pope. At the anti-Bogomil council of 1211 they were accused of performing "unholy mysteries like the Hellenic Pagan rites (Patriarch Germanus (1220-40) warned the citizens of Constantinople against the "dark mysteries" of the "satanic Bogomil heresy" (ibid., p. 184).

In the twelfth century the Bogomils developed into the Cathars or "Purified Ones" (The word "Cathar" derives from the Greek for "purity". As a synonym for initiates it can be traced back to the Orphic Gold Leaves c.400 BCE, where souls who are absolutely pure, katharai, are said to escape reincarnation and go directly to the fields of Persephone to become gods. (Gold Leaves, A2-3, lines 6-7). The Manichaeans also called themselves "The Pure Ones" (Y. Stoyanov, op. cit., p. 116). The earliest certain indication of medieval Cathars is the disclosure in 1143 of a heretical community in Cologne. The Cologne sectarians claimed that they had numerous adherents "throughout the world, particularly among the clergy and the monks' and that their religion had persisted in secrecy "from the time of the marty" (Y. Stoyanov, op. cit., 1994, p. 155-6). Catharism was for many years the prevalent form of Christianity in large areas of France, Spain and Italy. Bogomil ideas had penetrated into Italy and France by the middle of the eleventh century (Y. Stoyanov, op. cit., 1994, p. 193). Between 1150 and 1300 Catharism was the dominant religion of southern France and northern Italy (where Cathars were known as Patarenes).The Cathars called themselves "the Friends of God" and condemned the Literalist Church as the Church of the Anti-Christ. In the Platonic tradition, "Friends of God' became a synonym for initiates (Plato, Timaeus, 24, and Plotinus, Enn., 2.9.9). Theo of Smyrna (Mathematica, 18) declared "friendship with divinity" as the highest level of initiation. The Cynic Crates stated: "For everything belongs to God, friends have everything in common, and the wise are friends of God" (R. M. Price, Deconstructing Jesus, 2000, p. 152).

Exodus 33:11: "And the LORD spake unto Moses (Pharaoh of Egypt) face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend"

They claimed to be the living inheritors of the true Christian heritage that had persisted in secret and which still had large numbers of adherents "throughout the world" (Stoyanov, op. cit., 1994, p. 155-6).

Like the original Christians, the Cathars were vegetarians, believed in reincarnation and considered the Old Testament god Jehovah to be a tyrant. Like Simon and Marcion they considered the God of Jesus and the New Testament to be benevolent but the Old Testament God to be a tyrant. Pistis Sophia, an early Christian gospel, explains that Christ taught "through the mouth of our brother Paul" (G.R.S. Mead, Fragments of a Faith Forgotten, 1906, p. 499). The Cathars maintained this tradition, claiming that Jesus was "not ever in this world except spiritually in the body of Paul" (Raynaldus, Annales, in S.R. Maitland, 1832, p. 392-394).

The Cathars were respected for their goodness, even by their opponents. The Catholic Bernard of Clairveaux writes:

"If you interrogate them, no one could be more Christian. As to their conversation, nothing can be less reprehensible, and what they speak they prove by deeds. As for the morals of the heretics, they cheat no one, they oppress no one, they strike no one." (H.E. Ellerbe, The Dark Side of Christian History, 1995, 72-).

Despite this, the infamous Inquisition was set up by the Literalist Church specifically to eradicate the Cathars, which it did with ferocious enthusiasm, burning alive men, women and children. From 1139 onwards the Roman Church began calling councils to condemn the heretics. Pope Innocent III declared that "anyone who attempted to construe a personal view of God which conflicted with Church dogma must be burned without pity" (Ibid.). In 1208 he offered indulgences and eternal salvation, as well as the lands and property taken from the heretics, to anyone who would take up the crusade against the Cathars. This launched a brutal 30-year pogrom which decimated southern France. Twelve thousand people were killed at St Nazair and 10,000 at Toulouse, to give just two examples.

The inquisitor Bernard Gui instructed that no one should argue with the unbeliever, but "thrust his sword into the man's belly as far as it will go" (Ibid.). At Béziers, when asked how to tell who was a Cathar and who was not, the commanding legate, Arnoud, replied, "Kill them all, for God will know his own." Not a child was spared. The destruction of the Gnostic Cathars culminated on 16 March 1244 when 200 Cathar "Perfects' were burned to death in the fall of Montségur, the last stronghold of Catharism. Gerald Durell famously called this the "Thermopylae of the Gnostic soul". In 1325 Pope John XXII observed that many Cathars were fleeing to Bosnia, where the Bogomils were still thriving, as if to the "Promised Land". In a grotesque prefiguring of the Nazi terror, Cathars who converted to Catholicism were obliged to wear a yellow cross sewn on their clothes and lost all civil rights, and in eastern Europe the Inquisition used ovens to burn heretics, who were rubbed with grease and roasted alive. If ever proof were needed that the Gnostics were justified in calling Roman Catholicism the Church of the Anti-Christ, here it is. '

Yet despite the persecutions, the Gnostic free spirit could not be extinguished. It inspired the great German master Eckhart, who wrote about Sophia and taught that at the heart of Christianity, Judaism and Paganism there were the same mystical doctrines (Meister Eckhart, Selected Writings, Penguin, 1994, xxii). Eckhart (1260-1327) called Plato "the great priest" and his inspiration came from the Neoplatonism of Erigena and Dionysius. In 1329 a Papal Bull condemned his writings, but Eckhart had the good sense to die two years earlier. It inspired the Rhineland mystics Tauler, Suso and Ruysbroek, who also called themselves the "Friends of God". It inspired countless groups of non-conformists, such as the Brothers and Sisters of the Free Spirit in Europe, who taught: "The gospel contains poetical matters which are not true." In England it inspired the Levellers, Ranters, Diggers and Quakers.

The Gnostic free sprit also inspired many of the great cultural heroes of the West - Dante, Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo, Pico and most of the great minds of the Renaissance, who set up a new Platonic Academy; the Protestant Gnostic Jacob Boehme, who received visions of Sophia; poets such as Blake, Milton and Goethe, who created their own Gnostic myths;~ scientists such as Galileo, Copernicus and Kepler, who revived Pythagoreanism; philosophers such as Descartes, Fichte, Schelling and Hegel, who was accused of being a Valentinian Gnostic.

Christian Gnosticism was reinterpreted for the twentieth century by Carl Jung, who along with Sigmund Freud founded psychoanalysis. Jung wrote to Freud that the Gnostics' Sophia was "a re-embodiment of an ancient wisdom that might appear once again in modern psychoanalysis". He asserted, "It is clear beyond doubt that many of the Gnostics were nothing other than psychologists," and began to view mental illness as a failed initiation. He wrote:

All my life I have been working and studying to find these things, and these people knew already.

In his forties, using as a pseudonym the name of the second-century Christian Gnostic Basilides, Jung wrote his own Gnostic scripture called Seven Sermons to the Dead. This remarkable text is addressed to the disquieted dead, who have been failed by Christian Literalism and who appear to Jung, wailing, "We have come back from Jerusalem where we have found not what we sought." Jung regarded this work as the wellspring of all his later insights, but although he circulated it amongst his friends, he prohibited its publication until after his death, fearing it would discredit him in the eyes of the scientific establishment.

When the Nag Hammadi library of Christian Gnostic texts was discovered in 1945, Jung's foundation bought one of the collections, now known as the Jung Codex. When translated, these works proved that many of his intuitions about Christian Gnosticism had been remarkably correct. Towards the end of his life he appeared on a television chat show, in which he famously replied to the question of whether he believed in God with the perennial Gnostic assertion: "I know that God exists. I don't need to believe, I know."

The triumph of Christian Literalism was a spiritual and cultural disaster from which we are still recovering. After the civilized exterior of "Christian culture in Germany had been ripped open in the twentieth century by Hitler's Nazis, Jung wrote:

"Christian civilization proved hollow to a terrifying degree: it is all veneer, but the inner man has remained untouched and therefore unchanged. Yes, everything is to be found outside - in image and in word, in Church and Bible - but never inside."

When Literalist Christianity exiled the Gnostic Inner Mysteries, it lost its soul. It became a bastion of the "hypocrites" which the Gnostics portrayed Jesus as mocking in their gospel story - ecclesiastical autocrats who imposed their dogmas with threats and maintained their power through violence, politicians dressed up as priests who justified the laying waste of whole continents and the enslaving of millions.

Literalist Christianity is often credited with inspiring positive social reforms in Western society. But the truth is that the driving impetus for humanitarian change has come from humanists and non-conformists. The conservative forces of the established Churches have resisted every step towards greater compassion, from the ending of slavery to the abolition of the death penalty. In recent decades, unable any longer to simply bully us into submission, Literalist Christianity has developed a gentler, more attractive face. Yet its darker side continues to be a nefarious force in the world. A recent report estimated there are at least 8,000 "missionaries" active in Guatemala alone, many of whom openly collaborate with the brutal secret police and the military in their oppression of the indigenous people. Typifying the spirit of Christian Literalism throughout the ages, one preacher from the missionary group El Verbo justified this with:

"The army does not massacre Indians. It massacres demons and the Indians are possessed by demons."

In many European countries, however, the power of Literalist Christianity is finally waning. Congregations are dwindling dramatically and churches are being sold off as houses. Science is fast becoming the dominant worldview. This has provoked two very different reactions from those unwilling to consign Christianity to the rubbish bin of history -"Fundamentalists" are desperately endeavouring to retreat to the old certainties, whilst others are attempting to rework the figure of Jesus to fit new times. (T. Freke and P. Gandy, Jesus and the Lost Goddess, 2001, p. 46-50).

This proliferation of Jesuses is not a new situation. According to the Literalist Hippolytus, all Gnostics had "their own particular Jesus". Now all these heresies have their own peculiar Jesus; but he is seen differently according as the place is different towards which, he says, each soul is borne and hastens (Hippolytus, Ref., 8.3). But this was not a cause of conflict and controversy because, for the Gnostics, Jesus was a mythological figure who appeared in the imagination in a form appropriate to the individual, according to their level of spiritual awareness. There is a useful discussion of Docetism (the Gnostic doctrine of Jesus as a symbolic visionary figure) and its relevance "to the contemporary discussion of the historical Jesus" in Price, op. cit., 16ff. The Gospel of Philip explains:

"Jesus does not show himself as he really is, but he shows himself as people are able to see him. He shows himself to all. To the great he appears great. To the small he appears small. To the angels he appears as an angel, and to men as a man. Hence the Logos conceals itself from all. Some indeed see him and realize that they are seeing themselves"(The Gospel of Philip,* NHC, 2.3.58).

In The Acts of John, John and his brother James see Jesus beckoning to them, but one sees a beautiful man and the other a little child. Later, for one of them the figure becomes "rather bald-headed but with a thick flowing beard" and for the other "a young man with an immature beard" (The Acts of John 88-9). In The Acts of Peter, Peter relates, "I saw him in such a form as I was able to take in." He teaches a group of widows how to see Jesus:

"See with your mind what you do not see with your eyes. And though your eyes be closed, yet let them open in your mind within you"* (The Acts of Peter 20-1).

The widows become "senseless with bewilderment" and all experience Jesus in a different way. Some say they saw "an old man who had such a presence we cannot describe it to you". Others say, "We saw a growing lad," and others, "We saw a boy who gently touched our eyes and they opened." Peter remarks:

"God is greater than our thoughts, as we have learned from these aged widows who have seen the Lord in a variety of forms."* (From The Acts of Peter, quoted in Merkur, op. cit., 130).

According to Theodotus, Paul recognized that "each one knows the Lord in his own way and not all know him alike". Paul himself famously experienced Jesus as a vision of light.'' In The Apocryphon of John, John also experiences Jesus as light, but in this case containing a metamorphosing image:

"I saw in the light a youth who stood by me. While I looked at him he became like an old man. And then he changed his appearance again and became like a servant. There were not many before me, but an image with many forms in the light. And the image appeared through each. And it took three forms. He said to me, ·John why do you doubt? Why are you afraid? You are not unfamiliar with this image, are you? Don't be nervous. I am the One who is with you always."

The Gnostics' doctrine that Jesus is a symbolic visionary figure is known as Docetism. It is misunderstood by Christian Literalists as the bizarre claim that Jesus was some sort of disembodied spook that miraculously appeared to be a man who lived the life described in the gospels. But this crazy idea is just the product of Literalists taking the Gnostics literally. Docetism actually teaches that Jesus is a mutable figure who represents the archetype of the Self and appears in different ways to initiates with different levels of understanding. As The Gospel of Philip says with startling clarity, some "realize that they are seeing themselves".

The problem is that at first when someone experiences a relationship with their particular version of Jesus they "recognize him as their brother and regard all the rest as bastards", as Hippolytus puts it. Their Jesus is the real Jesus, everyone else's is an impostor. But once the idea of an historical man is abandoned, competing Jesuses are not a problem. Everyone can look down the well and come up convinced that Jesus looks just like them, and that doesn't conflict with everyone else doing the same. We can all have a different Jesus. The whole point of a mythological figure is that it can be adapted to suit ifferent people and changing times.

What unites Fundamentalists and Fantasists is their obsession with the idea of an historical Jesus. I suggest a radical alternative: freeing ourselves from the futile preoccupation with history and returning to the original Christians' understanding of Jesus as the hero of a powerfully transformative allegorical myth.

We fully understand how difficult it is to doubt the existence of someone whom millions believe to be the most important human being ever to have lived. Many of us have been brought up since childhood with a vivid picture of the historical Jesus. Mention his name and we can almost see him in his rough white robes with long flowing hair and beard. Yet the earliest representations of Jesus actually portray him beardless, with short hair, wearing a Roman tunic. Paul explicitly writes that "Flowing locks disgrace a man," so presumably he did not share our modern image of the Christ!'46

The now ubiquitous image of the bearded long-haired Jesus did not become established until the eighth century, when the Eastern Chur ch in Constantinople suddenly produced a ?sell-portrait' which had been miraculously created when Jesus wiped his face on a cloth.'47 Not to be outdone, the Roman Church turned up a portrait of a bearded Jesus painted b y Luke and later completed by angels. Pilgrims still kne el before this absurd fabrication in the Vatican today, ho ping it will in some way bring them to the Truth. The tr uth is, however, that the picture we have of Jesus is a pr oduct of the imagination - our own and that of others be fore us.

Was there an ?historical' Jesus? The evidence suggests there was not. But to us this emotive issue is really not important. What is important is to realize that the Jesus we relate to in our imagination is a mythical ? archetype' through which we c an reach the ?Christ Consciousness' within ourselves, be cause if we are unable to get enough distance from our own fantasies and opinions to see that our picture of Jesus is an imaginative construct, we will never have the self-knowledge necessary to grasp the Gnosis. Howev er, we have to be spiritually ready before we can hear t his message as positive rather than negative, as giving u s what we have been really looking for rather than takin g something away. The teachings of ?the Christ within' a re an open secret that only someone who is ripe can rea lly hear.

Many people desperately want to believe in a miraculous saviour who has literally incarnated to rescue them. There is nothing wrong with this. The miracle worker is a stock character of ancient myths, used to inspire hope of something more than the mundane in those unable to see that the whole of life is a staggering miracle. The image of the divine Godman was deliberately designed to appeal to spiritual beginners who have yet to discover that this mythical fi gure represents their own true identity. Those who are not ready cling to their ?real' Jesus like a life-buoy in the tempestuous sea of existence. To suggest they let go sounds like madness. But the secret teachings of the original Christians were not designed to maliciously deny comfort to simple believers. They are actually offering something infinitely more reassuring than blind belief in historical events. They are offering Gnosis - immediate experiential knowledge of the Truth. The message is not ?Look out, you are clinging to an illusion.' The message is:

Relax. You are not drowning. You can let go, because life is actually completely safe. Just experience Gnosis and all your ignorance will be dispelled. Just know who you really are and you will have absolutely no fear ever again. Discover the Christ within yourself and you will be always One with God.'

Christian Literalism developed towards the end of the second century as a minor cult with the unique claim that Jesus had literally lived out the Pagan myth of the dying and resurrecting Godman. Literalists fabricated a lineage to link themselves back to the supposed disciples and forged letters of Paul to make him appear anti-Gnostic.

Mirroring the success of the Mysteries of the Persian Godman Mithras, Christian Literalism gradually grew in popularity, becoming the official religion of the Roman Empire in the fourth century. With the full might of the Roman state behind them, Christian Literalists waged a barbaric war against Paganism and Christian Gnosticism, pulling down temples and libraries, burning books and dissidents, and plunging Western civilization into the Dark Ages.

The legacy of Christian Literalism has been a misguided obsession with the historical Jesus. The original Christians, however, taught that Jesus is a mythological figure who appears in the imagination in different ways, according to the understanding of the individual.

If the Jesus story is an allegorical myth, what does it mean? If we have lost the secret Inner Mysteries of Christianity, can we rediscover them? By understanding Chrisianity as part of the broad Gnostic tradition that florished throughout the ancient world, we have been able to discover the true origins of Christianity. Let's now see if, by examining Christian myths and doctrines in the light of Pagan and Jewish Gnostic philosophy, we can recover the gospel of Gnosis. We can!

RESTORING THE "KEYS" TO PROPER BIBLICAL INTERPRETATION OF THE BIBLE & "THE CHRIST" #1

I must preface this article with the the most shocking statement. After consistent scholarly study for these past twenty years I can say, and the evidence backs me up, that almost no Christian I have ever met in the last twenty years knows accurately of what they read in the Bible. The reason for this is that they fail to posses the necessary "keys" for proper Biblical interpretation of the passages they read. This is all the more important considering the extent and influence of the Christian Bible and its "indoctrination".

Like millions of other Christians, I can't remember when I first laid eyes on the Bible. I do remember however that my name was written in the front of Dad's large print King James Version, and in Mom's family Bible. At our church, the pastor preached messages from the Bible, with lots of verses, and the Sunday School teachers used it every week in our lessons. We were expected to bring our Bibles to church, to learn Sword drills, to be able to read the King James Version, and to memorize scripture verses. Before we understood anything about the truths of this Bible, we were indoctrinated with the "literal-historical" understanding of what we read and this for me laid the foundation that "The Bible is the "Word of God" for me. I believe that is true today but I must quality that statement with reservations. If we lack the "keys" necessary to interpret correctly this Ancient Book, written in a different language, in a different Age, with multiple types and variety of literature within it, then have we really every heard the "real message" of this Book? I can remember my first questions about the Bible forming as a youth, sitting in the balcony during church, flipping through the pages and looking at the colored picture and occasionally reading whatever I found. I wondered what was this strange book from long, long ago with the odd print and self-pronouncing names. As I grew older I became interested in History and Archeology as a boy, and I began to wonder often wondered why the Bible was different from other ancient writings and why I was so lucky to "have the truth" when so many others did not and thereby by default became the object of our "missions" department. But you get the idea.

Well that was a long time ago and I since then I have had the privilege to go to Seminary and it was there that the good Baptist folks equipped me with the "tools" and the "desire" necessary to do Bible study like few other Christians can ever know or do. Unlike a lot of other graduates from Seminary I continued my studies along with my ministry and continue to do so today; never relenting for my quest for truth and this brings me to this website and the others provided by Bet Emet Ministries. For me, analytically minded like I am, too often in Seminary "things just did not add up correctly" and I had to know why! It would take years of serious investigative study "outside the box", so to speak, to find out why!

The word "method" comes from the Greek word "methodos", which literally means "a way or path of transit." Methodology in Bible study is therefore concerned with "the proper path to be taken in order to arrive at Scriptural truth."

Answer for yourself: What should that teach us?

This clearly implies that improper paths can be taken. Of course, proper methodology is essential to many fields of endeavor. One only has to look at the medical profession to get a grasp on the importance of "proper methodology" necessary to preserve and improve "physical life". I am here to tell you today that equally important is the "proper methodology" to preserve, sustain, and improve one's "Spiritual life" as well. Improper methodology in interpreting Scripture is nothing new.

There are three good reasons why we have difficulty understanding the biblical text:

- We are separated from the historical events written about in the Bible by many thousands of years of history.
- We live in a dramatically different culture,
- The biblical texts were written in foreign languages

These obstacles to understanding can be daunting to those who want quick and easy comprehension of the Bible. Honesty it takes years of hard-nosed study to obtain the necessary "keys" to proper interpretation of the Bible. I found that to be true by my own exhaustive study of this Book over the last 16 plus years. Sadly few people will ever take the time and put forth the effort to uncover what the Biblical writer's original intent might have been and what lies behind the surface of the passages we read in our Bibles. Our goal should be to exegete, or draw meaning from the Scriptures, and to understand the passages we read exactly like the original writer so did when these verses were penned rather than to impose meaning or our "indoctrination" onto them.

Unknown to almost all Christians, and to me before Seminary, is the fact that prior to the Protestant Reformation in the 1500's, biblical interpretation, as well as the interpretation of Ancient Spiritual writings around the world since the beginning of recorded time, was dominated by the allegorical method of interpretation. This is very, very, very important to understand since it can be shown today that the "Jesus Story" is parallel in the majority of its "events" and "sayings" to these Ancient writings that have come down to us through the corridors of history from a host of different nations. One only has to look at Comparative religions and do some cursory study to see this fact for themselves. Our recommended book list gives the reader such sources for his own individual study in these areas. Looking back to Augustine, the medieval Catholic Church believed that every biblical passage contained four levels of meaning. These four levels were:

- The literal,
- The allegorical,
- The moral, and
- The eschatological.

Answer for yourself: And where did the Church gather these 4 different levels of interpretation?

Form the Jews for Rabbis for countless centuries have taught this fourfold method of textual interpretation [hermeneutics] in Judaism long before the birth of Christianity. The four levels of interpretation are:

- Peshat: The literal meaning;
- Remez: The allegorical meaning;
- Drash: Moral or homiletic meaning;
- Sod: Mystical or spiritual meaning.

By the time of the reformation, knowledge of the Bible was scarce. However, with a new emphasis on the original languages of Hebrew and Greek, the fourfold method of interpretation was beginning to fade and influential Christians like Martin Luther argued for the rejection of the allegorical method of interpreting Scripture. Luther argued that a proper understanding of what a passage teaches comes from a literal interpretation "only" and not the allegorical understanding of the text. This means that the reader must consider the historical context and the grammatical structure of each passage, and strive to maintain contextual consistency. This method was a result of Luther's belief that the Scriptures are clear, in opposition to the medieval church's position that they are so obscure that only the church can uncover their true meaning. Calvin agreed in principle with Luther. He also placed great importance on the notion that "Scripture interprets Scripture," stressing that the grammar, context, words, and parallel passages found in the text were more important that any meaning we might impose on them. What I want you to notice is that further from the Ancient sources of religious literature Christianity moves further away from the "allegorical" interpretation of religious texts to the "literal-historical" interpretation of religious texts where often we find "new" imposed meanings attached to these spiritual texts which were never there in Ancient times.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important to know? Simply because many of the major religious tenets handed down through history by the Ancients, many of which continue to be found today in Judaism and Christianity, like "the Christ" for example, are changed and reinterpreted in later historical ages by succeeding conquering nations, like Rome, and in so doing the "truth" concerning, for example, this "Christ", is lost or hidden behind a false "literal-historical" hermeneutic. In other words, the "interpretation" of many of these religious doctrines revealed to the Ancients by the Creator as found in their Ancient scriptures and Sacred Books, their "Bibles", can be found to be "changed" over time down through history. That is why the study of various religious disciplines like Comparative religion and Gnosticism is so critically important as they reveal to us how mankind understood the Creator and His message to all of mankind for thousands of years before the rise of the "Holy Roman Empire".

Answer for yourself: What should that say to us? It should tell us that today it is quite possible that we do not have the accurate understanding of many "religious doctrines" which we have been taught to cherish in our lives. This to me is important for I want to know and understand and "believe" in such Divine Concepts correctly for failure to do so only muddles my understanding and perception of God and His message to me.

Answer for yourself: How many "religious dogmas" and "doctrines" in the Roman Christian Bible have been altered down through the Middle Ages by the Roman Church and when did this adulteration begin? Well there are many and it all began around the 3rd century. But important for us in this article is not just "when" but "which ones" of these Divine Concepts have lost their original purport when handed down to us by Roman Christianity!

The Christian Bible, like other "Spiritual Books" in other parts of the world, presents to the thoughtful mind one of the most astounding phenomena encountered in modern life.

Answer for yourself: And what would that be? It would be the power of "indoctrination". Again I hope you see the seriousness of this in light of the "possible" adulteration of Spiritual Truth as handed down to us by Rome today. One only has to look at the Doctrine of the Messiah as taught by Judaism and Roman Christianity to grasp the importance of such differences and hopefully ask "why" since it was to the Jews this "Messiah" was promised and not to Rome.

The dominance of the Bible in the thoughts of Christians comes originally through childhood indoctrination. Many people born into a strongly religious family submit to that belief system throughout their lives; others, like myself get lucky and begin to study their faith where they undergo a long, tortuous, and painful road from being a "blind-believer" to a "thinking-believer". Others no so fortunate drift slowly and passively away from their cradle faith to become lukewarm Christians without fully confronting what the religious indoctrination of "altered religious doctrines" has done to them as human beings. Our Christian Bible exercises through the subtle power of tradition and child-indoctrination a totally unbelievable power over the common mind which can only be compared to a type of hypnotic obsession by some. Most don't even recognize that they worship this Book more than God Himself. Again don't loose sight of the fact that if we have been "indoctrinated" with "altered Spiritual Truths" then we have strayed from the path intended for us by the Creator and this tragedy can be laid upon the doorstep of Rome. But study is necessary to see this "fact" for yourself. It seems to matter not to most that serious study of this Book can be enlightening and rewarding whereby their lives can be more rewarding than continuing in the "status quo". The only problem which one encounters in such serious study of this Bible and which often stops one right in their tracks right from the beginning is that one quickly finds in such study that many, and I mean many of our "inherited" and "cherished childhood indoctrinations" from this Bible can be shown to be less than reliable when exposed to the light of modern scholarship and historical evidences that exist today. Gripped by "fear of losing one's salvation" they recoil from such study of the Bible believing that the Devil is deceiving them. This only goes to reinforce the power of indoctrination of "falsehoods" instead of "truths" which we have received in the Western Hemisphere under the blanket of Roman Christianity today. The power of "belief" is amazing when select "tenets" are reinforced repeatedly since childhood, be they "right" or "wrong". Too often it matters not that what we are taught is wrong but hey, if it came from the Bible most unquestioningly assume that it has to be right. The repetition of error, or lets say the "misinterpretation" of what we read and have heard for twenty years in Church sermons makes one' exodus into truth almost impossible and unattainable. I am one of the lucky ones having gone to Seminary where I did not "check my brain" at the door and being "analytically minded" things had to add up and if they did not then I saw this as a problem that no faith could bridge. I kept telling myself over and over for 3 years in Seminary that "if God is not the author of confusion", as the Bible says, "then who do we blame this on"? I did not know at the time when I graduated with my Masters in Divinity why things did not "add up" but as I left the campus for the last time I set out on a life-long investigation of this perplexing problem and the result of my studies birthed Bet Emet Ministries (Hebrew for "the House of Truth").

The force and reach of the subtle acceptance of various philosophies and religious tenets is not dreamed of by the person who has not become consciously liberated from it and can view it objectively, or from the outside. Few people have not been able to dissociate themselves sufficiently from their indoctrinated preconceptions in this regard to substantiate this phenomenon of the psychological "brainwashing". Only a trained and liberated mind can stand out from under its own inherited habits of thought and feeling and subject them to rational and dispassionate criticism and examination in the endeavor of serious Bible study. I pray the readers and students of Bet Emet Ministries, if given enough time and the right materials to study, can extricate themselves from this subtle mind control we grow up with in this basically "Christian nation". I am not saying that Christianity as we know it is wrong but that it is erroneous at the core of its central thesis and belief. Without serious study few can grasp or apprehend such a statement. But we fortunately today to live in a world where one can free himself from religious censorship and mind control of Rome which too often many of our spiritual forefathers were subjected; often unknowingly. This truly is the information Age and what a shame if we did not take advantage of it while we pass on this Earth. For the most part, people accept as authoritative the mass conceptions and religious belief systems amidst which they grow up, and regard their general trend as the seal and certainty of their rightness. I did; that is until I went to Seminary and began to seriously read and study the tragic history of my Christian faith. Let me say that there are two sides to every coin and winners of wars not only write the history but "change" it. Rome won and the Jewish nation lost. Rome in the 3rd century altered Ancient divine "Spiritual Truths" and the truth of God given to mankind over thousands and thousands of years was lost to the world and remains lost today but to only a select few who enter into such serious study of Christianity and the alteration of these Ancient Spiritual understands of God. This is what I found and continue to find as my studies deepened year after year. The joy that comes in such study sadly comes mixed with pain as we eventually find the truth and realize that we did not have it most of our lives. This is called "repentance" This joy comes when one realizes that he is liberated from the darkness of deceit and falsehood and the result is not only one's emancipation from error and misjudgment and often sin but attaining to the the proper worship of the Creator commanded in the beginning of time. But all of this is strange and unbelievable to those who have not studied this "Bible" as they should.

In such fashion as I mention above this Bible, which I both love and mistrust in many places, has been accepted as the great unique work of Divine authority, and, with the force of hallowed devotion back of it for generations going on now for some 1,700 years or so, it now wields a perfectly unrealized power over the common minds of most. Even those who have outwardly spurn it find themselves often unwittingly influenced by it in ways they little dream of since our society has been cunningly saturated with the seeds of a thousand ideas that spring from the vast number of phrases, texts and incidents which have taken unshakable rootage in the mass consciousness. In the area of Christendom this book is still regarded as the supreme moral and spiritual guide of the faith. And from time to time one reads or hears that to solve the world's ailments all that is needed is more consecrated study of the Bible. Yes, there is truth in the Bible but I say that with tremendous qualifications and reservations. We can all agree that more study of spiritual things is decidedly a need of our time and country but we face a strange situation here, which does not seem to have been discerned by the majority of proponents of Bible study. Understand that there never has been a book that has been studied so exhaustively and enthusiastically as this. No book has received such devotion and reverence. No other book than the Christian Bible has been preached on so often and so passionately. It has been organically dissected and analyzed without end. Thousands of volumes of exegesis have been written upon it. I remember a few years ago reading a prominent scholar that stated that the Bible has been dubbed "The Book Nobody Knows", and its central hero, "The Man Nobody Knows".

- Answer for yourself: How can such a thing be said of the Bible or "the Christ"? Why would it have been said at all? Is such a statement true and is there something we don't know that would make such a statement just? If this is the outcome of past study on an enormous scale, and the consensus of many scholars today, what gain does it do us to study it further?
- Answer for yourself: Are we lacking "keys" necessary to properly interpret and understand this Bible and have we approached this Bible unknowingly with the "wrong key" for its interpretation most of our lives?
- Answer for yourself: Has our childhood-indoctrination given us the wrong "keys" to interpret this book correctly?
- Answer for yourself: How long has mankind been devoid of these "proper keys" for interpretation of this Bible and what are they?
- Answer for yourself: Could by chance mankind have lost these "necessary keys" for proper Biblical interpretation in the 3rd century at the hands of Rome?

Make no mistake about it this Bible we cherish is a "sealed book". Few, if any, know that within this Bible is a hidden message beneath the surface stories we read and have been taught to interpret "historically" and "literally". Few, if any, know that this Bible is truly the legacy of a grand past Ancient Wisdom. And perhaps no one now living knows thoroughly what is hidden in its pages. If you study hard for a long time this Christian Bible and study other religious disciplines along with it like Comparative Religions, Gnosticism, Egyptian religion, Judaism, etc., then the unmistakable conclusion to which you are drawn and repeatedly assured in such studies is that it is futile to give this Bible more study of the kind that it has received heretofore for the last 1,700 years. If it lacks study it is because thousands have labored to get its meaning and have failed. The effort has bred disappointment and resentment against its incomprehensibility. The Bible is at the same time both a "difficult book" to understand and a "simple book" to understand, "simple" if you have the "keys" necessary to its proper comprehension. What we as Christians and followers of "the Christ" need in this modern age in which we live with regard to the Bible is not more study but some accurate comprehension; not more waste of unproductive wrestling with its puzzles and mysteries, but a few rays of proper interpretation that bring accurate understanding. In brief, what is needed is a knowledge of the background out of which it grew, and in reference to which alone it can be comprehended correctly!

The vast majority of Christians today fail when reading this Bible to hear the deep message of the Book. This is primarily to modern Christian scholars who densely and stubbornly refuse to see that ancient scriptural writing was esoteric or hidden as to its meaning, and allegorical and symbolical as to its method. This should not be surprising to the reader once he understands that since the 3rd century, almost 1,700 years, conscious efforts have been made to "alter" the Ancient understanding of God and His message to mankind by Rome and their redactors of Holy Writ.

When mankind lost the allegorical, mystical, and mythical understanding of Ancient Sacred literature and the Bible then mankind lost the Divine Truth in the Bible.

The ancients did not use newspaper directness as we would expect today. In other words they did write using the Greek "literal-historical" method when writing their sacred volumes. On the contrary they put up their secret wisdom, conceded to them by the great Sages, in the form of allegories and myths, which were to be taken as fiction in their outward dress, but as the cinematograph of profoundest truths and knowledge in inward sense. By a combination of symbols, nature signs and allegories, often woven into a background of real history, they sought to portray the deepest types of spiritual experience and an intellectual grip on reality. The Bible has been crudely taken for literal truth about living personages on the stage of mortal history when often this is not the case. It has been rendered literally and historically to its detriment. This is the most gross mistake, the most pretentious error, in all of human history, this mistaking of spiritual allegorism for literal human narrative.

We are in position to make the unqualified pronouncement for the first time in the modern age that there is not one iota of history, in the ordinary acceptation of that term, in the Bible from beginning to end. What often is mistaken as "literal history" is in reality but allegory of Divine Spiritual truth related to subsequent generations through the vehicle of allegory, myth, legend, and metaphor. Make no mistake about it, there is some "literal history" within the Bible but misinterpretation of much of its allegory has contributed to mistaken understanding of Divine concepts as if "literal historical narrative" which it was never intended to convey. Some portions of Jewish history are utilized as the base and frame of these spiritual myths and concepts.

Unknown to most Christians is the comment by Eusebius, one of the three chief formulators of Roman Christian theology, that the Gospels of the New Testament are themselves nothing but old dramatic books of the Essenes in pre-Christian days.

Answer for yourself: How could this be? How could Eusebius make the blatant statement that Christianity and "the Christ" existed before the rise of Christianity with its later Gospels?

Unknown to most Christians is the fact that the earliest and greatest of the framers of Christian theology, Philo, Clement and Origen, expressly declared it was impossible and an impiety to assert that the logos of God could take the flesh of a human personality.

Church father Origen, one of the most accomplished biblical scholars of early Christianity said, "The Scriptures were of little use to those who understood them literally, as they are written" (Higgins, Anacalpysis II, p.270) St. Augustine also thought of the bible in allegorical terms by saying, "There is no way of preserving the literal sense of the first chapter of Genesis, without impiety, and attributing things to God unworthy of him." St. Athanasius bishop of Alexandria admonishes us that "Should we understand sacred writ according to the letter, we should fall into the most enormous blasphemies (Pike, p. 266). Basically this is exactly what the modern day Christians have done. They take the bible literally when it was not to be taken that way. As I shall prove in this letter.

Answer for yourself: Is is correct to say that these pioneer Early Church Fathers did not believe in a "fleshly "Jesus" but believed in the Spiritual Concept of "the Christ" among mankind? Yes it is!

Unknown to most Christians is the fact that today's modern Biblical scholarship reveals without question that the Old Testament narratives are in their entirety rewritings of old Egyptian material, distorted and obscured as it passed through later Hebrew hands.

Answer for yourself: Where can I find such materials for my own study? Our recommended book list offers many books on this Egyptian-Jewish link but a good book to start with is Gary Greenberg, Myths of the Bible, Sourcebooks, inc., 2000). Long acknowledged as an integral part of the heritage of western civilization, ancient Egypt's importance to world history cannot be exaggerated, especially in the context of religions. At least three of the world's major religions—Judaism, Christianity, and Islam—can trace their roots and/or early dissemination to the land of the Nile. The religious dogmas and doctrines found in Egyptian religion can be traced to both later Judaism and later still Christianity; albeit often with "altered" interpretations as sifted through these later nations and their histories. These religions, especially the Coptic Church branch of Christianity, can even find parallels between many of their practices and rituals and the ancient religion of the pharaohs. Today, Egypt's landscape is dotted with the churches, temples and mosques of these religions that stand alongside the temples of Isis, Osiris, Horus and other ancient Egyptian deities.

Answer for yourself: What is important to know concerning this link between Egypt and later Judaism and later even still Christianity?

Egyptian Scripture was never historical. Egyptian Scripture was spiritual symbology, pure and unadulterated. The saddest phenomenon of world history transpired when later ignorance took the Egyptian interpretations of Divine Concepts given to mankind in the beginning of time and and converted them into absurd literal narrative at the hands of Rome in the 3rd century. And the thinking of the whole world of the civilized West, at least for some 1,700 years at present, has thus been based on "literal history" that can be shown through the efforts of modern scholarship to have never occurred, and the Christian Church has been founded on a set of miracles supposedly at the hands of a "literal historical" Christ that were never performed in the natural realm. It has been so appropriately said that the only miracle envisioned in ancient theology was the transformation of human character by the indwelling presence of the Creator, and this spiritual miracle of the Descent of the Soul, the Divine, into physical matter, into the flesh of mankind, was poetized, dramatized and allegorized in a hundred forms of outward representation, all of which has been absurdly taken for personal "literal" history for the last 1,700 years.

Answer for yourself: Why is reinterpretation of Divine allegory of Divine Concepts as held by the Ancient Spiritual Masters of mankind since our beginning on this planet and later presentation and misrepresentation as if a "literal" and "historical" event not good?

This conversion of Spiritual and Mystical into an assumed "literal" biographical history has made Christianity the instrument of the grossest degradation of exalted Ancient truth to which it has ever been subject. That is to say, that all Christian doctrines present the ancient wisdom in a more literal and hence cruder form of meaning than had ever been done before in the history of mankind's religions. In the transmutation of the spiritual crucifixion and sacrifice of man's soul within him to the nailing of an assumed and personal "literal" Jesus on a wooden cross Christianity has reduced the glorious drama of the spiritual life of mankind's Soul and its evolutionary plan of maturation to its grossest and most repellant form. There is no religion higher than truth! It is the business of enlightened study of the Bible to not only recover the "keys" that reveal this truth of the Divine realties around us that have tragically been purposefully misinterpreted since the 3rd century as if "literal-historical" but at the same time see that under the disguise of a historical crucified savior lies the pattern for the descent, growth and development of the Divine Soul within matter (mankind). This is the goal for man's existence. We must study this Bible from many areas until we can come to see for ourselves the Spiritual Truths behind the "Jesus Story" and lift this weight of crude literal dogmatism from off the modern imagination and conscience at whatever cost. The light of the true spiritual Gnosis of Ancient times much enlighten the Sacred Scriptures of Christianity as it once did and in so doing remove the darkness of Roman literal dogmatism if mankind is ever to reach the zenith of its creation and in so doing dispel errant and shameless false hermeneutic given us by Rome. It is firm belief, based on years of the most diligent research, that it is impossible to understand the stories and allegories of the Bible and the host of religious dogmas and doctrines contained within it properly without a knowledge of ancient methods of sacred writing, and of the ancient philosophies that adorn its pages.

Answer for yourself: What must we know for our efforts at Bible study to be productive and assure us that our efforts are rewarded in Spiritual Truth and no longer error? As I see it there are 4 things we must know.

1. We must know that the writers of the Ancient Scriptures were poets, allegorists, dramatists and mythicists. In other words, Ancient Scripture, whether Egyptian, Jewish, or early Christian, were never written with a "historical-literal" interpretation in mind. These writers come from a line of generations of sages and seers who had developed the art of spiritual representation to a point of the utmost ingenuity and complexity, completely shrouding the intended real meaning under veils of symbolism, which have utterly misled modern scholars who could not pierce the outer veil to read the truth hidden underneath. These Ancient Scriptures were written by masters of the Hidden Mysteries of the Divine realm. Thus the works can not be read without the "keys" to the myths and reference to the symbols used within the many texts. To try to do so guarantees mistaken interpretation and resultant conduct and religious beliefs. The ancients themselves testify plentifully that the scriptures are allegories. Origen (185-254 C.E.) was an early church Father and apologist for Christianity. While Origen claimed that the Bible was divinely inspired, he did not accept the complete historicity of Scripture, nor did he interpret it all literally. Like others in the Alexandrian school of interpretation, he often allegorized the Scriptures as had the Ancients before him with similar if not the same "religious beliefs". Origen regards the whole Bible as a set of allegories. Allegorical interpretation was widely used in the early Church, and according to Philo it was commonplace amongst the Palestinian Rabbinical schools of the 1st century C.E. Greek philosophers used allegorical interpretation to expound the writings of Homer and Plato, and these methods met with some limited acceptance amongst Jews and early Christians. Most of the Fathers (Irenaeus, Clement of Rome, Irenaeus, Tertullian, Origen, ... used Allegorical interpretation to expound the Christian Gospel from the Hebrew scriptures, and to interpret the Christian scriptures to the contemporary Church. The Latin Fathers, especially Ambrose and Augustine, held an intermediate view, allowing for both a literal and an allegorical interpretation of the Hebrew texts. But the most astonishing declaration to this effect is St. Paul's own statement in Galatians that the whole story of Abraham and Sarah and Hagar is "an allegory."

Gal 4:22-24 22 For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. 23 But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. 24 Which things (notice its "plural" (Abraham, two sons, bondmaid, freewoman are all an allegory): for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. (KJV)

2. We must know that the writers of the Ancient Scriptures were esotericists, writing only of the inner life and for initiated pupils. They wrote of inner things under an outer veil. They wrote of the Greater Mysteries which were never given out to the multitude, but taught in secret to disciplined students. Spiritual truth was not published in modern fashion. Whatever was written, was veiled under glyph and symbol. Mostly it was taught by oral tradition. Most Christians have been taught to take the bible literally, and word for word instead of looking for the "allegorical truths" behind the surface of what we read. Then there are some Christians who realize that the bible is not to be taken this way, at least not all of it. Paul gives us a clue about one bible story. Paul gives us a clue about this "hidden" truth behind allegories that we read as if "literal" stories today. Paul says: "Now this is allegory: these two women are two covenants. One is from Mount Sinai, bearing children for slavery; she is Hagar. Now Hagar is Mount Sinai in Arabia; she corresponds to the present Jerusalem, for she is in slavery with her children." Galatians 4:22-25. Now it is clear that Paul is saying that this story is NOT about historical people. He just admits that they are really representative of two covenants.

Answer for yourself: Could it also be that the "Jesus Story" is to be understood as an allegory expressing deeper mysteries and Divine Truths and not as a "literal-historical" person? Paul was a Gnostic. For those who say he was not well if he wasn't then he was close enough. Gnostics did not believe in taking the bible in a literal sense. This is what could explain so many contradictions with Paul's letters. That is IF all of his supposed letters were written by him. I used to do that but as my studies increased along with my knowledge I can now recognize and separate the "real Gnostic Paul" from the Roman counterfeit of their own imagination to promote a false "historical Christ".

3. We must know that the writers of the Ancient Scriptures were "uranographers." Christians today believe that God created the stars and the Sun and the whole universe. But anyone who is especially fond of this present universe and looks to the stars for insight, they claim it is a sin and evil. Many have again been indoctrinated to believe that astrology is wrong and against what the bible teaches. Well that is totally false and a lie. In fact the bible teaches the opposite, Astro-theology plays a very big role in Christianity. Astro-theology is a "theology founded on the observation of the celestial bodies." (Webster's 1828 Dictionary). If you have been a faithful student of Bet Emet Ministries then many of our other websites had begun to open your eyes to the many, many problems that surround the Jesus of the New Testament. After you read this websites it should convince you that Jesus Christ, as depicted in the New Testament, was not a real, historical person. Jesus Christ is a "Spiritual Concept", originally expressed in myth and allegory for thousands of years since Ancient Egypt but today mistakenly understood due to Rome as a historical literal person. Many biblical and historical scholars are saying that this Roman representation of "the Christ" is not truthful.

Answer for yourself: How do we know? What did the early "Chrestians" or Christians believe? With our prior indoctrination and forged Christian Bibles you have to study a lot to find the truth behind this "Jesus Story".

Most of you will not know about the things which will be discussed in this website.

Answer for yourself: And why not? Because as I have stated before, you and I have been brainwashed into thinking that Astrology is bad and evil.

Ancient astrologers had a double role in society. They were responsible for observing and charting stars and using this information to regulate the calendar, which was of great utility to agriculture. Because agriculture affected the welfare of the nation, astrologers tried to extend their skills to the other aspects of national welfare, and the divination aspect of astrology was born. Ancient astrologers restricted their divination to nations and kings, as the modern practice of casting individual horoscopes for ordinary folks did not yet exist. Ancient astrologers were concerned not only with astronomical phenomena and the regulation of the calendar, but also with the meaning that could be derived from the position of the zodiac, the motion of the Sun, planets and comets, and the phases of the moon. To the ancients, while the planets wandered through the zodiac--the word "planet" means "wanderer"--the stars seemed fixed in place relative to the zodiac. Therefore, celestial phenomena involving motion could be measured with these stars as reference points. The fixed stars do actually move, but so slowly that a naked-eye observer would have to be hundreds of years old to notice it. Thus the 'star of Bethlehem' seen by the wise men was most likely a mundane star which rose at a significant time, or a planet (planets were considered stars by the ancients) that appeared in what was for them a significant constellation at a significant time. This is borne out by Matthew, who describes a phenomenon observed only by astrologers and no one else. Important for us to recognize at this point in our study and to prepare us for what follows is that these observations of the Cosmos made by uranographers since the beginning of recorded time in Egypt on down through history, particularly of the Sun and its path through the Zodiac, will become, through the literary vehicle of personification, metaphor, myth, and allegory, the very foundation to explain the Descent of the Soul (the Christos of God) into matter and this finds expression in the various Ancient myths of the sungods and ultimately in the chronological "Jesus Story" as found in the Gospels. It is these allegories and myths revealing a hidden mystery of the intersection of the Divine into matter, the Soul into mankind's flesh, that finds later a false "literal-historical" interpretation in the Roman "Jesus Story" in the Christian's Bible.

The "uranograph" was a chart of heaven. By this is meant a map outlined by the early sages charting the spiritual constitution and physiology of man, the psychic centers, areas of spiritual force, and all "after the pattern of things in the heavens." Man, the microcosm, is a replica of the heavenly man and the universe. From the history of man written thus in the constellation of the skies, the early religious formulators transferred the record to earth and distributed the various phenomena and localities over the national maps in accordance with the heavenly chart! Very important for us to recognize at this point in our study is that all nations tried to frame their own history (Egyptian, Jewish, ie.) and geography after the pattern of things in the heavenly mount. Mainly the Egyptians and after them the Jews made this transfer almost completely. According to this chart each nation was given an upper and lower section, had a river flowing from the upper down to the lower (Nile, Jordan), had a lake or sea, a central city representing the Holy City, and a score of parallel features found in every case. There was first a division into seven nomes or districts, later into twelve.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? Each nation thus strove to have its history interpreted as a fulfillment of the sacred allegory; and its national history, thus diverted into the form of the celestial myth, was made into the national epic. And finally came the claim on the part of several, notably the Jews, that since their history fulfilled the outlines of the sacred story, they were proven to be the "chosen people" of God. There is not a scrap of evidence anywhere to identify the Israelites of today as the historical Hebrews or Jews of the Biblical period. Judaism is not a "race" but a "religion" and today we find in Israel European proselytes whereas we find the "black skinned" Jews of the Bible scattered throughout Africa today. The latter, the Jews, simply appropriated the distinction to themselves and fitted their history into the sacred scheme.

4. We must know that the writers of all Ancient religious writings since Egypt deal with but one central fact, the incarnation of man, or the birth, descent, death and resurrection of the soul. This one religious concept is the whole story of religion and the "mystery" which lies behind the various stories, myths, legends, and allegories of the sungods and the mistakenly interpreted "literal-historical Jesus Story". The old Ancient spiritual books deal with nothing beyond this story and its involvements. This fact alone, seldom recognized today, is itself the key to all philosophy and religion. In the light of this one fact all complicated meanings can be reduced to clear significance. It unravels the infinite complexities of the symbology that have confounded the learned scholars and theologians. That man is a god, a spark of the ultimate uncreated Intelligent Energy of the Cosmos, dwelling in an animal-matter form is the central and cardinal fact of all religion and all Ancient religious texts from Egypt on that find their ultimate expressions in Judaism and prior-Roman Christianity.

This without question is one of the biggest, if not the biggest puzzle facing Ancient mankind that has only been answered in this century by the like of A. Einstein and other physicists. The Ancients might not have had the same terminology as we do today but they certainly understood this metaphysical concept of the Descent of the Divine Soul into matter like none since. This Divine reality was expressed in varied forms from Osiris on down through history till we find the culmination of "the Christ" of Gnostic Christianity. Only with the emergence of Roman Christianity will we find the adulteration of this Spiritual message and the destruction of the worlds libraries by Rome where the Ancient Gnostic understanding of the Creator was almost exterminated where in its place we find today the "historical Christ" in place of the "Mystical Christ within all mankind".

Answer for yourself: What was so special about this Jesus Christ of Rome's New Testament when there were so many other similar "Jesus Stories" in the names of other prior sungods that were just like him hundreds if not thousands of years before a historical Jesus Christ was assumed to even exist? That a great question with only one answer for a "thinking believer". There was no difference only that the last "Jesus Story" given by Rome as "literalized" and "historicized" unlike the host of prior parallel stories that were always understood as Spiritual and Divine allegories.

As I have on other websites shown, let alone this one, there are things in the Bible that most Christians just do not know or think about because they have not been taught the truth behind their "Jesus Story". The fact is that Christianity was just another mystery religion like all the others at the time. Mystery is a key word in Christianity it appears in the New Testament 22 times.

Paul, a Gnostic, informs us:

1 Tim 3:16 16 And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory. (KJV)

1 Tim 3:9 9 Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. (KJV)

So we see here that the faith of the Christian religion is a mystery.

Eph 3:9 9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Now we see there is a fellowship of the mystery and if "Jesus Christ" is not "historical-literal" when whom is this "Jesus Christ" that created matter in the "Big Bang"?

Answer for yourself: What is this mystery? Have you ever wondered?

Eph 5:32 32 This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church. (KJV)

So here we see that this mystery is about Jesus the Christ and the church (the fellowship of believers in God). But Paul uses the term "mystery of Christ" more than once.

Col 4:3 3 Withal praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds: (KJV)

1 Cor 4:1 1 Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. (KJV)

This just proves that Christianity was a "mystery religion". Even the resurrection was mystery.

1 Cor 15:51 51 Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, (KJV)

Mystery religions were very prevalent at the time of early Christianity. Ignatius of Antioch, bishop of Antioch, Syria, states in his letter to the Ephesians, "…you are …fellow initiates with [the apostle] Paul." (Ignatius to the Ephesians, XII.2).

Answer for yourself: What is important about this statement?

Only mystery religions had initiates and if Paul was an apostle of Christianity in the beginning that means that Christianity is a Mystery Religion as were all world religions before it; that is before the emergence of the Holy Roman Empire in the 3rd century.

Clement of Alexandria invited pagans to be initiated in the "mysteries" of Christianity "Then you will have the vision of my God, and will be initiated in those holy mysteries…" (Exhortation to the Greeks, chpt. XII, par. 91). Clement then goes on to say, "He saw the light and a vision, he was sanctified by initiation, and Jesus marked the initiate with his seal: 'O Truly sacred mysteries!'…I became holy by initiation…" (EG chpt XII, par. 92). Gnostics were a part of these. Of course the Gnostics believed in the revealing of the "secret knowledge". Gnosis is mentioned in the bible over 15 times.

Answer for yourself: Was Paul a Gnostic? It sure would appear so. And if he was what does that mean?

Philo Judaeus of Alexandria (20 B.C.E.-45 C.E.) is considered the forerunner of Christian theology. Philo lived and died before any of the New Testament scriptures were written. This is important to remember. Philo applied Platonic philosophy to the Jewish scriptures. In Platonism there was a major separation between the higher world (the heavenlies) of the spiritual realities, where things were perfect and unchanging. The earthly world was an imperfect reflection of the upper one, comprised of things that were changing and perishable.

Answer for yourself: Could this be the reason for the Spiritual axiom of Egypt which said: So Above, So Below? Was it man's responsibility to change the Earth into the image of a perfect and ordered Heaven which the Egyptians called "Ma'at"? Is this the same as the Jewish religious concept of Tikkun Olam?

Isaac Luria, the renowned sixteenth century Kabbalist, used the phrase "tikkun olam," usually translated as repairing the world, to encapsulate the true role of humanity in the ongoing evolution and spiritualization of the cosmos. Luria taught that God created the world by forming vessels of light (think energy) to hold the Divine Light. But as God poured the Light into the vessels, they catastrophically shattered, tumbling down toward the realm of matter. Thus, our world consists of countless shards of the original vessels entrapping sparks of the Divine Light (the energy of God). Humanity's great task involves helping God by freeing and reuniting the scattered Light, raising the sparks back to Divinity and restoring the broken world. This is accomplished through man's commitment to good works.

Eph 2:10 10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them. (KJV)

Philo looked upon Plato as being great, "As the great Plato says…" (On the eternity of the World, ch. X, 52) He believed that the teachings of Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, and the Stoics were holy. Philo states that Plato has a sacred authority, "…since we have it on the sacred authority of Plato…" This concept of two different worlds is very important to remember, a higher world that is unseen and the lower world that is seen. The two worlds are identical, in a metaphorical sense, but the upper world is perfect and the lower world is not. It can be proven that Philo's teachings greatly influenced Christianity. Philo allegorized the scriptures and did almost all if not all of the Ancient Spiritual Masters; that is until the rise of Rome in the 3rd century C.E.

Paul himself never mentions Jesus as if real history, albeit he lived at the time.

Answer for yourself: Is that a problem? It sure it if we are to believe that Jesus Christ was a real historical person and goes a long way to why Paul never mentions the virgin birth or only two of the many teachings of Jesus found later in the New Testament.

Answer for yourself: Where did Paul get the message about Jesus? Did it come from first hand experience? No it did not.

Gal 1:11-12 11 But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. 12 For I neither received (paralambano) it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Here Paul admits that he did not hear of this Jesus from apostolic tradition but he uses the word "paralambano" for "receive" which is used in the Greek mysteries to refer to some Gnostic experience where by an initiate "receives" hidden mystical revelation from the Divine realm. So Paul makes clear that the gospel he preaches about Christ has come to him through personal revelation. But think about this.

Answer for yourself: If at the time Paul wrote this why would he have to state that his gospel of Christ is from personal revelation when he could very well have used the 12 disciples themselves as witnesses? Something is amiss here if you think about.

Answer for yourself: Could it be that there was no such thing as the "tradition of the disciples" about Jesus and that Paul did not know of any such thing?

1 Cor 2:6-8 6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought: 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: 8 Which none of the princes of this world (age) knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. (KJV)

So here we see that this "wisdom" is a mystery.

Answer for yourself: The important question is who are these "rulers of this age (mistakenly translated as world)"? It is these "rulers" and "princes" that crucified Jesus Christ.

Here we get our answer. These rulers are in the heavens not earth.

Eph 6:12 12 For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. (KJV)

Again we see that this battle is in the heavens NOT earth. Here Paul is not attributing Jesus' crucifixion to Pontius Pilate and the Jewish leaders but to some planetary powers or demonic beings. It is all Astro-theology.

The writer of the book of Hebrews states that Jesus' sacrifice was a spiritual one not physical.

Heb 9:14 14 How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? (KJV)

And then the writer goes on to say that a heavenly sacrifice is better than an earthly one confirming that the writer of the book of Hebrews believed that Jesus' sacrifice was heavenly and NOT earthly, "Therefore it was necessary for the copies of the things in the heavens to be cleansed with these, but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these." Hebrews 9:23 Notice also that there are copies of the heavenly and the earthly. That is why some Christians later actually thought that Jesus existed on earth. But he did not. Everything was in the heavens, even his crucifixion as we have seen.

Answer for yourself: Where was Christ crucified? Wait a minute and don't answer too fast.

"And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified."

Here we have Revelation declaring in words as clear as can be found, that our Lord was crucified, not in historical Jerusalem, but in a spiritual city, a city, furthermore, with two names, one of which is not even a city name, but that of a country, Egypt. Not only does this verse negate the whole literal and historical interpretation of the Gospel chronicle, but it adds its own corroboration to the new rendering of the meaning of "death". For the place where the dead bodies of the two witnesses, the two segments of our dual life as Soul (Divine Energy of God) and body (matter), shall lie, as well as where the Christ in us is crucified, is thus marked as the place of "death", which, as the new truth reveals, is this earth and our life upon it.

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

And it is further significant that Revelation gives as one of its (many) names, Egypt. No one can long study Hebrew, Greek and Egyptian religious literature without being assured that this term, Egypt, is used, never in the sense of the geographical unit on the map, but as the chief designation for the place, country or habitat of earthly incarnation (the fleshly body). It is therefore a figurative term for life on earth, or earth as the scene of incarnate life.

In fact the writer of Hebrews even says that Jesus was not on earth.

Heb 8:4 4 For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law: (KJV)

Folks these verse alone prove that the earliest Christians, in reality called "Chrestians" as in "Gnostic Chrestians", or believers in the indwelling God, Logos, Christ, did not believe in a historical Jesus. They believed in a spiritual Jesus that was crucified in the heavens and not on earth.

Phil 2:6-7 6 Who (the Christ), being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God:

7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: (KJV)

This verse speaks of God humbling Himself and through the Spiritual Process of emanation emptied Himself of Spirit whereby He could come and tabernacle in matter and human flesh. In the Theosophical Glossary, under "The Doctrine of Emanation", Madame Blavatsky states: ...while the Occultists and Theosophists believe thoroughly in the doctrine of Evolution as given out by Kapila and Manu, they are Emanationists rather than Evolutionists.The doctrine of Emanation was at one time universal. It was taught by the Alexandrian (think early Church Fathers before the 3rd century) as well as by the Indian philosophers, by the Egyptian, the Chaldean and Hellenic Hierophants (initiates), and also by the Hebrews (in their Kabbalah, and even in Genesis). This is what a lot of the mystery religions and salvation cults were teaching then. As I said this copy and shadow of things on earth and in the heavens were Gnostic and Platonic theology.

These and a hundred other irrationalities make it sheer folly to uphold the literal historicity of the Bible and Jesus Christ. Yet the major theses of Christianity stand on this weak ground. Yet understand we certainly can learn by the earthy example of the Divine Soul in matter as symbolized as a model for all mankind in the "Jesus Story".

Sadly however because of Rome's alteration of prior Divine Truth existing for thousands of years and their militant dogmatism it is not surprising that the history of the Church has been a tale of warfare, controversy, schism, blind faith and frightful cruelty, and that it is repudiated by about 2/3 of the known world today.

I go on record saying that the Bible, sadly misinterpreted by its most loyal devotees, is in reality a collection of ancient works that embody in veiled figures the fundamentals of the genuine old wisdom of the Hierophants and initiates of the Gnostic metaphysical understanding of God. One can go so far and say that the Bible, a book I love and have finally come to interpret correctly now possessing the "keys" for a correct hermeneutic, is a repository of the great Mystery teaching of early times going as far back as the beginning of mankind. In fact, properly studied and recognized the Bible is a synthesis and collection of religious works down through history comprising the substance of Hermeticism, Gnosticism, Kabbalism, Egyptian and Chaldean astrology and astronomy, Greek Orphism and Hindu Wisdom, drawn mostly from ancient Egypt. That is why I have come to love Egypt so as I recognize today their Spiritual genius and that they, in my opinion, knew this Creator better than any other nation in the world since the beginning of time and that goes for today as well. Sadly Egypt is destroyed but their legacy lives today thanks to the efforts of dedicated Egyptologists and the Jewish nation which are their biological offspring. The Bible would not inappropriately be described as a book of Platonic Theosophy. For Plato summed up most of the elements of these systems. To an orthodox churchman it would doubtless seem to belittle the Book to say that it contains nothing but the Platonic philosophy. But this is only because the average Christian knows nothing of the grandeur and rank of the Platonic wisdom. It is enough to say that it could not be a great book if it did not embody Plato's philosophy. For this was truly "of the gods," and perhaps the most luminous presentation of spiritual knowledge ever to be granted to the human intellect. Fortunate is Christianity that its Bible is heavily charged with the elements of the great Divine Wisdom of past ages.

But be not mistaken in this. The "historical-literal" Jesus is an aberration of the Divine Christ and the Logos that resides within all matter and flesh. It is my desire and hope that through the study of this website, as well as others sites provided by Bet Emet Ministries, that the diligent student and readers of our articles are blessed and further in their pursuit of perfection as "the Soul prospers".

RESTORING THE "KEYS" TO PROPER BIBLICAL INTERPRETATION OF THE BIBLE & "THE CHRIST" #2

Let us begin with a few introductory statements about what the Ancients understood about the Descent of the Soul (Christ/Karest) into matter especially in light of what we have learned so far. We mentioned that up until the 3rd century this "Christ/Karest" was not understood or believed to have been a "fleshly historical person" but a Divine Concept within each child of God. This is a fact that is easily seen from one' study of Comparative religions from Egypt on down until the emergence of the Roman Empire in the 3rd century as well as a comprehensive study of Gnosticism and the proper understanding of the nations' allegorical sungods and myths. Believe it or not the earliest "Chrestians" were, as they are mistakenly called "Christians" today, Gnostics themselves. This startling revelation is only now coming to the forefront due to the momentous discoveries of the Nag Hammadi Library in Egypt only around 50 years ago. The Nag Hammadi Library, a collection of thirteen ancient codices containing over fifty texts, was discovered in upper Egypt in 1945. This immensely important discovery includes a large number of primary Gnostic scriptures -- texts once thought to have been entirely destroyed during the early Christian struggle to define "orthodoxy" -- scriptures such as the Gospel of Thomas, the Gospel of Philip, and the Gospel of Truth. The discovery and translation of the Nag Hammadi library, completed in the 1970's, has provided impetus to a major re-evaluation of early Christian history and the nature of Gnosticism.

Answer for yourself: What was the religious beliefs of these earliest "Chrestians" or "Christians" regarding "the Christ"? Do they agree with the later teachings on "the Christ" by emerging Roman Christianity in the 2nd through the 5th centuries? Well know they don't and that is what the problem here is all about. Rome "reinterprets" the Ancient understanding of God and His "Christ" and produces their own holy book to replace the "first New Testament" of these Gnostic Chrestians/Christians and few know of this today.

Answer for yourself: So what did the earliest "Chrestians/Christians" believe about "the Christ" for these 300 or so years before being almost exterminated by Rome? Well let me tell you and in so doing we will come to see "beneath" the literal-historical presentation of "the Christ" that Rome gave us in their redaction and replacement Second New Testament.

Gnostic Christians maintained that in the beginning there was only One. This One God was totally spirit, totally energy, totally perfect, incapable of description, beyond attributes and qualities. This God is not only unknown to humans; He is unknowable. The Gnostic texts do not explain why He is unknowable, except to suggest that He is so “other than" and "sacred" and "apart from all else that exists in the visible realm" that explanations which require making something unknown known by comparing it to something else simply cannot work. At best they are man's feeble attempts to explain the unexplainable and describe the indescribable.

According to numerous Gnostic myths, these Ancient Spiritualists understood that the Universe is creation – the activity of a Magnificent Entity that creates from Itself and within Itself – an unceasing activity in which all that exists participates. For simplicity we shall call this Magnificent Entity "God". That first impulse of Creation (taught as the Big Bang in Egypt thousands of years ago), infinitely multiplied through a demonstration of inexhaustible powers or planes of energies in the Cosmos and Universe, continuously gives shape to an ongoing and unceasing wave of creation from plane to plane in which all that is created takes part. Be it an atom, a man, or a galaxy, each continuously creates, each one within its own sphere of action, thus maintaining the presence and continuity of this Life from God according to the ability conferred on it by its position on the scale or plane of existential process. In this way, each part contributes to the Whole (God) and, eventually, in compliance with Cosmic Law, is reintegrated into the Whole (God). Assimilating and absorbing these concepts leads us to an understanding of the basic principle: "God, the Creator, exists in everything, and nothing exists outside of Him."

Col 1:16-17 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

These Ancient Gnostics along with early Gnostic Christians like Paul taught that from this One and this continual line of Creation emerge other divine entities, emanations from the One, called aeons (Thought, Eternality, Life, etc.); moreover, some of these aeons produce their own entities, until there is an entire realm of the divine aeons, sometimes called the Fullness or, using the Greek term, the Pleroma. The Gnostic myths are designed to show not only how this Pleroma came into existence in eternity past but how the world we live in came into being and how we ourselves came to be here for we are but emanations in a long line of creation that emanates from the Perfect One. What these myths appear to have in common is the idea that there is a kind of downward movement from Spirit to matter, that matter is a denigration of existence. This spirit of God, His reflection in man, is the soul. The Soul, as a spark of omnipotent life and consciousness, enters matter through this downward diminishing of pure Spirit or Energy until it immerses itself in the densest of matter.

Common to all Gnostic creation myths is the Divine Idea that within humans there resides a spark of the divine that needs to be liberated in order to return to its real home. The only way this salvation of man can occur is for man to come to the knowledge of the indwelling Divine Spark as well as to learn the secret of how it can be liberated from its entrapment in the world of matter. Knowledge is thus central to these systems, knowledge of who one really is. But understand that this Divine Spark, the mediator between man and God, came to reside in human flesh.

Rom 8:3 3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: (KJV)

Strong's Concordance:

3667 homoioma (hom-oy'-o-mah); from 3666; a form; abstractly, resemblance: KJV-- made like to, likeness, shape, similitude.

Thayer's Greek Lexicon:

3667 homoioma- what has been made after the likeness of something a) a figure, a image, a likeness, a representation b) likeness that is, resemblance, such as amounts almost to equality or identity

This is a very telling word which indicates that God's son was not a man, a fleshy man, as we would suppose but only an image or representation or likeness of something other than man. Simply said "the Christ" came down to man as likeness of something that exists in the invisible realm of Heaven.

1 Tim 2:5 5 For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; (KJV)

We need to think of this "Christ/Karest" as the bridge between Spirit and matter as it exists in man. More correctly we need to understand the work of this "Christ" as the "go between" man and the Spirit realm and let us not forget that this "Christ" lives within the flesh of all mankind.

Thayer's Greek Lexicon:

Looking at the word "mediator":

3316 mesites- 1) one who intervenes between two, either in order to make or restore peace and friendship, or to form a compact, or for ratifying a covenant 2) a medium of communication, a arbitrator

This is the function of the Heavenly Christ:

Phil 2:6-8 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

Let us not jump ahead yet to the word "cross" for we will deal with this in due time but focus if you will to the idea that Spirit became matter and in so doing the bridge between this invisible realm of the Spirit and the visible realm of matter was bridged by "God's Christ" who came to tabernacle and dwell only "in the likeness of sinful flesh". This "bridge" has been expressed in the masculine as "the Christ" but long before this it was expressed in the feminine as "Isis" or the more familiar concept of the "Sophia".

In addition to this very basic principle that "God, the Creator, exists in everything, and nothing exists outside of Him" we must take note of another fundamental concept, without which it would be impossible to conceive of the Eternal. The Ancients understood and taught that this God, the One which constantly creates Itself from Itself, has within Itself the condition of incorruptibility that is inherent in Its divinity.

Answer for yourself: Does this Law of Incorruptibility apply to all things, to all matter? Yes it does. Although matter, consisting of God as Divine Energy at different manifestations and levels of existence, may decay and deteriorate in this physical realm, its is entrapped and this "Divine Spark" of energy within the atoms and molecules of any substance continue to exist having only changed into different forms following its demise in this physical realm. This Spiritual Idea speaks to us about the very essence, the spiritual "genetic code" that remains true to Itself (God), equal to Itself (God), and that emerges untouched by the experience of its immersion in dense matter (the flesh of mankind for example). This Invisible Energy of God is redeemed from the chaos of its opposite visible realm (being confined in dense matter), eventually winning out over its hard passage through materialization in this physical realm. The Ancients understood that this Divinity is the Life or Energy of the Universe and Cosmos that animates all, both visible and invisible, without losing its purity and, thus, in animating matter, retains for Itself Its immateriality. This truly is the Alpha and Omega. That quality of purity, of faithfulness of God and this Invisible Comic Intelligent Energy to Its own essence, of immutability that resists the diversity of expression, is the guaranty that everything eventually returns to the Divine Source (God), the guaranty of the reunification of diversity in Unity (resurrection and ascension to a higher plane of existence we all Heaven). For that reason, man, as a being "created in the image and likeness of God," holds within himself the potential of transcending his inferior condition and attaining what corresponds to him by heritage and by Universal Law. By that I mean man can be transformed into the living image of God in this physical realm if he come to understand that the power for such a transformation lives and tabernacles within him; latent and asleep awaiting resurrection whereby God is empowered to live and breath and have His being through us. This whole transformation of man in the physical realm whereby he manifests the Heavenly realm in and through his live is accomplished by the indwelling "Christ".

Rom 12:1-2 1 I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. 2 And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God. (KJV)

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

In essence, we have a son of God trying to become like the Father in us because such is the divine mandate. The descent of Spirit (God) into matter (mankind), buries the Divine Spark within the darkness of dense matter (our flesh with its carnal desires). Spirit limits Itself in matter (flesh) and diminishes Its capacity for action and Its relationship to all that receive Its influence. The Soul, in reality the incarnated spirit in the flesh of mankind, is wrapped in inferior forms that compromise Its capacity for self-identification. Thus the admonition of Paul:

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: And how is this awakening to our true nature and the Divine within us as the "indwelling Christ"? Paul again tells us that this awaking and transformation is accomplished by the "renewing of your mind".

Answer for yourself: If Rome changed the message of God and "His Christ" in the 3rd century and buried such deception under the ashes of the libraries of the known world to hide their great lie and deception and "reinterpretation" of the true Message of God as handed down by mankind since the beginning of recorded time then do you think that a "replacement message" and "replacement religion" will actually prepare us for our next spiritual evolution when we meet this God face to face? If you do then you need not read any more for the truth means repentance from beginning to end for today's Christians because the "Doctrines of Christ" as handed down since the beginning of time have be adulterated and reinterpreted by Rome whereby the Spiritual Truth once cherished by all mankind have been lost to most in the the Western Hemisphere and without great diligent study will remain so. Truly we have been indoctrinated; sadly with the wrong message.

That was our introduction and now we pick up where we left off in the first article in this series.

We built a rather strong case in the previous article proving that behind the "literal-historical" account of the "Jesus Story" in the New Testament lies the hidden mystical and metaphysical truths regarding the Descent of the Soul into physical matter; in particular into the flesh of mankind. Simply said the "Jesus Story" is really the story of the "birth, life, death, and rebirth" of God into matter or the Descent of the Divine Spirit/Soul into the physical realm told through the agent of personification and allegory as depicted in the life of an exemplary righteous man named "Jesus" which again must be said is presented as one of the many examples for all mankind to emulate. This is truly the "pattern in the Mount" laid before us to understand and pattern our lives after; sadly however instead of the pattern to emulate many live their lives waiting for the return of such a supposed "historical anointed one" instead of realizing that within them lies this Christ waiting to be awakened where he can live in and through them thereby redeeming and perfecting this world in which they live. Only in this way truly will we experience "So Above, So Below".

We saw that this "true message of God" is the teaching of the Gnostic Paul as seen in many passages in the New Testament (he only wrote 7 authentic epistles and the rest are forged in his name by Rome to counter the Gnostic Christians using the authority of Paul as their weapon). One example expressing this concept is seen when Paul says in Galatians:

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

We saw that behind the presentations of multiple nations down through history and their religious traditions concerning their allegorical sungods lies a deeper "Spiritual Truth" of this same Descent of the Soul or the Descent of the Divine Uncreated Intelligent Energy, "God", into matter. We saw how this Ancient understanding of God and the Divine had emanated from Egypt thousands and thousands of years ago and traveled down through the corridors of history finding fertile soil for later elaboration in their biological children, the Jews, and their religion called "Judaism". We saw how these Divine Concepts were cherished by both the Egyptians and the Jewish nation and how later still were passed down with the earliest manifestation of the religion of the "Chrestians" (who believed not in a fleshly historical Jesus but the "Christ within" who were later renamed "Christians" by Rome). Of course all of this occurred before the Roman reinterpretation of "the Christ" in the 3rd century. We even saw how many of the earliest of the Greek and Latin Church Fathers like Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and others accepted this allegorical understanding of "the Christ" and rejected any and all attempts to "historicize" and "carnalize" the "Christ" as a supposed "literal historical person". We also mentioned how early Greek religious philosophers like Plato, for example, taught the same very things concerning God and His emanation into the physical realm and ultimate into the flesh of mankind where he dwelled as "the Christ/Karest". The message of God to man has always been the same from nation to nation; until Rome in the 3rd century when it is changed and adulterated to where it is almost today unrecognizable.

Central to the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom since Egypt is the concept of the Divine Spark or "seed" buried within each person.

1 Cor 3:16 16 Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Why would the Gnostic Paul, in this, one of only 7 of his authentic epistles which he actually wrote, would have to ask such a question? Simply because mankind had lost this knowledge of the Divine and their true identity as man.

John 10:34 34 Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods? (KJV)

Little has changed in these last 2,000 years in some ways. It was Paul's desire and mission to restore this precious knowledge to mankind; especially the Gentiles who had lost these "keys" of gnosis and spiritual intuitiveness having fallen from the path of true righteousness.

Col 1:26-27 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

It was the purpose of the Ancient Mysteries to bring to life this divine spark so that it would illuminate life on this earth for all men and women.

Answer for yourself: How had this knowledge of God descending through the portals of His Heaven and eventually tabernacling in flesh been taught down through time since the beginning of recorded history?

It begins with Egypt and is later taught by Plato. The technique of his incarnation is philosophically described under the terms of the great Law of Incubation. This is announced in the Bible in John's verse: "Unless a grain of corn (wheat) fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Also it is seen in Paul's description of the resurrection in I. Corinthians, 15: "What you sow cannot come to life unless it die." These texts proclaim the great truth of evolution, missed by scientific eyes, that each kingdom of nature, each plane of existence, both invisible and visible, are linked to the kingdom below it for the nourishment of its life. This "link" and dependance continues from the highest plane of Spiritual existence to the lowest plane of physical existence. Let me explain. The vegetable kingdom is rooted in mineral soil, the animal is sustained on vegetable matter, the human is built up physically of animal and vegetable elements, and in their turn the lower divine beings must take rootage in the human bodies. As the acorn can not develop its oak potentialities unless it descend and be buried in the dark damp soil of the mineral kingdom, so the energies (mediators) of God can not evolve to higher perfection of their divinity unless they undergo experience in human bodies. This is the simple law which is the philosophical basis of the incarnation, at once its explanation and its justification. In like fashion the Ancient taught that God, in the form of His Christ (the son of man) must descend into the bowels of the earth for three "days" (aeons), one in the mineral kingdom, one in the vegetable and one in the animal, before he rises out of matter again as a god in the perfection of his spiritual nature in the human kingdom. In the old scripture the advent of the god always occurs about "the fourth watch of the night," which symbols the human kingdom, as it is fourth in order. We shall have light on the ancient scriptures when we follow the forms of the old symbolism.

Now important for us to know is that the concept of the coming of the god (God) to inhabit the body of an animal is in all respects equivalent to his death and burial, analogous to the death of the old seed in the ground, and is necessary if He is to re-beget himself anew as the risen son of the slain father. For when He steps into the lower body, He loses all the freedom of his glorious life as a spirit, and comes "under the law" that rules on the plane of physical matter. He is subject to all the vicissitudes of climate, bodily needs and the hardships of imprisonment in a body of flesh. To be born from the womb of a mortal mother is to enter the tomb of mortal life. Many passages from Greek philosophy will confirm this interpretation.

Phil 2:6-8 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death.... (KJV)

In brief, as the Ancients termed it, He is in Hades, hell, and the grave or tomb they speak of is nothing more than his physical body. This is the first great mystery of ancient theology, lost since the third century, and now restored through hermetic discovery. The words tomb and womb are of the same origin and have the same significance.

Spirit, then, must be buried and die in matter, to reproduce its new generation. The divine son must come to birth in the womb of Maria (the sea of matter). "Matter is the mother of the gods," said an ancient sage; as spirit is their father. The seminal seed of divinity must be sown in the body of flesh. It is sown to die, or as Paul says, "in corruption; it must rise in incorruption." It must be sown a mortal body, and be raised a spiritual body. Paul, who was an Orphic Mystery initiate, was simply giving one of the old symbols of the descent and resurrection of the god in mortal life.

But the god (God) did not come into the matter of human bodies as an adult. He came as a god in potentiality only, a god in embryo, a seedling god, in fact a baby god. The Christmas or advent festival celebrates and symbolizes this Divine Truth with the birth of an infant Christ (a picture of the "born again experience". He is the Christ-child, the child Horus of ancient Egypt. The greatest truth that we humans can be told is that the Christ principle is born in us as a foetus in the womb of our physical bodies, struggling to be delivered! The physical body of each person is the womb of the Christ.

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Nature, says John, groaneth and travaileth in pain until now, when it is to give birth to the god or Christ. And Paul says again, "For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven," the spiritual body of our resurrection, the house not built with hands, but in consciousness and character for when the foetal god is delivered at its final Easter morning from its imprisonment in the physical body, it must have fashioned for itself a temple or sanctuary, of imperishable elements, "eternal in the heavens," as its future abode. This is the temple we are masonically building out of the materials of incarnational experience.

Answer for yourself: And how do we do this? We accomplish building the Temple for God to live in and through us through every thought, word and deed, day by day and life by life. This underscores the importance for the Torah as the plan-o-gram for instructing and guiding our proper Spiritual and ethical development in our lives.

This is the temple that Christ says he could build up in the New Testament. But as Christ shows it must be swept clean of impurities and cleansed again underscoring the importance of the Torah and Judaism for proper instruction in the Spiritual development of our Soul. It is the glorious house we fashion for the Soul out of the spiritual essence of human life. Every moral lesson learned, every item of character developed, has contributed to its heightened power to build this body of indestructible light.

In comparison with it the physical body is named "the garment of shame" and "the body of this death. For the god, it is a matter of shame and degradation to be housed in the carnal body and subject to its animal impulses. In the body God and His Christ are jointed to matter forming the great intersection of the two planes of existence which was often symbolically called a "cross" in Ancient times. This is the cross of matter and Spirit, and the emptying of Himself as Paul states in becoming "flesh", the great "Kenosis" passage, is the ultimate sacrifice of God coming to tabernacles in the flesh of mankind whereby He is made subject to the carnal appetites of the animal existence. The God within all mankind must wage a valiant warfare to avoid falling under the complete domination of these massive impulses, until He finally brings the god, His Christ within each of us to adulthood, and in so doing prepared the new subtle garment of light to be the eternal home of the Soul after its resurrection following our life in this physical plane of existence. I speak of the resurrection, when the tomb of flesh is broken apart, the gates of death are opened, and the dead are raised incorruptible. One reason for the egg as a symbol of Passover and Easter is the likeness of the spiritual experience that occurs at this time to our Soul which is likened to a chick's pecking its way out of its shell to effect its birth. Christmas is the quickening of the foetus in the womb seen in the birth of the Soul at the Winter Solstice (the born again experience of the Soul); Easter is the actual birth of the human ego into the new kingdom of spiritual light seen at the Spring Equinox. As we study it is my hope that you begin to see this plan of the Spiritual Salvation of mankind written in Heaven "above" and in Nature "below" for this is the teaching venue of God and has been for thousands of years. It is a delivery of sorts for the Soul within the fleshly matter of our bodies. Not surprisingly the ancient philosophy was at times designated as midwifery. Socrates said he was a midwife, presiding at the birth of the Soul into truth.

This glorious body, the Augoeides of the Greeks and the Sahu of the Egyptians, can be built up only from the union of Spirit and body in the human kingdom. For it is formed on its material side from the particles of radiant essence generated from the cells of the body, at the center of which even modern science now declares there are "radiogens" on intensely hot nuclei of solar fire (Dr. Geo. W. Crile, of the Cleveland Laboratories). No new birth of higher life can be generated save by the interaction or conjunction of Spirit and matter in some organic form. Man is the kingdom where these two meet to be joined in one higher union. Paul states this clearly when he says:

Eph 2:14 14 For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; (KJV)

Had this principle of ancient philosophy been kept in the knowledge of the early Church, Christianity would not now be the outcast from modern intelligent appreciation that it is. Nor would they have mistakenly misrepresented or misinterpreted "the Christ" and the blood of million would not have been split during the Middle Ages.

The Roman Church might have lost this Divine Ancient Truth but many outside the Church has captured this Divine truth of the Divine Spark in the flesh of mankind as seen in their legacy of myths and legends of their allegorized "sungods" which were always understood and interpreted as but metaphoric pictures and symbols of the indwelling Divine who came to live in all matter and ultimately into the flesh of man. Unknown to me in the beginning of my studies this Divine Spark was symbolized by various figures at different times and in different places by almost every nation under the Sun. The names of these symbols of God in matter were Osiris/Horus, Orpheus, Dionysus, Mithra, Krishna, Adonis, Tammuz, Hercules and so on. Eventually, as my studies grew, I would find the "keys" necessary to see and understand this parallel story of this Descent of the Divine and Soul into matter as told exactly alike in the "Jesus Story". But this understanding would only come when I became competent in Comparative religions, Gnosticism, and Judaism where I would eventually gather the necessary "keys" for the Ancient allegorical interpretation of the Divine Soul as told through the lives of the sungods as taken from Astronomy and the movement of the path of the Sun through the cosmos. This is absolutely the most fascinating study I have every done and my excitement to see God's true "Doctrines of Christ" written in the stars brings tears to my eyes that the Creator would allow me to see such depths of His being and His true revelation to mankind that Rome and other nations have so desperately tried to destroy over the millennias. It would take me years but my continued and diligent research paid off when my studies into Gnosticism and Astronomy and Egypt progressed to the levels necessary to awaken my Spirit to this unbelievable insight which goes lost to most of mankind today. I experienced what Paul said:

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Humbly speaking I over time birthed into and awakened to a heightened understanding of God like never before and His simple message to all mankind written above our heads in the Sky above which was understood by the Spiritual Masters of old and which was duplicated verbatim in the Laws of Nature that mimicked the Laws of Heaven above. I don't expect you to understand this yet having not studied this website but from the observation of the Laws of the Heavens and Nature the Ancient Spiritual masters had revealed to them the "Doctrines of Christ" we read about in our Bibles today. This is absolutely fascinating when you see it for yourself. As my studies progressed I realized that I had before me, in mouth of "two witnesses" (the Laws operating in the Heavens "above" and in Nature "below", the earliest salvation message of God to mankind and it was liberating to see the unadulterated and genuine love of God for man no mixed with fear which most religions gender in one or more ways. One only has to look at the history of the Christian Church to get a grasp on the horrors perpetrated in the name of "Jesus". The bottom line to all of this is through advanced study I would come to see that every one of these various "sungods" were but symbolic and allegorical presentations of the Descent of God, the Soul into matter (the flesh of mankind). This is the "true Christ" as it has been taught since the beginning of time immemorial and handed down basically unaltered until the 3rd century where we find Rome "reinterpreting" the whole of the Ancient religious world.

Answer for yourself: And what was this once again?

All sungods, in one way or the other, were but representations of "the Christ" or the Divine within all matter, even the flesh of mankind. The people of the ancient world knew that these figures and myths of these sungods depicting literally science and physics, of the presence of the Creative Energy and Spirit, God in all matter, were symbolic representations and not historical men and it is we today who do not and fall into the trap of believing that they were real historical personages like we do with the "Jesus Story" which is but a parallel to all the other sungod stories prior to the first century. This should speak volumes to the reader when he considers that the "Jesus Story" is in reality the same story of these host of sungods with hundreds and hundreds of unbelievable parallels to be found to the lives and sayings of these prior sungods that existed thousands and thousands of years prior to the assumed historical Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Where does the concept of this Christ/Karest/Krist originate? We find it in the beginning of recorded time in Egypt and it was from this found of Religious revelation that all other world religions have come in one way or the other.

Some 2,000 years ago in the area of the eastern Mediterranean, the divine spark within all was called the Christ (from Karest or Krist, Egyptian for the anointed mummy). My studies, over time, came to reveal to me that early, pre-Roman "literalist" Christianity found in the Gnostic "Chrestians", was but a re-statement of this same Ancient Wisdom" that had been handed down intact since the beginning of time where the use of allegory and myth had captured this metaphysical concept of God, the Cosmic Energy of the Universe and Pure Spirit, which had come to be represented in the visible realm of matter. Ironically and unknown to us due to the Roman lies and alteration of history and religious texts since they won the wars and defeated Israel in 70 C.E., Christians of any intelligence during the first two centuries at least did not regard their movement as the bearer of the first light into the heathen darkness, but only the republication of the same ancient truth expressed in the New Age of Pisces.

If you read enough of the early Church Fathers of the Christian faith then you find that at times they confirm this truth of the plagiarism and "radical reinterpretation" of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom as regarding early Christianity. Many of these early Church Fathers teach us that Christianity, was in the beginning, a reiteration of these prior "pagan truths" of God. Here is a quote from Augustine that is quite alarming yet revealing to the "thinking believer" which says just this! I suggest that you read the whole article linked above to get the whole truth about what Augustine believed in this regard.

"That which is known as the Christian religion existed among the ancients, and never did not exist; from the beginning of the human race until the time when Christ came in the flesh, at which time the true religion, which already existed began to be called Christianity" (Retractt. I, xiii, cited by Dr. Alvin Boyd Kuhn in his Shadow of The Third Century, Elizabeth N.J.: Academy Press, 1949, p.3). Please take the time to re-read this quote above from Augustine.

When I first read this quote from Augustine I can remember the puzzle pieces that began to fall into place in my quest to discover the origin and true meaning of my birth faith. This quote from Augustine only led me to others which showed my Christianity is but a terribly distorted view of the ancient Spiritual Gnosis and Wisdom that had remained basically intact and unchanged for over 10,000 years prior to the rise of Roman Orthodoxy in the early 2nd century. Here are a few more quotes for the "thinking believer":

- Eusebius says that "the names of Jesus and Christ were both known and honored by the ancients" (Hist. Eccl. lib. i. ch. iv).
- Eusebius, the great champion of Christianity, admits in his book: "that which is called the Christian religion is neither new nor strange, but-if it be lawful to testify the truth-was known to the ancients" (Hist. Eccl. lib. 2, ch. v.).
- The early Church Father Tertullian (160-220 C.E.), an "ex-Pagan" and Bishop of Carthage, ironically admits the true origins of the "Christ story and of all other such God-men stories" by stating in refutation of his critics, "You say we worship the sun; so do you" (Wheless, Forgery in Christianity, p. 147). Interestingly, a previously strident believer and defender of the faith, Tertullian later renounced this "literalistic" Christianity and returned back to the "allegorical Christianity" as believed by the ancients. (Wheless, Forgery in Christianity, p. 147).
- Ammonius Saccus, a Greek philosopher, founder of the Neoplatonic school, taught that "Christianity and Paganism when rightly understood, differ in no essential points, but had a common origin, and are really one and the same religion" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 329).
- Celsus, the Epicurean philosopher, wrote that "the Christian religion contains nothing but what Christians hold in common with heathen; nothing new" (Justin, Apol 2.).
- Mythicist Albert Churchward stated a century ago: "The canonical gospels can be shown to be a collection of sayings from the Egyptian Mythos and Eschatology"(The Origin and Evolution of Religion).
- The early Christians were charged with being a sect of Sun-worshippers (James Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 283). The Emperor Hadrian could see no difference between them and the followers of the ancient Egyptian god Serapis, who was the personified Sun (the symbol for the "Living Energy" of the cosmos). In a letter to the Consul Servianus, the Emperor says: "There are there [in Egypt] Christians who worship Serapis and devoted to Serapis are those who call themselves 'Bishops of Christ'" (Giles, Hebrew and Christian Records, vol. ii. p. 86. London: 1877).

I could go on and on with quotes like these above.

Answer for yourself: So what does this mean to us? Until you get the "keys" to understand correctly what the ancient "symbols" meant to the ancients when teaching on the "Krst/Karest/Christ" as found in their Sacred Books and "Bibles" like The Egyptian Book of the Dead and all the other "dogmas and doctrines" which Rome will later "radically reinterpret" over 300 years then you have no idea how convoluted our current Christian theology is today. Almost every dogma and doctrine in Christianity has, since Constantine especially, been altered from its original meaning. Bet Emet Ministries hopes to correct for the "truth-seeker" this gravest miscarriage of justice and corruption of the early Divine Truth of God given to humanity in its beginning.

The gist of what will constitute the teaching articles on this website is to be found expressed with wholly unexpected frankness and conclusiveness in the above statement of the sainted Augustine, who has often been given the title of "Founder of Christian Theology." This citation from his writings virtually could stand as the "golden text" of my work and investigative studies into the origin of my birth faith, Christianity, as it is a concise condensation and summary of the central theme of the various Websites of Bet Emet Ministries are trying to reveal to students and reader from a host of different angles and perspectives. This reproduction of Augustine's quote from the "Father of Christian Theology" is hoped will become the "shot heard round the world" that will awaken the mass consciousness to the realization of the fantastic delusion of literalized and historicized Scriptural myths as found in the "Jesus Story" which has steeped the minds of untold millions in dumb superstition over so many centuries under the name of Roman and Protestant Christianity. This quote, when studied out and properly understood, is world-shaking in its implications.

This astonishing declaration was made in the early fourth century of our era. It can be asserted with little chance of refutation that if this affirmation of the pious Augustine had not sunk out of sight, but had been kept in open view through the period of Western history, the whole course of that history would have been vastly altered for the better. It is only too likely the case that the obvious implications of the passage were of such a nature that its open exploitation was designedly frowned upon by the ecclesiastical authorities in every age. It held the kernel of a great truth the common knowledge of which would have been a stumbling-block in the way of the perpetuation of priestly power over the general Christian mind.

Answer for yourself: And why was this?

It would have provoked inquiry, questions, and study, like mine and hopefully yours, and in so doing disarmed the ecclesiastical prestige of much of its power. When in Seminary when confronted with this and other passages I knew "something was wrong" but I could not, at that time, put my finger on it but I would in time through diligent and dedicated research and study over the years. The fruit of such studies is found today in my websites.

Answer for yourself: Do you realize that Augustine's quote is a point-blank repudiation of all the chief religious tenets on which the later structure of "literalized" and "carnalized" Christian tradition will rest along with its presentation of a "historical and literal Christ" having existed in the first century?

Every child born to Christian parents in eighteen centuries has been indoctrinated with the pure and simple belief that Christianity was a completely unique, new, and the first true, religion in world history; that it was granted to the world from God Himself and brought to earth by the sole divine emissary ever commissioned to convey God's truth to mankind. Christianity, through its own doctrines and missions, positioned itself to appear as if it was the only hope for the world to find God and His salvation and used fear of damnation as the catalyst for its various agendas. Literalized Christianity positioned itself to appear as if it was God's vehicle to extinguish the Ancient Spiritual Light and did so in redefining of the World's Ancient Wisdom and Spiritual Knowledge of the Ancients as nothing more than "Pagan darkness".

Augustine shatters this illusion with his quote of early Christianity being little more than a "reinterpretation" of Ancient Wisdom from the foundation of the world.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

Simply that what is called "Christianity" in the first century is not the same "Christianity" in the middle 3rd and 4th centuries! I have found from my studies and I invite the readers to do the same, that there is a big, big difference from early Christianity of, say, the first two centuries and the Christianity of the mid-2nd through the 5th centuries.

Answer for yourself: And what again is this change?

The prior understanding of God from an allegorical, symbolic, and metaphoric understanding of the Divine along with the allegorical and mystical understanding of "the Christ" will be utterly lost and destroyed through the efforts of the emerging Roman military and religious force and influence in the world and in its place the ignorant masses will be saturated with falsified religious texts which repudiate the earlier Ancient Wisdom and understanding of God and "the Christ".

Augustine asserts that from remotest antiquity there has always existed in the world the true religion given mankind by God that had existed among all nations for thousands and thousands of years. This "true" religion, this only revelation of God to man, had illuminated the intellects of the most ancient Sages, Prophets, Priests and Kings for thousands and thousands of years. It built the foundation for every national religion, whose tenets consisted of reformulations of its universal ageless principles of knowledge and wisdom.

Answer for yourself: And what were various names of this Divine "true religion" of God given to the Ancients?

It went under a variety of designations:

- Hermeticism in ancient Egypt;
- Orphism in early Greece;
- Zoroastrianism in Persia;
- Brahmanism in India;
- Taoism in China;
- Shintoism in Japan and China, etc.

Once you come to see and understand "God's true religion" from our studies and other websites and see it revealed to you as it was to the Ancients in the Heavens "Above" and in Nature "Below" then you will come to understand that in no matter what garbled and perverted form it would come to be devolved over time mankind always has had access to God's true religion.

Ps 14:2 2 The LORD looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God. (KJV)

Mystery cultism dramatized and ritualized this "One Religion of God" in many lands down through recorded history. The similarities about from nation to nation.

Answer for yourself: Why was that? Simply said the deepest Spiritual masters saw the same things in the Heavens and in Nature where God manifested Himself and His message to mankind.

Social gatherings around annual festivals at the equinoxes and solstices, nation's legends and folk-lore and myths carried "God's One True Religion" down the stream of time. Always has it existed among men; never was it not present in the world for God was repeatedly teaching "the same things" both "Above" and "Below" through the demonstration of the Laws of the Cosmos as seen in Heaven and Nature. Repeated yearly through repetitive cycles and patterns of God's Cosmos was this "religion" or this "message" understood as a "rehearsal" for all mankind till they come to the unity of 'the' faith". Over time, hardly ever apprehended at its real value, its representations badly misconceived, its message warped and travestied at every turn in popular practice, this one religion of God given to mankind yet existed and came down to Augustine's day for he knew it and was aware of its existence in the Christianity of "his day" despite new efforts to nullify and change it by men like Constantine and the Nicean council. Unknown to most Christians is the background of Augustine. He who had been reared early in the cult of Mani, with all its esoteric exposition of cosmogony, anthropology and theocracy. He would later set at the feet of Plotinus and from him transmitted to the new faith that took the name of Christianity Plotinus's three fundamental hypostases, the One, the Oversoul and the World Soul.

Answer for yourself: Do you know what this is (the One, the Oversoul and the World Soul)? This is the original Christian Trinity.

Knowing Augustine's instruction in philosophy, cosmogony, anthropology, and theocracy, then it is quite understandable that Augustine says in this famous quote that this "new religion" is not "new" after all, but he was rather only giving a new impetus in this new Age of Pisces to this old system of cabalistic truth, and for the first time it was called after the new Greek term provided by Hellenism for the central element of all true religion, the Christos or as Christianity as we are familiar with it today (Alvin Kuhn, Shadow Of The Third Century: A Revaluation of Christianity, p.4). Let us not forget that the earliest follows of "the Christ" in the first century were called "Chrestians" and not "Christians" no matter what the later written Second New Testament of Rome might say.

Understand thoroughly that it was as if Augustine had said that this exalted religion of Christianity has existed in the world from the beginning; this Ancient Wisdom Religion given to all mankind in the beginning of time has borne many names and been exploited in varied forms. But Augustine believed that it was to their merit that at last its has been given it the highest name it ever bore, Christianity, the religion of "the Christos" or "the Christ" which again is the Divine mediator between Energy - Spirit (God) and matter (the flesh of mankind) which is the divine principle in all men and women. Nowhere here is any place in Augustine's thoughts or beliefs is a "historical" Jesus Christ.

But things were to change and change rapidly for the seeds of this change has been planted now since the latter second century by men like Ignatius, Justin, and Irenaeus. The above is an accurate understanding of what Augustine believed and thought in the fourth fourth century. True was his statement-in part. For sadly the newly declared religion into which he had gravitated, that had indeed drawn every single item of its theology and its ritual, of its symbols and its festivals, from that antique code, had already, even as he wrote, so far lost or perverted every facet of that ancient light that it stood as a grotesque caricature, indeed even a flat inversion, of the glorious system of archaic truth. In fact the movement which Augustine was helping to start on its course, and which he called the "true" religion, "already" existent, was farther from being a continuation of that extolled earlier heritage than almost any other reformulation of it known to history, the direst and most tragic corruption of it in all the ages. Truly, had he really possessed the full and profound fundamentals and principles of that earlier Spiritual Mystery and Religious Tradition of the Ancients, he would have been keenly aware that the new development he was so unctuously leading, so far from being a straight perpetuation of that great tradition, was almost its total negation and obliteration. Such is the evil fruit that would come from the false "literalization" and "carnalization" of "the Christ within". Had he known what lays ahead for this "reiteration of Ancient Allegorical Spiritual Truth" and its later "literalization" he would have known that, instead of being a new presentation and revivification of that venerable wisdom-lore, the creed of his espousal was even then the certainty of its eventual death. It would take Rome 5 centuries to stamp out Gnosticism and the Ancient Wisdom Religion and force it "underground" to where it resides even today. Before Augustine passed off the scene, in the late fourth century, the religion of his fervent love had already desecrated the structure and prostituted the venerated Spiritual Message of that antecedent cultus, leaving it a meaningless jargon of inscrutable and conflicting creeds, empty formularies, uncomprehended rituals with its mass of conflicting Scriptural books, over which it was doomed to feud and bicker in mindless futility and venomous theological disputation for two full centuries. I speak of the separation of Eastern and Western Christianity in their doctrinal struggles over the centuries. Augustine, in his lifetime, failed to see that the new wave of religionism that he originally espoused had little right to the august Hellenic name of "Christ" which it had laid hold on, and which it had already degraded. He failed to see that this new cult, so far from republishing and reanimating that ancient tradition of sacred philosophy, was destined to smother and virtually extinguish that living truth of God and His Christ which had been handed down since the beginning of time. This "literalization" of previous Divine Allegorical Spiritual Truth, instead of lifting the world out of heathen darkness into the light, put out the great light that had so long shone and plunged the Western Hemisphere into darkness. And in that darkness it still lingers and gropes its uncertain way after eighteen hundred years.

For with the hatred of books, learning and philosophy already in full swing, the fell hostility of the new popular evangelism to anything savoring of culture and erudition had already swept out the arcane literature, and its frenzied course had not stopped until it had sent up in flames the most precious collection of books in the world at any time - the great Alexandrian library. Added to this tragic loss is Rome's obliteration of the last of the great Platonic Academies in the Hellenic world. After Justinian's order to close up the last Platonic school in the sixth century came the Dark Ages. And this period of ignorance, be it observed, extended precisely over the area covered by the spread of this spurious faith, and continued to throw its pall of ignorance and gloom upon this part of the world during the time of its dominance. Carrying its own darkness with it as it went, it yet has had the incredible nerve to call itself the light of the world, and to charge other cultures with generating the forces of darkness. Such is the story that few have heard and fewer still ever studied out for themselves.

Answer for yourself: How could a historical and literal Christ in the flesh, assumed to be Jesus, a dying and rising godman of the first century, be known by all mankind since the beginning of the human race unless this "Jesus Christ" is not "literal" or "historical" as we have been led to believe by Rome and their fictionalized New Testament?

Answer for yourself: Could this "Jesus Christ" of assumed history, this "Christ in the flesh" of a man that we read about in our New Testaments today, be the core of nothing more than the later "literalization" of the earlier mystical and allegorical Gnostic understanding of the Divine Descent of the Soul (the Christ) into matter, the flesh of all mankind and not limited to one person in Galilee as Rome has done?

Answer for yourself: Was this Spiritual Concept of mankind hosting God, the Divine Uncreated Intelligent Architect Energy of the Universe, in the fleshy human bodies of all mankind, be a Spiritual Concept that later became lost at the agenda and pens of Rome when they reinterpreted God and His Christ and confined it to one person who is not longer with us but is hoped to return at some later date?

Answer for yourself: Can you grasp the terrible damage done by Rome and their "historical Jesus Christ" to such a Spiritual Concept where mankind is given license for his moral failures and lack of righteous deeds and told to wait for the answer and forgiveness form Heaven which will come one day and fix everything when the true answer of God in His Christ lies slumbering in the hearts of mankind, unknown to most, awaiting its resurrection and awakening to empower man to be God's co-laborer in the continued Creation whereby this world would realize its ultimate goal and potential: "So Above, So Below"?

Remembering Galatians 4:19 and I Corinthians 3:16 for a second we remember how the Ancient Gnostics understood that the indwelling God of the Cosmos was birthed in some mystical way within all matter including the womb of all humanity. Each individual is in reality gestating a divinity within the very deeps of his own nature. Christianity has fervently exhorted us to look into the highest reaches of Heaven to find the unapproachable God. All the while the infant deity slumbers unheeded within the heart of mankind waiting for man to awaken to this true being hidden within him. All that is needed is the renewing of man's darkened mind to the Spiritual reality "asleep" within him...that he is the manifestation of the Divine in matter! That is why the Gnostics always said: "Know who you are, know from where you came, know to where you will go"!

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Christianity and its "carnalization" and "literalization" of the "Christ within" by Rome in the 3rd century has largely nullified the force of St. Paul's almost frantic cry to us: 1 Cor 3:16 16 Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? (KJV)

One can study and see for himself that down through recorded history the supreme Creator is given various names, such as "the First Cause", "the Great Spirit", "God", "the One", etc. The Ancients taught that Creative Energy emanates from this "One" and manifests in various ways, depending on the plane or level of existence that is involved. The Ancients called these manifestations "gods" and "goddesses. Sadly again we have been taught to believe that Ancient man believed in multiple gods but modern research has clarified much of this misunderstanding by showing that the Ancients understood that within this "One", this "Single Unity", are many manifestations more appropriately interpreted as the "attributes of God".

This brings us to a familiar concept once again. The Ancient Egyptian word, "neter", and its feminine form, "netert", have been wrongly, and possibly intentionally, translated by Christian preconditioning to "god" and "goddess", by almost all academicians. Neteru (plural of neter/netert) are accurately defined as the Divine Principles and functions of the One Supreme God. The Ancient Egyptians believed in One Unity, One God, who was self-produced, self-existent, immortal, invisible, eternal, omniscient, almighty, etc. This One God was represented through the functions and attributes of "His" domain (Spirit & Matter, Visible & Invisible). These attributes were called the "neteru" (masculine singular) and "neteru (feminine singular). The terms "gods" and "goddesses" are tragic misrepresentations of the Egyptian term "neteru". Simply the neter (God) is the source of everything and that exists, the Creator and Power or Force or Energy that sustains life and matter.

Let me begin by saying that all indigenous people have always believed in One God. This one God expressed Himself in many forms. This is often confusion to many of us, who were raised in the west especially under Protestant influence. But when you begin to understand that Neter (God) is the one and only Being that created everything you will see that everything that exists in nature, is nothing but another manifestation of the Greatness of Neter.

We, in this and the previous article, have spent some time to document just when and how mankind lost this Divine legacy and the fruit of this loss of this Gnosis and "keys" to proper interpretation of "the Christ". This is seen in the later quotes of Church authorities the least of which is not Pope Leo X and his famous quote on the historical Jesus Christ:

"What profit has not that fable of Christ brought us!" Pope Leo X.

We will show on this website as we have on others by our Ministry that the emanation of living streams of being, energy, and intelligence from the "First Cause", called the Ayn Sof, the first fount of all things, was later "carnalized" and "historicized" by Roman Christianity in the 3rd century; the result of which is the "literalized Jesus Story". Plato, drawing from the fount of earlier Egyptian understandings of the Divine in the Cosmos, represented in his writings this "life in the Spirit/Energy of the Cosmos" as unfolding from within itself at the beginning of a new period of manifestation, and proceeding outward or downward from a summit of pure spirit into ever-denser forms of creation and matter. Think of a "ladder" between Heaven and Earth and you have the idea. This One Life pours forth its power and essence in streams, called "rivers of vivification", "from on high as far as to the last of things," bringing all forms of life into existence and ensouling all forms with more or less of its own mighty being. At each step of the way out, or down, this life takes embodiment in coarser forms of cosmic matter, thus giving birth to the greater and lesser gods of various ranks. For the gods and goddesses are but forces and powers in the Cosmos that are part of this One Unity(neteru) and as such are embodiments of the several grades and forms of nature's life, power and intelligence. The whole creation forms a chain of beings reaching from the lowest mineral crystals to the highest God. Somewhere in this chain stands man, and Plato tells us where it is. Humanity occupies a place of great strategic importance in the hierarchy, standing precisely at the point of junction between the highest animal and the truly human kingdom. Man is the creature that is fashioned to bridge the gap between the animal and the divine order. Hence his nature is compounded of the two elements, the animal and the godlike, in one organism, making it possible for the higher to "lift up" or humanize the lower "nature".

Answer for yourself: Is it any wonder why this Bible is full of terminology of such a tension between such two realms of existence and opposing forces or termed another way "dualism" (light vs dark; good vs bad; spirit vs flesh, etc.)?

In his Timaeus Plato gives us the remarkable speech of the Demiurgus (Creative Logos) to the "junior gods," who were the divine beings commissioned by the Lords of Karma to come to earth and be the gods embodied in an animal race that had no chance of reaching the next level of evolution without such tutelage. In it the Demiurgus enjoins the deities to come to earth and "unite mortal with immortal natures," promising them that they would "never be dissolved," if they held fast to their oath of purity and the covenant which they made with their Overlord.

Answer for yourself: What is Plato speaking about?

This is the covenant in the Old Testament which the Lord tells the Children of Israel (mankind as vessels for the indwelling Spirit of God) that they have broken times without number. For the gods (the neteru), once incarnated in fleshly bodies, fell under the cloud of oblivion and "drank the waters of Lethe, lost their divine memory and went "the way of all flesh" into carnality and beastliness. Lethe is the name for the supposed allegorical river in Hades whose waters caused forgetfulness. But after rebellion they finally came to earth, incarnated in mortal bodies of flesh and thus linked a divine principle of intelligence with a body and a sensual animal nature. And this fact is the basis of all religion; namely the descent of the Spirit into matter as human beings thereby being but an imperfect image of God in the flesh and we don't remember from where we have come. The Ancients taught that man is both a "god" (small "G") and a "beast" capable of the greatest evils residing in one organism (matter, flesh). In reality he is a "god" tabernacling in the flesh of an animal.

Ps 82:6 6 I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High. (KJV)

John 10:34 34 Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods? (KJV)

Further proof of this concept is to be found in the Book of Daniel, chapter 3 and 5, where we find the King, who represents the divine soul, that he shall come to live with the animals and be given the mind of an animal. A hundred texts from the old books confirm this statement of the linking of the two diverse natures in one organism (in our case the human being). And this great basic fact is the heart of Theosophy. Theosophy is a System of philosophy and religious thought that believes that the truest knowledge comes not through reason or senses, but through a direct communication of the soul with the Divine Reality.

We have, then, beginning with Egypt and continuing on in Greek philosophy the "descent of the soul" or the advent of the gods. This is equated in the old Christian tradition by the legend of "the fall of the angels," the fall of Lucifer. I will explain the Lucifer reference in a following article. This same Law of Incubation is outlined in full by the Prodigal Son allegory, and hinted at in many other places in the Bible but goes unnoticed by most by our preconditioning to take everything we read in the Bible as if "literal truth". If you do the studies and fail to notice the parallels in the "Jesus Story" to comparative religions as well as fail to see that they "key" to the proper interpretation of the "Jesus Story" is found in an allegorical approach to understanding the hidden mysteries of the Soul that lay beneath the surface of these "personifications" then your efforts in apprehending Divine Truth in this Bible will be the most unfruitful venture you have ever undertaken.

We as human beings are on earth, then, to come to self-consciousness of our true existence as divinities, but to do it by working through and with an animal as a lower level of the creative order. Simply said we are here to educate, refine, humanize and finally Divinize, an animal! We are in bodies, which properly are not ours, but those of the animal Soul, who is our instinctual lower self. We are assigned the duty of "taming" this creature and conforming it to ways of intelligence and brotherhood. We must teach it the better way of curbing its savage instincts, its lusts and greed inherited from its wild experience in the animal orders, and must lead it upward to a final assimilation into the nature of the angel, its tutor.

Answer for yourself: But how was the god to link his higher nature with the body of the animal so far below his stature?

The purpose of the Torah is to transform us. Our purpose in life is to become like the Creator, thereby becoming one with Him. If this is to happen we must sanctify this animal flesh and elevate it spiritually through the evolution and perfection of our Souls. This is based in the spiritual law that when two spiritual beings are exactly alike, they become one. Once we become one with the Creator, we are one with endless joy and happiness, one with fulfillment, for this is the essence of the Creator and the purpose for our existence.

The very fundamentals of religion are interwoven with the answer to this question. For religions grew out of this relation between the god and his animal protege. Religions were not originally forms of mere cult sentimentalism and piety. They were regimes of ritual and ethical practice designed to keep man in memory of his divine estate, and to hold him to the obligations of the "broad oaths fast sealed" (Empedocles) of his covenant to raise up the lower self, while keeping himself "unspotted from the world." The technique of our incarnation is philosophically described under the terms of the great Law of Incubation.

We move now to the third and final article in this introductory series where we deal with the Laws of Dismemberment and Remembrance.

RESTORING THE "KEYS" TO PROPER BIBLICAL INTERPRETATION OF THE BIBLE "THE CHRIST" #3

We left off the earlier article in this series speaking of how Divinity had been lodged in the holy of holies of the temple of each human body. Emanuel (God with us) "literally" had come to dwell with mankind. This we saw was called by the Ancient Spiritual Masters the Law of Incubation.

The second Law that Plato teaches us about and which was taught by the Ancient Egyptians is the Law of Dismemberment. When one sees how extensively this Law of Dismemberment was featured in the Book of the Dead and other books of wisdom, it becomes next to incomprehensible how it fell into total desuetude in the Christian system. For it is the key to the divinity of man and the humanity of the god. It is the basic principle beneath our understanding of all Christology. It gives us the entire rationale of the incarnation.

Briefly the Law of Dismemberment is thus set forth: as a principle of Ancient's religious systems, beginning with Egypt and finding its high water mark in Plato's philosophy, we come to understand this Ancient Wisdom as the division or partition of unit divine nature or essence into multiple fragments, the breaking up of the Oneness of God into many portions or gods. As the principle back of the incarnation, it is the breaking of the unified life of the god on his own high plane into fragments for the sake of taking lodgment in multiple bodies. Plato informs us that as the one life flows forth or descends into manifestation, the farther it proceeds from its source in homogeneity, the weaker is its power and the more numerous is its fragmentation. At each step of the descent it must suffer a reduction of its total force, which can only be effected by "partition" into fragments. The Great Light breaks up into lesser lights, the Great Fire into lesser sparks. A perfect analogy is seen in the letting fall of any large compact body of water or other liquid from a high place; it is thrown into infinite small particles by the opposition of the air and other causes. Deity breaks up into fragments as it descends, and according to the New Testament miracle there were twelve groups of these "fragments."

Answer for yourself: How could the total power and enormous energy of the god be embodied in the brain and nervous system of a single human body? It would "blow out the fuse" of any man to be suddenly subjected to the full dynamic power of such an energy as that represented by a god. One does not feed a child a whole loaf of bread, but gives it only fragments. So we, as mankind, are fed on the broken bread of life.

Answer for yourself: How again could the divine nature and power be made universally accessible to all men, or distributed amongst them, without dividing itself into fragments, so that a portion might be given to each individual? It is supremely simple; yet this simple principle underlying all theology has been lost out of Christian doctrines. And the world has been rent with bitter warfare, and much of the most sordid inhumanity to man ever known has been perpetrated, because this basic understanding was lost out of theology. The full power of divinity is too high for us to sustain; it would wreck our organism. So we receive each one a reduced portion--all we can contain.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that there various accounts from the ancient religious world of the god being dismembered.

Answer for yourself: When did this story begin? Well, like all religions, it genesis and origin began with Egypt who understood this Divine Spiritual Concept first of all nations. The myths of the ancient gods in many cases convey this deep meaning in the form of the (symbolic) cutting of the body of the god in pieces, which are scattered over the earth, later to be reassembled by the Son, who restores the deity whole. Even with these fables of Osiris, Dionysus, Tammuz, Mithra and many others hinting at the plain truth, Christian blindness has gone on perverting the basic meaning of the Eucharist.

The principle explains for the first time also the significance of the phrase, the Lord of Hosts. As each Lord divides into a host of fragments, it is a simple matter to see him in his divided totality as a Lord of a Host. Plato indeed says, "Each superior god becomes the leader of a multitude, engendered from himself," his split fragments.

Osiris is the prototype for all later sungods and all later "Jesus Stories". In the myth of Osiris we find that he was cut up into fourteen pieces by Typhon or Set (the destructive force), to allow for his entry into matter. Isis, the great mother, gives birth to Horus, son of Osiris and the god risen into our earthly human life. Isis, the great Mother, found she was pregnant with Horus on August 23, the day the sun enters the zodiac sign of Virgo. How apt to designate the "conception" of the Divine Soul in matter with this symbolism. Virgo, an earth sign, is represented as a young woman holding an ear of wheat. In Egypt Virgo was called the "house of bread" (Beth-lehem in Hebrew). The god, symbolized by bread, is "food" for mortals. In like manner, and in a parallel myth, we find the same Divine teaching that Dionysus, a sungod symbolic for the Creator, was torn apart then made whole by Demeter. When seen in this light, the meaning of the crucifixion is obvious. The crucifixion and death of the god, as told in the myths of the sungods, was not an historical event, but a retelling of the age old story of the mystical death of the Divine Uncreated Intelligent Energy of the Cosmos (God) to allow Him to enter the human physical plane of existence.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the crucifix (a man on the cross) only came into being with Pope Gregory late in the 6th century? For their first 500 hundred years Christians used the simple cross (without any figure on it) as their major symbol. The cross is an ancient understood by the earliest followers of the Christ (Gnostics) to be a simple symbol depicting the union of spirit and matter (the intersection of two planes of existence...Spirit/Matter) and we find it again beginning in Egypt with the cross of Egypt called the ankh. The circle symbolizes Eternal Life and the cross below it represents the material plane (the intersection of Divine Energy and Matter). The Ankh is called the "Crux Ansata," it is of Egyptian origin and can be traced to the Early Dynastic Period, appearing frequently in artwork of various material and in relief, depicting the Gods.

It was common among the Ancients for bread to be used as symbol of the god's body and Divine powers to be transferred to humans. The bread has to be broken and then multiplied in order to reach all humans: Most Christians are not aware that in the heart of its own chief rite of formalism (the Eucharist in Catholicism and Communion in Protestantism) this great doctrine lives in unsuspected wholeness. St. Paul makes a specific announcement of it in I Corinthians 11:23-24:

1 Cor 11:23-24 23 For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread: 24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What lies behind such a story?

Here we find hidden in this simple story the fragmentation of the god announced at the very heart of the Christian Eucharist! The body of the god, in the form of His "Christ" (Messiah) is broken for all mankind and has come to tabernacle in the flesh of mankind. If the Christian Church had all along known what "the broken body of our Lord" meant in terms of Platonic philosophy, the whole course of western history would have been altered mightily. Instead it quarreled over the Greek word rendered "broken" in futile negation of its true meaning, and missed the true gleam of the light of the world.

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you (God in you), the hope of glory: (KJV)

The main symbol in all Christian ritual is the breaking of a piece of bread into fragments and distributing them out among the communicants! The Eucharistic symbolism of eating the Lord's body has likewise been missed.

Answer for yourself: What can it mean beyond partaking spiritually of his spiritual nature? "God is a spirit" and can be assimilated only spiritually. To convey this idea to dull mortal comprehension the ancient sages devised the outward rite, actually eating symbolic bread and drinking symbolic wine, and Christian literalists have argued (and fought) for centuries over the question whether the actual life of deity was or was not in the elements themselves!

Answer for yourself: In the light of such situations as this, and it can be duplicated in scores of other doctrines, how can any one fail to see the world's need of the Ancient Wisdom, and the restoration of the luminous Platonic Theosophy?

The writer of the Gospel of John has told us in ringing passages about "that bread which came down from heaven, whereof if a man eat he shall hunger no more." "For he who eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life."

It is impossible to realize except by long study and reflection to what extent the literalization of the Bible and the Gospel narrative has deprived the human mind of the intellectual nourishment on which it was expected to feed. None but one who has examined these ancient allegories and seen point by point how they have been turned into fruitless and meaningless miracles and earthly incidents, can appreciate the enormity of the miscarriage of ancient truth in its symbolic transmission to modern "intelligence." It is, when fully seen, the most monstrous marvel of ignorance and superstition perhaps in human history. The ancients used outward nature and human actions to type spiritual truth. We have converted their spiritual allegories into the merest outward shell of truth, because Christianity became predominantly a movement among the ignorant.

Thus we see in this simple ritual the rehearsal of the Divine Truth that God has projected a ray of His own life into humans. In man the Divine seed is the Christos. Egypt called it the "Karest" but names may change but the Divine Concept is what is of importance. The cosmic God is hardly an object of worship by humanity; but that segmented portion of infinite Being that is tabernacled within the flesh of mortals that is the actual divinity assigned to receive the attention and homage of mankind. The closest we come to finding God is when we look within and listen to that still small voice within and come to be merge our Spirit and Flesh into oneness.

In Plato's Timaeus and other ancient documents twelve junior gods, who were sparks of the eternal Flame of cosmic mind, came to earth to lift up humans from their animal nature to realize their Divine Souls within. Our earthly task, according to Paul, is to link together the two natures in "one new man", bringing to an end in a final "reconciliation" "the battle of Armageddon", the unending warfare between the carnal mind of the animal and the spiritual mind of the god. St. Paul said:

1 Cor 6:19 19 What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? (KJV)

Religion is far more than a attitude of mystical feeling; it was in origin a series of codes, principles, fundamentals, essentials, and practices given by the those of deep Spiritual sensitivity to early mankind to awaken the lethargic genius of our actual divinity slumbering within. Later these actions were "ritualized" and immortalized for all time in various Law codes seen in the history of Egypt and Israel and other nations like Babylon. These Laws of God, when obeyed, like the Torah and the 42 Negative Confessions in Egypt, provide man with the vehicle and essential knowledge that enables him to press forward in his evolutionary development from the animal nature to the Divine nature. Ignorance, illiteracy, wars, selfishness, hatred, folly, and antisemitism by the Christian Church down through its history almost banished this knowledge from all humans. Our present business is to struggle to regain that lost knowledge and actuate it in our lives.

The concept of the god within is well stated in The Litany of the Sun, inscribed on the Tombs of the Kings of ancient Thebes:

"The Kingly Osiris [the Christ] is an intelligent Essence. His Limbs conduct Him; His 'Fleshes' open the way for Him. Those who are born from him create Him. They rest when they cause the Kingly Osiris to be born. It is He who causes them to be born. It is he who engenders them. It is he who causes them to exist. His Birth is the Birth of Ra in Amenti [this world]. He causes the Kingly Osiris to be born; He causes the birth of Himself" (G.R.S. Mead, The Gnostic Crucifixion, London, 1907, p. 61).

It must be understood that no human being is God and no human can ever be God. Using the Sun as an analogy, we can see that there is a tiny bit of Sun energy in plants and living creatures. No one in their right mind would claim that they were the Sun because they had this tiny Sun spark within. Likewise, there is a tiny bit of God's energy in humans, but woe to anyone who thinks that he is God.

If you have done any study into Gnosticism or even the authentic Paul then we find the subject of which they most often speak, these "spiritualists" and their ancient scriptures, is of the Soul, this "God's energy", being trapped in the prison of the body.

Rom 7:24 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? (KJV)

But the way out of this "body of death" is not to disdain the body and seek a life of pure spirit through mistaken asceticism. We can not escape our obligation to the animal who is lending us his body for our Soul's own advancement. Our task is to sanctify our bodies and all actions taken by us and this is accomplished by living according to our Covenants and Commandments contained within them. We, as "living gods" and Souls, and fragments of God's energies, came to transform these brute bodies and the environments in which we live. That is why the teachings in Judaism are so precious for they deal with this in detail as they focus on life and "attaining in this life" through proper deeds as opposed to Christianity which is focused on death and "attaining after death" which again is based on what one "does" but what one "believes". You have to have the right doctrine but this seem ludicrous in light of over 2,000 different Christian denominations and differences in their beliefs in Jesus. I have found that one of these world religions is a false "credal" faith while the other, Judaism, the legacy of Egypt, is the proper expression of mankind's faith since based upon deeds which mould the Soul. One religion has it right, Judaism, and one has it wrong, Christianity, as I have been saying for years. I take joy living as a "godfearer" in the tents of Shem practicing a Jewish faith for the non-Jew.

Now get ready for a startling revelation. According to Plato and the ancients, Hades, whom most connect in Christianity with a "burning and punishing hell", was not a place of punishment for departed human Souls as it is taught today. Again the meaning of so much Ancient spiritual knowledge has been changed by the Christian theologians down through history to instill fear into people since knowing that fear is a great motivator and Rome certainly built its strength and Empire on such fears. "Hades", as taught by the Ancients, is this earth, which is the realm of death of the Divine Soul (trapped in matter). The gods, these neteru, these Forces and Powers of God, came to descend into matter, symbolically dying so that we mortals might live. "Death" is nothing more than the transition of energy from one state to another. Life never ceases to exist. A Soul never ceases to exist just as energy never vanishes. It continues. It spreads. It has consequences and similar ripples effects just as that person's choices and energy had during their life on this world. When humans have this right understanding of "who are they, where they have come from, and to where they go when they die, then they can birth the god, the Christ, asleep within them and thus uplift their earthly existence. If they fail then they remain "dead" men and women walking!

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

These to whom Paul spoke were alive but yet "dead" to the truth of who they really are. Notice if you will that Paul says that when we awaken to our true Spiritual identity then the "awakened Christ within" becomes our teacher. Thus the emphasis on "knowledge" and "knowing" in ancient Christian Gnosticism. We must know whom we really are and the real message of God to us along with our moral and spiritual responsibilities while here.

The Ancients taught for thousands of years that as long as people are ignorant of their Divine purpose, the gods are dead and lie asleep within each of mankind, and this earth has become Hades or the underworld to the gods. When we awaken to the Divine Soul within, we bring it to life, and in the words of St. Paul "Death is swallowed up in victory." Hell as a place of punishment in an after-life is simply a teaching of repression, widely used by the Church down through history in its "reinterpretation" of Ancient Wisdom. A just God does not deal out eternal punishment. The worst "punishments" we face are in this life. If we do not nurture the Divine Soul here and now, we punish ourselves by not achieving our true potential. A proper understanding of the Ancient Wisdom gives not only a correct understanding of Hades and Hell but also a correct understanding of Judgement. Judgement occurs here and now on this earthly plane of existence. Moral responsibility resides solely in the kingdom of man who is poised on the highest plane of existence between Spirit and matter. Man is the only creature in evolution so placed on actual division and plane between Spirit and matter. We are almost home. Thus so man is weighed on the scales of the balance, to see if his heart is so spiritualized as to be light as a feather! This again bring to mind how Egypt taught this concept for thousands of years. They called it the "weighing of the heart against truth".

One only has to study the Ancient Religion of Egypt to see the emphasis on the weighing of man's heart again the truth symbolized by a feather. The view that there is a once only Day of Judgement, to occur at an unknown time, abrogates human responsibility. It can cause unjustified fear, or a "drink and be merry tomorrow we die" approach to life. The symbolism of the Ancient Scriptures shows that man is the author of his destiny and is judged by his own actions daily. The ball is squarely in the court of man, and he must take responsibility for his actions each day of his life. Man sows and reaps in this life, either learning the Spiritual lessons intended for the further evolution of his Soul or not.

So we have seen the Divine Soul "fall from Heaven" into matter. The Divine Soul "falls" to earth and incarnates in human beings. Now hold on to your hat for this will be hard for most of you to listen to let alone grasp but it just goes to show you how much has changed and been "reinterpreted" by Roman Christianity and how much of the earliest Divine and Spiritual Truths invested in mankind had been altered and adulterated beyond recognition today. I wish to speak of this "falling" of the Light or Soul of God into matter using different and startling metaphors as was used by the Ancients. The word I wish to focus upon is Lucifer, the light bringer, which the Bible describes as "coming to earth."

Answer for yourself: How did he come to Earth?

We have already seen the Divine Soul becomes trapped in the animal body and originally this "falling of the Divine Soul into physical matter" , and this God, as Divine Light and Energy falling and integrating into matter, was called Lucifer. That's right, God was called Lucifer before Christianity will later reinterpret the term "Lucifer" in this voracious anti-Gnosticism.

Answer for yourself: Can you grasp what I just said? Originally God and His Christ was called "Lucifer" before Rome reinterprets it and turns this Divine Religious Concept into Satan!

This is 180 degrees opposite from its original meaning held by the Ancients for thousands of years. This only goes to show you the degree of degradation of Divine Truth at the hands of antisemitic Rome during the early centuries of its existence and separation from its mother faith....Biblical Judaism. Let me explain more.

"Lucifer" is the Latin term originally used by the Romans to refer to the planet Venus when that planet was west of the sun and hence rose before the sun in the morning, thereby being the morning star. The same planet was called Hesperus, Cesperugo, Vesper, Noctifer, or Nocturnus, when it appeared in the heavens after sunset. Although 19th and 20th century occultists would equate other goddesses such as Astarte, Ashtoreth, Lilith, Isis, Semeramis, Mari, and Ishtar with Venus, links between the cultures and attributes represented are not historically clear. Lucifer as a personification is called a son of Astraeus and Aurora or Eos, of Cephalus and Aurora, or of Atlas. He is called the father of Ceyx, Daedalion, and of the Hesperides. Lucifer is also a surname of several goddesses of light, such as Artemis, Aurora, and Hecate (Sir William Smith, Smaller Classical Dictionary).

The word appears to have entered the Christian religious lexicon when the Hebrew expression in Isaiah 14:12, "HeYLeL BeN-ShaCHaR" (meaning "bright son of the morning/dawn," "bright [and] morning star," "glowing morning star," or "shining one, son of the dawn") was translated to "Phosphorus" (the Greek word for Venus as the morning star) in the Septuagint, and then translated into "Lucifer" in the Vulgate (from the Greek Septuagint) (see E. Theodore Mullen, Jr., The Assembly of the Gods: The Divine Council in Canaanite and Early Hebrew Literature, Harvard Semitic Monograph Series No. 24, Scholar's Press: 1980). Isaiah 14, taken as a whole, is a parable, or prophecy of denunciation against the Kings of Babylon (people), specifically Tiglath-pileser III (this is a man not a literal "devil" or "demon"). In verse 12, the prophet characterizes the arrogance of Tiglath-pileser III as if the king had thought himself fit to appear in the sky as the morning star, but has fallen to earth, being brought low by the vengeance of the Lord against those who would exalt themselves and persecute the Lord's people (i.e., the Israelites). We are not speaking about Satan here and only because we fail to understand and interpret our Bibles allegorically when necessary we fall prey to the most unsound interpretations and obtuse doctrines imaginable.

Origenes Adamantius (185 C.E. - 254 C.E.), an important Christian scholar of the early Greek Church, and Augustine of Canterbury (d. May 26 604/605 C.E.), founder of the Christian Church in southern England, were some of the earliest Christians to both interpret and use of the term Lucifer as a reference to the Devil. The name Lucifer was applied to Satan by St. Jerome and later to the demon of sinful pride by Milton in Paradise Lost. Neither can we complete such a summary without mentioning the early Christian Father Origen and his influence in not only connecting the name "Lucifer" and "Satan" but actually "adding the name Lucifer" to the Old Testament when the original Hebrew Scriptures never had it in Isaiah in the first place. Origen added to the Word of God and today the world believes completely opposite about Lucifer than did the ancients who saw this "Lightbearer" originally referring to God and His Christ who descended into "matter" and was "crucified on the cross of matter" in His "fall" and "descent" to save the lost incarnated Soul of mankind. Amazing! To see how this adulteration of the Scriptural texts was accomplished in our Christian Bibles you only need to click the link.

The word "satan" is from a Hebrew word, "sathane", meaning adversary or calumniator; in original Jewish usage (see the book of Job), the satan is the adversary, not of God, but of mankind!; i.e., the angel charged by God with the task of proving that mankind is an unworthy creation (Owen C. Whitehouse, A Dictionary of the Bible Vol IV. ed. James Hastings. New York. Charles Scribner's Sons: 1908. pp. 407-12). Note though, that Balaam's satan (Numbers 22:23-33) protects him from harm. This seems strange from one who we have been taught to have come only to "kill, steal, and destroy". Something is amiss here.

Later, as Judaism absorbed such ideas as Zoroastrian dualism and concepts about angels during the Exile, and then as Christianity echoed various concepts from earlier religions, the concept of an evil power ruling an underground domain of punishment for the wicked became fixed in Christian doctrine. In such a doctrine, elements of the Graeco-Roman god Pluto/ Vulcan/ Hephaestus, the Underworld, and various aspects of Nordic/Teutonic mythology may be traced.

The Latin name of Phosphorus, Venus as the morning star, is the light bringer which heralds the dawn. The name is sometimes applied to the planet as the evening star as well, although Hesperus is properly its name then. By a curious chain of reference, the passage in Luke 10:18 was thought to refer to Isaiah 14:12, in which the star is used metaphorically for the monarch of Babylon. Thus Lucifer became the chief of the fallen angels, the name carried by Satan before his rebellion (Funk & Wagnall Standard Dictionary of Folklore, Mythology & Legend).

"From a supposed reference to this passage in our Lord's words. 'I beheld Satan fallen as lightning from heaven' (Lk 10:18), in connection with Rev 9:1-11 (the language of 9:1 being in part probably derived from this passage), the word "Lucifer" came in the Middle Ages to be a common appellation of Satan. The star of Rev 9:1-11 is a fallen angel who has given to him the key of the abyss, from which he sets loose upon the Earth horribly formed locusts with scorpions' tails, who have, however, power to hurt only such men as have not the seal of God on their foreheads. But this angel is not actually identified with Satan by the writer of the Apocalypse. The imagery in it was no doubt suggested by a meteor, and possibly it was so in Revelation also" (F.H. Woods, loco citato). While some authors referred to Lucifer as Satan's name before his expulsion from Heaven, others referred to Lucifer and Satan as two distinct entities. Both as a literary convention and as Christian teachings or belief, historically there would appear to be little consensus. Regardless, it should be clear that an author may use the terms Lucifer or Luciferian and not be referring to Satan. Now back to our study but don't forget that originally "Lucifer" was not understood as "evil" but referred to God and His Christ as he descended into "matter" and "human beings" originally before the later Christian "reinterpretation". Possibly not greater loss of truth can be found than this.

The Ancients teach us that the Divine Soul needs the animal nature in order to progress. It needs an opponent to wrestle with so that it can develop its powers. A law of the Cosmos and Physics states that resistance builds strength and the Soul has come to finish its evolution and maturation. William Blake wrote: "Without Contraries is no progression" (Marriage of Heaven and Hell). Christianity does not understand this dynamic process, and thereby makes it virtually impossible for the Divine Soul to achieve its evolutionary task.

So as you are seeing Christianity has "reinterpreted" and "changed the meanings" of many "religious doctrines" as they first existed and were handed down to successive generations since the beginning of time. No doctrine can have a greater impact when changed that that of "the Christ" which we sadly find to be altered almost beyond recognition today due to the efforts of Rome to cover up the Ancient Wisdom. Now hold onto you hats one more time for I wish to mention in summary fashion what this website will explore and prove beyond any doubt.

I and other scholars believe that it is of the utmost importance to go beyond the idea of an historical Jesus so that we can get to the real meaning of Christianity and the ancient wisdom. We have addressed on other sites as we will do again on this one that there is no hard proof of any works that were written when Jesus was supposed to be alive. I have addressed such topics as the impact of the Dead Sea Scrolls on the historical Jesus, the evidence from Jewish sources on the historical Jesus, evidence from Roman sources on the historical Jesus, what the Jews actually believed in the earliest centuries about a presumed historical Jesus in the first century, (part1, part 2), as well as the impact of superstition upon the historical Jesus, as well if a "Jesus Christ" could have lived in the distant past. These are astounding studies that every Christian needs to read.

As a Christian we were taught that God was supposed to have appeared as a man 2,000 years ago, yet no one bothered to write a thing about it at the time! Paul (64-68 A.D.) makes no mention of an historical Jesus, and if anyone was to do so you expect it to be Paul. As Christianity was the religion for the Age of Pisces, it is not surprising that its origins are surrounded in mystery. The Ancients taught that Neptune, the ruler of Pisces, throws its mystifying veil over things. This is exactly what is done with Jesus Christ. A historical saviour is for the uninitiated masses, while the initiates know that the Christ is within. Christianity sowed confusion and distorted the Ancient truth of "the Christ" by losing the distinction between inner and outer teachings.

There is no problem in proving the existence of various people from ancient times, such as Plato, Aristotle, Julius Caesar, and so on but there sure is when it comes to Jesus, the supposed Jewish Messiah of Christianity and the only one who is "God in the flesh". Because there is so much controversy over an historical Jesus all "believers" are entitled to approach the question of Jesus with a healthy skepticism. Ironically history documents that the further away we get from the alleged Jesus, the greater is claimed to be the knowledge of him. This is impossible unless it is being "made up". This "increased knowledge of Jesus" as the centuries roll on is the reverse in cases of historical people. Real people are best known during their own lives, and as time passes memories fade and facts get distorted. In the first century Jesus was an airy and ethereal figure, yet centuries later people could describe his appearance, moods and motives in meticulous detail! In fact on television the other night they had a "CSI" reconstruction of what the childhood face of Jesus looked like. There is no end to this deception. One is entitled to probe the alleged historical reality, that is if you want the truth.

Christian scriptures were based on the ancient wisdom, then the Christians destroyed the original manuscripts to hide the true origins of their creed. Gerald Massey in Ancient Egypt the Light of the World has shown that the story of Jesus is a retelling of the story of Horus, the prototype saviour god. This prototype had different names throughout the ancient world. The name Jesus can be traced to the Egyptian Iusa, which means God the son, the prince, the heir. There are some twenty or more figures bearing the name Jesus (Joshua, Jesse, Hosea, Isaiah, Isaac, Esau, Josiah, Joash, Jehoaz, Job, Jonah, Joel and others) in the Old Testament and outside of it (Alvin Kuhn, Who Is The King of Glory, Academy Press, 1944, p. 544). Pictures of Jesus as a young bearded man clearly originate from Serapis, a Graeco-Egyptian saviour god. Blavatsky has shown that Chrestian was the name given to initiates in ancient Greece, long before the advent of the religion called Christianity. The facts keep building and building that Rome has given the world a counterfeit religion and a historical Jesus when none can be found back then or today with the aid of modern scholarship.

It is claimed that an historical Jesus is an example to uplift humankind. I wish it were true but we cannot build prisons fast enough in this Christian nation which are overfilled with "born again Christians". If this were so it has not worked very well, as attested by various Christian horrors over the centuries and the abominations of the Church in the Dark Ages.

Answer for yourself: If there was one reason why the forging of a historical Jesus is wrong besides his worship which is idolatry as defined by the Hebrew Torah then what is it?

The Divine element residing within every child of God has been taken away along with its emphasis and nurture and placed historically in only one figure...that of an assumed historical person which never lived as depicted in the Christian Bible

It is no wonder that Christians wiped out the ancient knowledge. It was a shining pearl of wisdom compared to their blatant counterfeits. The power of the god within is a truly liberating concept. It means that humans are masters of their destiny and cannot be belittled if the truth is known. We have to realize our Divine nature.

We have to give birth to a god presence in our lives. This is a truly noble and uplifting task. Political Christianity was hell-bent on placing people in religious bondage, therefore they did their utmost to destroy the ancient truth and Ancient Wisdom teachings. Christianity introduced the concept of sin to disempower the general population, and the Church monopolized all religious power. Thanks to archeology today as well as modern scholarship we can now understand the awesome truth of the ancient wisdom and expose the deceits of repressive Christianity. It is now the time to let the true light shine, and dispel eighteen centuries of superstition and murky gloom.

I have found repeatedly in my studies over these many years that in the 3rd century the "train jumped the track" and truth was submerged under deceit and lies as Gentile Roman Christianity discarded it roots. People didn't rush to Christianity in droves as they tell you in Sunday school. If you study history you find that Rome, through the sword, blood and terror, almost eradicated this Ancient Wisdom from this planet. Thank God for archeologist which have dug it up for the last two hundred years. Over the history of the Christian Church and their repressive religion millions have been slaughtered who would not accept "Orthodoxy" and the rest were "converted" out of fear to save their lives. I have read scholars that say the Holocaust and the loss of 6 million lives is "small potatoes" to the estimated slaughter of 18 million people by Orthodox Christianity down through the Dark Ages; people who refused to accept a "false Christ". One example will have to server for lack of space. Treatment of the Gnostic Cathars was atrocious. Secular rulers used torture to maim the heretics, and anyone who refused to do this was themselves punished. The Fourth Lateran Council, which authorized the state to punish religious dissenters, also authorized the state to confiscate all of land and property of the Cathars, resulting in a very nice incentive for state officials to do the church's bidding. Finally, Innocent III launched a Crusade against the Cathar heretics, turning the suppression into a full military campaign. As if that was not enough thousands of temples and sacred groves were destroyed and Ancient worship was outlawed, often on pain of death. The world's libraries and their sacred volumes went up in flames as the Roman presence made itself known along with the spread of their false "Christ". In 529 Emperor Justinian closed down the last school of philosophy. The Church of Rome ruled for over a thousand years and repressed the truth of "the Christ" as they do today. It was the Church which instigated the Dark Ages. We still have the legacy with us today in a totally distorted view of life. The inhumanity and brutality of the "Christian" Churches over the last 1800 years has been well documented: the inquisitions of torture and killing, the "witch" burnings, sexism and sex repression, destruction of indigenous people and their cultures, and support of harsh ruling elites. Also the suppression of knowledge and the promotion of superstition. And all of this to cover up that Rome had come to power through teaching a "false historical Christ".

There is still much discussion over the origins of Christianity. Little wonder, as some of the early fathers made things as cloudy as possible in order to hide the origins of their doctrines. Modern scholarship today shows how Christianity began as a restatement of the ancient wisdom, then over the next 3-4 centuries the Ancient Wisdom teachings were terribly distorted. We are without excuse today for not knowing the truth behind our Christianity. Let me give you just a few truths of history that few Christians will ever know. The official four gospels were written by many hands, and the first time they were quoted was c.185 A.D. by Irenaeus. That really got my attention in Seminary when the tradition is that they were written early but no Christian quoted from them or mentioned them by name for almost 200 years. Justin Martyr in 145-149 names no names nor gospels. Many works of Origen, an early Christian, were destroyed and later he was anathematized (i.e. cursed and excommunicated) in order to destroy the allegorical interpretation of the texts which had been the standard method of interpretation of "the Christ" since the beginning of time. In 391 A.D. Christians burnt 700,000 scrolls from the 700 year old library at Alexandria. The Bible was closely guarded by the Church for 1,000 years and often if you were found to possess parts of it your life ended at the end of a Roman sword. Even the Church of Rome today claims to possess sole truth and the sole salvation of mankind when in reality they possess hardly any of it as modern scholarship attests.

The decisive change in the Ancient Wisdom teachings was to banish the concept of the Divine Soul within all, and replace it with an historical figure called Jesus. People were taught to worship this non-existent Jesus instead of nurturing their own Divine Soul. In one fell swoop the Church of Rome took the Divine out of everyday life and this world. It turned a philosophy of liberation into a religion of repression and bondage. Noble and uplifting teachings were turned upside down and thoroughly perverted.

Humans were turned into abject sinners who had to grovel for forgiveness and wait for the coming of "the Christ" to fix their lives and their world when the true "Christ lives within" each of them waiting to be summoned to empower them to overcome their animal instincts. Prophecy has come and gone and still no Christ has "returned"; He does not need to for He never left for he resides within each child of God and has since the first Adam. In spite of the efforts of Rome to destroy these Spiritual Truths this true ancient wisdom can still be deciphered in the Bible, using the keys supplied by scholarship today as well as our websites as consistently endeavor to teach the reader how to read the symbolism and interpret these texts correctly. Whatever strengths Christian concepts have, and some do, such as the death and rebirth of the dying-rising god, they are due to its pagan roots. How ironic!

Once the god has incarnated in the human body, it is up to humans, you and me, to realize the Divine presence in us and in our life. The whole course of human evolution as a species on earth is designed to perfect the individualized humans (the Soul within), who are the crown of animal development in this physical realm. This perfection comes through the spiritualization, sanctification, and transformation of the gross animal nature by impacting upon it currents of intellectual and spiritual forces which gradually refine the lower self (gathering knowledge of the true identify of man, sanctifying the animal nature through its transformation by the Torah). When this is accomplished we experience the marriage of Spirit and matter. Egypt knew of this merging of Spirit and flesh, this marriage of the Divine with matter, and it was called the embrace of Horus and Osiris; Greek mythology knew of this "marriage" of Spirit and matter and called it the union of Cupid and Psyche; in Church language it is the marriage of the Bride and the Lamb. It was that melting into one at last in blissful harmony of the mortal and immortal elements that comprise mankind. Of this ultimate union of male and female components, the body-Soul with the spirit-Soul, all marriage and sexual intercourse is only the outward sign and symbol. Anna Kingsford in The Perfect Way writes of the marriage between the Soul and spirit. Once the Soul has become purified, union with the (holy) Spirit produces the Christ within.

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

A phrase in the Lord's ordination of the Eucharist gives us the text for the final principle of Plato's system that has to do with Christian theology. "Do this in remembrance of me," he said. Here again Christianity's ignorance has blurred a great truth and a great light. For here was an announcement by the Lord himself of Plato's other great doctrine--the doctrine of Reminiscence.

Paul was expressing a grand truth of Platonic wisdom, when he wrote of the light which came to him in this spiritual vision. Religion was designed primarily on no other motivation than as a means of putting into practice this phase of Platonic philosophy. Religion was not originally merely a "system of worship." It had far deeper bases. It was instituted to save the hosts of fragmented gods in mortal bodies from the dire fate of losing their divinity. For they were threatened with total forgetfulness of their real nature. Religion was designed to be a set of psychological exercises which would subtly revive and stimulate the memory of their former celestial state. Horus in Egypt came to awaken the memory of his father Osiris in the grave. From these connotations we are enabled to discern a totally new force of meaning in our word "remember." If the gods on coming to save humanity were "dismembered" or fragmented into individuals, then the resurrection or return to their primal unity in their glorification at the end of the aeon would naturally be a "remembering" of divided parts. We express the same idea in our other word for the same thing, "re-collecting." The brotherhood of humanity consists simply in this reassembling in a common spirit of unity the individualized fragments of the Lords of Hosts.

Eph 4:13 13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: (KJV)

Horus is said to have come to reconstitute his dismembered father. Translated from allegory to spiritual meaning this can signify only that the Christ spark in us is to grow and expand until it fuses by its fiery power into the great universal spirit of wisdom and love that is to animate the race.

Eph 5:30 30 For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. (KJV)

Paul told us we are all members of one body, of which Christ is the head; but habits of literal thought have prevented us from sensing this in an intellectual or spiritual way. Our minds and hearts are to be fused in one great spirit of love and harmony, as we enhance the glory of the god shining within us ever more brightly unto the day of perfection. As we separated in our descent into body, so we merge again into a mighty unity as we ascend back to the father of lights. This is the reconstitution of the dismembered suffering god, broken and fragmented in the matter of our bodies, in order that we lower men might ascend into the kingdom of intellect and spirit. The reconstitution is indeed the remembering our broken divinity, the re-collection of the scattered fragments of the broken body of the Divine Lord. Only by the study of ancient origins in philosophy can we see the grand spiritual sense back of these figures and terms. All symbols had their origin in simple ideas, which, however, were the expressions of the loftiest truths of early wisdom.

This reassembling of the scattered fragments is the basis and genius of human brotherhood. The individuals of the race, being of one identical essence, are kindred in nature. There is no room for racism. But being attached to animal bodies, the god is subject to the separative selfish tendencies of the lower man, until he educates this pupil to the higher motivations of altruism and community of interest with others. As an animal he wars with his fellows, is jealous and self-seeking, under the evolutionary impulse of self-preservation brought up from former experience in the animal grades. But as a god he revives the memory of his kinship with his celestial mates, and in the glow of that warm recognition that his brother is himself, he learns to look upon his fellow-man with that love which is described as the cement of the universe. This is the goal of our existence and the hope and dream of which lies hidden today under 2000 years of "literalization" of Divine Allegory and Divine Ancient Wisdom.

Now if you read these articles then you might think that I am wrong in this interpretation of "the Christ" and since being precondition to think otherwise by prior teachings and possessing a Bible that has led you to other conclusions I can only say that I assure you that I have done my homework well, in fact very well and would ask you to consider the evidence for this presentation of interpretation which I will summarize for you below in pointed statements:

You can never come to the proper understanding of "the Christ" until you have:

Done diligent study into the New Testament, its origin, its changes, and corruptions along with manuscript evidences and forgeries and purposeful mistranslation and misquotation of them

Done diligent study into the true Messianic prophecies of the Jewish Messiah as taken from the Hebrew texts and compared them line upon line and precept upon precept with the forged Messianic prophecies in the Christian's Bible

Done diligent study into the doctrine of the Messiah from a Jewish viewpoint as contained in the Hebrew Scriptures and contrasted with the Roman viewpoint expressed in their New Testament

Done diligent study in the Paul problem, the concept of Gnosticism and the Gnostic writings, the Nag Hammadi Library, and the real Paul and the earliest Gnostic New Testament that existed before the Romans countered with the New Testament we have today

Done diligent study in concerning Egypt, their religion and religious writings and the Egyptian Messiah along with the Hebrew Pharaohs and the death of the Son of God in Egypt as well as the Dead Sea Scrolls

Done diligent study in Astronomy and Astrotheology whereby you see how the "Jesus Story" was taken from the personification and allegorical representation of the path of the Sun through the Heavens and the Zodiac on a yearly basis as interpreted by the Ancient Wisdom teachers on a deeper level as but a picture for expressing the the descent, birth, life, intended maturation and spiritual development of the Soul, and its death and resurrection from this physical plane of existence.

Coming to this truth took years of study which I devoted myself years ago for I, hopefully like you, wanted the truth about Jesus and set out in diligent study to get it. Bet Emet Ministries, the "House of Truth", provides this truth for you on our websites. We ask that no one believe what we teach or say; I ask only that you acknowledge that if I wrote it then this information exists outside of your current understanding and being a Pastor I wanted "the truth" and felt that others deserve it as well. What you do with this information is between you and God and I hope you, like me, take up the mantel of study "till we all come to the unity of 'the' faith"!

THE ANCIENT WISDOM, HUMAN NATURE, AND THE GOAL OF INCARNATION

Matt 13:11 11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What, then, was discovered and taught directly to disciples and in parables to non-disciples? What lies at the very core of the teachings of "the Christ" of Judaism? What is his true message? What is the "mystery of the kingdom of Godº (Mark 4:11), ultimately to be known directly by the sincere seeker?

The answer can be offered here only in the the simplest of summaries, as it were, of certain central ideas to be found in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, world religions, philosophies and mythologies, however deeply veiled. Theosophia is all-inclusive, and the full knowledge of human nature is contained within the age old teachings, together with a very practical philosophy of life consistent with the scientific method of thought and very importantly as well a description of the means by which that knowledge may become direct, personal experience.

The ancient sages taught, and their successors still teach, that the individual is sevenfold in makeup, being a:

- Threefold immortal, spiritual being ..
- Incarnated in four mortal, material bodies.

The three parts of a person's Spiritual nature are reproductions or reflections of:

- The will,
- The wisdom and
- The intelligence of the Supreme Deity.

In their vesture of light, these three aspects of the divine in human beings are called individuality, inner Self or Spiritual Soul and, more technically, Ego in the causal body. The pertinent teaching concerning both the Deity and the individual is that they are threefold. God the Trinity is reproduced as the threefold Spiritual Self or Soul of every human being.

The apostle Paul states this truth more plainly, perhaps, than other biblical writer in such utterances as:

"ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God" (2 Cor. 6:16)

and

"know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?. . . therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Cor. 6:19-20).

Directly stated, human-spirit and God-spirit are one spirit.

Now here is the "key". When once this knowledge of Self and God becomes personal experience, when man comes to the intuitive knowledge that the is a "god" in an animal's body then it it provides the "key" to almost unlimited power. But as long as man is constantly instilled with the ideas in his churches that he is but "a sinner saved by grace" or that he is a distinct and separate creation apart from god then the reality of the gestating Divine Self within him is thwarted. As long as man is taught in his churches that he was to worship and fear a Supreme Being whose abode was somewhere "up" in space and that if obeyed a Divine mandate he would be rewarded but if not then he was to be punished then again the realization of his true Self as a "god in progress" is frustrated. This false picture that man is separate from God creates a dual nature within mankind. Being told that he is a sinner, a lost Soul, a being dependent upon the mercy of God alone for salvation results in a friction, and the friction results in disharmony. The recognition of a power without and a power within creates a conflict in his consciousness that results in ailments and disease, so that much of the sickness existing today might be traced to man's teaching regarding God and religion. Fear is a destructive emotion, and the attempt to force people into accepting the Christian doctrine by holding over their heads the thought of the wrath of an angry God has done untold harm to the race of mankind both mentally and physically.

The goal in our Soul's incarnation is that cosmic forces and intelligences are to be contacted and be invoked and employed mentally and physically in any manner that may be decided upon. As has already been stated, since this tremendous power is susceptible of misuse, the true and full significance of such statements was veiled by the ancient writers through the agency of allegory, metaphor, simile, symbolisms, etc., not only in our Bibles but in other Sacred Books in nation after nation.

To the degree that you can establish within yourself the feeling of consciousness of the essential unity of god, good, man, and all there is, creative thought based upon such principles will result in harmony in one' affairs and environment. To the extent that this thought of unity is mingled with the thought of separation from God, just to that extent will one's life be mixed with tares and not wheat as the parable attests in our Bible. One will live as a house divided against itself.

It is important to recapture the Divine Truths expressed in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and under the parables and stories in our Bibles which are mistaken for "historical" and "literal" truths that happened to another instead of being a "blue-print" for the whole of humanity. Look with me at this passage:

John 14:20-21 20 At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. 21 He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. (KJV)

This is not a passage that concerns a historical person that lived by the supposed name of "Jesus" some 2,000 years ago in Israel; rather it is a passage describing the Spiritual awakening of the "Christ within you" and the like awareness of of Divinity in "You" in this Earthly incarnation. The manifestation of the Divine Self within you through its Spiritual evolution is dependent upon this becoming your experience in this present life. In this Spiritual aspect of nature, the individual, sometimes called the microcosm, is regarded as one with the Divine, the macrocosm. That Supreme Spirit, who is the "immortal and eternal god who forever reigneth serene above the water floods," and the Spirit of the human being are one.

This is the supreme truth taught directly in all mystery schools and in the esoteric aspects of all religions. In Hinduism, because of its paramount importance, this truth is referred to as the sovereign secret, or the royal secret. The Deity is neither external to nor different from the individual being. God and human beings are one and indivisible throughout all eternity. In Hinduism the spirit in the individual is described as "the Inner Ruler Immortal seated in the heart of all beings" and as "the one God-head hidden in all creatures, the Inmost Soul of all." In Christianity the Deity within the individual is the "Christ in you, the hope of glory" (Col. 1:27), the "God which worketh in you" (Phil. 2:13). Both passages, one from Hinduism and the other from Christianity express the same Divine Principle of the cosmos; namely, that the living God lives within our bodies which serve for Him as His temple.

The stories of Adam, Eve, the tempting serpent and the tree of knowledge of good and evil in the Garden of Eden; Abraham ready to sacrifice his son, Isaac, on a mountain; Elijah and the still small voice; Moses on Mount Sinai receiving the Ten Commandments; Joshua making the Sun and Moon stand still; Jonah in the belly of the whale; the Nativity of the Lord Christ in a stable; his withering of the fig tree; his stilling of the tempest; his healings and raising of people from the dead; his Resurrection and his Ascension, and I could go on, are all "Spiritual Allegories" that find similar expressions in all the great World religions and Sacred Books from nation to nation. This aspect of the universal Spiritual Wisdom is also revealed in such non-biblical stories as those relating the labors of Hercules; the voyage of the Argonauts to gain the serpent-guarded Golden Fleece at Coichis; Osiris slain and Osiris risen; and the birth in prison of the Lord Shri Krishna and his victory over many evil beings, including the black serpent Kaliya. In common with the Bible and other Sacred Books of the world are these same Divine Principles expressed through the nation's allegories and myths that depict for the finite minds of mankind the "infinite realties of God".

The distinction between the Logos of a universe and the Deity in the individual being lies neither in their location nor in their essential nature, but only in the degree in which their triune powers are made manifest. Man is but a little "god" in the body of animal as stated by Plato and other masters of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. In God these powers of Spirit are manifested fully, but in human beings, we find then only in a gradually increasing degree of fullness as one's Spiritual evolution proceeds. Ultimately the inherent Divine powers will be fully expressed by the Spiritual Self of everyone, as they are now by the Deity. In this teaching the destiny of the individual is revealed: a God-in-the-becoming, a pilgrim God. Both the Christ's teachings from the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the apostle Paul affirmed this fact in such words as:

"Ye shall be perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. 5:48)

and

"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph. 4:13).

Such, as revealed in the Ageless Wisdom, is the threefold, immortal, Spiritual Self of the individual sometimes referred to as the Higher Triad,

- The Will
- The Wisdom
- The intelligence of the Supreme Deity, and such is the sublime purpose of human existence.

The four more densely material vehicles, sometimes referred to as the Lower Quaternary, in the order of their deepening density, are:

- The mental,
- The emotional,
- The etheric and
- The physical bodies.

Answer for yourself: What do all of these 7 qualities of manifested life have in common?

They are all evolving toward their unique goals which are interrelated and which will be mentioned later.

The mental body, the most tenuous of the four, is composed of mental matter or "mind-stuff" and is the vehicle of analytical, logical thought. The emotional body, the vehicle of feeling and desire, is composed of material which is denser than "mind-stuff" but finer than the physical ether. The vital or etheric body is composed of etheric substance, which is finer than the gaseous and functions as the conserving principle of the bodily vital forces and the connecting link between the superphysical and physical bodies. The corporeal body is composed of solid, liquid and gaseous materials and is the vehicle of self-expression in the physical world, the densest, heaviest instrument of awareness and action.

Answer for yourself: So what have we seen? As the ancients stated an individual is comprised of seven bodies, comprising the Higher Triad and the lower quaternary, all occupy the same space, the finer interpenetrating and extending as an aura beyond the denser.

Knowledge of this sevenfold nature of human beings can be a key with which to unlock powers within them and the universe around them, which is also sevenfold. Each of the individual's seven bodies is in mutual resonance with forces and intelligences in the corresponding seven parts of the cosmos. Don't forget "So Above, So Below" as the axiom on which not only the ancient Egyptian Religion was founded but the whole of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. The powers and intelligences associated with the seven planes of nature, the planets and the twelve signs of the zodiac, can be evoked and employed for constructive or destructive purposes by the person who possesses this key of the septenary or seven-fold constitution of universe and the individual. For this and other reasons, such power-bestowing knowledge, though partly conveyed, is heavily veiled in world Scriptures through the use of myths, allegories, legends, similes, and symbolisms. In many of them, the seven principles of the individual are personified by created identifies that mold and portray for the reader these typical attributes, of God which are slowly Spiritually evolving in mankind.

This Spiritual Knowledge has been lost to the vast majority of mankind but now in our day it is being restored and regained by many. When human consciousness is limited to the fourfold mortal aspect, one is temporarily unconscious of both one's divine nature and one's unity with God. When limited to brain consciousness, one may be said to suffer from Spiritual amnesia. This forgetfulness can be overcome by arousing into activity and directing into the brain a certain electro-vital power resident in the physical body. This tremendous force is already partly active, being the source of nerve energy and of the procreative impulse and power. When more fully aroused, sublimated and directed into the heart and the head, it greatly heightens the speed of the vibratory frequency of the cells and the organs of the brain-electrifies them, in fact. Thereafter, the individual thus sensitized becomes aware that he or she is a Spiritual being endowed with divine powers. Because this force follows undulating pathways in its ascent along the spinal cord from the sacrum to the brain, it is sometimes referred to as "the serpent fire." Its potency is so great, however, that in many ancient Scriptures it is only referred to under a protective veil of such symbols as serpents, dragons, hydras and other dangerous reptiles. For the same reason, knowledge of the method of its premature awakening is also protectively concealed in allegories of the conquest of serpents by saviors, heroes or heroines.

As one's evolution proceeds, the serpent fire is naturally awakened, thereby assisting one to recover the lost knowledge of one's own Divinity and unity with God. This is the ultimate object of all Spiritual endeavors. It is especially the goal of all who seek the way of mystical illumination. The Lord Christ described this experience as follows:

"I and my Father are one" (John 10:30) and "I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you" (John 14:20). American poet Kenneth Boulding has written of "The burning oneness binding everything." Oneness with God, and through God with all that lives, is the supreme truth, and its full and continuous realization is the highest attainment of humanity.

In a Hindu scripture, the Bhagavad Gita (meaning "The Lord's Song"), the Lord Vishnu as the second aspect of the Trinity, (the Son) says: "He who seeth Me in everything and seeth everything in Me, of him will I never lose hold, and he shall never lose hold of Me" (6th Discourse, 30. Translated by Annie Besant). That says it no matter what religion we profess. The true salvation of the individual, following the "Fall" of the Soul into "matter", is an ascent into full experience of this Spiritual fact of oneness with of man with God, implying ascension into conscious union with the Deity. This is the very Spiritual purpose of Human existence in allowing the Spiritual evolution of the Divine Soul to grow into the reality of "the god" which it truly is.

Answer for yourself: Why, then, you might ask, does the human spirit become incarnated in a physical body with the consequent loss, however temporary, of knowledge of its divinity and unity with God?

The purpose of human life is Spiritual, intellectual, cultural and physical evolution. This is a dual process, consisting on the one hand of the gradual unfoldment from latency to full potency of one's threefold Spiritual attributes, and on the other, of the evolution of the four material vehicles to a condition in which they perfectly make manifest the developed powers of the human Spirit. Life in a physical body is essential to this attainment.

The Spiritual Self of the individual is like a seed, in that it contains the potentiality of the parent plant, which is God. This seed is "sown" or born on Earth, puts forth shoots, stems and leaves, and eventually it flowers. The ancient Spiritual Wisdom teaches that the resultant human individuality in its four vehicles is strengthened by adversity, purified and refined by sorrow, beautified and expanded by happiness and love, and ultimately reaches the fully evolved state. Just as in seeds all parental powers are inherent, so in the Monads of human beings all divine powers are potentially present from the beginning. The experiences of life, combined with the interior evolutionary impulse, bring these inherent powers to increasing fullness and perfection of expression. All experience is valuable; nothing is wasted. Life is truly educative. The Spiritual evolution of the Soul and bodily development proceed simultaneously, inner evolution being accompanied by the outer development of the four mortal bodies. Here theosophical teaching becomes eminently practical, for when this all-important knowledge of the purpose of human life is gained and accepted, the intelligent person cooperates, and in such cooperation with the Divine plan resides the whole secret of human happiness.

Answer for yourself: So what is the goal of such Spiritual and natural evolution of mankind?

The goal of human evolution is the standard of perfection described in Christianity as "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph. 4:13). This implies the attainment of a Divine state of perfected (only as far as human evolution is concerned) and resistless will, perfected and all-embracing wisdom and love, and perfected and all-inclusive knowledge.

The Ageless Wisdom affirms that the attainment of this culmination of human development is absolutely certain for everyone. The command found in the Gospel of Matthew 5:48 must be fulfilled eventually for all mankind and obeyed by the Spiritual Self of all human being: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect". A lost Spiritual Soul is an impossibility in nature, for the true Self is immortal, eternal and indestructible since as human beings were are but ourselves "Living Energies" that have emanated from the Divine First Cause we call God. If one will contemplate this for a second he will realize that there is nothing to be saved from, nowhere to be lost, for God as the enfolding and indwelling life of the universe is omnipresent. Human beings need only to be on guard against the defects of their own character and the transgressions to which they lead, for all sufferings arise (karmically-educatively) from such transgressions.

The evolutionary process is itself everlasting, being without conceivable beginning or imaginable end. Beyond human perfection is a still higher attainment reached during passage through the superhuman kingdoms of nature, followed by a general ascent towards the Spiritual stature of the Logos of a universe. Beyond that again, progress continues towards the highest possible degree of unfoldment attainable at the end of a major cosmic period of manifestation. Even then, at the succeeding reemergence of cosmos from chaos, of activity from rest and dormancy, development will continue from the point previously attained and proceed to still greater heights. Perfection is thus hardly the best word, since it suggests finality. Actually it is only attained in a relative sense, for it must give room to still further perfection, according to a higher standard of excellence in the following period of activity. This can be likened to a perfect flower must cease to be a perfect flower and die in order to grow into a perfect fruit, if such a mode of expression may be permitted (H. Blavtasky, The Secret Doctrine, 1:115). The individual is an evolving Spiritual being and will one day become as God now is. The human being is a God-in-the-becoming, a pilgrim God. Truly we are as Plato said; "gods in animal bodies".

It would serve us well if we actually knew just what is meant by the term "God".

Answer for yourself: So what is meant by the term "God"?

The Ageless Wisdom affirms the existence of one transcendent, self-existent life, eternal, all-pervading, all-sustaining, from which, by which and in which all things which exist live and move and have their being. This life is immanent in our solar system and world as the Logos, the "Word," worshipped under different names in different religions but recognized as the one creator, preserver and regenerator. The solar system is directed and guided by the solar Logos through a hierarchy of highly evolved beings, the "mighty Spirits before the throne." On Earth this direction and guidance are carried out by a corresponding and related hierarchy of perfected beings, referred to as Rishis, sages, Adepts, saints. The divine, absolute principle reveals itself in a universal process of perpetual unfoldment of potentialities. Although this is fulfilled according to eternal law, it is not mechanical, being directed and aided by the solar Logos through its ministers. God is thus presented as both transcendent and immanent, as the creator, sustainer and transformer of all worlds and the Spiritual Source of all beings within the solar system.

Answer for yourself: What is wrong with the above definitions of God?

First of all, these ancient definitions of Deity taken from the ancient Wisdom Religions of the world do not harmonize with the idea of God generally accepted in contemporary Christianity today. In the Ageless Wisdom and the Sacred Books of the ancients God is not presented as an anthropomorphic figure, an almighty Being in human form and with human tendencies combined with divine powers. God is not regarded as susceptible of propitiation but rather as an embodiment of Eternal Law in the cosmos. God does not bestow favors on some and withhold them from others at the same time; all human children of God are regarded equally. God is not distant in a far off Heaven and inaccessible to his creation, but actually present in the Divine life in nature and the Divine Presence within everything and everyone. Paul tells us very clearly when he states in Phil. 2:13:

"God which worketh in you" (Phil. 2:13)

The solar Logos is this God "which worketh in man"; however, this God as described by the ancient as not so impersonal and impartial as to be unmindful of the aspirations and changes of human beings. On the contrary, the Logos may be thought of as responding to sincere and selfless aspiration to increasing wisdom and power to serve God and his neighbor. Within the law of justice, or cause and effect, nations and individuals receive Divine aid both directly and through the mediation of representatives. Divine grace is merited by the actions of mankind and was regarded as a reality which may descend upon one, either directly from the solar Logos or from the innermost divine Self. One only has to study the concept of grace in the Hebrew Scriptures to see quite often it is "merited". A wealth of testimony is provided by those who have experienced unexpected glorification, inspiring enhancement of their willpower and intellectual grasp of both God and mankind from such selfless service. Seemingly miraculous uplifting of Spirit and the healing of disease are similarly affirmed in every nation under the Sun regardless if they are "Christian" or not; God's love and mercy is not dependent upon man's religious dogmas but how he lives. God's love is not limited to a creed that some mistakenly believe and teach is "inerrant" and "necessary for salvation". God knows differently and we should as well; the evidences outside our Christian religion testifies to this unboundless love of the God within us all.

At this point the student of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom will meet with a statement concerning Deity which, though inevitable in logic, may at first be unacceptable and even repugnant. It is that God, as the Divine Principle in nature and in human beings, is that God as "Mind" is evolving together with the whole universe and all which it contains toward a goal which is beyond the comprehension of mortals.

Basically, is has been said that "God goes to school." This unfoldment to ever greater heights and awareness is the ultimate destiny of everyone, "the one far-off divine event, to which the whole creation moves" which Alfred L. Tennyson mentions in his In Memoriam. The Spiritual Self of every individual is a "God-in-the-becoming", whose future splendor, wisdom and power are entirely without limit.

I Jn 3:2 2 Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. (KJV)

The goal of human perfection is attainable and already has been reached in the history of mankind; such perfected beings who have been born among us and lived among us are known as World Saviors, Mahatmas, Rishis, Adepts and, when they take pupils, Masters of the Wisdom. Their testimonies abound in literature. These superhuman beings make up the inner government of the world and are the true Spiritual teachers and inspirers of humankind. Each member of this Adept body would seem to be referred to in the Bible as having been "made a high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec" (Heb. 6:20). The apostle Paul, if he is the writer of the Book of Hebrews which is in doubt, may have wished to indicate them by his phrase "just men made perfect" (Heb. 12:23). This august assembly is also known as The Great White Brotherhood of Adepts, the Adept Hierarchy, the Sangha of Buddhism and the seven Rishis and their successors of Hinduism. There have been designations for this group of "elevated" humans who walked among us and yet walk among us today.

Answer for yourself: How is this state of "perfection" of humanity and Adeptship attained?

The ancient Spiritual Wisdom teaches us and the Laws of Physics teach us today that it is a natural result of evolutionary progress of all life and is achieved by means of successive incarnations in material vehicles, newly formed during the prenatal period of each succeeding life. Repeated reincarnations in physical bodies provide the necessary time and opportunity for such Spiritual attainment. The diverse experiences thus passed through each life draws out and helps mold the latent powers of the evolving Spiritual Soul. Every experience has its value in terms of an increase of innate power, wisdom and knowledge of the Spiritual Self. At the near approach to perfection, however, rebirth is no longer a necessity. All further progress can then be achieved in the superphysical worlds above this present plane of our existence. This is stated in the book of Revelation in the following words:

"Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out" (Rev. 3:12).

We have heard it said in the Bible:

Gal 6:7 7 Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. (KJV)

This is a cardinal law of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. All reincarnations are connected with each other by the operation of the law of cause and effect. Under this law, all actions, feelings and thoughts produce their own natural and perfectly appropriate reactions, which may follow either the causative actions immediately, later in the same life, or in succeeding incarnations. This principle is referred to in many places in the Bible, like the one above. One only has to read the account of King David, in reality the Pharaoh Tuthmose III, and see the account of his adultery and the effects it had on his family the rest of his life. The Sanskrit word karma (action) is used to designate this law, its operation and the effects it produces. Under its working, actions motivated by love, service and unselfishness produce pleasure and a growing freedom of self-expression, which encourage the person to repeat them. On the other hand, actions motivated by dislike, greed and selfishness produce pain and an increasing limitation of self-expression, which discourage the actor from repeating them. Furthermore, the intensity of pleasure or pain is governed by the degree in which unselfish and selfish motives find expression in action. This balanced compensation is affirmed in the words of the Christ in our own Bibles no less:

"Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again" (Mart. 7:1-2).

Human suffering is thus seen to be neither a retribution imposed by the Deity, a punishment inflicted from above, nor an unjust, accidental adversity. On the contrary, all pain is self-inflicted and therefore justly received. It is, moreover, designed to apprise the person of his or her transgression; either in this life or a former life. Suffering is thus seen to be both just and truly beneficent, because it is educative in its ultimate effect. Recognition of the law of action and reaction solves the problem of justice for humanity. All human conditions such as suffering, disease, happiness and health are self-created under this law of karma. The problem presented by the birth of babies which are malformed or diseased is solved when the sequence of cause and effect is recognized as operating throughout a series of lives. While such afflictions seem on the surface to be completely unjust because they are unearned and so undeserved, they are in reality not so. They are, in fact, the strictly appropriate effects of causes generated by the same Self in former lives. Without this explanation life is but a hopeless riddle defying solution and making God out to be an arbitrary Tyrant. The twin doctrines of reincarnation and karma throw a flood of light upon human life, revealing the existence of justice, purpose, and an assured goal for all beings.

The principle needs to be advanced in closing of the alteration of karma by intervening actions performed before causes have had time to produce their full effects. Whatever one's actions in the past, either good or bad in varying degrees, the reactions which they produce are not to be regarded as an inescapable fate or as a dead weight from which there is no relief. Both individuals and nations by their subsequent actions are constantly modifying the operation of the law upon themselves. Thus, neither individuals nor nations are paralyzed by their past actions. Everything is not irretrievably fated. One can master circumstances and make of each experience an opportunity for a fresh beginning and can pass from the grip of the law by learning to work with it.

Civil law is an enemy to the criminal because it restrains and restricts the expression of criminal tendencies. To the good citizen, however, the same law is an assurance of security; it is not an enemy but a friend, not a source of restriction but a preserver of freedom. This is also true of the universal law of cause and effect. To selfish, lawless and cruel people, it brings retribution in the form of a reaction appropriate to every pain-producing action. To unselfish, law-abiding, kindly people, the law brings health, happiness and freedom. Furthermore, every such helpful action performed prior to the effects of selfish actions have had time to reduce the effects or even neutralize oncoming adversity due to our present Soul's failures. Such, briefly, is the principle of the modification of human karma. There is thus a Spiritual mechanism by means of which adversity resulting from actions motivated by selfishness can be diminished or even nullified. This is achieved by self-purification, self-discipline, and the enactment of deeds motivated by universal, non-possessive love.

The Bible and other Sacred Books of the world as cherished by the ancients state that such a mode of life partly constitutes "the way of holiness" and the "narrow way" of Christianity. It of course has other names as well as the Noble Eightfold Path of Buddhism and the Razor-edged Path of Hinduism. Christ said through the Jewish faith:

"Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it" (Mart. 7:13-14).

This way of life teaches us that there is a way for mankind to quicken and shorten the time of his evolutionary Spiritual progress. There is a way by which man by his actions and motives can Spiritually develop before his allotted time and in so doing quicken his supernormal faculties, Spiritual intuitiveness and his Spiritual powers in this present "material" life. As a bonus this path leads to discipleship of an adept teacher, and thence through successive initiations to salvation or perfection of his Soul called again by various names by the ancients such as Nirvana, Moksha or liberation.

Now this is important beyond measure. The lives of Christ and his disciples, as well as of other great teachers, may be regarded as dramatic representations of the experiences of the Soul on this path. As taught elsewhere all the ancient stories of Sungods and Goddesses were never to be understood as if "historical" or "literal" events or occurrences; but rather they were all understood as personifications of the Divine Soul which had "fallen" and been "crucified on the cross of matter" in these animal bodies. These allegorical lives of these nation's saviors and messiahs were mankind's teaching tool to lay before him the "pattern" for his own Soul's Spiritual Pilgrimage in this plane of material existence. The goal of such a "pattern" is typified by our "Jesus Story" let alone the stories of the twenty or so similar "Jesus Stories" that mankind has cherished since its inception. The teachings of the Lord Christ, particularly those in the Sermon on the Mount, or of the Lord Buddha concerning the Noble Eightfold Path and its applications to the Spiritual life, and of the Lord Shri Krishna as recorded in the Bhagavad Gita indicate the motives and the conduct necessary for this Spiritual attainment of the Soul while in these "bodies of death" in which we have come to dwell for a while in order to further our Spiritual evolution in this cosmos.

The Noble Eightfold Path was defined by the Lord Buddha as consisting of: "Right Belief, Right Thought, Right Speech, Right Action, Right Means of Livelihood, Right Exertion, Right Remembrance, Right Meditation or Rapture." This noble path the Buddha summed up in these words: "To cease from sin, to acquire virtue, to purify the heart, to serve the world." This is the true "way of holiness," leading to hastened Spiritual progress and rapid development of Spiritual powers. Such a path can be traveled today as in the days of old. Success in finding and treading it demands purity of life, selfless service and an unconquerable will to do so.

Answer for yourself: So what have we learned?

The individual is essentially a Spiritual being, whose mind and body are only temporary means of self-expression and self-unfoldment. When this true Self is discovered and becomes the directing power of one's life, then there is permanent peace for the individual. Without that discovery, peace is impossible. The search for and the discovery of the Self is therefore of supreme importance. That is why the Gnostics of old said: "Man, Know Thyself".

- Knowledge of oneself is the only real knowledge, for as one understands oneself, only then may one truly understand another. Hence, the Oracle of Delphi proclaiming to know thyself, for within each of us, all is contained. "We are created in God's image. Male and female (in one) were created." We, in our cosmic aspect are very superior to that which is commonly looked upon as a "human" which is described in books on anthropology, anatomy, etc. Each of us, as a whole, may be conceived of as a planetary Spirit, a self-conscious, luminous sphere of unimaginable extent, as in fact, as present, the mental sphere of our mind has no defined limits; it reaches as far as thoughts can go. We were created for the purpose of being the image of God. The glory of God is residing in us, and we are penetrated by the light of Divine love. Within each of us everything is contained; God, the Christ, the angels, the celestial and terrestrial kingdoms, and the powers of hell. Outside of us is nothing of which we can conceive, we can know nothing except that which exists in our minds. No god or devil, no Spirit or any power whatever can act upon us unless it centers into our constitution. Only that which exists in us has existence for God/The All. Without a realization of this fact, the mysteries of religion will remain incomprehensible. It may be interesting and amusing to speculate about all the different gods and celestial hosts that go to make the pantheons of the various nations, but such a study does not constitute real knowledge. Only when our Spiritual perceptions are unfolded and we attain Divine knowledge of self, then will we know the Krst/Karest/Christ and all the celestial powers whose sum total goes to make up the kingdom of God existing within ourselves. Therefore, the evolution of the Spiritual Self to perfection through successive lives on Earth is the true purpose of human existence.
- A person's experiences are decided by the operation of the law of cause and effect. Cruelty brings war to nations and pain and disease to individuals. There is no possible escape from this sequence. Inversely, kindness brings happiness and health. Until this law is recognized and accepted as a rule of life, there will continue to be both war and disease.

- The Spirit within humanity is one. Each being belongs to one Spiritual people which is without divisions of any kind. Experience of this unity, and its applications to human life, constitute the only possible means whereby lasting peace can be established on Earth and assured health and happiness be attained by every human being.

ROME'S REINTERPRETATION OF THE ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND THE CORRUPTION OF THE "CHRIST STORY"

The relegation of the "birth of Christ" by which it was limited to a stable outside of Bethlehem because there was supposedly no room in the inn is one of the most tragic miscarriages of truth in the history of the Planet and so doing has set back mankind's Spiritual evolution more than 2,000 years. With the third century Roman conversion of the Ancient Divine Spiritual Allegories of the Descent of the Soul into humanity into an alleged biography of a incarnated "literalized" Jewish savior, the constructs of the great Divine truth that a spark of the solar Logos was incorporated distributively in the totality of animal humanity faded out and were wiped out. The location for God tabernacling with mankind and all common sense about the inner meaning of the Christmas nativity was irrevocably lost. The annual celebration of this Comic advent of deity to earth whereby it resides in the hearts of mankind remains a meaningless travesty to this day; the truths of which are obliterated by commercialism and the total misunderstanding of this momentous Spiritual event in the history of mankind.

We all say we want the truth but when given it often we recoil in almost uncomfortable unbelief. I encourage the readers to stick with it and in time you will see all the hidden "keys" behind our "Jesus Story" which will totally revolutionize your interpretation of it. For this to happen in now becomes necessary, then, to outline the historical trends that led to the hiding of this pervious ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom by Rome beginning in the 2nd century. The restoration of the lost meaning of the ancient "Krst/Christ Stories" will be given greater credence if the causes of its devolution are set forth in the forthcoming articles. The knowledge that a fragment of the spiritual heart of the Sun was implanted in the body of each son of man to be his Soul and his "god" was the golden secret imparted by the hierophants and initiates in the Mystery Schools to their qualified pupils. This Divine Truth was regarded as such a priceless treasure, a pearl of great price, that there arose Secret Brotherhoods and Sects that were organized specifically to guard against the profanation of such esoteric Spiritual Truth. From age to age this Divine Knowledge was passed down by oral transmission, from nation to nation, and history shows us an unbroken thread detailing this Spiritual Knowledge from millennia to millennia among mankind. Rising in one nation only to perish in another, never was the world and humanity without such knowledge of their Divine origin. From remote antiquity it can be found in Egypt, Chaldea, India, China, Tibet, etc. It was carried by the priests of the Orphic Mysteries over to the Greek world. It was disseminated in the Greece in the philosophies of Pythagoras, Plato, Heraclitus, Empedocles, Anaxagoras. This Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of man's Celestial Origin was embodied in the poetry of Homer, Hesiod, Pindar; in the dramas of Euripides and Aeschylus. More importantly for us as Christians and followers of "the Christ" in Judeo-Christianity, from Egypt and Chaldea this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Knowledge emerged in the religion of the Hebrews, who wrought its myths, allegories and symbols obscurely into their Old Testament, but had more authentically kept the deposit of it in their ancient Kabbalah. Later it can be shown to have been taken up by pre-Christian and early Christian Gnostics, being contained with sufficient clarity in the great Gnostic work, Pistis Sophia, a work conjecturally of Basilides or Valentinus. Its Orphic-Platonic recension was widely republished by the Neo-Platonist school in the second, third and fourth centuries, with ample explanation, a measure necessitated in all likelihood to check the growing trend of the beginning "literalistic" interpretation of this Divine Spiritual Wisdom by an emerging branch of the Christian movement which was recognized by the Spiritual Masters that if left unchecked it could seriously distort or wipe out the ancient understanding of the Soul in mankind. It was reintegrated eclectically around Alexandria by such syncretists as Maximius of Tyre, Ammonias Saccas and Philo Judaeus, powerfully influencing the character of primitive Christianity. It was carried most directly into Christian documentation by St. Paul, whom many scholars claim on evidence to have been himself a Gnostic and an Initiate in the Greek Mysteries (as were Clement and Origen in the Egyptian), and also by St. John, whose Bible writings are decidedly more Platonic than distinctively Christian. The visible thread of its transmission runs on to Plutarch, after whom it became more difficult to trace, being propagated by Hermeticists, Therapeutae, Rosicrucians, Platonists, Mystics, Illuminati, Alchemists, Brothers of various designations and secret fraternities in Europe, out of sight of the jealous eye of the all-powerful emerging Gentile Roman Church-State. At the period of its lowest ebb in Europe it avoided total extinction by incorporation into the religious teachings of Arabian and Moorish scholars and Jewish students in Spain. The teaching was preserved and handed on by such associations in Medieval Europe as the Cathedral Builders, the Platonic Academy of Florence, the Alchemists, the "Fire Philosophers," the Troubadours and Minnesingers, by secret printers, among them Aldus Minutius of Venice, who reprinted the classic Greek literature that ushered in the Italian Renaissance. Sporadically, now in one region, now in another, it took form in outward movements in groups of mystic and pietistic tendency of many names. One place where it could not be found however was in Christianity from the 2nd century onward! Coming to the surface again in recent years it is being revived by Rosicrucians, Theosophists, Kabbalists, Esotericists, Mystics, Spiritual and Psychic Scientists and Parapsychologists in large numbers, and is perhaps the most vital movement in the thought life of today.

Answer for yourself: Why the resurgence in this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom? This renewal of an influence so long buried was opened during the last century by the studies in Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology exhaustively pursued by many scholars. I suppose the time was right and through such efforts there came a unity of thought from such studies whereby the vast majority of such scholars began to detect a unity, amounting virtually to identity, underlying all the old religious systems of mankind, which expressed so clearly the characteristic features of what appeared to have been a universal primal world religion, with the solar myth as its corner-stone. Such extensive examinations into Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology showed that every great historical religion was readily seen to have been, at its start, a pure expression of the basic elements of this outline, and equally readily seen to have had their pristine purity of teachings badly corrupted by the later influence of Roman Christianity. A gross transgressor in this respect is seen to be Christianity, which carried original spiritual meaning further from its intended meaning than perhaps any other. It is most beneficial to trace the causes and progress of this corruption of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Roman Christianity.

This bold assertion that the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the ancients, from the beginning to time down until the 2nd century, was darkly obscured under Christian influences is a challenging statement and must be given the room to vindicate itself. This website will serve as a substantiation of that claim. This point can be prover beyond any doubt only by an ample reproduction of the substance of the archaic World Religion, so that the clear outlines of the great pristine doctrines of theology as they were apprehended in the arcane schools, may by contrast reveal the darkness and emptiness of its present interpretation by Orthodox Christianity. Only in the light of this restored radiant wisdom of the past will the glaring corruption of current interpretation become discernible.

The stream of degradation of originally pure teaching flowed in through the channels of literalism. The simple but nearly incredible truth of the matter is that existing elaborate outlines of Spiritual ideography, which were devised with poetic genius and analogical skill, were mistaken for literal objective fact by Roman Orthodoxy from the early 2nd century onward. It needs stating that the ancient theologians had sought to portray the essence of deep truth by means of fanciful constructions of many kinds. We must understand this if we ever hope of coming to terms with this Ancient Spiritual Truths which was carried down through history as Divine allegory and myth. The whole of early Egyptian and Greek religious literature was a construction commonly termed mythology. What now looms as the most catastrophic stupidity of the centuries was the slanderous transmutation of Spiritual Allegory into alleged history by Roman Orthodoxy. This has been perpetrated in spite of the obvious impossibility of explaining how a people that produced Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, Pericles, Heraclitus, Homer, Pindar and Demosthenes could gull itself into taking poetic fiction for objective occurrence on a grand scale. Our explanation of the mythology of the Greeks commits us to accrediting such sages with the minds of children. Contrary to what you might have thought or been taught religious myths to the ancients were the vehicles whereby one might come to comprehend ancient Spiritual and Metaphysical Truth. Only to the crudely ignorant were these mythical representations not transparent and not understood correctly. But, oddly enough, blind misapprehension carried the day, and the transparency of the myths was darkened and believed by increasing numbers under the influence of the Fathers of Orthodox Christianity to be supposed "literal-historical" narratives.

Now we must pay close attention. Christianity started out as a system closely kindred with the cults with similar dogmas and doctrines, and boasting of conformity with them. But that was to change with Rome's "reinterpretation" of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom whereby they created a "literal-historical" Jesus.

One of the biggest problems for me in Seminary is the fact that I learned that no one alive when Jesus lived ever mentioned him. I would come to learn that there is no contemporary record that a "literal-historical" Jesus existed outside of this one Roman Bible given to the world. None. There is no Christian record. There is no non-Christian record. I am not making this up. It's part of mainstream modern scholarship. Problematic for me is the fact that no non-Christian alive when Jesus lived ever mentions seeing Jesus or hearing Jesus -- or even hearing about Jesus!

- They don't mention the star that heralded His birth.
- They don't mention Herod's slaughter of boy babies.
- They don't mention crowds gathered to hear Him preach.
- They don't mention His trial.
- They don't mention His crucifixion.
- They don't mention His resurrection.
- They never mention anything He said, or anywhere He went, or anything He thought, or anything He said, or anything He did.

No non-Christian alive when Jesus lived ever mentions Him at all. Not once.

Answer for yourself: What about the Christian record made by people who knew Jesus? There isn't any! The second part of the New Testament -- Acts and letters by Paul and other apostles was of course written after Jesus supposedly died, by people who didn't know Him. They say so themselves.

As to the "first" part of the New Testament, the Gospels, partly because Mark mentions the Jewish-Roman war of the 70s AD, and because Matthew and Luke quote Mark, the consensus of mainstream modern scholarship is that the gospels were written decades after Jesus' death -- by people who never met Him! Some scholars guess the gospels were written late in the first century, maybe forty or fifty years after Jesus died. But that's just a guess -- a low ball guess. The gospels are not mentioned in any other Christian writings -- Origen, Tertullian, Justin Martyr, for example -- until about 150 AD. Many scholars guess they existed before 150 AD -- but a scholarly guess is still just a guess. For starters, the guys who wrote the gospels are not the guys with their names on the cover. Mark did not write Mark. Matthew did not write Matthew. Ditto John and Luke. There are lots of reasons behind this, including the fact the earliest papyrus gospel manuscripts (the earliest ones date to about 200 AD) don't give the names of the authors, and we know the authors' names were actually first stuck on the gospels by a Catholic priest generations later. And of the four gospelers, the priest said only Matthew ever met Jesus -- yet Matthew copies extensively from Mark, who never met Jesus. What's more no early Christian writers quote or even mention the gospels until the middle of the second century AD. There is no evidence they existed before then! This should wake you up from the dead!

There is no contemporary record that Jesus existed. None. That's not a guess, that's a fact.

Answer for yourself: Don't the early Christian writings prove Christianity is unique?

No, they don't. This is what most Christians today don't know. The early Christians did not think Jesus was unique. Today the Internet can bring you "key" important quotes by Early Church Fathers that are alarming when the impact of their honesty hits home. We can today read what the earliest Christians --Tertullian, Justin Martyr, Origen --wrote about Jesus and the Pagan Gods. They said that Jesus was similar to the Pagan Gods.

Answer for yourself: Why? Because the "Jesus Story" is the SAME "story" as these prior Divine Personified Spiritual Allegories or "gods". The early Church Father, Justin Martyr in particular, is at pains to protest that Christianity in no wise differs from pagan usages.

Justin Martyr states:

""When we say that the Word, who is the first-birth of God, was produced without sexual union, and that He, Jesus Christ, our Teacher, was crucified and died, and rose again, and ascended into heaven, we propound nothing different from what you believe regarding those whom you esteem sons of Jupiter." [Justin Martyr, First Apology, 21]

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

It should teach you that directly from the pens of the first Christians themselves, that in the second century, at the foundation of the faith, even before the Gospels were available, Christians worried about the similarities between Jesus and the Pagan Gods, worried about the fact the Pagan Gods came first, and explained the similarity as "demonic imitation" -- copying by the Pagans backwards in time! This is plain stupid to blame it on the "Devil". These corrupters of the Divine Ancient Spiritual Wisdom were cornered, they were caught in their web of lies and misinterpretations and they had to come up with something. So they blamed it on the Devil!

What the New Testament and other early Christian writings prove is that after the time allotted for the death of Jesus, Christians eventually came to believe He was the uniquely true God.

In response to these admissions of history and Early Church Fathers Christians continually point to Josephus and a "quote" about Jesus to verify his historical existence. The Jewish historian Flavius Josephus is considered by many Christian scholars, but not all of them by any means, to be the most important non-Christian source on Christ's existence. Written around C.E. 95, this paragraph appears in The Antiquities of the Jews:

"Now, there was about this time, Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he was a doer of wonderful works--a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews, and many of the Gentiles. He was [the] Christ; and when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men amongst us, had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at the first did not forsake him, for he appeared to them alive again the third day, as the divine prophets had foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him; and the tribe of Christians, so named form him are not extinct at this day."

If this is the strongest and earliest extra-Biblical evidence for the historical Jesus, then the scholarship is on the shakiest grounds. That passage from Josephus has been shown conclusively to be a forgery, and even conservative scholars admit that it has been tampered with. But even were it historical, it dates from more than six decades after the supposed death of Jesus.

The passage, although widely quoted by believers today, did not show up in the writings of Josephus until centuries after his death, at the beginning of the fourth century. Thoroughly dishonest church historian Eusebius is credited as the real author. The passage is grossly out of context, a clear hint that it was inserted at a later time.

All scholars agree that Josephus, a Jew who never converted to Christianity, would not have called Jesus "the Christ" or "the truth," so the passage must have been doctored by a later Christian--evidence, by the way, that some early believers were in the habit of altering texts to the advantage of their theological agenda. The phrase "to this day" that appears in the interpolation, reveals it was written at a later time. Everyone agrees there was no "tribe of Christians" during the time of Josephus--Christianity did not get off the ground until the second century.

If Jesus were truly important to history, then Josephus should have told us something about him. Yet he is completely silent about the supposed miracles and deeds of Jesus. He does not quote Jesus. He adds nothing to the Gospel narratives and tells us nothing that would not have been known by Christians in either the first or fourth centuries. In all of Josephus' voluminous writings, there is nothing about Jesus or Christianity anywhere outside of the tiny paragraph.

The Josephus paragraph mentions that Jesus was foretold by the divine prophets, but he does not tell us who those prophets were or what they said. This is religious propaganda, not history. If Jesus had truly been the fulfillment of Jewish prophecy, then Josephus would have been the exact person to confirm it.

Answer for yourself: So why is this Josephus passage so important? It is the best "historical evidence" for Jesus that exits in Christianity today.

There exists another phrase from Josephus that concerns James, the so-called brother of Jesus, and is likewise flimsy. It says that a man named James was stoned to death, which is not mentioned in the bible. Many scholars believe the "brother of Jesus" phrase is a later interpolation, and that Josephus was referring to a different James, possibly the same James that Paul mentions in Acts, who led a sect in Jerusalem. Contradicting Josephus, Hegesippus wrote a history of Christianity in C.E. 170 saying that James, the brother of Jesus, was killed in a riot, not by sentence of a court.

Often Christians have cited Pliny the Younger, who, in the early second century (112 C.E.), reported that "Christians were singing a hymn to Christ as to a god." Notice how late this reference is. And notice the absence of the name "Jesus." The passage, if accurate, could have referred to any of the other self-proclaimed "Christs" (messiahs) followed by Jews who thought they had found their anointed one. Pliny's account is not history, since he is only relaying what other people believed. No one doubts that Christianity was in existence by this time. This is of no proof at all for the existence of a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus.

Taticus, another second-century Roman writer who alleged that Christ had been executed by sentence of Pontius Pilate, is likewise cited by Christians. Written some time after C.E. 117, Tacitus' claim is more of the same late, second-hand "history." There is no mention of the name "Jesus," only "the sect known as Christians" living in Rome being persecuted, and "their founder, one Christus." Tacitus claims no first-hand knowledge of Christianity. No historical evidence exists that Nero persecuted Christians--Nero did persecute Jews, so perhaps Tacitus was confused. There was certainly not a "great crowd" of Christians in Rome around C.E. 60, as Tacitus put it, and most damning, the term "Christian" was not even in use in the first century. No one in the second century ever quoted this passage of Tacitus. In fact, it appears almost word-for-word in the fourth-century writings of Sulpicius Severus, where it is mixed with other obvious myths. Citing Tacitus, therefore, is highly suspect and adds virtually nothing to the evidence for a historical Jesus.

Historians have no evidence of a historic Jesus dating from the time Jesus supposedly lived, even though many contemporary writers documented the era in great detail. Philo of Alexandria, for example, wrote in depth about early first-century Palestine, naming other self-proclaimed messiahs, yet never once mentioning a man named Jesus. Many other contemporary writers covered that era, yet there is not a single mention of any existence, deeds, or words of a man named Jesus.

Timothy Freke and Peter Gandy, in their book The Jesus Mysteries, explain how the myth and legend of Jesus could easily have arisen without a historical founder. The Jesus story was pressed from the same template as other mythical savior-gods who were killed and resurrected, such as Osiris, Dionysus, Mithra, and Attis. This is not surprising for all these "Christs" were but personifications of the Divine Soul in mankind as interpreted correctly in the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom; none were ever believed to be "literal-historical" personages as we are taught about Jesus who is the "same" quoting again Justin Martyr who lived a lot closer to the time of this Spiritual Wisdom than we today.

Early Christians agreed that Christianity offered "nothing different" from paganism. Arguing with pagans around C.E. 150, Justin Martyr said at another time:

"When we say that the Word, who is the first born of God, was produced without sexual union, and that he, Jesus Christ, our teacher, was crucified and died, and rose again, and ascended into heaven; we propound nothing different from what you believe regarding those whom you esteem sons of Jupiter (Zeus)."

Fourth-century Christian scholar Fermicus, in attempting to establish the uniqueness of Christianity, met at every turn by pagan precedents to the story of Jesus, and in exasperation concluded: "The Devil has his Christs!"

The Gospels are not history; they are religious propaganda, contradictory, exaggerated, and mythical. The earliest Christian writings, the letters of Paul, are silent about the man Jesus: Paul, who never met Jesus, fails to mention a single deed or saying of Jesus (except for the ritualistic Last Supper formula), and sometimes contradicts what Jesus supposedly said. To Paul, Jesus was a heavenly disembodied Christ figure, not a man of flesh and blood.

There is serious doubt that Jesus ever existed. It is impossible to prove he was a historical figure. It is much more plausible to consider the Jesus character to be the result of myth-making, a human process that is indeed historically documented, or at best nothing more than a later Roman "reinterpretation" of pervious Divine Spiritual Allegories know to humanity since the beginning of time.

I want you to notice the date of this next quote:

The men of latter times accepted this..., not only calling them the births and deaths of the gods, but even believing that they are so. [Plutarch, Isis and Osiris, 379]

We should see that by 379 A.D. that the general populace had lost even more "keys" to correctly interpreting this ancient Spiritual Wisdom and were now believing these Pagan godmen to be "literal" and "historical" beings. Close to this date is the Canonization of the New Testament in 380 C.E. (one year difference) and when you put the two together no wonder Christianity has come down to us believing in a "literal-historical" Jesus Christ.

Answer for yourself: Was Jesus new? Was Jesus unique? Justin Martyr sure did not think so. In order to answer that we have to know something about the Pagan godmen.

This conjures up memories of the crucified "Jesus" but the problem is that the inscription reads "Orpheus Bakkus" which is another way of saying "Dionysus" who was likewise crucified on an old rugged cross. Understand that this image predated the time of the supposed crucified Jesus by over two hundred years.

Answer for yourself: Was Jesus a xerox copy of one particular Pagan God? Was He Mithras renamed? Or Dionysus? The answer is both "Yes" and "No". Jesus was a "new" edition of the same old idea. It was after all the changing of the Age and the Age of Pisces was dawning and the Age of Aries was ending and with it mankind needed a new understanding of God and Salvation. This new "reinterpretation" of the old religious motif served quite well. Jesus was the "new version" of an "old Spiritual idea" to which a "literal-historical" interpretation was given unlike before.

Jesus was the Son of God who suffered, died, and was reborn. But He wasn't the first Son of God who suffered, died, and was reborn. He brought salvation; but He wasn't the God first to do that either. His mother was a virgin; He wasn't the first God there either. It's the same with miracles, disciples, ascending to heaven -- the list goes on and on. Believing scholars like to bring up differences between Jesus and the earlier Pagan godmen in order to try to make the case that Jesus is "unique and different". They say that, for instance, Mithras was born of a rock, not a virgin, so Jesus can't be Mithras. Attis died under a pine tree, not on a cross, so Jesus can't be Attis. Believing scholars are right, Jesus wasn't Mithras, and He wasn't Attis. Jesus was a "new" God, but at the core his is but a "new" version of God, built from old ideas.

All of the nations "Godmen" were the "Word made flesh". A God shaped like a man, walking, talking, eating, but still having magic God powers -- you can't get more Pagan than that. Ancient Gods had human bodies, that's how Paganism worked. Jesus was no different. Gods like Attis, Dionysus, Osiris, Mithras, and others weren't just Gods in human form, they were God-men -- subordinate Gods, son's of the great universal God, miraculously conceived, living for a while on Earth rather than in Heaven.

Answer for yourself: Sound familiar? Sure it does. That's because Jesus is a Pagan godman. But when we take into consideration that this is but the use of personification and anthropomorphic language whereby human characteristics are given to Divine Ideas then we see the genius of the Ancient Spiritual Allegories and Myths. The Metaphysical Spiritual realm of God was described in such a way that the common man could identify and understand such Divine and lofty Spiritual Concepts like the incarnation of God within himself and the "resurrection" from the "dead" (Spiritually) while he yet lives in this fleshly body. In dealing with the dying, resurrected godmen, we don't know exactly when the myths of the resurrected godmen began -- they date back thousands of years, basically fading into prehistory. We do know the myths began in Ancient Egypt and migrate to the eastern Mediterranean (the Levant, the Middle East, Mesopotamia, Persia-Assyria-Syria), where farming cultures developed religions that celebrated the yearly return of crop fertility. You probably won't be surprised to hear Mother Earth religions had Gods who personified the cycle-of-nature by dying in the autumn, actual death and rebirth at the Winter Solstice, and the full celebration of being reborn in the spring when the Earth testifies to this Divine Truth.

- In Athens the women fast...and the Boeotians...name that festival the Festival of Sorrow, since Demeter is in sorrow because of her daughter's decent into Pluto's realm. This month, in the season of the Pleiades, is the month of seeding....
- The Phrygians, believing that the god is asleep in the winter and awake in the summer, sing lullabies for him in the winter and in the summer chants to arouse him, after the manner of Bacchic [aka Dionysus'] worshipers.
- The Paphlagonians assert that in the winter he is bound fast and imprisoned, but that in the spring he bestirs himself and sets himself free again. [Plutarch, Isis and Osiris, 378]

As you see, the myths' details differed, but at their core they are the same.

Answer for yourself: Can we be sure these pre-Christian people really believed their gods died and came back to life?

The men of latter times accepted this..., not only calling them the births and deaths of the gods, but even believing that they are so. [Plutarch, Isis and Osiris, 379]

The ancient Greeks and Romans inherited and adapted Gods from Ancient Egypt and the archaic Middle East, carrying their myths past the cycle-of-nature stage.

Answer for yourself: And what were some of their names? Adonis, Dionysus, Cybele and Attis, Isis and Osiris. And others. You should understand, there's a lot of stuff about the godmen we don't know -- after Constantine's conversion in 312 AD, pagan religions were suppressed, their temples destroyed or converted, their priests murdered, their sacred texts burned. We do know the names of their Gods, and some of their rituals. And we can trace their ideas to Greece and Rome -- and on to the church in your neighborhood this weekend.

So we see that our "Jesus Story" is not new. The "Jesus Story" is not unique. He wasn't the first Son born to the supreme God and a mortal woman. He wasn't the first godman to heal the sick, raise the dead, turn water into wine. He wasn't the first godman to die and be reborn and ascend into heaven. The stories about Jesus -- his myths -- were not new. Everything we read and interpret as if "literal-historical" in our "Jesus Story" has its truest meaning in Metaphysical Realities dealing with our Souls and their incarnation in our bodies and it intended Spiritual Growth. The stories about Jesus -- his myths -- are not unique but are critically important for us only when interpreted correctly once again.

Having said all of this the fact of the matter is that you, the reader, cannot be sure that I am 100% right in what I have said and taught unless you possess some knowledge concerning other ancient religions. When you do the studies you see for certain that Christianity was not new like Justin Martyr said, Christianity was not unique, Christianity was not discontinuous with ancient Paganism but a gross "reinterpretation" of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom that robs man of his rightful Spiritual inheritance.

Hundreds of years before Christianity Pagans had:

- personal Gods who care about people and help or punish them
- A single supreme God who made and controls the Universe
- Gods who ascend and descend from their home up in heaven
- A soul that survives death
- Eternal life after death, with torment for sinners; reward for the worthy
- The Logos, which early Christians explicitly identify as the Holy Spirit
- Gods who are Sons of the supreme God, often born of a mortal woman
- Prophecy -- made and fulfilled
- Miracles -- stuff like raising the dead, healing the sick, restoring sight to the blind, turning water into wine
- Worshiped Gods who died and came back to life
- Were personal religions entered into voluntarily via initiation ceremonies that involved purification by water baptism that reenacted the God's death and rebirth
- Taught that initiation gave believers rebirth and salvation
- Celebrated with ceremonies of food and drink that reenacted a holy meal established by the God
- Had teachings that brought the faithful closer to God
- Worshiped Gods with the miraculous power to heal illness

Christianity had all these things, but Paganism had all of them first. In all these things, Christianity was not new, Christianity was not unique, Christianity was not discontinuous with mainstream Paganism. Christianity was a "reinterpretation" of the above Divine Spiritual Wisdom; a sad gross mischaracterization of Spiritual Truth that so desperately needs to be restored to its correct interpretation today. Only in this way can the Bible be restored to the Divine Truth that it was intended to convey.

The first Christians knew all about pagan myths. The early writings of Christianity prove the first Christians knew Jesus' story is not unique.

If you're like me, you grew up thinking the bible stories about Jesus were historical. He really did have magical powers. He really did come back from the dead. Jesus was a new, independent -- who brought a radical new concept of God, a radical new concept of people's personal relationship with God, a radical new assurance of eternal life. What we've discovered is that nothing about Jesus was new or different, except the "literal-historical" aspect added to this Divine Allegory by Rome.. The miracle stories were old Pagan stories. Monotheism was old Pagan philosophy. Baptism was old Pagan ritual. Resurrection was old Pagan myth. Salvation was an old Pagan promise. Jesus wasn't sudden or new or independent. The Christ myth looks exactly like the old Pagan myths popular at the time. Most folks see that Christianity looks like it is in continuity with ancient Paganism because it is in continuity with ancient Paganism. The first Christians built their new religion out of the ideas, rituals, and myths that defined the Pagan culture they grew up in. Christianity is an ancient Pagan religion. The salvation and resurrection you'll hear about in Church this Sunday are four thousand year old Pagan myths. They only problem is that you hear it without its original Divine intended interpretation thanks to Rome and their anti-Semitism and antinomianism.

Answer for yourself: How did this happen? It is complicated so I will summarize.

When, in the 2nd through the 5th century, the head-ship of the early Church passed out of the hands of the academicians of Athens and Alexandria, of Antioch, Tarsus and Ephesus, and fell into those of the less studied Romans, the trend to literalism had gained such momentum that there swept into the movement a spirit of vindictiveness against the dominant systems of esoteric secrecy that accompanied this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom which was reserved for "initiates" and those desiring such knowledge and showing themselves worthy of it. When the conception of the purely spiritual Christos could no longer successfully be imparted to the ignorant masses, who were crying out for a political savior, it was found necessary, or expedient, to substitute the more concrete idea of a personal and "literal" savior or Messiah. The swell of this tide of force carried the Church Fathers to the limit of recasting the entire Gospel in the terms of a human biography. So what had been originally in the Ancient Mysteries and the sacred scripts a combined astrological and mythical dramatization of mans total Spiritual experience, the Descent of the Soul into humankind, was now turned into the story of one character to which everyone's salvation depended.

The outcome has been that the theology handed down to us by the early reinterpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom is the crudest, least rational and intellectually most confusing interpretation of the ancient revelation anywhere extant. Philo, Origen, Clement and Josephus had expressly declared that scripture shielded beneath the literal narrative a secret profundity of meaning, which was its true message. Philo specified four distinct levels in which the sense of scripture was to be apprehended, the purely literal, or physical, the moral or emotional, the allegorical or mental and the lofty spiritual. The later Church discarded or disregarded the two or three more secret ones and held only to the lowest and the basest. The drive to convert the highly concentrated "meat" of spiritual truth into "milk" for the babes gave to Christianity zeal that it needed to capture the minds of the ignorance among the lower ranks of subjects and shortly enabled it to turn the tide against its chief rival, Mithraism. The masses will always, as they did in Luthers Reformation, seize upon a sweeping current of ideological hope and attempt to utilize it as a means of escape from their lowly economic lot. The hopes of the rabble interwove the dream of political liberation with the religious message, adding an the pressure to translate allegory into a tale of history. Thus Christianity lost its Gnosis; and all Christendom has since had to suffer this tragic erroneous "reinterpretation" given this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Rome.

Let us end with a reflection on how easy it was to obscure this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom among the early centuries and the ignorant masses that flocked to a Christian hope for both political and religious deliverance from the tyranny of Rome. The cultured Celsus, writing about 200 A.D., cannot refrain from commenting on the social complexion of the Christians of his day. He wrote: "It is only the simpletons, the ignoble, the senseless--slaves and womenfolk and children--whom they wish to persuade . . . wool-dressers and cobblers and fullers, the most uneducated and vulgar persons . . . whosoever is a sinner, or unintelligent, or a fool, in a word, whoever is god-forsaken (kakodaimon), him the kingdom of God will receive" (Bouck White, The Call of the Carpenter).

Christianity's failure is that it denied the Gnosis to the intelligent--or to any. Its Roman revolt against the spiritual esotericism constituted its betrayal of the innermost heart of all religion. Christianity is responsible for this lost message of the Gnosis of the Ancient Soul Science through its tragic "literal reinterpretation" of such Divine Wisdom. And the murder of the learned Hypatia and the burning of the priceless books of the Alexandrian library are sufficient attestation of the great lengths of purging of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom to which Rome would go to conceal this horrible "reinterpretation" of Spiritual genius.

But this darkness and mind-control will no longer work in an age of enlightenment and information. Christianity now lives to witness a world of more general intelligence, after repression by fiend-like persecution for fifteen centuries. That Christianity presented to the world a complete new system of higher Spiritual truth unknown before its time is shown to be a boldface lie and at best a tragic denigration of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and a gross egregious "mistranslation" of it.

The legitimacy of such a dogmatic assertion can become evident only in the light of the entire study here undertaken on this website as well as others since such a lengthy scrutiny is required to demonstrate that in dogma after dogma, rite after rite, and parable after parable, Christianity substituted a mean and valueless literal sense for the original lofty Spiritual Message of Ancient Egypt.

The truth of the matter is that Christianity devised nothing new and retained the outward form and dress of prior pagan systems. Even with this radical "reinterpretation" Christianity has ever been hard put to explain the undeniable similarity between preceding religions and its own faith and practice. Intelligent churchmen have seen the futility of denying the fact and have readily admitted the pagan sources of Christianity. But in the third century it was a matter of critical importance to maintain the novel and superior character of the new religion.

Answer for yourself: And how did Christianity answer such a charge of plagiarism and "reinterpretation"?

The device resorted to by numbers of the Fathers in answering historical charges of religious plagiarism and "reinterpretation" of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom is indisputable testimony to the desperateness of their dilemma. Church membership and many Christian authors are not even aware of these historical admissions by these Church Fathers and even when informed of such attempts to answer such charges they are reluctant to credit the reliability of the evidence that exists on this matter. Once you see this then it is almost unbelievable that this was recorded in history and lost to the minds of Christianity down through the ages. But yet it was said in defence of the Christian "reinterpretation" of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom when they were cornered in debates with men like Celsus and others. Church Fathers, confronted from time to time with amazing evidences of unbelievable parallels between the "Jesus Story" and the prior sungods had no recourse but to defy logic and blame it on the "Devil". It should be alarming for you to know and our Christian pride should recoil in horror at the dishonesty of this "literalistic" Christianity and its earliest founders when confronted down through history by others "possessing this knowledge" and extent of their plagiarism of the existing Ancient Spiritual Wisdom from Egypt and later periods of world history.

Now let me tell you of an excellent book that ever Christian should read. A classic "must read" is Edward Carpenter's Pagan and Christian Creeds. In this excellent work, Pagan and Christian Creeds, Edward Carpenter comments at length on the subterfuge, as follows:

"The similarity of these ancient pagan legends and beliefs with Christian traditions was indeed so great that it excited the attention and the undisguised wrath of the early Christian Fathers. They felt no doubt about the similarity, but not knowing how to explain it, fell back upon the innocent theory that the Devil--in order to confound the Christians--had centuries before, caused the pagans to adopt certain beliefs and practices! (Very crafty, we may say, of the Devil, but very innocent of the Fathers to believe it!) Justin Martyr, for instance, describes the institution of the Lords supper as narrated in the Gospels, and then goes on to say: Which the wicked devils have imitated in the Mysteries of Mithra, commanding the same thing to be done. For that bread and a cup of water are placed with certain incantations in the mystic rites of one who is being initiated you either know or can learn" (p. 25).

Tertullian also says (De Praescriptione Hereticorum, C. 30; De Bapt., C. 3; De Corona, C. 15) that "the devil by the mysteries of his idols imitates even the main part of the divine mysteries. . . . He baptizes his worshippers in water and makes them believe that this purifies them from their crimes! . . . Mithra sets his mark on the forehead of his soldiers; he celebrates the oblation of bread; he offers an image of the resurrection and presents at once the crown and the sword; he limits his chief priests to a single marriage; he even has his virgins and ascetics."

Cortez, if you are not aware, complained that the Devil had positively taught to the Mexicans the same things which God had taught to Christendom. This was in response of finding the new world a "crucified man" on a Cross before they brought Catholic dogma and their version of a "crucified savior" to the new world. You should read how these Priests and Cortez were utterly astounded at what they discovered already existed in the new world. With a little knowledge of astronomy then this becomes evident and this knowledge of the Cosmos was worldwide in Ancient times contrary to what we are taught today. This again shows you the influence of Ancient Egypt who taught the incarnation of the Divine Mind into matter over the whole world (crossing of the Divine and Matter shaped and depicted as intersecting planes making a "cross". This was what lied at the center of the Descent of the Soul, the Deific Mind, into mankind (Spirit in matter). This was symbolized as the events associated with the Vernal Equinox which became symbolic of this Metaphysical reality. This become evident the more you study and lies behind much of what we are finding today in current archeological studies. To which may be added the astonishing statement of a modern Catholic priest, quoted by Carpenter (p. 68): "And the Tartary Father Grüber thus testifies: This only do I affirm, that the Devil so mimics the Catholic Church there, that although no European or Christian has ever been there, still in all essential things they agree so completely with the Roman Church as even to celebrate the Host with bread and wine; with my own eyes I have seen it!" (Edward Carpenter, Pagan and Christian Creeds, p. 68).

There are many accusations against "the Devil" for this diabolical mimicry that we find in the same manner from Christian apologists throughout the 2nd through the 5th century. Not only were the spiritual dogmas and doctrines and practice of the new Christian religion identical in most respects with those of previous Ancient Spiritual religions but what is striking for us to realize is that they were "reinterpreted" and their original meanings lost. Its own central thesis, the divinity of the Savior, had been anticipated by some hundreds of years in other cults. But there is one big, big difference. These earlier ancient religions NEVER "literalized" this Spiritual Allegory of the Descent of the Soul into mankind and limited it to but one supposed "literal" person; they understood it referred to and applied to the whole of mankind. If we look close the result emerges with great clearness, that the figure of the Redeemer, as such, did not wait for Christianity to force its way into the religion of Gnosis, but was already present in these ancient Spiritual Religions under various forms (Prof. Bousset, Pagan and Christian Creeds, p. 206). But again all of these "Redeemers" were allegorical in the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and in so doing expressed the "awakening in mankind of his divinity", as his Soul or "Krst/Karest/Christ" within his body. This was the "resurrection of Christ" from the dead (dwelling in bodies of matter considered as if "dead" by the ancients). We got it just backwards today!

Discussing the doctrine of a Savior, Carpenter writes: "Probably the wide range of this doctrine would have been far better and more generally known, had not the Christian Church, all through, made the greatest of efforts and taken the greatest of precautions to extinguish and snuff out all evidence of the pagan claims on the subject. There is much to show that the early Church took this line with regard to pre-Christian Saviors" (Edward Carpenter, p. 130). Carpenter makes it clear that the coming of a Savior-God was in no sense a belief distinctive of Christianity. He explains that the Messianic prophecies of the Jews and the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, once again misinterpreted, infected Christian teaching to some degree with Judaic influence. The Hebrew word Messiah, meaning "The Anointed One," occurs some forty times in the Old Testament; and each time in the Septuagint, written as early as the third century before our era, it is translated Christos, which also means "Anointed." It is thus seen, says Carpenter, that the word "the Christ" was in vogue in Alexandria as far back as 280 B.C. In the Book of Enoch, written not later than B.C. 170, the Christ is spoken of as already existing in heaven, about to come to earth, and is called "The Son of Man." The Book of Revelation is full of passages from Enoch, likewise the Epistles of Paul and the Gospels.

These statements are but a suggestion of the full truth in this direction. The Christians were not content to let the matter rest with the explanation that Satan had teased them with some anticipatory resemblances. These earliest Christians responded to this insane "blame it on the Devil defense" by the most violent measures to blot out all links between their body of doctrine and former Ancient Spiritual Wisdom. This is a black, black page in the history of Christianity and a measure of evil policy not easily condoned. They destroyed as far as possible the entire body of pagan record to obliterate, as Carpenter says, "the evidence of their own dishonesty." Porphyry tells of their destruction of elaborate treatises on Mithraism. And his own work on Christianity fell a prey likewise. Their vandal work is matter of record. The whole matter may be tersely summed up in the world of Sir Gilbert Murray: "The polemic literature of Christianity is loud and triumphant; the books of the pagans have been destroyed."

Christianity has lost a lot from its earliest expression of religion belief and its repeated attempts to mask the truth about its origins is laid open before concerned readers and truth seekers today. Radical fanaticism, fundamentalism, and the destruction of literature are always the resort of a rotten cause, revealing a absence of truth by those wanting and perpetrating such destruction of evidences to contrary positions they hold. The unlimited Christian zeal to wipe out all the testimony of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom during the 2nd through the 5th century testifies to the erroneous interpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom given by Rome and to which we have fallen prey yet today. It may be said, in partial extenuation of the Fathers conduct in the second through the fifth centuries, that their discovery now and again of the startling similarities between their religion and earlier paganism may have come with genuine astonishment to the eyes of those not familiar with these parallels as it does to new students today. It is mistakenly believed by most that the Greeks and Romans of the early Christian days stood far closer to the great Egyptian and Chaldean cultures than we do today. That is not true. The Egyptian papyri, monuments, tablets, and hieroglyphics were a sealed book to the vast majority of early Christian Fathers, and remained so until Champollion worked out the key to the hieroglyphics from the Rosetta Stone in the early nineteenth century. Only then were we able to read and decipher the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of Egypt and see the unbelievable parallels to our "Jesus Story". Only when we get back to the early Church Fathers in Alexandria, Egypt, do we find some commonality of thought with the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of Egypt but we should not be surprised as Alexandria is in Egypt in the first place. The connection between the Christian cult and its antecedents in India, Chaldea and Egypt was not seen then as it can be today since aided by the Rosetta Stone and other archeological discoveries. We can in a some small way begin to understand the indignant surprise of the propagators of this new "reinterpreted" Christian faith on finding that their alleged novel and "unique" truth had been copied ahead of them by those they were taught to define as both "heathen" and "pagan". It is time to rethink that!

The crux of present interest in the matter is the consideration that the Christianity of our time is imperiling its own standing and reputation by perpetuating a mistake made at its historical inception. Continuance in denial of such plagiarism or "reinterpretation" of existing Ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Christianity is pointless in this information age which such things become open to critical investigation and exposed to the light of day. Such stances of denial by Christian preachers and Christian writers show only their disingenuousness and lack of concern for "truth". As I see it Christianity's only salvation from this onslaught of incriminating evidence and knowledge is outright admission of the purposeful erroneous interpretation of the Ancient Sacred Texts and a repentance which culminates in a frank admission of its outgrowth from pagan antecedents, along with a willingness to reconstruct a whole new "re-interpretation" of its theology in relation to the intended interpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom as given by those who handed in down the corridors of history.

This won't be easy for a religion that has defined itself as "infallible and inerrant". It will be hard for Christians to turn back and embrace what it had been so long taught to despise. But it must be done, or all pretense at regard for the truth will be abandoned. The grand body of ancient teaching should never have been brought into contempt as it was by the early Church Fathers. Convicted of its great error the Church must go the whole way in making the correction. No course but that of sincere honesty will now suffice. Further concealment, denial, and theological runaround will only prove the lack of sincerity and the love of truth by those who do so in the fact of such overwhelming evidence that negates and corrects most Christian theological positions. In the coming years with this culminating witness to the erroneous interpretation of Christianity of its own Bible how Ecclesiastical and fundamentalist Christianity meets this issue will determine its fate. Life and death is actually in its own hand. If it confronts it with honest humility it may rise again in power, respect, and esteem. For there is power in the Ancient Spiritual Soul Science to transfigure Christian nations with the glow of righteousness at it was originally intended when the "Jesus Story" was to be the "pattern" for all mankind but was tragically grasped away from them by Rome's hidden religious agendas of power and greed. The Dark Ages are not yet past, and that treasure which slipped away through the fingers of early Christianity has not yet been restored. I pray these articles help in this regard in some small way.

THE BIBLE: A BOOK CONCERNED WITH THE SCIENCE OF THE SOUL #1

We began this series of articles dedicated to restoring the "lost keys" for proper Biblical interpretation as stated in the first article in this series. Now we continue the study as each article after article will accomplish the promise made to all our readership in the first article in this series. So lets settle in and see what the world's spiritual truths of God were like before the rise of the mighty Roman Empire whom I will show you "reinterpreted" pretty much every thing in its battle with Judaism and the religious ideas set forth there which were actually inherited in many cases from Ancient Egypt. These articles are written to tell the truth about God, His Krst/Karest/Christ, and the Descent of the Soul into humankind as it existed and had been taught since basically unchanged since the beginning of recorded time before its "reinterpretation" during the 3rd through the 5th centuries by the emerging "replacement religion" of the Mighty Roman Empire which we know today as Christianity. I will show the reader how the Divine Truths as understood by the whole of mankind since its beginning were not only "reinterpreted" by Roman Christianity but how they they suppressed, buried this truth and its evidences, destroyed and changed the ancient documents and in its place a "reinterpreted" religious dogma after dogma in their presentation to the world of their counterfeit "salvation plan". I will show the reader how Rome substituted and promulgated with every device of propaganda known to mankind this "reinterpretation" of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom. These articles should not be taken as an attack upon Christianity because so far from being hostile to Christianity, they actually are in all likelihood the first light of truth in centuries that is written in support and defense of the true religion of "the Christ" in over 1,900 years of Roman Christianity's mind control of the masses. These articles are intended to restore the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Religious Truths of the ancient world that once comprised the earliest expression of the true religion of the "Krst,/Karest/Christ" before the rise of the mighty Roman Christianity in the third through the fifth centuries. These articles set out to prove that what was passed under the name of Christianity is not and really has never been the true religion of the "Krst/Karest/Christ" at all. The thing accepted for Christianity today has turned out to be something else very unlike the original "Krst Religion" which was taught for thousands and thousands of years before the "keys" of its knowledge were lost and "re-interpreted" by selfish priestcrafts of the 3rd through the 5th centuries in Rome. What we have today is a false substitution and perversion of these Ancient Spiritual Truths which is passed upon the unsuspecting as the truth of God when in fact it is not. These articles are my best attempt to rewrite the religious history of true Christianity which was later refashioned upon false foundations, to define the nature of its falsification of the Ancient Spiritual Truth and its utter misinterpretation of its Scriptures as they have been mistakenly taken as assumed "historical narratives" instead of their pure allegorical and mythical basis which instructed humankind for over 10,000 years. What I will repeatedly show the reader is that Christianity evolved and took historical form as the result of a corruption of the high wisdom already in existence and which had been for cherished for over 10,000 years, and not as a promulgation of sone "new light and wisdom previously unknown". I will share with the reader the common solid ground for the thesis that the religion passed off upon the popular acceptance of the 3rd through 5th century by the Roman Empire was never anything but the corruption of the more exalted understanding and truer wisdom from Ancient Spiritual Egypt and the early nation of Israel. Let us begin now by exposing that fantastic delusion of "literalized and historicized" Scriptural myths which has inoculated the minds of untold millions in dark superstition over so many centuries under the name of Christianity and we do so first by looking at Augustine's world-shaking quote. Here it is:

"That which is known as the Christian religion existed among the ancients, and never did not exist; from the very beginning of the human race until the time when Christ came in the flesh, at which time the true religion, which already existed, began to be called Christianity" (Retractt.I, xiii).

Christianity as it existed in the beginning of time as the world's true religion, the religion of the Krst/Karest/Christ, has existed since Ancient Egypt some 10,000 years B.C.E. or even longer. What you don't know is that the whole corpus of its dogmas and teachings were later "reinterpreted" and "changed" by Rome in the 3rd through the 5th centuries and exist today at best as "blurred" images of the real. This unbelievable fact was mentioned by many different Church Fathers in their own writings in early Christianity but one in particular astonishing declaration was made in the early 4th century of our era by the most famous of all the Church Fathers, Augustine. Had this quote from Augustine not been hidden from the light of day by others bent on concealing the truth of this new "reinterpretation of Sacred Egyptian Religion" but had been been shared in Western history, the whole course of that history would have been vastly altered for the better. It is only too likely the case that the obvious implications of the Augustine passage were of such a nature that its open dissemination was frowned upon by the ecclesiastical authorities in every age and for obvious reasons. Augustine's quote held the gist of the great truths of the Ancient Egyptian Religion which would have been a stumbling-block in the way of not only the perpetuation of priestly power over the general Christian mind but the later "reinterpretation" of the Ancient Egyptian Religion by a replacement religion of Rome which stood, unlike its former mentor, upon a "literal-historical" interpretation and hermeneutic of the whole corpus of Egyptian Religion. Augustine's quote stands as a point-blank repudiation of the whole structure upon which the Roman Christian religion rests. Every child born to Christian parents in eighteen centuries has been indoctrinated with the unqualifed belief that Christianity was a completely new, and the first true religion in world history when in fact it is not! It is nothing more than a grossly, purposeful distortion of and deformed "reinterpretation" of a host of Ancient Egyptian Spiritual Dogmas of the Soul as I will show the reader as we progress from article to article. This ancient "true religion" that found its birth in Ancient Egypt came to be known under a lot of different names: Hermeticism in Ancient Egypt; Orphism in early Greece; Zoroastrianism in Persia; Brahmanism in India; Taoism in China; Shintoism in Japan and China, etc. Unknown to most Christians because of the negative writings of most misinformed Christian writers the Mystery Religions dramatized and ritualized the Descent of the Soul and "the Christ" in many lands. Always has this Soul Science existed among men; never was the core of this Soul Science not present in the history of the world. Hardly was this Soul Science ever apprehended at its real value by the masses and certainly not be the unenlightened; therefore often its representations have been badly misconceived and misunderstood at every turn down through history following the rise of the Roman Empire. Yet it existed despite attempts to conceal it, change it, and modify it and it came down to Augustine's day and he recognized it as the very basis of the Christianity that existed in his day. This same Soul Science found expression at the hands of Plato and Plotinus where it would find its new name, the Christos-Christianity; the religion of the Christos, the Divine Principle in all mankind. At the hands of the Roman Empire that which should have been but a straight perpetuation of that Ancient Egyptian Religious traditions of the Karest/Christ became almost a total negation and obliteration of the Ancient Spiritual Truths first entrusted to mankind by the Creator. In its place we unenlightened world was given our mistakenly presented "historical-literal" Jesus Story instead of the "keys" to understand the Ancient Krst/Karest/Christ as it had been taught since the beginning of time.

I think it fitting after this introduction to continue this article with the conclusions of this study at which we as students and "truth-seekers" will personally adopt after consistent and diligent study of all of these forthcoming articles over the next months. The conclusions will become reinforced article after article and hardened in our minds over and over again by the abundant discovery of facts after facts and the tons of sound evidences that will be brought forth in articles after articles which will soundly demonstrate over and over the truth of these 4 conclusions which I share with the reader since having done these in-depth studies for years. So here is what you are to look for over and over again as you read the forthcoming studies.

Based on years of the most diligent research, it is a fact that most of what we read in our Bibles which we take at face value as if a "literal narrative" or "objective literal history" is anything but that; in fact most of our Bibles are nothing more than Divine Allegories imparted by the heightened spiritual sensitivity of the Ancient Spirit Masters the likes of which the world sadly does not see or encounter any longer. Possessing the knowledge of these years of study I can say categorically that it is impossible to understand these spiritual allegories of the Bible that are mistaken for "literal-historical" truth without a knowledge of ancient methods of sacred writing, and of the ancient philosophies that formed these stories and gave them life in their very beginning. My efforts and diligent study in this field has been rewarded by a number of the most significant discoveries which are basic for further grasp of the material that will progressively be presented to the reader. Our modern genius for supposed "scientific study" suffers extensively today from it own tendencies toward "dead letter" interpretations of ancient glyphs and symbols, apparently unable to perceive the fact that allegory and metaphor and the use of myths were the main methods used in both the thinking process and its outward expression in ancient days. Along with this it needs be said that there has sadly been little if any forward thinking in the field of Egyptology during the last (twentieth) century. There exists a split today in the field of Egyptology. Too often these new discoveries in archeology and Egyptology are met by old-line Egyptologists with derision and contempt even though modern findings are built upon new awareness of these same ancient traditions and philosophies. These "hard-liners" are demonstrating an extraordinary slowness to accept the new evidences that threatens their "old" hypotheses and for good reason as we shall soon see since these new findings undermine the traditional accepted religious beliefs of both Christianity and Islam upon which current Egyptology rests. What is needed today is a new objectivity as new modern scholarship and archeology's findings opens up a better and more informed perspective on the subjects than these older "accepted" traditionalist have theorized. So the wind of change is long overdue and it is making headway but slowly. Today we are blessed by the reassurance in discoveries that is unveiling true ancient Egyptology like never before; findings which are too often scoffed at by the traditional entrenched Christian and Islamic Egyptologist who appear to be dangerously myopic and short sighted concerning the new revelations coming forth concerning this new breed of archeological study involving archaeoastronomical research through current efforts at Giza and other places in Egypt. As you might expect at stake here are long-seated religious beliefs that will be threatened and exposed as falsehoods by such new revelations coming forth from the sands of Egypt and Africa. The "Keys" to the greatest Spiritual Truths ever cherished by mankind are once again seeing the light of day. Great men like Robert Bauval, John West, Graham Hancock, R.A. Schwaller de Lubicz, John Anthony West and others are turning over the apple cart of brain-dead and "stuck in the mud" Egyptologists who refuse to recant of their mistaken theories and beliefs that are built upon the sinking sands of inherited Old and New Testament traditional assumed "literal-historical" inherited beliefs. This assumed inherited "literal-historical" basis for traditional "literal-historical" Christianity is crumbling day by day in the light of the Egyptian Sun. Now the facts which will be re-established over and over again throughout our studies:

- The composers of ancient scriptures, including the Christian Bible, were poets, allegorists, dramatists and mythicists. They never wrote literally! They were in the line of generations of religious Spiritual Masters, sages and seers who had developed the art of spiritual representation to a point of the utmost ingenuity and complexity, completely shrouding the intended real meaning under veils of symbolism, which have utterly misled modern scholars who could not pierce the outer veil to read the veiled Spiritual truth hidden underneath. This means for you and me that our Bibles, let alone most of the holy books of the world, cannot be read without the "keys" of interpretation that unlock these religious and spiritual myths, allegories, metaphors, legends, and the reference to the symbols used. The ancients themselves testify plentifully that the scriptures are allegories. Origen, a early Church Father, regards the whole Bible as a set of allegories. But the most astonishing declaration to this effect is St. Paul's own statement in Galatians that the whole story of Abraham and Sarah and Hagar is "an allegory" in the book of Galatians.

- The Ancients Spiritual Masters were also esotericists, writing only of the inner life and for initiated pupils and not for the common folk. They wrote of inner things under an outer veil. They wrote of the Greater Mysteries which were never given out to the multitude, but taught in secret to disciplined students and "initiates". Spiritual truth was never published or made available in the ways we might expect today in our culture and in ways which we are so familiar with today like our ingrained approach to "literalism" and "historicity" of almost all things we read. Whatever was written by the Ancients, was veiled under glyph, symbol, and expressed in myths. Mostly it was taught by oral tradition. So there existed two teachings; a "outer mystery" told in simple stories which some could easily mistake not possessing the "keys" for their rightful interpretation and an "inner mystery" to which the truths and the "keys" to their proper interpretation were strictly guarded.
- Then the ancients were "uranographers" and in so doing the translated and transferred the very "chart of Heaven" to Earth and captured the higher Spiritual realities and truths behind the veil of glyph and symbol, spiritual truths that were modeled for them in the Sky, Heavens, and Constellations above. The earliest ancestors of Egypt's ancient civilization studied the day and night skies just as intently as they studied their own souls. They accumulated considerable knowledge and wisdom about both the daylight world and the dream-time contained within the night sky. They established the foundations of their empire with this wisdom. We in the Twenty-first Century have had that same night sky transformed from the mundane, light-washed display of constellations learned in childhood to a place once again as vast and mysterious as it was for the ancients. The astounding photographs of the cosmos from NASA and the Hubble Space Telescope Project have restored the value of the heavens as both mystery and a reliable source of wisdom, because the images and data gathered from the sky have revealed the deeper structures of reality and taken humankind's knowledge up to the instant of creation itself. There is, once again, a living mythology about the relationship between the heavens and our daily life on Earth. We truly are made of star stuff, and it is on Earth as it is in heaven. Therefore we find that the ancients equipped with this wisdom of the Cosmos laid out and charted in esoteric language the very spiritual constitution and physiology of man, the psychic centers, areas of spiritual force, and all "after the pattern of things in the heavens" that spoke of mankind and his Soul. Man, the microcosm, is a replica of the heavenly man and the universe. The night sky above Egypt was that mystery of starlight and dreams through which the world and reality turned between sunset and dawn, Duat, the dazzling display of the night sky, embodied in the star-spangled figure of the goddess Nut enfolding the world. The ancient calendar material has revealed a wealth of connections between the belief in that divine, eternal dimension and the everyday life of the ancient people of the Nile. The patterns of sky and river that shaped their lives serve today as valid metaphors for the eternal patterns of human behavior and human nature. From the history of man written thus in the constellation of the skies, the early religious formulators transferred the record to earth and distributed the various phenomena and localities over the national maps in accordance with the heavenly chart! All nations tried to frame their own history and geography after the pattern of things in the heavenly mount. Mainly the Egyptians and after them the Jews made this transfer almost completely. Each nation thus strove to have its history interpreted as a fulfillment of the sacred allegory; and its national history, thus diverted into the form of the celestial myth, was made into the national epic. And finally came the claim on the part of several, notably the Jews, that since their history fulfilled the outlines of the sacred story, they were proven to be the "chosen people" of God.
- Finally, after years of intense and scholarly study, it dawned upon me that all religious writings deal with but one central fact, the incarnation of mankind, or the descent and resurrection of the Soul in mankind. This is the whole story of religion after religion from beginning to end. The old hoary sacred books from nation to nation, including our Bibles as Christians and followers of "the Christ", deal with nothing beyond this story and its associated paths of parallel instruction. This fact alone is the key to all philosophy and religion. In the light of this one fact all complicated meanings can be reduced finally to a concise and clear meaning that can unite the whole of the human race. This fact and knowledge alone unravels the infinite complexities of the symbology that have confounded the learned scholars and theologians for thousands of years since mankind lost the "keys" to interpret the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom imparted to the race of mankind in the beginning of time. That man is a god dwelling in an animal form is the central and cardinal fact of all religion along with the necessity that the god in him, in the form of his Soul, conquer, master, and subjugate the animal nature within himself in order to have the whole person serve the interests of God His Creator.

Given these 4 grand conclusions above it is my hope and dream that I have contributed in some small way to help heal the fractured brotherhood in human society which lies separated by religion after religion; all claiming to be the only way to truth and Heaven when few if any today possess the "necessary keys" to unlock the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom that is go grossly misinterpreted today by these world religions who operate at large. It is again my hope that my efforts in the forthcoming articles will help in some small way expose the great injustice done to God's truth by the traditional "literal-historical" interpretation of the Sacred Scripture which was never the intent of the writer or his message as understood by those who heard his message in the beginning of time.

That being said there exists an old Egyptian inscription of Isis:

""I, Isis, am all that has been, that is or shall be; no mortal Man hath ever me unveiled."

Veiled in the metaphors of mystery, illusion and time is the truth about who we are. Mysteries are veiled in secrets and veils shroud or distort the truth. The Mysteries of God are revealed in stages and the initiate, recipient, and hierophant can accept them. This is taught so clearly in our Bibles:

Matthew 13:10-17 Then the disciples came and said to him, "Why do you speak to them in parables?" 11 And he answered them, "To you it has been given to know the secrets of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it has not been given. 12 For to him who has will more be given, and he will have abundance; but from him who has not, even what he has will be taken away. 13 This is why I speak to them in parables, because seeing they do not see, and hearing they do not hear, nor do they understand. 14 With them indeed is fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah which says: `You shall indeed hear but never understand, and you shall indeed see but never perceive. 15 For this people's heart has grown dull, and their ears are heavy of hearing, and their eyes they have closed, lest they should perceive with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and turn for me to heal them.' 16 But blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears, for they hear. 17 Truly, I say to you, many prophets and righteous men longed to see what you see, and did not see it, and to hear what you hear, and did not hear it. (RSV)

It should appear to most with the slightest recognition associated with the above verses that there exists "layers" of mystery and meaning behind the Scriptures we read that escapes understanding by the cursory reading of the texts by the vast majority of people which are unenlightened to the hidden mysteries behind what they read.

Answer for yourself: What should this mean to us?

Not every passage in the Bible, in fact most of them, should not be approached at first and thought to be seen or interpreted as if "historical" or "literal" since they involve "spiritual mysteries" that are said to be "hidden" in the first place. The Bible is a book of mystery concerning the Science of the Soul which involves the invisible realm of mankind. There needs to be understood that not everyone has the capability of just picking up these ancient Scriptures in our Bibles and easily understanding these layers of "truth" that lay behind these metaphysical verses we read. It is ludicrous that as "Greek minded thinkers" in the Western Hemisphere that we can pick up an Oriental religious document and interpret correctly and easily by just cursory reading without the necessary training and knowledge in the culture, language, symbolism, and mythology of that ancient time.

What indeed has Athens to do with Jerusalem? What concord is there between the Academy and the Church?* -- Tertullian, Pres. Haer. 7

We have before us in the quote above the whole crux of the problem that lies behind our Biblical interpretations today. Knowing that the Ancients wrote in hidden symbolism and used myths and allegory to capture and teach religious truth then we should suspect that what we take for "historical-literal" fact in our Bibles is more than likely anything but that. We should wonder just what "our eyes are closed toward" as we read these Scriptures. We should never cease to wonder what is really being said behind what we are mistaken told to accept as a "historical narrative" when knowledge of the facts and study of these passages in their ancient cultures and perspectives prove otherwise. We are told by the Christ that although we hear these teachings and these Scriptures we cannot hope to understand and perceive often what we read and even hear from these texts we cherish. We are at a loss and we simply don't know it. We are at such a disadvantage being removed thousands of years from the writing and the intent of the writers who penned and taught these scriptures originally. To think that we can approach this Oriental philosophy and religion with our traditional Greek Western "literalistic" mind-set is absolutely ludicrous and laughable in the first place; but yet that is what we do Sunday after Sunday as we wrestle these sacred passages out of their intended context and intended meanings. It has been my experience both as a Seminary graduate, ordained Pastor, and scholar that traditional Christianity and its devotees possess not the "keys" to restore these hoary and ancient scriptural passages back to their intended meanings by their original writers. This is a gross understatement of the facts involved once one begins his own personal study in order to acquire the "keys" necessary to understand these same Scriptures we mistakenly thought was but a simple historical narrative. Lucky for us today is the fact that we are the beneficiaries of huge amounts of ancient knowledge given us by the tireless efforts of archeologists over the last two hundred years whereby we can "see and perceive" deeper levels of Scriptural truth that lay buried under what we originally and mistakenly thought was "literal" and "historical" narratives never dreaming that a much deeper and profound spiritual implication lay behind such verses to which we had no inkling.

To slowly remove the veils of Isis in our minds to these problems surrounding proper Scriptural exegesis and interpretation of our Bible is tantamount to raising our consciousness and frequency of our thought; to come into total awareness of the truth of our reality and our true identity. In the beginning the Ancient sages and seers of antiquity taught that at one time all was shown, but as our consciousness spiraled downward to lower and slower frequencies and as the matter in which the Soul descended became more dense and "dark" then human consciousness forgot the simplest of concepts - the nature of who we are. Eventually our Souls moved to the slowest moving frequency and we "fell" no lower in matter and basically our Souls hit bottom - and just like a parachute in reverse - today we as mankind equipped once again with this Ancient Spiritual Knowledge spiraling upward in generation after generation as our Souls mature and maturate in this flesh of mankind as our Creator intended. With each turn of the spiral mankind moves through the veils that once blocked our view to the Spiritual realities from which we find our true origin as gods imprisoned in matter due to the Descent of our Soul. Then in successive ages of time mankind see the veils as slowly rising - things becoming clearer and begin to make more sense in a spiritual way unknown before. The truths hidden by the mystery of Krst/Karest/Christ are now revealed to the "truth-seekers" of this age as much more than a supposed "historical" or "literal" story. There is a whole other meaning that lies behind our supposed "historical-literal" Jesus Story; the meaning of which was cherished and unchanged until the rise of Roman Christianity in the 3rd through the 5th century. God help us restore the truth and make this Earth the brotherhood of man as it once was no longer separated by competing and opposing religions. This is what we begin to examine together in utmost intensity in the forthcoming article. So let us begin in earnest and in so doing reclaim our lost positions as truly God's "light" no longer hidden under the bushels of ignorance and religious deceit.

Now above all one must realize that in the age when that saying arose in the Egyptian culture concerning the inability to "lift the veil of Isis" it was still plain and clear that when one spoke of the 'immortal' one spoke actually of man himself. In the Egyptian culture, however, the mystery as a principle of the Mysteries, was a deeply rooted principle. The Egyptian who was acquainted with his civilization knew that what lives as 'immortal' within the Soul, must be awakened. Yes, contrary to our custom of today, the Egyptian, as too the Greek, at least the Greek thinking in the sense of Plato, really only considered a man to be a partaker of immortality, who had consciously grasped the spiritual world. Plato taught a difference existed between who sought to grasp in the Soul the impulse of the immortal, the spiritual impulse, and those men who disdain this, who neglected to do so. If you think this over, you will easily see that the saying on the Statue of Isis at Sais actually meant: He who will never seek to grasp the spiritual life of the soul cannot lift the veil of Isis; he however can lift it, who grasps the spiritual life, who therefore (in the Egyptian sense, today it sounds rather different) as 'mortal' makes himself 'immortal'. There was no intention of saying that the human being as such cannot lift the veil of Isis, but only that one who binds himself exclusively to the mortal element, one who will not approach the immortal element, cannot lift the veil. At the heart of all of this lies the very foundation of Cosmic Truth that underlies passage after passage in our Bibles which reveals the Descent of the Soul into flesh/matter which we mistakenly read as if a "literal history" of the incarnation of "the Christ" in a separate isolated person, this Jesus of Nazareth; limited to but one person who supposedly lived 2,000 years ago when the reality of the truth is that it applies to every child of God. This incarnation of "Jesus" is but a picture of yours and mind. The Bible again is a book concerned wholly with the Science of the Soul which ancient sages perceived was first taught to the whole of spiritual mankind from the Heavens and Sky above and which rises again from the dusts of Egypt and cries again to all of mankind its solitary truth that mankind is the offspring of God and themselves "gods" in matter working out their salvation in fear and trembling.

Answer for yourself: Could it just be that God set the plan for the evolution of mankind's Soul in the Heaven's above and few if any Christians have this knowledge? Could the very plan and purpose of mankind and the intended spiritual maturation of the Soul of every one of God's children be hidden in the Sky or Heaven above us and we not know it? Are our Christian Bibles a distorted reproduction of this ancient knowledge and Soul Science as taken from the Sky above and we again not know this? Can we ever hope of coming to the truth of the matter and discern truth from error and what is "allegory" and what is to be taken as a "historical narrative" when reading our Bibles? Is the Science of the Soul written among the stars of the Sky and Heavens and we don't know this and possess not the "keys" to interpret this message from God? Can we obtain these "keys" in order to know the truth of our existence before our deaths when the time allotted for us and our Spiritual development in this plane of existence is over?

Well these important questions deserve answers. Most certainly we can come to the truth that lies behind the falsehoods of our Christian Bibles and their distorted symbology but to do so will require a good deal of effort on behalf of the student and "truth-seeker".

If it were not possible I would not have devoted my life to the study and restoration of the Cosmic Truths about the Soul of mankind. Let all of this sink in including the 4 conclusions. We now move to the next thought in the development of our Soul in the second article in this series.

THE BIBLE: A BOOK CONCERNED WITH THE SCIENCE OF THE SOUL #2

We ended the previous article promising the readers that we will be able together to piece together the lost "keys" so necessary to reconstructing the lost Science of the Soul which was taught by the Ancient Spiritual Masters and sages for thousands of years and in so doing expose the Roman "reinterpretation" and deviation from this Ancient Spiritual Truth.

We can begin to restore these ancient Spiritual truths and arrive at a correct hermeneutic and interpretation of our Christian Bibles by recognizing that three ancient and long-discredited sciences have had a surprising revival in not only popular interest today but in scientific interest in our day and time as well. Of course I am speaking of :

- symbolism,
- alchemy,
- astrology.

The last in the list is somewhat problematic as many might agree. I wish to speak somewhat on astrology and I ask your indulgence. Astrology in its predictive or "fortune-telling" aspect is generally looked at skeptically and with good reason. That being said there is whole other side on which astrology has pertinence and virtue that has not been recognized in the modern revival and on which perhaps its most legitimate claim to consideration rests. I strongly suggest that before you read this short article that your read the above link concerning "astrology". This is astrology's function, of which I speak, is as symbolic theology!

In the early years of my study when I became aware of the unbelievable parallels that existed between my supposed "divine and unique" revelation of Jesus Christ and the lives of the nations various sungods from beginning to end I must say that such information was not only alarming and troubling to me but was a source of perplexity and bafflement to me that lasted for a long time until I acquired other necessary "keys" of knowledge that allowed me to correctly understand the relationship that exists between the nations sungods and the Jesus Christ of the New Testament. At first when reading the Bible knowing that what I was reading was but a "replay" of more ancient stories of the nation's sungods then my Bible became suspect and that bothered me intently. Next as you might expect I began having doubts as to how my "Jesus Christ" could have been a historical person since almost every event and saying found in the depiction of his supposed historical life can be found in the lives of ancient sungods like Horus, Orpheus, Dionysus, Mithra, Krishna, Adonis, Tammuz, Hercules and so on. All of the above were supposed to be "pagan" Christs or Satan's counterfeits of the real "Jesus" so I was led to believe by other Christian theologians, writers, or preachers. But my studies will prove to me otherwise and the philosophers of the ancient world knew what the vast majority of Christian writers and theologians evidently don't know today; namely, that these figures as Sungods and goddesses were but symbolic representation of the "neteru" and "Living Energies" of the cosmos and were never mistaken for supposed historical persons. If you take the time to study through this website and the associated articles you will be a very informed in these areas of study and become a wise student and doing so will only better prepare you for what comes next in our studies.

Yet I was taught since a child that my "Jesus" was different, unique, one of a kind. That meant that he had to be different from Horus, Orpheus, Dionysus, Mithra, Krishna, Adonis, Tammuz, Hercules, etc., even though their stories and lives were unique parallels. I was at an impasse for some time. The more that I read and studied these solar gods and contrasted them with the other lives of the nation's sungods as well as my "Jesus Story" I could not help but wonder about my Jesus' uniqueness since the stories of their lives read as if they came from a xerox machine that just "copied" each life over and over again to which a new name was affixed down through recorded history. I grew up in a nation where my solar god-man was called "Jesus". As if that was not enough I found in my studies that the "Logia" or wisdom sayings attributed to these solar gods and my Jesus were often identical. I searched for years for the explanation for such similar accounts and why the lives of these solar gods and the life and events of my Jesus were practically identical and finally my search was rewarded with the answers I sought. I present them to you the reader in this and following articles. In so doing we retrieve the first of the "keys" so necessary to understanding the Bibles we have been given which so sadly distorts Divine truth when interpreted "historically" and "literally".

As you might suspect if the mythologies of the early nations have been a source of perplexity and bafflement to me and other students, no less so has been the Christian Bible itself which contain this "Jesus Story" to begin with; a story that is paralleled from beginning to end by almost 26 other solar saviors. Not even the most ardent Christian could claim that the Christian Bible has throughout a clear message between its two testaments that is clearly to be apprehended. Just ask a Jew and a Christian to try to agree on anything. Outside of much simple homiletic truth which has yielded comfort to many a troubled heart during their lives, the Bible has remained to even life-long students practically a sealed book and for obvious reasons that can be laid squarely at the feet of erroneous interpretation of its sacred texts fostered by Christianity itself for the last 1,900 years. I would find, as my studies advanced over the many years and as the "keys" to the Bible's proper interpretation were gathered by me "one by one", the major reason as to why the Bible's true meaning is not known to most Christians let alone theologians even living in this present day. Basically few know or are willing to even think that our Christian Bibles are books concerned about astronomy and astrology personified through the lives of metaphoric characters. "Nonsense" I hear readers scream when reading the above sentence. It would do you well to not discard this article and the many that follow if you truly want to know for certain what lies behind our "Jesus Story". Nothing but the smallest shadow of the truth that the book portrays has yet made itself known to the vast majority of Christians over the last 1,900 years since Rome burned all the libraries of the known world to cover up its plagiarism and reinterpretation of Ancient Spiritual Allegorical Wisdom pawned off to the ignorant and unlearned as presumed "historical narrative". Nineteen hundred years of theological jargon and searching for its hidden message of truth has not unearthed the treasure buried under its allegorical profoundness. This remains basically unknown to both Jews and Christians today; unknown to both are the ancient truths behind their competing testaments. And this failure to elucidate the Bible's cosmic truth can be laid squarely upon both the Jewish and Christian refusal to reinterpret their Bibles as spiritual allegory and instead they hold fast to their traditional interpretation of the Bible as a supposed "literal" history. Rejected now for over 1,900 years is the Bible's mystifying and cryptic typology and symbolism which is the "key" to its proper interpretation and always has been and always will be. From beginning to end the Bible is nothing but a series of spiritual allegories slandered as they are when presented as if a literal history when in fact they are not. Now understand at times we find interwoven with this cryptic symbolism enough history that only blinds our minds to the real allegorical significance of its myths that continue to be passed off as assumed history from beginning to end. The reason for this is that Israel, like so many other nations, were privy to these "allegories" and "spiritual myths" as we have them literally gestated and regurgitated through the eyes of the Jewish people as we also do with Egypt, Mesopotamia, Greece, etc. Thus there is a fabric of history from which these spiritual allegories are interpreted and disseminated through their unique cultural eyes.

A further startling discovery that I would make as my studies in Egyptian Religion, Gnosticism, and Astrotheology advanced is that the series of myths that line the pages of both the Old and New Testaments deal not with a wide variety of spiritual or cosmical situations, but only with the same one situation in endless repetition! After twenty years of study I can confidently say that there is but one story to all religions the world over from antiquity to present along with their many Bibles and Sacred writings; only one basic event that provides the background for story after story that we read in our Bibles and other Sacred Books that stirs the human heart and inspires our loyalty to God and provokes our morality to our fellowman. Beginning with Egypt the ancient spiritual myth-makers had but one narrative to relate from the beginning of time; one fundamental mystery of life to amplify to all mankind. All phases of mankind's spiritual life arise out of the elements of this one cosmic drama in which the whole of humanity is involved; and all scriptural allegory has reference to this one basic cosmic event whether the reader is aware of it or not. The myths, whether Horus, Orpheus, Dionysus, Mithra, Krishna, Adonis, Tammuz, Hercules, and Jesus are all designed to keep mankind informed of this central predicament in which we as the Souls of God find ourselves. This is truly the key to the Bible and all other Sacred Books. And it is the loss of this key event that the Bible is but an allegorical depiction of the Descent of the Soul as told through many different venues along with their proper interpretation in what we read in both our Testaments that has caused the Bible to yet be a sealed book even today.

Answer for yourself: And what lies behind this Bible as a "sealed book"?

This book, our Bible, and its many stories from beginning to end has withstood the best efforts of earlier "truth-seekers" down through history and will ever do so until those who try to find and ascertain its basic truth restore the necessary "keys" that unlock these various myths of the Descent of the Soul into matter (the incarnation of the Soul in humanity). This means we need familiarize ourselves with the symbols used by the ancients who wrote these spiritual passages if we ever hope to understand what they both thought and were teaching thousands and thousands of years ago as far back as Ancient Egypt and Israel long before the intertestamental years. The restoration of these "keys" to this ancient symbolism and allegorism is so necessary for correct Biblical interpretation for the whole of mankind. This Ancient symbolism incorporated in the Sacred Books of nations as well as our Bible is taught repeatedly in religious myths the world over. This knowledge is seen at once to open the doors to a clearer meaning of the many troublesome Scriptures which has defied mankind's proper interpretation of these spiritual allegories mistaken as historical truth in the Christian Bible. Sadly such an understanding of cosmology has been almost wholly discarded from religion since Milton's day, yet only a cosmical situation provides the firm foundation for all unimpeachable and adequate interpretation of the Bible and its allegorical depiction of the Descent of the Soul and its incarnation as "the Krst/Karest/Christ" in all of humanity. It needs saying once more; the one central theme in the whole of our Christian Bible is the incarnation of the Divine in matter; no, not to be thought to be limited to but one person but the gift to the whole of humanity. The limitation of the "birth of Christ" to but one supposed "literal" and "historical" baby at a localized Bethlehem manger to which animals gave watch on a "silent but holy night" has kept the the whole of humanity from realizing the true meaning of its own Messianic fulfillment. With the third century conversion of the religious and divine intent hidden in the many spiritual allegories of the nations like Egypt, all of which represented the "Descent of the Soul" into this visible realm, all of which were taken from the age-old spiritual drama taught since the beginning of mankind as seen and understood from the visible Heavens above and its distortion and deformity into an alleged biography of a man-savior, the outlines of the great truth that a ray of the solar Logos was incorporated and distributed into animal humanity faded from the minds of mankind. This Divine Truth of our human natures was obliterated to all but the few who escaped persecution and death at the hands of the Roman destroyers of this Divine Truth. All sound understanding of the true inner significance the real "Christmas nativity" was almost irreversibly lost to mankind and will remain so until one stumbles onto these truths of which I write by accidentally studying subjects like Gnosticism, Egyptian Religion and Astrotheology as I did in my search for the truth about "the Christ". I wanted to know why the Jews and Christians cannot agree on the Messiah and it was from this problem that I have searched out these last 18 or so years that this knowledge has come forth. It was in my search for a "Jewish Jesus" and my inability to find unforged evidence of his existence that I was led to other paths of study that connected Judaism with the mysteries that lay behind the great Egyptian Religion that brought from Heaven to Earth the superior understanding of God's Cosmos and mankind's relationship to it; a much greater knowledge of God and the Divine that I had ever hoped or experienced as a typical Christian. The annual celebration of the advent of deity's incarnation to earth in the bosom of all mankind remains a "theological" travesty to this day in Christianity because it is limited to yet but one person when it is the inheritance of the whole of mankind.

Let us move on now is our studies and in so doing it needs be said that besides esotericism and allegorism the Bible composers had recourse to another method of depicting the Descent of the Soul which is less readily demonstrable and which has caused almost unlimited confusion in mistaking myth for history.

Answer for yourself: Other than esotericism and allegorism what else lies behind this Bible as a "sealed book"? Here is where it gets fascinating. Did I say fascinating?

Answer for yourself: And what is this? It was the method of uranography. What is a uranograph? Get ready to be blown away by what you will learn next. I suggest very strongly that you "buckle up" for what comes next. You are about to see the very Mind of our God like never before. God, the Deific Mind of the Cosmos is so awesome so get prepared for what you learn next.

WAS PAUL A GNOSTIC? #1

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Gnostics since the first century claim the Apostle Paul as their great Pneumatic teacher?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Gnostics since the first century claim they are following Paul's example when they offer "secret teaching" of wisdom and Gnosis to their initiates?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Gnostics since the first century claim Paul's resurrection theology as the source for their own, citing his words as decisive evidence against the ecclesiastical doctrine of bodily resurrection? Did you catch that?

Answer for yourself: How can these things be?

When you and I pick up our New Testaments today and begin to read the Pauline epistles we surely get a different picture than what these ancient historical records attest.

Answer for yourself: Has something been changed to alter the earliest understanding of the historical Paul and his teachings from the first century? Yes...it has. The New Testament today is really the "Second New Testament" given to us by Rome and not the earlier "First New Testament" given to us by the earliest Christian Gnostics like Marcion and Paul which held these earliest of Pauline beliefs.

Answer for yourself: Is it just possible that much of what passes for the current "historical" interpretation of Paul and for "objective" analysis of his letters can be traced not to the religious beliefs of the earliest first century Christians but to the second-century heresiologists like Justin and Irenaeus? It sure can!

Answer for yourself: If the apostle Paul was so unequivocally anti-Gnostic as he is made to look in our "Second New Testament" then how in the world could these earliest Gnostic Christians claim him as their great Pneumatic teacher?

Something is not right!!!

Without a doubt St. Paul is the most influential Christian of all time. There are 13 letters attributed to him in the New Testament, making up a quarter of the whole of canonical Christian scripture. On top of that, most of the Acts of the Apostles is devoted to tales of Paul.

Answer for yourself: But what is the truth about this Paul since seeing that the historical record disagrees as not only to whom he was but what he taught as well? Who is Paul?

As a typical Christian you have grown up like myself being taught that Paul is the image of orthodoxy and a that he believed in a human Christ Jesus. This means simply that he could not be a Gnostic but really anti-Gnostic in his theology. If you have been faithful to read the articles on this website up to now then this inherited Roman picture of Paul has been brought into serious doubt if not exposed as a lie! Yet it is a remarkable fact that the Gnostics themselves never saw Paul inn this light as we have been taught.

Answer for yourself: Why not? Simply because we are speaking about a time that preceded the later Roman forgery mill whereby Rome completely re-worked the First New Testament of Marcion and altered the allegorical understanding of "the Christ" and make this Spiritual Concept and Dynamic into a "human being" by forging the Pastoral Epistles in Paul's name. The rest is history.

Archeology and the discovery of the Nag Hammadi Library and coptic Gnostic Gospels have revealed to us that the early Christians held just the opposite beliefs about "the Christ" than we have inherited and been taught today. Only in the last fifty years have such archeological discoveries shown us that the great Gnostic sages of the early second century CE called Paul "the Great Apostle" and honored him as the primary inspiration for Gnostic Christianity (Elaine Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1979, p. 2).

Answer for yourself: How can the early Gnostic Christians who did not believe in a "human Christ" but an "allegorical Christ" claim Paul as their "Apostle" and the later Roman anti-Gnostic Church who taught a human "Christ Jesus" claim Paul as their "Apostle"? The answer is found in the authenticity of the texts of the New Testament; by that I mean the early authentic Pauline texts before they were later altered, changed, and invented by the later anti-Gnostics like Irenaeus and his production of the "Second New Testament" which contains a "different Pauline theology" than expressed in Marcion's Gnostic New Testament of 140 C.E.

Further proof that Paul was an advocate of Gnosticism is found in Valentinus where he explains that Paul initiated the chosen few into the "Deeper Mysteries" of Christianity, which revealed a secret doctrine of God. These initiates had included Valentinus' teacher Theudas, who had in turn initiated Valentinus himself (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Gospels, 1979, p. 62). Clement, Stromata 7.17, records the Gnostic claim that Theudas had received secret teachings from Paul-the "Deeper Mysteries" that Paul reserved from his public teaching and taught only to a few disciples in secret.

Many Gnostic groups claimed Paul as their founding father and Gnostics calling themselves "Paulicians" continued to flourish, despite persistent persecution from the Roman Church, until the end of the tenth century. W. Kingsland, in The Gnosis, 1937, on page 35 shares with us that Paul wrote his letters to churches in seven cities, which are known to have been centers of Gnostic Christianity during the second century.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware of what these seven cities that received Paul's letters had in common? These Christian communities were led by the Gnostic sage Marcion, for whom Paul was the only true apostle. (B. M. Metzger, The Canon of the New Testament, 1987, p. 90ff). Let the reader understand that we live in an age of advanced Biblical studies. That being a fact modern research has been carried out on the earliest collections of Paul's letters, which all contain prologues. Seven of these prologues are so similar as to suggest a common origin, and as they hold Paul to be the "true apostle" and are strongly anti-Jewish, they are now considered to be the work of Marcionites. These seven prologues are attached to the same Pauline letters that are also now accepted as genuine and the churches to which these are addressed are known to have been Marcionite strongholds in the middle of the second century. All of this suggests that Marcion, as he claimed, was indeed the true heir of Paul. By the time Paul's letters had swelled to 13, other prologues needed writing. These "clumsy works" have been dated to the fourth and fifth centuries. One thing is for sure: if Paul really were as anti-Gnostic as the Literalists claim, then it is astounding how many Gnostic texts quote him or are actually attributed to him. The followers of Marcion even had a gospel, which they claimed was written by Paul (S. Hollroyd, Gnosticism, 1994, p. 39).

Answer for yourself: Is there any evidence in the archeological finds at Nag Hammadi that lend credence to Paul being a Gnostic? Yes there is! The Nag Hammadi library includes many writings that incorporate the name of Paul:

- The Prayer of the Apostle Paul
- The Apocalypse of Paul (J. M. Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library, 1978, p. 256). The Apocalypse of Paul gives the apostle's visions in 10 heavens - a lower seven and a supernal three - not just the third that he describes in Corinthians.
- Another text, The Hypostasis of the Archons, calls Paul "the Great Apostle" and explains his teaching in Colossians 1:13 on the "authorities of darkness," (J. M. Robinson, op. cit., p. 163). These, the text explains, are the planets and stars that control fate and destiny-just as they are for Paul.
- A scripture called The Ascent of Paul records the "ineffable words, which it is not permissible for a man to speak," which Paul heard during his famous ascent to the third heaven alluded to by the apostle in his Letter to the Corinthians.
- Another text, called The Acts of Paul, describes Paul traveling with a companion called Thecla - a woman who conducted baptisms! (W. Barnstone, The Other Bible, 1984, p. 652).

Answer for yourself: Now that we have seen proof positive that the earliest Christian Gnostics regarded Paul as "their Apostle" from the many Gnostic writings that have his name then is the picture becoming a little more clear that the earliest Christians regarded Paul a Gnostic like themselves and pointed to his writings for an expression of their brand of Gnostic Christianity?

THE REAL PAUL...CAN HE BE FOUND?

So far we have seen conflicting depictions of the Apostle Paul. We have seen him from the view of the early Christian Gnostics who claim him as one of their own and one who taught an "allegorical Christ" as the mediator between the Spirit and matter. Then we have likewise seen him from the Orthodox Roman viewpoint of the "literalists" who paint him as anti-Gnostic and a supporter of a "human Christ Jesus."

Answer for yourself: Will the real Apostle Paul please stand up?

Answer for yourself: Could Paul have been a Gnostic, as the Gnostics claimed?

As we have already seen, modern scholars now regard many of the letters attributed to Paul as forgeries (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995, p. 198-9). Ludemann calls these fakes "foolhardy," as they only succeeded in putting "a spotlight on the struggles" between the Gnostics and the orthodox Church to claim the powerful figure of Paul. Ludemann brings to our attention that the author of 2 Thessalonians, in a pitiful attempt to suggest authenticity, writes, "Greetings to you in my own handwriting, which is a mark of all my letters: this is what my writing looks like." This is one of the numerous addenda to Paul's letters made by scribes, usually to issue threats against dissenters. Again let us remember that scholars today are almost unanimous that this epistle is a complete forgery by the anti-Gnostic literalists. We see the same thing in 1 Corinthians 16:21-4, where the writer reassures the reader "This greeting is in my own hand-Paul." The most ridiculous of these is in Galatians 6:11-18, where a scribe launches out into a polemic against the Jews but introduces it with Paul's supposed words: "Look how big the letters are, now that I am writing to you in my own hand." Of the 13 New Testament letters, only seven are now accepted as largely authentic. (Ludemann, op. cit., p. 61). Regarding the Pauline letters, Ludemann writes, "Scholars generally agree that of the thirteen extant letters, seven are authentic (Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Philippians, 1 Thessalonians, and Philemon), whereas the rest have been composed by later disciples in the apostle's name." G. A. Wells, Did Jesus Exist, 1975, on page 17 refers to Schmithal's evidence that all the principal Pauline letters, apart from Galatians, are likewise composite. In the early Church, opponents of Paul were not averse to tampering with his letters. Both Irenaeus and Tertullian, for example, quote from Galatians but omit the word not in a key passage, thus turning Paul's meaning from the negative into the positive (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 104).

As already mentioned, the so-called "Pastoral" letters to Timothy and Titus are universally regarded as fakes. Computer studies have confirmed that the author of the Pastorals is definitely not the author of the letters to the Galatians, Romans, and Corinthians, which are accepted as genuinely by Paul. (I. Wilson, Jesus: The Evidence, 1984, p. 154). Computer tests have confirmed the suspicions long held by theological scholars that whoever wrote Paul's letters to Timothy and Titus, it wasn't Paul (Ludemann, op. cit., p. 288).

Answer for yourself: What should we know about the Pastoral Epistles? These are anti-Gnostic religious documents. That being said then understand that the earliest Christians as we have shown are Gnostic and the First New Testament of Marcion is Gnostic in teaching a non-human allegorical Christ. Now be aware that the earliest collection of letters attributed to Paul by Marcion in 140 C.E. does not contain the Pastorals (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 5). Valentinian Gnostics cite only Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, 1 Thessalonians, and Hebrews. This list corresponds exactly to the earliest known Pauline collection attested from Alexandria. In fact, we do not even hear of the Pastorals at all until Irenaeus (c. 190). They appear as a part of the Christian canon only after this time, always as a set, and are regularly dismissed by Christians of all persuasions as forgeries. (Ludemann, op. cit., p. 135). Even the great orthodox propagandist Eusebius does not include them in his Bible (c. 325). B. M. Metzger, in The Canon of the New Testament, 1987, on page 202, says of Eusebius' attempt to delineate an accepted canon: "The most that Eusebius can register is uncertainty so great that he seems to get confused when making a statement about it." Nonetheless he admits that the authenticity of the epistles of James and Jude is doubted (Eusebius, History of the Church, 1965, p. 61). 2 Peter and 2 and 3 John can be likewise grouped as "doubted". Revelation he regards as spurious. After picking our way through his well-guarded statements we end up with a canon of the four gospels, Paul's epistles minus the Pastorals, and 1 Peter and 1 John.

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us? Simply that these anti-Gnostic epistles that show up after Irenaeus in 180 C.E. are not authentic Pauline writings but forgeries intended to present Paul as opposed to Gnosticism instead of advocating Gnosticism. This is important, as it is only in the Pastorals that Paul is anti-Gnostic. Pagels notes that Irenaeus strikingly opens his treatise Against Heresies, claiming "the apostle's authority to oppose the Gnostics by citing both Timothy and Titus" (Pagels, op. cit., p. 5).

Answer for yourself: We now know that the Pastoral epistles are forgeries not written by Paul. Why is that? Only in the Pastorals do we find Pauline literature that is anti-Gnostic.

Irenaeus also records Tertullian's defensiveness on the issue and regards it as instructive. He notes that the heretics have dared to impugn the validity of the Pastorals, but insists that the "same Paul" who wrote Galatians also wrote Titus.

Unlike the genuine Pauline letters, the Pastorals present Paul as an organizer of the Church, a mainstay of Church discipline, and the unswerving antagonist of all heretics (Pagels, op. cit., p. 163). The Pastorals received their name because of their major concern with how the Church is to be organized. As Pagels notes, the authentic letters like "Ephesians, Colossians, and Hebrews, on the other hand virtually ignore Paul's role as an organizer of ecclesiastical congregations." Paul is made to condemn Gnostic myths as "unhallowed old wives' tales" (I Tim. 4:7) and to recommend his followers "not to meddle with the teachings and not to waste time on endless mythologies and genealogies, which lead to empty speculations" (I. Tim. 1:3-4). Obviously by the end of the second century the view of Paul as a Gnostic teacher was a sufficient threat to motivate someone to create an indisputably Literalist Paul in response.

This Paul is made to specifically advise:

1 Tim 6:20 20 O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called: (KJV)

He is also made to be authoritarian in enforcing the power of the Church hierarchy, writing, 1 Tim 5:20 20 Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear. (KJV).

2 Tim 2:17-18 17 And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom is Hymenaeus and Philetus; 18 Who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some. (KJV).

Paul is made to attack "Hymenaeus and Philetus," two Gnostic teachers like himself who have "wandered afield from the truth" and are teaching the Gnostic doctrine that "our resurrection has already occurred"; although in his genuine letters Paul claims to be already "resurrected" himself! And despite the fact that there was a widespread tradition that Paul traveled with a woman who baptized (W. Barnstone, The Other Bible, 1984, p. 445). The tradition of Paul's companion Thecla who baptized and preached was part of a well established oral tradition in Syria. Paul is also made to attack the Gnostic practice of treating women as equal to men:

1 Tim 2:9-15 9 In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; 10 But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works. 11 Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. 12 But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 13 For Adam was first formed, then Eve. 14 And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression. 15 Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety. (KJV)

Let us not forget that all the above passages as taken from the Pastoral Epistles are FORGERIES and were not written by the pen of the Gnostic Paul

- It was the earliest Christian Gnostics that did not have organized clergy but an informal laity
- It was the earliest Christian Gnostics that used "myth" to capture Divine Truth for all eternity
- It was the earliest Christian Gnostics that treated women as equals with men

All of which the forged Pastoral Epistles condemn!

At the end of the second century, by the hand of Irenaeus in his "Second New Testament" in 180 C.E., Paul is portrayed by Literalist Christians as anti-Gnostic and authoritarian. This has been assumed to be historically accurate, but is actually only the perspective of these Literalist Christians (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, 8-10). Just a few decades earlier, however, this view of the "literalist Roman Church" was the complete opposite and the proof of this is found in the first half of the second century letters attributed to Clement, the Bishop of Rome, who vigorously attacked Paul as a misguided heretic!

Answer for yourself: What did Clement of Rome know concerning Paul in the early part of the second century before the later production of the Roman Second New Testament that would cause him to attack Paul and call him a heretic?

Answer for yourself: What was the major "heresy" that Rome opposed in those day? Gnosticism!!! Rome was faced with Marcion's First New Testament which contained the authentic Pauline epistles that taught a Gnostic Christ - an allegorical Christ and not a human Christ Jesus which was unacceptable to Rome and its first Bishop.

Ludemann in his Heretics notes other examples of second-century hostility to Paul in addition to Clement's vigorous polemic. Acts contains veiled criticism of Paul. By the criteria of Acts 1:21ff Paul does not qualify as an apostle as he was not with Jesus during his lifetime and had not seen the risen Jesus (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995, p. 54, 57, 199). Pagels suggests that ecclesiastical Christians might have preferred to exclude Paul's letters "but it was too late, he was already a chief apostle and stood in high regard" (Pagels, op. cit., p. 161). Toward the end of the second century the Literalists therefore took another tack. The Pastoral letters, 2 Thessalonians, 3 Corinthians, and other documents were forged to refute specific Gnostic/Pauline doctrines in the apostle's own name (Ludemann, op. cit., 201).

These letters attributed to Clement of Rome describe Peter as vehemently denying Paul's status as an apostle since only an eyewitness of the resurrection should be regarded as an apostle and Paul did not actually see the risen Christ. Paul's vision of Jesus on the road to Damascus is apparently not only invalid, it is a revelation from an evil demon or lying spirit!

Answer for yourself: Did you hear that? The first Bishop of Rome believed that Paul's vision of "the Christ" on the road to Damascus where he encounters a purely "Spiritual Christ Jesus" is from a demon!!! This sure will change with the Second New Testament under the influence of later proto-Catholic writers who altered and reworked Paul's Gnosticism to their liking and who remake "the Christ" into a fleshly human being. Clement alludes to the supposed fact that Jesus is "angry" with Paul who is his "adversary," because what Paul preaches is "contradictory" to Jesus' teachings (Homily, 19:1-7, quoted in Ludemann, p. 58). Peter writes of Paul as his "enemy" who has convinced some of the Gentiles to reject the Jewish Law and to embrace "foolish teachings," which are "outside the Law." Paul is accused of creating a heretical gospel and Jesus' genuine apostles have to secretly send out "a true gospel" to correct these heresies (Homily, 2.17.4, quoted in Ludemann, p. 58). Like his contemporary the arch-heretic Simon Magus, Paul is a satanically inspired divider of the Christian community (Pagels, op. cit., p. 9-10). Ecclesiastical sources that do refer to Paul often express hostility; the Pseudo-Clementines suggest that he, like Simon Magus, is a satanically inspired divider of the Roman community that is properly headed by Peter. He is a dangerous man who should be expelled from the Church! (R. Doran, Birth of a Worldview, 1995, p. 5). Here Doran describes Paul as a "flash point" in the growing Christian tradition. S.G.F. Brandon, Religion in Ancient History, 1969, p. 310ff, calls Paul the "problem figure of primitive Christianity;" Ludemann, op. cit., p. 61ff, calls Paul the "only heretic of the earliest period."

PAUL AND THE PAGAN MYSTERIES

If we can throw off the traditional picture of Paul and look at the evidence with an open mind this anti-Paul rhetoric is understandable, since his letters show distinct Gnostic and Pagan influences. Paul is a Jew who had embraced the ubiquitous Greek culture of the times. He writes in Greek, his first language. He quotes only from the Greek version of the Old Testament. His ministry is to Pagan cities dominated by Greek culture (Ludemann, op. cit., p. 65). Paul's mother tongue was Greek, and Paul uses only the Septuagint version of the Old Testament. (S.G.F. Brandon, op. cit., 1969, p. 313). Brandon notes that in Galatians 1 Paul states that his teaching was specially designed to be intelligible to those who were not Jews. Ludemann observes that whereas the gospels are "third person accounts," "often contradictory," and "do not come from eyewitnesses," in Paul "we hear his own voice in his mother tongue, free from all background noise, accessible to all who do not shrink from the trouble of reading him (Ludemann, op. cit., p. 61). Of these;

- Antioch was a center for the Mysteries of Adonis,
- Ephesus was a center for the Mysteries of Attis, and Corinth was a center for the Mysteries of Dionysus (G.A. Wells, Did Jesus Exist?, 1975, p. 183.

Paul was a native of Tarsus in Asia Minor, which by his time had surpassed even Athens and Alexandria to become the major center of Pagan philosophy (D. Ulansey, Origin of the Mithraic Mysteries, 1989, p. 68ff). Strabo writes: "The people of Tarsus have devoted themselves so eagerly, not only to philosophy, but also to the whole round of education in general, that they have surpassed Athens, Alexandria, or any other place that can be named where have been schools and lectures of philosophers." Athenodorus of Tarsus even became a tutor to Emperor Augustus. Athenodorus was in turn a disciple of Posidonius, arguably the greatest philosopher of the first century BCE. Pompey twice turned aside from campaigns in Asia Minor to visit Posidonius and Cicero describes him as a friend. He is one of the first astronomers to make an orrery, which Cicero says "shows in its revolutions the movements of the sun and stars and planets, by day and night, just as they appear in the sky" (Cicero, The Nature of the Gods, p. 159). In his travels to Britain he made the discovery that the moon governs the tides. This he must have considered certain proof of astrology's first axiom, that the heavenly bodies have a direct effect on the physical world. All of the astronomical and astrological knowledge acquired by the Tarsian intellectuals, particularly the discovery of the precession of the equinoxes by Hipparchus, who worked at nearby Rhodes, made a major contribution to the doctrines of Mithraism. It was into this city that Paul was born, at a time when Tarsus was at the height of its power and influence. It was in Tarsus that the Mysteries of Mithras had originated, so it would have been unthinkable that Paul would have been unaware of the remarkable similarities we have already explored between Christian doctrines and the teachings of Mithraism (Ulansey, op. cit., p. 68). Tarsus was the capital of Ciicia, where, according to Plutarch, the Mithraic Mysteries were being practiced as early as 67 BCE. Ulansey considers it significant that the appearance of Mithraism coincides almost exactly with the lifetime of Posidonius and is in the same part of the Mediterranean. Hipparchus' discovery of the precession of the equinoxes had revealed that in the cycle known as the "Great Year" the sun was passing from Aries into Pisces at the spring equinox. Mithraic iconography portrays Mithras as the god who turns the wheel of the Great Year and thereby ushers in the New Age. Paul shows himself aware of "the passing age" in 2 Corinthians 4:4.

2 Cor 4:4 4 In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. (KJV)

Paul frequently uses terms and phrases from the Pagan Mysteries, such as;

- pneuma* (spirit),
- gnosis* (divine knowledge),
- doxa* (glory),
- sophia* (wisdom),
- teleioi* (the initiated), and so on

(F.C. Happold, Mysticism, 1963, p. 186; H. Kennedy, St Paul and the Mystery Religions, 1969). All Paul's terms for mature or perfect Christians are variations on the Greek telete - "initiation." "Mature" is teleion, "to the level of maturity" is ten teleioteta, "the perfect man" is andra teleion, "the imperfect man" is ateles. (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 148, 149, 123). He advises his followers to "earnestly seek the greater charismata"

1 Cor 12:28-31 28 And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. 29 Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? 30 Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? 31 But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way. (KJV)

The word "charismata" derives from the Mystery term makarismos, referring to the blessed nature of one who has seen the Mysteries (W. Burkert, The Orientalizing Revolution, 1992, p. 93), Burkert writes: "One of the main characteristics of the mysteries is the makarismos, the praise of the 'blessed' status of those who have 'seen' the mysteries." Charismatic Christians might be interested to know the ancient root of their name.

1 Cor 4:1 1 Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. (KJV)

Paul even calls himself a "Steward of the Mysteries of God," which is the technical name for a priest in the Mysteries of Serapis (G.A. Wells, Did Jesus Exist?, 1975, p. 23). The Alexandrian cult of Serapis and his consort Isis was widespread in the Greco-Roman world at this time. That Paul might have been a "Steward of the Mysteries" of Serapis is entirely possible. Emperor Hadrian writes of the citizens of Alexandria, "Here you see Christians worshiping Serapis, and worshipers of Serapis who call themselves bishops of Christ" (G. D'Alviella, The Mysteries of Eleusis, 1981, p. 103). Perhaps this throws light on a passage in the New Testament, which has left scholars confused. At Cenchreae, near Corinth, waiting to board a ship bound for Ephesus, Paul "cut his hair for he had made a vow." This is a curious report and not in accordance with Jewish Law, which states that hair is only to be shorn at Jerusalem. Near Cenchreae, however, was a temple of Isis where Greek sailors cut their hair and dedicated it to the goddess as "Stella Maris" in hope of a safe crossing.

Paul quotes the Pagan sage Aratus, who had lived in Tarsus several centuries earlier, describing God "in whom we live, and move, and have our being" (Acts 17:28).

He also teaches Mystery doctrines.

1 Cor 15:37 37 And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: (KJV)

Paul uses the most ubiquitous of images from the Mysteries, the reaping and sowing of the crops as a symbol of mystical death and resurrection of an initiate. He speaks of the sprouting of a grain of wheat as an image of the resurrection and writes:

"The seed you sow does not come to life unless it has first died."

Like the Pagan sage Socrates, who was deemed wise because he knew he knew nothing (Plato, Apology, 23b) Paul teaches:

1 Cor 8:2 2 And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. (KJV)

Just as Plato had written that we now only see reality "through a glass dimly" (Plato, Phaedrus, 250 b) so Paul writes, 1 Cor 13:12 12 For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. (KJV)

This famous passage from Paul has also been translated:

At present all we see is the baffling reflection of reality; we are like men looking at a landscape in a small mirror. The time will come when we shall see reality whole and face to face (Phillips translation quoted in F.C. Happold, Mysticism, 1963, p. 194).

This translation clearly brings out the Platonic nature of Paul's teachings. Plato had used the image of prisoners trapped in a cave who are only able to see the shadows of the outside world cast on the cave walls as an allegory for our present condition of mistaking for real what is in fact only a reflection of ultimate reality

(Plato, The Republic, Book 7). For Plato, as for Paul, "At present all we see is the baffling reflection of reality."

Plato teaches that philosophers are those who are released from the cave to go outside and see the reality of the dazzling light of day for themselves - "face to face." This phrase is a ritual formula of the Pagan Mysteries. In The Bacchae we read: "He gave these Mysteries to me face to face."(Euripides, The Bacchae, 207, line 501). Lucius Apuleius writes of his initiation: "I penetrated into the very presence of the gods below and the gods above, where I worshiped face to face." (quoted in S. Angus, Mystery Religions, 1925, p.61). Justin Martyr acknowledges that: "The aim of Platonism is to see God face to face (Justin Martyr, Dialogue With Trypho, 2.3, quoted in E.R. Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational, 1951, p. 249). Plato describes how in the temple of the "true earth," which exists in the realm of ideas of which this Earth is a mere image, "Communion with the gods occurs face to face" (Plato, Phaedo, 111c). The Gnostic Valentinus also wrote of the Logos "who spoke of realities face to face (G.R.S. Mead, Fragments of a Faith Forgotten, 1906, p. 299).

WAS PAUL A GNOSTIC? #2

THE GNOSTIC PAUL

Paul's Christ Jesus is the mystical dying and resurrecting godman of the Gnostics, not the historical figure of the Literalists. The only place where Paul seems to treat Jesus as a historical figure is in the Letter to Timothy, where supposedly he writes in I Tim. 6:13

1 Tim 6:13 13 I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; (KJV)

But as we have shown this this letter is a forgery. The genuine Paul preaches the Gnostic doctrine of Illusionism, claiming that Jesus came not as a person but in the "likeness" of human flesh.

Rom 8:3 3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: (KJV)

Phil 2:7 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What does the word "likeness" mean when looked up in the Greek?

Strong's Concordance says:

3667 homoioma (hom-oy'-o-mah); from 3666; a form; abstractly, resemblance: KJV-- made like to, likeness, shape, similitude.

Thayer's Greek Lexicon says:

3667 homoioma- what has been made after the likeness of something

- a) a figure, a image, a likeness, a representation
- b) likeness that is, resemblance, such as amounts almost to equality or identity

Take just a second and ponder what you just saw from the Greek. Without a doubt in the Greek we see what escapes us in the English; namely, that the Son of God, the Christ as we have seen, is not truly human but only a resemblance and an image and representation of mankind. This is what both Paul and Marcion believed and taught as found in the First New Testament before Rome would destroy it and replace it with their Second New Testament which alters this Christ and makes him into a human being which causes adherents of such faith idolators!

Paul's Paul's letters are full of such distinctively Gnostic doctrines.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever stopped and wondered what Paul's famous claim to have ascended as far as the third heaven could possibly mean?

What we fail to understand today under the influence of Western literalistic Christianity is that this would not be puzzling for a Gnostic or an initiate of the Pagan Mysteries, for both would have been taught that there are seven heavens linked to the seven heavenly bodies - the five visible planets and the moon and sun. It was obvious to Celsus that Christianity and Mithraism were teaching the same doctrine, (R. J. Hoffman Celsus On The True Doctrine, 1987, p. 95). As Ulansey notes, Christianity and Mithraism were "sister religions, arising at the same time and in the same geographical area" (D. Ulansey, Origin of Mithraic Mysteries, 1989, p. 4). Brandon writes: "Paul's many references to the archontes, the stoicheia, and the pleroma all indicate his easy familiarity with esoteric concepts of a Gnostic hierarchy of supernatural powers" (S.G.F. Brandon, Religion In Ancient History, 1969, p. 44).

Like the Gnostics, Paul is extremely disparaging of the externals of religion - ceremonies, holy days, rules, and regulations.

Rom 14:1-5 1 Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations. 2 For one believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs. 3 Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth: for God hath received him. 4 Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand. 5 One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. (KJV)

Phil 3:3 3 For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. (KJV)

Col 2:20-22 20 Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances, 21 (Touch not; taste not; handle not; 22 Which all are to perish with the using;) after the commandments and doctrines of men? (KJV)

As noted, the Gnostics preached the same freedom from human legislation - especially religious laws.

Answer for yourself: Could this be the reason why Paul is anti-Torah? It sure is!!!

Simon of Samaria quoted Paul in defense of his own freedom, saying, "Men are saved by grace, and not on account of their own righteous works." The followers of Carpocrates declared themselves saved "by faith and love" and considered all things "not good or evil in themselves, but only by convention," (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 44-5).

2 Cor 3:12-18 12 Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech: 13 And not as Moses, which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not stedfastly look to the end of that which is abolished: 14 But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ. 15 But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart. 16 Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away. 17 Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. 18 But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. (KJV)

Like the Gnostics, he claims that true Christians become like Christ: having "no veil over the face" they "reflect as in a mirror the splendor of the Lord" and are thus "transfigured into his likeness, from splendor to splendor."

Paul's imagery in 2 Cor. 3:12-18 is uncannily similar to the initiation rites in the Greek Mysteries. Novices wore veils, hence their appellation as "brides." At this stage they were known as mystae - those with "closed eyes." Only at the highest stage of initiation was the veil removed and the mystae became epoptae - those who had "seen." This is the stage that Paul insists that the Corinthians should have reached.

The Gnostics saw Paul as a teacher of secret "Pneumatic" initiations. In his Letter to the Romans Paul writes: "I long to see you, so that I may share with you a certain Pneumatic charisma of which he says, "I would not have you remain ignorant."

Rom 1:9-14 9 For God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of his Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers; 10 Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God to come unto you. 11 For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established; 12 That is, that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me. 13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren (devoid of Gnosis), that oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might have some fruit among you also, even as among other Gentiles. 14 I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: If Paul wants to urgently share something with his correspondents, why doesn't he write it in his letter?

The answer for the Gnostics is that the "Pneumatic charisma" is an initiation, which he can only transmit in person and "in secret." (Pagels, op. cit., p. 15).

Paul writes:

1 Cor 2:9 9 But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (KJV)

Initiated readers would undoubtedly recognize these words as a Mystery formula pronounced at the time of initiation. As Christians devoid of knowledge of Gnosticism and the truth about Paul we read these passages never understanding that they reflect Gnosticism. The vow of secrecy undertaken by the followers of the Gnostic sage Justinus incorporated these words and, among other places, they also occur in the Gnostic Gospel of Thomas, where Jesus offers:

I will give you what eye has not seen, and what ear has not heard, what has not been touched, and what has not arisen in the heart of man.

(Quoted in Pagels, op. cit., p. 58). Hippolytus records this as the oath of secrecy in Justinus' Gnostic group. It also occurs in The Gospel of Thomas, Saying 17, and in the first epistle of Clement, (A. Louth, Early Christian Writings, 1968, p. 37).

It is only our inadequate knowledge concerning the religious beliefs associated with Gnosticism and inadequate textual translation that conceals the fact that Paul's letters are full of characteristically Gnostic phrases and teachings. For example, the Valentinians claim that Paul initiated Christians into the "Mystery of Sophia," which probably included the myth of the goddess' fall and redemption, and quote as proof his First Letter to the Corinthians, in which Paul writes: "We speak of Sophia among the initiated."

1 Cor 2:6-9 6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought: 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: 8 Which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. 9 But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (KJV)

If you are wondering why you have never come across this decidedly Gnostic line of Paul's before, it is because it is usually translated as "We speak wisdom among the perfected," which doesn't make a lot of sense but at least sounds orthodox!

Howbeit we speak wisdom among the perfect: yet a wisdom not of this world, nor of the rulers of this world, which are coming to nought: but we speak God's wisdom in a mystery, even the wisdom that hath been hidden, which God foreordained before the worlds unto our glory: which none of the rulers of this world knoweth: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

This translation, if intelligible at all, distorts Paul's actual meaning considerably. One modern scholar explains:

The proper meaning of this passage is obscured at two crucial points.

- The Greek word translated "world" here, severally in its singular or plural forms, is aion, which does not mean this physical world or earth, but "time" or "age." Paul's use of aion here accordingly shows that he was thinking in terms of an esoteric system of "world-ages."
- Next, the words translated as "rulers of this world" (archontes tou aionos toutou) do not refer, as is popularly supposed, to the Roman and Jewish authorities who were responsible for condemning Jesus to death; they denote demonic beings, who were associated with the planets and were believed to govern the lives of men on earth. This is very important in our understanding of the later death of "the Christ."

In this passage, then, Paul is found explaining that, before the beginning of a series of world-ages, God determined to send into the world, for the good of mankind, a preexistent divine being, whom the demonic rulers of the world, not perceiving his real nature, put to death and thereby in some way confounded themselves. In brief, Paul envisaged mankind as enslaved by demonic beings, connected with astral phenomena, whom he describes by a variety of terms such as archontes tou aionos toutou and stoicheia tou kosmou ("The elemental powers of the universe"). From this mortal slavery mankind had, accordingly, been rescued by the divine being, who, incarnated in the LIKENESS of a person named Christ Jesus, had been crucified mistakenly by these archontes who, presumably, by thus unwittingly exceeding their rights, forfeited their control over men (S.G.F. Brandon, Religion In Ancient History, 1969, p. 327).

1 Pet 1:20 20 Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, (KJV)

This is not Christianity as we know it today! Paul is preaching Gnosticism. Paul writes of a Gnosis which can be taught only to the "fully initiated."

He offers a prayer "that your love may more and more be bursting with Gnosis."

Phil 1:9 9 And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge (Gnosis) and in all judgment; (KJV)

In 1 Corinthians Paul seems to diminish the importance of Gnosis, claiming, "Gnosis puffs up." But Clement explains that this is not to be understood as "swollen up," but means in fact "to entertain great and true sentiments," (Clement, Stromata, 68). To the Gnostics, including Clement, the Gnosis was the Pneumatic initiation of the holy breath or spirit.

He writes of "Christ in whom are hid all the treasures of Sophia and Gnosis" and of "the Gnosis of God's Mystery."

Col 2:3 3 In whom (the Christ) are hid all the treasures of wisdom (Gnosis) and knowledge. (KJV)

Like a Gnostic initiate Paul claims: "By revelation the Mystery was made known to me.

Eph 3:3 3 How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, (KJV)

Like a Gnostic defending the secrecy of the Inner Mysteries he asserts that he has heard "ineffable words which it is not lawful for a man to utter."

2 Cor 12:4 4 How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. (KJV)

Like a Gnostic he puts the emphasis on understanding, not on dogma, writing, "The letter kills, while the spirit gives life."

2 Cor 3:6 6 Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. (KJV)

And like a Gnostic, he describes stories in the scriptures as "allegories".

Eph 4:24 24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. (KJV)

And like a Gnostic, he writes of "events" as "symbolic."

1 Cor 10:6 6 Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. (KJV)

The evidence keeps mounting. Paul is Gnostic and is not teaching a human Christ Jesus but rather a Gnostic Christ mediator in the Spirit realm. That is why the Gnostic Marcion who gave us the First New Testament claimed that only Paul understood "the Christ" and his message correctly. Take a second and consider this: The seven authentic epistles of Paul do not teach a human Christ Jesus. That means the passages that you have read your whole life about "the Christ" and "Christ Jesus" in the Pauline epistles NEVER were meant to refer to a human being named Jesus of Nazareth!

Answer for yourself: Did you understand?

This just shows us how inept we are at interpreting the religious literature we possess and cherish. It also shows us how unprepared are our spiritual authorities, preachers, and pastors are who are given the responsibility of teaching us about God. I used be one and it was during my time in Seminary that I realized that something terribly was wrong with what I am being taught. I used to call it "swiss cheese theology" as it was full of holes. It would take me many years to plumb the depths of this religious source we call the Holy Bible and little was I prepared for what I would uncover in scholarly study. Yet I was reassured at the same time that with every lie and falsehood exposed and replaced with the original truth that I would be taking a step closer to the God of truth.

APOSTLE OF THE RESURRECTION

Literalist Christians tried to quote Paul to endorse their bizarre belief that at the Second Coming the dead would actually rise from their graves in their physical bodies. (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995, p. 26). The Literalists Irenaeus and Tertullian both preached the resurrection of the flesh. They did this by a devious exegesis of 1 Corinthians 15, which nonetheless failed to overcome the problem of Paul's categorical denial of this doctrine in 1 Corinthians 15:50.

1 Cor 15:50 50 Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. (KJV)

It is clear, however, that Paul had a very different perspective. In common with the Gnostics, Paul sees the resurrection as a spiritual event. He writes categorically that "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Rarely do we stop and ponder just what this verse implies. Irenaeus was evidently frustrated about this verse and complained, "All heretics (Gnostics) always introduce this passage" (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 85). To counter the Gnostic disciples of Paul, someone in the second century wrote 3 Corinthians to cast doubt on 1 Corinthians (F.L. Cross, The Oxford Dictionary Of The Christian Church, 1958, p. 1031). This states: "As for those who tell you that there is no resurrection of the flesh, for them there will be no resurrection (3 Corinthians v 24) We see the same testimony in Ludemann, op. cit., p. 224. The triumph of the Literalists in the fourth century rendered 3 Corinthians unnecessary and the forged text was excluded from the canon.

The Gnostic sage Theodotus calls Paul "the apostle of the resurrection" (Pagels, op. cit., 5, 14). Like the Gnostics, Paul does not see the resurrection as a promised future event, but as a spiritual experience that can happen right now. He writes, "This is it: the duly appointed time! This is it : the day of salvation"

2 Cor 6:2 2 (For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.) (KJV)

Paul's message is clearly mystical and allegorical - he writes of being "raised up to heaven" and "enthroned with Jesus" not as some hoped - for afterlife reward, but as something, which he and other Christian initiates have already experienced.

Eph 2:4-7 4 But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, 5 Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) 6 And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: 7 That in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. (KJV)

This is the Gnostic Salvation Message. The writer is speaking about something already accomplished for mankind by God and available to them in the present time. Like the Gnostics, Paul preaches that Christ Jesus' passion is not an event in the past, but a enduring mystical reality. Through sharing in Jesus' death and resurrection each Christian initiate can themselves die to their lower self and be resurrected as the Christ or Logos (W.R. Inge, Christian Mysticism, 1899, p. 64).

Rom 6:4 4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. (KJV)

Rom 8:11 11 But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. (KJV)

Inge notes: "Paul's mystical language about death and resurrection has given rise to much controversy."

In his Letter to the Philippians Paul writes of "participating in his suffering" and "sharing in the form of his death," and so being "resurrected from the dead."

Phil 3:10-11 10 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; 11 If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. (KJV)

In his Letter to the Galatians he writes:

Gal 2:20 20 I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. (KJV)

In his Letter to the Romans he interprets Jesus' passion allegorically, writing:

Rom 6:3-7 3 Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? 4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. 5 For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: 6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. 7 For he that is dead is freed from sin. (KJV)

J. Campbell, Papers From The Eranos Yearbooks, 1955, p. 238 states: "It lies in the nature of the mystery cult that the mystae undergo the same experience as their god, that, as St. Paul says, they die with him, are buried with him, are reborn with him, and are resurrected with him."

In his Letter to the Colossians Paul describes himself as having been assigned by God the task of delivering his message "in full"; of announcing "the secret hidden for long ages and through many generations," which is now being disclosed to those chosen by God.

Answer for yourself: And what is this great secret?

Answer for yourself: Is it, as we might expect from an orthodox apostle, the "good news" that Jesus had literally come and walked the Earth, worked miracles, died for our sins, and returned from the dead? No! It is the perennial mysticism of Gnosticism and the Pagan Mysteries - that within each one of us is the one Soul of the Universe, the Logos, the Universal Daemon, the Mind of God. the Christ (T. Freke and P. Gandy, The Jesus Mysteries, 1999, p. 166-167).

Paul writes:

The secret is this: Christ in you!

Col 1:25-28 25 Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God; 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: 28

Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus: (KJV)

When Paul describes his famous vision of Jesus on the road to Damascus it is significant what Paul does not say. Let us look at the verse very closely:

Gal 1:15-16 15 But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, 16 To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: (KJV)

Notice that Paul doesn't say "God revealed his Son to me," as we would expect from a Literalist Christian. Rather, he writes, "God revealed his Son in me."

Paul's Jesus is not a historical figure, but a symbol of the Universal Daemon of whom we are all limbs. For Paul, "Christ is like a single body with its many limbs and organs, which, many as they are together make up one body."

1 Cor 12:12 12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. (KJV)

Rom 12:4 4 For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: (KJV)

In his Letter to the Ephesians he teaches:

Eph 4:25 25 Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour: for we are members one of another. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: But what do we do with a flesh and blood Jesus?

In earlier articles we made mention of the "Outer Mysteries" and the "Inner Mysteries". The Gnostics claimed that Paul taught that seeing Jesus as a flesh and blood man was only a transitory stage for beginners - the Outer Mysteries for Psychic Christians. Those Pneumatic Christians initiated into the Inner Mysteries understood the Jesus story's allegorical meaning. The Gnostics claimed that this change of perspective from a "physical" Christ Jesus to a "spiritual" Christ Jesus through initiation into the Inner Mysteries is what Paul was referring to when he wrote:

2 Cor 5:16 16 Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. (KJV)

W.R. Inge, Christian Mysticism, 1899, p. 69, states that the heretics (Gnostic Christians) claimed that the stage of worshipping the man Christ Jesus was a stage to be passed through and then left behind as one matured spiritually by ascending from the Outer Mysteries into the Inner Mysteries.

Answer for yourself: Can you find one place where Paul in his original and authentic epistles spoke of a historical Jesus? No! As stated in an earlier article it is "ONLY" in the forged Pastoral Epistles where we find Paul speaking of a supposed historical Christ Jesus.

Since Paul never claimed to have known a historical Jesus "in the flesh," it is indeed difficult to see what else he could have meant!

PSYCHIC AND PNEUMATIC TEACHINGS

Answer for yourself: So how could Paul have come to be both the hero of the "allegorical" Gnostics and the Literalists Roman Catholics?

As we saw above the Gnostics taught that the Jesus story works on two levels at once:

- Christ Jesus was taught as an introductory story for Psychic Christians initiated into the Outer Mysteries
- Christ Jesus was taught later to initiates as a mystical allegory for Pneumatic Christians initiated into the Inner Mysteries.

The irony of this is opposite of what we expect today; namely that the "literal" is the true and the "allegorical" is the untrue. Just the opposite is the case here. It is the "allegorical" Christ that is real and the "literal" Christ Jesus as a human being is the myth. There is no explicit evidence for the existence for a historical Jesus outside this one book given to us by the "literalist" Roman Church...the New Testament which they themselves produced as a refutation of the earlier Gnostic First New Testament of Marcion. Although it was understood in two completely different ways, the story remained the same. According to the Gnostics, Paul's letters were likewise designed to work on two levels. As the Gnostic sage Theodotus puts it, Paul "taught in two ways at once." (Quoted in E. Pagels, The Gnostic Christ, 1975, p. 7). Theodotus claims that Paul recognized that "each one knows the Lord in his own way: and not all know him alike." (Ibid., p. 5). So on the one hand Paul preached the savior "according to the flesh" as one "who was born and suffered." This was an a "literal" introduction to carnal believers in preparation for their spiritual transformation and resurrection as they were initiated to the Inner Mystery of "Christ in you"! This "kerygmatic gospel" of "Christ crucified" he taught to Psychic Christians "because this they were capable of knowing." But to Pneumatic Christians he proclaimed Christ "pneumatically" or "according to the spirit." Each level of initiate would take from these teachings whatever they were wise enough to be able to hear. Paul himself writes:

1 Cor 2:14-15 14 But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. 15 But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man. (KJV)

Let us re-word this verse a little:

The Psychic does not receive the things of the spirit of God; they are foolishness to him; he cannot recognize them, because they are Pneumatically discerned, but the Pneumatic discerns all things.

The Gnostics claimed that like the gospel parables, Paul's letters encoded secret teachings so that uninitiated readers would hear one thing and the initiated another. Only those who had been initiated into the secret oral teachings of the Inner Mysteries were capable of understanding Paul's deeper meaning. As Elaine Pagels writes,

The Valentinians claim that most Christians make the mistake of reading the scriptures only literally. They themselves, through their initiation into Gnosis, learned to read Paul's letters (as they read all the scriptures) on the symbolic level, as they say Paul intended. Only this pneumatic reading yields "the truth" instead of its mere outward "image" (Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 7).

The followers of Valentinus systematically decoded the allegorical meaning of Paul's letters to show their hidden meaning. For example, in his letters to the Romans Paul uses a simple everyday situation - the relationship between Jews and Gentiles - as a parable for the relation between Psychic and Pneumatic Christians. An initiate of the Inner Mysteries would understand that where Paul writes "Jews" he means "Psychic Christians" and where he writes "Gentiles," he means "Pneumatic Christians". Paul calls himself "apostle to the Gentiles" in Romans 1:5 because he is a Pneumatic teacher of the Inner Mysteries. Yet he comes to teach Christians of all levels, both "the wise [Pneumatics] and to the foolish [Psychics]".

Rom 1:14 14 I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. (KJV)

As well as "Gentiles," the other code words used by Paul to signify "Pneumatic Christian" include "the uncircumcised," "the Greeks," "Jews inwardly," "Jews in secret," and "the true Israel." (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 7).

In a striking passage in his First Letter to the Corinthians Paul writes with disappointment of wanting to give his followers Pneumatic teachings, but finding them only to be on a "Sarkic" level of awareness (a term synonymous with "Hylic," meaning the lowest level of human awareness). So he is forced to teach his students only the most basic of Christian doctrines:

1 Cor 3:1-3 1 And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. 2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. 3 For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? (KJV)

Now let us read it again with a few choice words:

And I, brothers, was not able to speak to you as to Pneumatics, but as to Sarkics, as to those uninitiated in Christ. I fed you milk, not meat, for you were not yet able to take it. Nor are you now - you are still Sarkic. For where there is strife and envy among you, are you not Sarkic. (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 59).

Likewise in his Letter to the Hebrews 5:11-14, Paul is impatient that his followers are still not ready to move on from elementary teachings. He writes:

Heb 5:11-14 11 Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing. 12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. 13 For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. 14 But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. (KJV) (E. Pagels, op. cit., 148-9).

Paul is impatient that his followers are still not ready to move on from elementary teachings. In his Letter to the Hebrews he writes:

Heb 6:1-6 1 Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, 2 Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. 3 And this will we do, if God permit. 4 For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, 5 And have tasted the good word [LOGOS/CHRIST] of God, and the powers of the world to come, 6 If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance...(KJV)

The "elementary doctrine," which Paul wants his disciples to leave behind, as a Gnostic would expect, includes repentance, faith, baptism, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.

Answer for yourself: What do all of these have in common? All of these involve rituals and dogmas so precious to the Literalist Church but which Gnostics did not esteem. To the Gnostics these were only the Psychic Outer Mysteries of Christianity. Paul wants his disciples, having tasted the holy breath of Pneumatic initiation, to progress to the Pneumatic level of understanding completely and leave behind such Psychic concerns.

PAUL AND JEHOVAH AND THE TORAH/LAW

Like the Gnostics, Paul teaches that the Mysteries of Jesus supersede the Law of the Jewish god Jehovah.

In Galatians 3:2-3 Paul asks:

Gal 3:2-3 2 This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? 3 Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? (KJV)

Paul's Gnostic Christ Jesus has given Jews a New Covenant or agreement with God and Paul does not hide his low opinion of the redundant old agreement that is traditional Judaism!" He writes:

Phil 3:5-6 5 Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; 6 Concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless. (KJV)

Paul gives a full account of his justification according to Jewish Law- - circumcised on the eighth day, Israelite by race, of the tribe of Benjamin, and a zealous Pharisee - "by the law's standard righteous without fault." Startlingly, he says in verse 8 that he counts all this as "so much rubbish."

Heb 8:13 13 In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away. (KJV)

Like the Gnostics, Paul does not preach moral servitude to the Law, but spiritual freedom through Gnosis. He declares:

2 Cor 3:17 17 Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. (KJV)

For Paul, "Nothing is unclean in itself" (Rom. 14:1-15). Later Gnostics, such as Carpocrates, quote Paul to defend their own doctrines of natural morality against those who accused them of immorality. After all, it was Paul, not some "loony" Gnostic heretic, who had famously proclaimed: "All things are authorized for me!"

1 Cor 6:12 12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. (KJV)

Paul even goes so far as to declare Jehovah's traditionally sacred Law, the very basis of the Jewish religion, to be a curse, writing, "All who depend upon works of the Law are under a curse" (Gal. 3:6-11) and "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the Law" (Gal. 3:13-14). For Paul, as for the Gnostics, through sharing in Christ's suffering and resurrection the Christian initiate can be redeemed from the Law and set free: "Now, having died, we are out of the purview of the Law that kept us down" (Rom. 7:6).

Rom 7:6 6 But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter. (KJV)

Paul claims the Law is the product of the "mediator."

Answer for yourself: What does he mean by calling Jehovah, supposedly the one God and creator of all, a "mediator?" A mediator between what and what?

Literalists have no answer, but Gnostics immediately recognize that Paul is teaching the Gnostic doctrine that Jehovah is the "demiurge," a lesser god who mediates between the ineffable supreme God and creation. Paul certainly does not regard Jehovah as the true God, for he continues: "The mediator is not one; God is one" (E. Pagels,The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 107-108).

Gal 3:19-20 19 Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. 20 Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is one. (KJV)

According to Paul, people who do not understand the gospel he is preaching have had their "unbelieving minds blinded by the god of this passing age".

2 Cor 4:4 4 In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. (KJV)

In many translations of his letters, the editor adds a helpful little note here to explain the mysterious phrase "the god of this passing age." The general orthodox gloss on this line is that Paul is referring to the Devil, but why he should refer to a wicked angel as a "god" is left unexplained! To the Gnostics it was obvious what Paul meant. He was referring to Jehovah, the lesser god of the Jews, whose years of ruling the Jewish people were coming to an end and who was to be abandoned in favor of the true ineffable God of Jesus and Plato.

CIRCUMCISION

The anti-Gnostic letters of Paul have been found to be forgeries, but his authentic letters do oppose others within the early Christian Church who preach "another Jesus."

2 Cor 11:4 4 For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him. (KJV)

These are not Gnostic heretics, however, but pro-Jewish Christians who believe that the Church should maintain the old Jewish custom of circumcision and honor the Law of Jehovah.

Paul attacks them with passion. In his Letter to the Philippians he warns:

Phil 3:2 2 Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision. (KJV)

In his Letter to the Galatians he proclaims:

Gal 5:2 2 Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. (KJV)

Paul goes on to say:

Gal 5:12 12 I would they were even cut off which trouble you. (KJV)

It is not such outer Psychic observances of religious rituals, but inner Pneumatic qualities, which mark the Mysteries Paul is preaching. He claims:

Phil 3:3 3 For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. (KJV)

Let us again reword this with different words:

We are the circumcised, we whose worship is Pneumatic (spiritual), whose pride is in Jesus Christ, and who put no confidence in anything external.

Paul's teachings here are completely in line with those of the Gnostic Jesus. In The Gospel of Thomas, for example, when the disciples ask Jesus about the benefits of circumcision, he explains:

If it were beneficial, their father would beget them already circumcised from their mother. Rather the true circumcision in spirit has become completely profitable (quoted in J.M. Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library, 1978, p. 132, sayubg 53).

What characterizes Paul's rival Christians is not their Gnosticism as opposed to Paul's Literalism, or their Literalism as opposed to Paul's Gnosticism. This is not the issue at all. Their disagreement is over the relationship between Christians and old Jewish traditions, and whether Christianity should be open to non-Jews, and if so in what way. The battles in the Church of Paul's time were not between Literalists and Gnostics, but between Christians with different views on the relationship between Christianity and Judaism.

Paul's letters suggest that these more traditional Jewish-Christians live in Jerusalem. They have traditionally been taken to be Peter and others of Jesus' disciples who are mentioned in the New Testament. As we have already shown, this is actually an interpretation of the evidence based on unjustified preconceptions. Let us remember that the Book of Acts as Scholars attest today was a late second century document that appeared after Irenaeus in 180 C.E. Let us not forget who has control of writing these documents at this time; namely anti-Gnostic literalists. Having said that then understand that there is absolutely no evidence to support the idea that there ever existed a Jerusalem Church of the apostles as envisaged by traditional Roman Christianity. In fact, quite the opposite is true. (S.G.F. Brandon, Religion In Ancient History, 1969, p. 268). Indeed, when in 160 C.E. Bishop Melito of Sardis went to Judea to discover what had become of the legendary Jerusalem Church, to his dismay he found not the descendants of the apostles, but instead a small group of Gnostics! (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995), p. 31). Apparently this group of apostates was all that was left of the Jerusalem Church that God had so carefully preserved from destruction in 70 CE. Irenaeus leaves us in no doubt that the Ebionites were Gnostics (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995, p. 247, note 111). Epiphanius tells us that the Ebionites were vegetarians (W. Barnstone, The Other Bible, 1984, p. 203). This was a practice almost universally associated with Pythagoreanism in the ancient world. These Christians, who called themselves the Ebionites or "Poor Men," had their own Gospel of the Ebionites and also a Gospel of the Hebrews, Gospel of the Twelve Apostles, and a Gospel of the Nazarenes" (G.R.S. Mead, Fragments of a Faith Forgotten, 1906, p. 129). All of these gospels differed significantly from the gospels of the New Testament. It should be remembered that these Nazarenes knew nothing of the Nazareth legend, which was subsequently developed by the "in order that it might be fulfilled" school of historicizers (Ibid., 128-9). This form of Jewish-Christian Gnosticism managed to survive for many hundreds of years (Ibid., p. 126). The Nazarenes were still found scattered throughout Syria and the Decapolis in the late fourth century.

The Literalist propagandist Eusebius explains the fact that the Jerusalem Church had turned out to be made up of Gnostics by claiming that they had obviously all "apostated" from their original Literalism and become heretics - but he does not explain why or how this might have happened! Actually the evidence suggests that the Jerusalem Christians had always been Gnostics, because in the first century the Christian community was made up entirely of different types of Gnosticism!

CONCLUSION

Answer for yourself: So was Paul a Gnostic? Let's review a little of what we have discovered:

- The Gnostics claimed that their spiritual lineage stemmed from Paul and that they were privy to secret oral teachings taught by Paul to select disciples.
- Gnostics had many gospels which they attributed to Paul, their "Great Apostle."
- Many Gnostic groups claimed Paul as their founding father.
- By the middle of the second century the communities to which Paul had written his letters are known to have been centers of Marcionite Gnosticism.
- Paul's anti-Gnostic Pastoral letters are fakes, forged in the late second century. In the genuine letters Paul is not anti-Gnostic and never mentions a historical Jesus.
- Literalist Christians of the early second century attack Paul, who they claim "contradicts" the true teaching and is the "adversary" of Jesus.
- Paul was born in Tarsus, a major center for the Pagan Mysteries, and often uses terms from the Mysteries in his letters. He even calls himself a "Steward of the Mysteries of God," the term for a priest in the Pagan Mysteries of Serapis. Paul quotes Pagan sages and teaches Pagan doctrines.
- When properly translated, Paul's letters reveal a powerful Gnostic content. Paul regularly uses Gnostic terms. He is a teacher of a Pneumatic initiation. He journeyed mystically to the third heaven. He teaches that Jesus came only in the "likeness" of flesh. He is disparaging of external religion. He describes the scriptures as "allegories" and "symbolic." He rejects the Law of Jehovah, who he calls "the mediator" and "the god of this passing age."
- While the Literalists saw the resurrection as the promise that they would rise from their graves and experience bodily immortality after the Second Coming, Paul teaches the Gnostic doctrine that the resurrection is a mystical experience that can be had here and now.
- The great secret that Paul claims to be able to reveal is not that Jesus literally walked the Earth, but the mystical revelation of "Christ in you."
- The Gnostics claimed that, like the gospels, Paul's letters encoded secret teachings. Paul taught in "two ways at once": the Outer Mysteries to Psychic initiates and the Inner Mysteries to Pneumatic initiates. Paul's letters can be understood in different ways because they were designed to speak on different levels simultaneously.
- Paul is frustrated with his disciples because they are not ready to abandon "elementary" Christianity and move on to the deeper level.

All of the evidence strongly suggests that Paul was indeed a Gnostic just as the Gnostics themselves had claimed all along. Yet, upon reflection we felt that to call Paul a Gnostic was, in a sense, misleading. The more one looks at the evidence the more it seemed that to apply the terms "Gnostic" and "Literalist" to the Christianity of the first century was actually meaningless. From Paul's letters it is clear that the Christian community of this period was deeply divided, yet this schism was not between Gnostics and Literalists, as was the case by the end of the second century. Paul is neither anti-Gnostic nor pro-Gnostic, because in his day the great schism between Gnostics and Literalists had yet to occur.

At the time of Paul, the strands of thought that would become Gnosticism and Literalism were harmoniously co-existing as the Inner and Outer teachings of the Jesus Mysteries. The theological battle that Paul is engaged in is between those initiates of the Jesus Mysteries who want to maintain a traditional and distinctively Jewish identity and those, like himself, who wish to make their new Mysteries completely "modern" and cosmopolitan.

Paul has all the characteristics we would expect to find in an initiator of the Jesus Mysteries. When something is true then "everything" starts to fall into place. We see that repeatedly in these articles. The picture presented of the origins of Christianity explains the evidence, is internally consistent and beautifully simple once you understand Gnosticism and can differentiate between what writings are authentically Pauline and which ones were later anti-Gnostic forgeries in Paul's name.

PAUL AND THE PAGAN MYSTERIES

If we can throw off the traditional picture of Paul and look at the evidence with an open mind this anti-Paul rhetoric is understandable, since his letters show distinct Gnostic and Pagan influences. Paul is a Jew who had embraced the ubiquitous Greek culture of the times. He writes in Greek, his first language. He quotes only from the Greek version of the Old Testament. His ministry is to Pagan cities dominated by Greek culture (Ludemann, op. cit., p. 65). Paul's mother tongue was Greek, and Paul uses only the Septuagint version of the Old Testament. (S.G.F. Brandon, op. cit., 1969, p. 313). Brandon notes that in Galatians 1 Paul states that his teaching was specially designed to be intelligible to those who were not Jews. Ludemann observes that whereas the gospels are "third person accounts," "often contradictory," and "do not come from eyewitnesses," in Paul "we hear his own voice in his mother tongue, free from all background noise, accessible to all who do not shrink from the trouble of reading him (Ludemann, op. cit., p. 61). Of these;

- Antioch was a center for the Mysteries of Adonis,
- Ephesus was a center for the Mysteries of Attis, and
- Corinth was a center for the Mysteries of Dionysus (G.A. Wells, Did Jesus Exist?, 1975, p. 183.

Paul was a native of Tarsus in Asia Minor, which by his time had surpassed even Athens and Alexandria to become the major center of Pagan philosophy (D. Ulansey, Origin of the Mithraic Mysteries, 1989, p. 68ff). Strabo writes: "The people of Tarsus have devoted themselves so eagerly, not only to philosophy, but also to the whole round of education in general, that they have surpassed Athens, Alexandria, or any other place that can be named where have been schools and lectures of philosophers." Athenodorus of Tarsus even became a tutor to Emperor Augustus. Athenodorus was in turn a disciple of Posidonius, arguably the greatest philosopher of the first century BCE. Pompey twice turned aside from campaigns in Asia Minor to visit Posidonius and Cicero describes him as a friend. He is one of the first astronomers to make an orrery, which Cicero says "shows in its revolutions the movements of the sun and stars and planets, by day and night, just as they appear in the sky" (Cicero, The Nature of the Gods, p. 159). In his travels to Britain he made the discovery that the moon governs the tides. This he must have considered certain proof of astrology's first axiom, that the heavenly bodies have a direct effect on the physical world. All of the astronomical and astrological knowledge acquired by the Tarsian intellectuals, particularly the discovery of the precession of the equinoxes by Hipparchus, who worked at nearby Rhodes, made a major contribution to the doctrines of Mithraism. It was into this city that Paul was born, at a time when Tarsus was at the height of its power and influence. It was in Tarsus that the Mysteries of Mithras had originated, so it would have been unthinkable that Paul would have been unaware of the remarkable similarities we have already explored between Christian doctrines and the teachings of Mithraism (Ulansey, op. cit., p. 68). Tarsus was the capital of Ciicia, where, according to Plutarch, the Mithraic Mysteries were being practiced as early as 67 BCE. Ulansey considers it significant that the appearance of Mithraism coincides almost exactly with the lifetime of Posidonius and is in the same part of the Mediterranean. Hipparchus' discovery of the precession of the equinoxes had revealed that in the cycle known as the "Great Year" the sun was passing from Aries into Pisces at the spring equinox. Mithraic iconography portrays Mithras as the god who turns the wheel of the Great Year and thereby ushers in the New Age. Paul shows himself aware of "the passing age" in 2 Corinthians 4:4.

2 Cor 4:4 4 In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. (KJV)

Paul frequently uses terms and phrases from the Pagan Mysteries, such as;

- pneuma* (spirit),
- gnosis* (divine knowledge),
- doxa* (glory),
- sophia* (wisdom),
- teleioi* (the initiated), and so on

(F.C. Happold, Mysticism, 1963, p. 186; H. Kennedy, St Paul and the Mystery Religions, 1969). All Paul's terms for mature or perfect Christians are variations on the Greek telete - "initiation." "Mature" is teleion, "to the level of maturity" is ten teleioteta, "the perfect man" is andra teleion, "the imperfect man" is ateles. (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 148, 149, 123). He advises his followers to "earnestly seek the greater charismata"

1 Cor 12:28-31 28 And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. 29 Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? 30 Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? 31 But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way. (KJV)

The word "charismata" derives from the Mystery term makarismos, referring to the blessed nature of one who has seen the Mysteries (W. Burkert, The Orientalizing Revolution, 1992, p. 93), Burkert writes: "One of the main characteristics of the mysteries is the makarismos, the praise of the 'blessed' status of those who have 'seen' the mysteries." Charismatic Christians might be interested to know the ancient root of their name.

1 Cor 4:1 1 Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. (KJV)

Paul even calls himself a "Steward of the Mysteries of God," which is the technical name for a priest in the Mysteries of Serapis (G.A. Wells, Did Jesus Exist?, 1975, p. 23). The Alexandrian cult of Serapis and his consort Isis was widespread in the Greco-Roman world at this time. That Paul might have been a "Steward of the Mysteries" of Serapis is entirely possible. Emperor Hadrian writes of the citizens of Alexandria, "Here you see Christians worshiping Serapis, and worshipers of Serapis who call themselves bishops of Christ" (G. D'Alviella, The Mysteries of Eleusis, 1981, p. 103). Perhaps this throws light on a passage in the New Testament, which has left scholars confused. At Cenchreae, near Corinth, waiting to board a ship bound for Ephesus, Paul "cut his hair for he had made a vow." This is a curious report and not in accordance with Jewish Law, which states that hair is only to be shorn at Jerusalem. Near Cenchreae, however, was a temple of Isis where Greek sailors cut their hair and dedicated it to the goddess as "Stella Maris" in hope of a safe crossing.

Paul quotes the Pagan sage Aratus, who had lived in Tarsus several centuries earlier, describing God "in whom we live, and move, and have our being" (Acts 17:28).

He also teaches Mystery doctrines.

1 Cor 15:37 37 And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: (KJV)

Paul uses the most ubiquitous of images from the Mysteries, the reaping and sowing of the crops as a symbol of mystical death and resurrection of an initiate. He speaks of the sprouting of a grain of wheat as an image of the resurrection and writes:

"The seed you sow does not come to life unless it has first died."

Like the Pagan sage Socrates, who was deemed wise because he knew he knew nothing (Plato, Apology, 23b) Paul teaches:

1 Cor 8:2 2 And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. (KJV)

Just as Plato had written that we now only see reality "through a glass dimly" (Plato, Phaedrus, 250 b) so Paul writes, 1 Cor 13:12 12 For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. (KJV)

This famous passage from Paul has also been translated:

At present all we see is the baffling reflection of reality; we are like men looking at a landscape in a small mirror. The time will come when we shall see reality whole and face to face* (Phillips translation quoted in F.C. Happold, Mysticism, 1963, p. 194).

This translation clearly brings out the Platonic nature of Paul's teachings. Plato had used the image of prisoners trapped in a cave who are only able to see the shadows of the outside world cast on the cave walls as an allegory for our present condition of mistaking for real what is in fact only a reflection of ultimate reality (Plato, The Republic, Book 7). For Plato, as for Paul, "At present all we see is the baffling reflection of reality."

Plato teaches that philosophers are those who are released from the cave to go outside and see the reality of the dazzling light of day for themselves - "face to face." This phrase is a ritual formula of the Pagan Mysteries. In The Bacchae we read: "He gave these Mysteries to me face to face." (Euripides, The Bacchae, 207, line 501). Lucius Apuleius writes of his initiation: "I penetrated into the very presence of the gods below and the gods above, where I worshiped face to face." (quoted in S. Angus, Mystery Religions, 1925, p.61). Justin Martyr acknowledges that: "The aim of Platonism is to see God face to face (Justin Martyr, Dialogue With Trypho, 2.3, quoted in E.R. Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational, 1951, p. 249). Plato describes how in the temple of the "true earth," which exists in the realm of ideas of which this Earth is a mere image, "Communion with the gods occurs face to face" (Plato, Phaedo, 111c). The Gnostic Valentinus also wrote of the Logos "who spoke of realities face to face (G.R.S. Mead, Fragments of a Faith Forgotten, 1906, p. 299).

THE GNOSTIC PAUL

Paul's Christ Jesus is the mystical dying and resurrecting godman of the Gnostics, not the historical figure of the Literalists. The only place where Paul seems to treat Jesus as a historical figure is in the Letter to Timothy, where supposedly he writes in I Tim. 6:13

1 Tim 6:13 13 I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; (KJV)

But as we have shown this this letter is a forgery. The genuine Paul preaches the Gnostic doctrine of Illusionism, claiming that Jesus came not as a person but in the "likeness" of human flesh.

Rom 8:3 3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: (KJV)

Phil 2:7 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What does the word "likeness" mean when looked up in the Greek?

Strong's Concordance says:

3667 homoioma (hom-oy'-o-mah); from 3666; a form; abstractly, resemblance: KJV-- made like to, likeness, shape, similitude.

Thayer's Greek Lexicon says:

3667 homoioma- what has been made after the likeness of something

- a) a figure, a image, a likeness, a representation
- b) likeness that is, resemblance, such as amounts almost to equality or identity

Take just a second and ponder what you just saw from the Greek. Without a doubt in the Greek we see what escapes us in the English; namely, that the Son of God, the Christ as we have seen, is not truly human but only a resemblance and an image and representation of mankind. This is what both Paul and Marcion believed and taught as found in the First New Testament before Rome would destroy it and replace it with their Second New Testament which alters this Christ and makes him into a human being which causes adherents of such faith idolators!

Paul's Paul's letters are full of such distinctively Gnostic doctrines.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever stopped and wondered what Paul's famous claim to have ascended as far as the third heaven could possibly mean?

What we fail to understand today under the influence of Western literalistic Christianity is that this would not be puzzling for a Gnostic or an initiate of the Pagan Mysteries, for both would have been taught that there are seven heavens linked to the seven heavenly bodies - the five visible planets and the moon and sun. It was obvious to Celsus that Christianity and Mithraism were teaching the same doctrine, (R. J. Hoffman Celsus On The True Doctrine, 1987, p. 95). As Ulansey notes, Christianity and Mithraism were "sister religions, arising at the same time and in the same geographical area" (D. Ulansey, Origin of Mithraic Mysteries, 1989, p. 4). Brandon writes: "Paul's many references to the archontes, the stoicheia, and the pleroma all indicate his easy familiarity with esoteric concepts of a Gnostic hierarchy of supernatural powers" (S.G.F. Brandon, Religion In Ancient History, 1969, p. 44).

Like the Gnostics, Paul is extremely disparaging of the externals of religion - ceremonies, holy days, rules, and regulations.

Rom 14:1-5 1 Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations. 2 For one believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs. 3 Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth: for God hath received him. 4 Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand. 5 One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. (KJV)

Phil 3:3 3 For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. (KJV)

Col 2:20-22 20 Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances, 21 (Touch not; taste not; handle not; 22 Which all are to perish with the using;) after the commandments and doctrines of men? (KJV)

As noted, the Gnostics preached the same freedom from human legislation - especially religious laws.

Answer for yourself: Could this be the reason why Paul is anti-Torah? It sure is!!!

Simon of Samaria quoted Paul in defense of his own freedom, saying, "Men are saved by grace, and not on account of their own righteous works." The followers of Carpocrates declared themselves saved "by faith and love" and considered all things "not good or evil in themselves, but only by convention," (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 44-5).

2 Cor 3:12-18 12 Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech: 13 And not as Moses, which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not stedfastly look to the end of that which is abolished: 14 But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ. 15 But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart. 16 Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away. 17 Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. 18 But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. (KJV)

Like the Gnostics, he claims that true Christians become like Christ: having "no veil over the face" they "reflect as in a mirror the splendor of the Lord" and are thus "transfigured into his likeness, from splendor to splendor."

Paul's imagery in 2 Cor. 3:12-18 is uncannily similar to the initiation rites in the Greek Mysteries. Novices wore veils, hence their appellation as "brides." At this stage they were known as mystae - those with "closed eyes." Only at the highest stage of initiation was the veil removed and the mystae became epoptae - those who had "seen." This is the stage that Paul insists that the Corinthians should have reached.

The Gnostics saw Paul as a teacher of secret "Pneumatic" initiations. In his Letter to the Romans Paul writes: "I long to see you, so that I may share with you a certain Pneumatic charisma of which he says, "I would not have you remain ignorant."

Rom 1:9-14 9 For God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of his Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers; 10 Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God to come unto you. 11 For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established; 12 That is, that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me. 13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren (devoid of Gnosis), that oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might have some fruit among you also, even as among other Gentiles. 14 I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: If Paul wants to urgently share something with his correspondents, why doesn't he write it in his letter?

The answer for the Gnostics is that the "Pneumatic charisma" is an initiation, which he can only transmit in person and "in secret." (Pagels, op. cit., p. 15).

Paul writes:

1 Cor 2:9 9 But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (KJV)

Initiated readers would undoubtedly recognize these words as a Mystery formula pronounced at the time of initiation. As Christians devoid of knowledge of Gnosticism and the truth about Paul we read these passages never understanding that they reflect Gnosticism. The vow of secrecy undertaken by the followers of the Gnostic sage Justinus incorporated these words and, among other places, they also occur in the Gnostic Gospel of Thomas, where Jesus offers:

I will give you what eye has not seen, and what ear has not heard, what has not been touched, and what has not arisen in the heart of man.

(Quoted in Pagels, op. cit., p. 58). Hippolytus records this as the oath of secrecy in Justinus' Gnostic group. It also occurs in The Gospel of Thomas, Saying 17, and in the first epistle of Clement, (A. Louth, Early Christian Writings, 1968, p. 37).

It is only our inadequate knowledge concerning the religious beliefs associated with Gnosticism and inadequate textual translation that conceals the fact that Paul's letters are full of characteristically Gnostic phrases and teachings. For example, the Valentinians claim that Paul initiated Christians into the "Mystery of Sophia," which probably included the myth of the goddess' fall and redemption, and quote as proof his First Letter to the Corinthians, in which Paul writes: "We speak of Sophia among the initiated."

1 Cor 2:6-9 6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought: 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: 8 Which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. 9 But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (KJV)

If you are wondering why you have never come across this decidedly Gnostic line of Paul's before, it is because it is usually translated as "We speak wisdom among the perfected," which doesn't make a lot of sense but at least sounds orthodox!

Howbeit we speak wisdom among the perfect: yet a wisdom not of this world, nor of the rulers of this world, which are coming to nought: but we speak God's wisdom in a mystery, even the wisdom that hath been hidden, which God foreordained before the worlds unto our glory: which none of the rulers of this world knoweth: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

This translation, if intelligible at all, distorts Paul's actual meaning considerably. One modern scholar explains:

The proper meaning of this passage is obscured at two crucial points.

- The Greek word translated "world" here, severally in its singular or plural forms, is aion, which does not mean this physical world or earth, but "time" or "age." Paul's use of aion here accordingly shows that he was thinking in terms of an esoteric system of "world-ages."

- Next, the words translated as "rulers of this world" (archontes tou aionos toutou) do not refer, as is popularly supposed, to the Roman and Jewish authorities who were responsible for condemning Jesus to death; they denote demonic beings, who were associated with the planets and were believed to govern the lives of men on earth. This is very important in our understanding of the later death of "the Christ."

In this passage, then, Paul is found explaining that, before the beginning of a series of world-ages, God determined to send into the world, for the good of mankind, a preexistent divine being, whom the demonic rulers of the world, not perceiving his real nature, put to death and thereby in some way confounded themselves. In brief, Paul envisaged mankind as enslaved by demonic beings, connected with astral phenomena, whom he describes by a variety of terms such as archontes tou aionos toutou and stoicheia tou kosmou ("The elemental powers of the universe"). From this mortal slavery mankind had, accordingly, been rescued by the divine being, who, incarnated in the LIKENESS of a person named Christ Jesus, had been crucified mistakenly by these archontes who, presumably, by thus unwittingly exceeding their rights, forfeited their control over men (S.G.F. Brandon, Religion In Ancient History, 1969, p. 327).

1 Pet 1:20 20 Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, (KJV)

This is not Christianity as we know it today! Paul is preaching Gnosticism. Paul writes of a Gnosis which can be taught only to the "fully initiated."

He offers a prayer "that your love may more and more be bursting with Gnosis."

Phil 1:9 9 And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge (Gnosis) and in all judgment; (KJV)

In 1 Corinthians Paul seems to diminish the importance of Gnosis, claiming, "Gnosis puffs up." But Clement explains that this is not to be understood as "swollen up," but means in fact "to entertain great and true sentiments," (Clement, Stromata, 68). To the Gnostics, including Clement, the Gnosis was the Pneumatic initiation of the holy breath or spirit.

He writes of "Christ in whom are hid all the treasures of Sophia and Gnosis" and of "the Gnosis of God's Mystery."

Col 2:3 3 In whom (the Christ) are hid all the treasures of wisdom (Gnosis) and knowledge. (KJV)

Like a Gnostic initiate Paul claims: "By revelation the Mystery was made known to me.

Eph 3:3 3 How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, (KJV)

Like a Gnostic defending the secrecy of the Inner Mysteries he asserts that he has heard "ineffable words which it is not lawful for a man to utter."

2 Cor 12:4 4 How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. (KJV)

Like a Gnostic he puts the emphasis on understanding, not on dogma, writing, "The letter kills, while the spirit gives life."

2 Cor 3:6 6 Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. (KJV)

And like a Gnostic, he describes stories in the scriptures as "allegories".

Eph 4:24 24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. (KJV)

And like a Gnostic, he writes of "events" as "symbolic."

1 Cor 10:6 6 Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. (KJV)

The evidence keeps mounting. Paul is Gnostic and is not teaching a human Christ Jesus but rather a Gnostic Christ mediator in the Spirit realm. That is why the Gnostic Marcion who gave us the First New Testament claimed that only Paul understood "the Christ" and his message correctly. Take a second and consider this: The seven authentic epistles of Paul do not teach a human Christ Jesus. That means the passages that you have read your whole life about "the Christ" and "Christ Jesus" in the Pauline epistles NEVER were meant to refer to a human being named Jesus of Nazareth!

Answer for yourself: Did you understand?

This just shows us how inept we are at interpreting the religious literature we possess and cherish. It also shows us how unprepared are our spiritual authorities, preachers, and pastors are who are given the responsibility of teaching us about God. I used be one and it was during my time in Seminary that I realized that something terribly was wrong with what I am being taught. I used to call it "swiss cheese theology" as it was full of holes. It would take me many years to plumb the depths of this religious source we call the Holy Bible and little was I prepared for what I would uncover in scholarly study. Yet I was reassured at the same time that with every lie and falsehood exposed and replaced with the original truth that I would be taking a step closer to the God of truth.

WAS PAUL A GNOSTIC? #4

APOSTLE OF THE RESURRECTION

Literalist Christians tried to quote Paul to endorse their bizarre belief that at the Second Coming the dead would actually rise from their graves in their physical bodies. (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995, p. 26). The Literalists Irenaeus and Tertullian both preached the resurrection of the flesh. They did this by a devious exegesis of 1 Corinthians 15, which nonetheless failed to overcome the problem of Paul's categorical denial of this doctrine in 1 Corinthians 15:50.

1 Cor 15:50 50 Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. (KJV)

It is clear, however, that Paul had a very different perspective. In common with the Gnostics, Paul sees the resurrection as a spiritual event. He writes categorically that "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Rarely do we stop and ponder just what this verse implies. Irenaeus was evidently frustrated about this verse and complained, "All heretics (Gnostics) always introduce this passage" (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 85). To counter the Gnostic disciples of Paul, someone in the second century wrote 3 Corinthians to cast doubt on 1 Corinthians (F.L. Cross, The Oxford Dictionary Of The Christian Church, 1958, p. 1031). This states: "As for those who tell you that there is no resurrection of the flesh, for them there will be no resurrection (3 Corinthians v 24) We see the same testimony in Ludemann, op. cit., p. 224. The triumph of the Literalists in the fourth century rendered 3 Corinthians unnecessary and the forged text was excluded from the canon.

The Gnostic sage Theodotus calls Paul "the apostle of the resurrection" (Pagels, op. cit., 5, 14). Like the Gnostics, Paul does not see the resurrection as a promised future event, but as a spiritual experience that can happen right now. He writes, "This is it: the duly appointed time! This is it : the day of salvation"

2 Cor 6:2 2 (For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.) (KJV)

Paul's message is clearly mystical and allegorical - he writes of being "raised up to heaven" and "enthroned with Jesus" not as some hoped - for afterlife reward, but as something, which he and other Christian initiates have already experienced.

Eph 2:4-7 4 But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, 5 Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) 6 And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: 7 That in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ

Jesus. (KJV)

This is the Gnostic Salvation Message. The writer is speaking about something already accomplished for mankind by God and available to them in the present time. Like the Gnostics, Paul preaches that Christ Jesus' passion is not an event in the past, but a enduring mystical reality. Through sharing in Jesus' death and resurrection each Christian initiate can themselves die to their lower self and be resurrected as the Christ or Logos (W.R. Inge, Christian Mysticism, 1899, p. 64).

Rom 6:4 4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. (KJV)

Rom 8:11 11 But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. (KJV)

Inge notes: "Paul's mystical language about death and resurrection has given rise to much controversy."

In his Letter to the Philippians Paul writes of "participating in his suffering" and "sharing in the form of his death," and so being "resurrected from the dead."

Phil 3:10-11 10 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; 11 If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. (KJV)

In his Letter to the Galatians he writes:

Gal 2:20 20 I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. (KJV)

In his Letter to the Romans he interprets Jesus' passion allegorically, writing:

Rom 6:3-7 3 Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? 4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. 5 For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: 6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. 7 For he that is dead is freed from sin. (KJV)

J. Campbell, Papers From The Eranos Yearbooks, 1955, p. 238 states: "It lies in the nature of the mystery cult that the mystae undergo the same experience as their god, that, as St. Paul says, they die with him, are buried with him, are reborn with him, and are resurrected with him."

In his Letter to the Colossians Paul describes himself as having been assigned by God the task of delivering his message "in full"; of announcing "the secret hidden for long ages and through many generations," which is now being disclosed to those chosen by God.

Answer for yourself: And what is this great secret?

Answer for yourself: Is it, as we might expect from an orthodox apostle, the "good news" that Jesus had literally come and walked the Earth, worked miracles, died for our sins, and returned from the dead? No! It is the perennial mysticism of Gnosticism and the Pagan Mysteries - that within each one of us is the one Soul of the Universe, the Logos, the Universal Daemon, the Mind of God. the Christ (T. Freke and P. Gandy, The Jesus Mysteries, 1999, p. 166-167).

Paul writes:

The secret is this: Christ in you!

Col 1:25-28 25 Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God; 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: 28 Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus: (KJV)

When Paul describes his famous vision of Jesus on the road to Damascus it is significant what Paul does not say. Let us look at the verse very closely:

Gal 1:15-16 15 But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, 16 To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: (KJV)

Notice that Paul doesn't say "God revealed his Son to me," as we would expect from a Literalist Christian. Rather, he writes, "God revealed his Son in me."

Paul's Jesus is not a historical figure, but a symbol of the Universal Daemon of whom we are all limbs. For Paul, "Christ is like a single body with its many limbs and organs, which, many as they are together make up one body."

1 Cor 12:12 12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. (KJV)

Rom 12:4 4 For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: (KJV)

In his Letter to the Ephesians he teaches:

Eph 4:25 25 Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour: for we are members one of another. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: But what do we do with a flesh and blood Jesus?

In earlier articles we made mention of the "Outer Mysteries" and the "Inner Mysteries". The Gnostics claimed that Paul taught that seeing Jesus as a flesh and blood man was only a transitory stage for beginners - the Outer Mysteries for Psychic Christians. Those Pneumatic Christians initiated into the Inner Mysteries understood the Jesus story's allegorical meaning. The Gnostics claimed that this change of perspective from a "physical" Christ Jesus to a "spiritual" Christ Jesus through initiation into the Inner Mysteries is what Paul was referring to when he wrote:

2 Cor 5:16 16 Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. (KJV)

W.R. Inge, Christian Mysticism, 1899, p. 69, states that the heretics (Gnostic Christians) claimed that the stage of worshipping the man Christ Jesus was a stage to be passed through and then left behind as one matured spiritually by ascending from the Outer Mysteries into the Inner Mysteries.

Answer for yourself: Can you find one place where Paul in his original and authentic epistles spoke of a historical Jesus? No! As stated in an earlier article it is "ONLY" in the forged Pastoral Epistles where we find Paul speaking of a supposed historical Christ Jesus.

Since Paul never claimed to have known a historical Jesus "in the flesh," it is indeed difficult to see what else he could have meant!

PSYCHIC AND PNEUMATIC TEACHINGS

Answer for yourself: So how could Paul have come to be both the hero of the "allegorical" Gnostics and the Literalists Roman Catholics?

As we saw above the Gnostics taught that the Jesus story works on two levels at once:

- Christ Jesus was taught as an introductory story for Psychic Christians initiated into the Outer Mysteries
- Christ Jesus was taught later to initiates as a mystical allegory for Pneumatic Christians initiated into the Inner Mysteries.

The irony of this is opposite of what we expect today; namely that the "literal" is the true and the "allegorical" is the untrue. Just the opposite is the case here. It is the "allegorical" Christ that is real and the "literal" Christ Jesus as a human being is the myth. There is no explicit evidence for the existence for a historical Jesus outside this one book given to us by the "literalist" Roman Church...the New Testament which they themselves produced as a refutation of the earlier Gnostic First New Testament of Marcion. Although it was understood in two completely different ways, the story remained the same. According to the Gnostics, Paul's letters were likewise designed to work on two levels. As the Gnostic sage Theodotus puts it, Paul "taught in two ways at once." (Quoted in E. Pagels, The Gnostic Christ, 1975, p. 7). Theodotus claims that Paul recognized that "each one knows the Lord in his own way: and not all know him alike." (Ibid., p. 5). So on the one hand Paul preached the savior "according to the flesh" as one "who was born and suffered." This was an a "literal" introduction to carnal believers in preparation for their spiritual transformation and resurrection as they were initiated to the Inner Mystery of "Christ in you"! This "kerygmatic gospel" of "Christ crucified" he taught to Psychic Christians "because this they were capable of knowing." But to Pneumatic Christians he proclaimed Christ "pneumatically" or "according to the spirit." Each level of initiate would take from these teachings whatever they were wise enough to be able to hear. Paul himself writes:

1 Cor 2:14-15 14 But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. 15 But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man. (KJV)

Let us re-word this verse a little:

The Psychic does not receive the things of the spirit of God; they are foolishness to him; he cannot recognize them, because they are Pneumatically discerned, but the Pneumatic discerns all things.

The Gnostics claimed that like the gospel parables, Paul's letters encoded secret teachings so that uninitiated readers would hear one thing and the initiated another. Only those who had been initiated into the secret oral teachings of the Inner Mysteries were capable of understanding Paul's deeper meaning. As Elaine Pagels writes,

The Valentinians claim that most Christians make the mistake of reading the scriptures only literally.

They themselves, through their initiation into Gnosis, learned to read Paul's letters (as they read all the scriptures) on the symbolic level, as they say Paul intended. Only this pneumatic reading yields "the truth" instead of its mere outward "image" (Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 7).

The followers of Valentinus systematically decoded the allegorical meaning of Paul's letters to show their hidden meaning. For example, in his letters to the Romans Paul uses a simple everyday situation - the relationship between Jews and Gentiles - as a parable for the relation between Psychic and Pneumatic Christians. An initiate of the Inner Mysteries would understand that where Paul writes "Jews" he means "Psychic Christians" and where he writes "Gentiles," he means "Pneumatic Christians". Paul calls himself "apostle to the Gentiles" in Romans 1:5 because he is a Pneumatic teacher of the Inner Mysteries. Yet he comes to teach Christians of all levels, both "the wise [Pneumatics] and to the foolish [Psychics]".

Rom 1:14 14 I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. (KJV)

As well as "Gentiles," the other code words used by Paul to signify "Pneumatic Christian" include "the uncircumcised," "the Greeks," "Jews inwardly," "Jews in secret," and "the true Israel." (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 7).

In a striking passage in his First Letter to the Corinthians Paul writes with disappointment of wanting to give his followers Pneumatic teachings, but finding them only to be on a "Sarkic" level of awareness (a term synonymous with "Hylic," meaning the lowest level of human awareness). So he is forced to teach his students only the most basic of Christian doctrines:

1 Cor 3:1-3 1 And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. 2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. 3 For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? (KJV)

Now let us read it again with a few choice words:

And I, brothers, was not able to speak to you as to Pneumatics, but as to Sarkics, as to those uninitiated in Christ. I fed you milk, not meat, for you were not yet able to take it. Nor are you now - you are still Sarkic. For where there is strife and envy among you, are you not Sarkic. (E. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 59).

Likewise in his Letter to the Hebrews 5:11-14, Paul is impatient that his followers are still not ready to move on from elementary teachings. He writes:

Heb 5:11-14 11 Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing. 12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. 13 For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. 14 But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. (KJV) (E. Pagels, op. cit., 148-9).

Paul is impatient that his followers are still not ready to move on from elementary teachings. In his Letter to the Hebrews he writes:

Heb 6:1-6 1 Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, 2 Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. 3 And this will we do, if God permit. 4 For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, 5 And have tasted the good word [LOGOS/CHRIST] of God, and the powers of the world to come, 6 If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance...(KJV)

The "elementary doctrine," which Paul wants his disciples to leave behind, as a Gnostic would expect, includes repentance, faith, baptism, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.

Answer for yourself: What do all of these have in common? All of these involve rituals and dogmas so precious to the Literalist Church but which Gnostics did not esteem. To the Gnostics these were only the Psychic Outer Mysteries of Christianity. Paul wants his disciples, having tasted the holy breath of Pneumatic initiation, to progress to the Pneumatic level of understanding completely and leave behind such Psychic concerns.

PAUL AND JEHOVAH AND THE TORAH/LAW

Like the Gnostics, Paul teaches that the Mysteries of Jesus supersede the Law of the Jewish god Jehovah.

In Galatians 3:2-3 Paul asks:

Gal 3:2-3 2 This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? 3 Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? (KJV)

Paul's Gnostic Christ Jesus has given Jews a New Covenant or agreement with God and Paul does not hide his low opinion of the redundant old agreement that is traditional Judaism!" He writes:

Phil 3:5-6 5 Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; 6 Concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless. (KJV)

Paul gives a full account of his justification according to Jewish Law- - circumcised on the eighth day, Israelite by race, of the tribe of Benjamin, and a zealous Pharisee - "by the law's standard righteous without fault." Startlingly, he says in verse 8 that he counts all this as "so much rubbish."

Heb 8:13 13 In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away. (KJV)

Like the Gnostics, Paul does not preach moral servitude to the Law, but spiritual freedom through Gnosis. He declares:

2 Cor 3:17 17 Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. (KJV)

For Paul, "Nothing is unclean in itself" (Rom. 14:1-15). Later Gnostics, such as Carpocrates, quote Paul to defend their own doctrines of natural morality against those who accused them of immorality. After all, it was Paul, not some "loony" Gnostic heretic, who had famously proclaimed: "All things are authorized for me!"

1 Cor 6:12 12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. (KJV)

Paul even goes so far as to declare Jehovah's traditionally sacred Law, the very basis of the Jewish religion, to be a curse, writing, "All who depend upon works of the Law are under a curse" (Gal. 3:6-11) and "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the Law" (Gal. 3:13-14). For Paul, as for the Gnostics, through sharing in Christ's suffering and resurrection the Christian initiate can be redeemed from the Law and set free: "Now, having died, we are out of the purview of the Law that kept us down" (Rom. 7:6).

Rom 7:6 6 But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter. (KJV)

Paul claims the Law is the product of the "mediator."

Answer for yourself: What does he mean by calling Jehovah, supposedly the one God and creator of all, a "mediator?" A mediator between what and what?

Literalists have no answer, but Gnostics immediately recognize that Paul is teaching the Gnostic doctrine that Jehovah is the "demiurge," a lesser god who mediates between the ineffable supreme God and creation. Paul certainly does not regard Jehovah as the true God, for he continues: "The mediator is not one; God is one" (E. Pagels,The Gnostic Paul, 1975, p. 107-108).

Gal 3:19-20 19 Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. 20 Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is one. (KJV)

According to Paul, people who do not understand the gospel he is preaching have had their "unbelieving minds blinded by the god of this passing age".

2 Cor 4:4 4 In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. (KJV)

In many translations of his letters, the editor adds a helpful little note here to explain the mysterious phrase "the god of this passing age." The general orthodox gloss on this line is that Paul is referring to the Devil, but why he should refer to a wicked angel as a "god" is left unexplained! To the Gnostics it was obvious what Paul meant. He was referring to Jehovah, the lesser god of the Jews, whose years of ruling the Jewish people were coming to an end and who was to be abandoned in favor of the true ineffable God of Jesus and Plato.

CIRCUMCISION

The anti-Gnostic letters of Paul have been found to be forgeries, but his authentic letters do oppose others within the early Christian Church who preach "another Jesus."

2 Cor 11:4 4 For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him. (KJV)

These are not Gnostic heretics, however, but pro-Jewish Christians who believe that the Church should maintain the old Jewish custom of circumcision and honor the Law of Jehovah.

Paul attacks them with passion. In his Letter to the Philippians he warns:

Phil 3:2 2 Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision. (KJV)

In his Letter to the Galatians he proclaims:

Gal 5:2 2 Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. (KJV)

Paul goes on to say:

Gal 5:12 12 I would they were even cut off which trouble you. (KJV)

It is not such outer Psychic observances of religious rituals, but inner Pneumatic qualities, which mark the Mysteries Paul is preaching. He claims:

Phil 3:3 3 For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. (KJV)

Let us again reword this with different words:

We are the circumcised, we whose worship is Pneumatic (spiritual), whose pride is in Jesus Christ, and who put no confidence in anything external.

Paul's teachings here are completely in line with those of the Gnostic Jesus. In The Gospel of Thomas, for example, when the disciples ask Jesus about the benefits of circumcision, he explains:

If it were beneficial, their father would beget them already circumcised from their mother. Rather the true circumcision in spirit has become completely profitable (quoted in J.M. Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library, 1978, p. 132, sayubg 53).

What characterizes Paul's rival Christians is not their Gnosticism as opposed to Paul's Literalism, or their Literalism as opposed to Paul's Gnosticism. This is not the issue at all. Their disagreement is over the relationship between Christians and old Jewish traditions, and whether Christianity should be open to non-Jews, and if so in what way. The battles in the Church of Paul's time were not between Literalists and Gnostics, but between Christians with different views on the relationship between Christianity and Judaism.

Paul's letters suggest that these more traditional Jewish-Christians live in Jerusalem. They have traditionally been taken to be Peter and others of Jesus' disciples who are mentioned in the New Testament. As we have already shown, this is actually an interpretation of the evidence based on unjustified preconceptions. Let us remember that the Book of Acts as Scholars attest today was a late second century document that appeared after Irenaeus in 180 C.E. Let us not forget who has control of writing these documents at this time; namely anti-Gnostic literalists. Having said that then understand that there is absolutely no evidence to support the idea that there ever existed a Jerusalem Church of the apostles as envisaged by traditional Roman Christianity. In fact, quite the opposite is true. (S.G.F. Brandon, Religion In Ancient History, 1969, p. 268). Indeed, when in 160 C.E. Bishop Melito of Sardis went to Judea to discover what had become of the legendary Jerusalem Church, to his dismay he found not the descendants of the apostles, but instead a small group of Gnostics! (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995), p. 31). Apparently this group of apostates was all that was left of the Jerusalem Church that God had so carefully preserved from destruction in 70 CE. Irenaeus leaves us in no doubt that the Ebionites were Gnostics (G. Ludemann, Heretics, 1995, p. 247, note 111). Epiphanius tells us that the Ebionites were vegetarians (W. Barnstone, The Other Bible, 1984, p. 203). This was a practice almost universally associated with Pythagoreanism in the ancient world. These Christians, who called themselves the Ebionites or "Poor Men," had their own Gospel of the Ebionites and also a Gospel of the Hebrews, Gospel of the Twelve Apostles, and a Gospel of the Nazarenes" (G.R.S. Mead, Fragments of a Faith Forgotten, 1906, p. 129). All of these gospels differed significantly from the gospels of the New Testament. It should be remembered that these Nazarenes knew nothing of the Nazareth legend, which was subsequently developed by the "in order that it might be fulfilled" school of historicizers (Ibid., 128-9). This form of Jewish-Christian Gnosticism managed to survive for many hundreds of years (Ibid., p. 126). The Nazarenes were still found scattered throughout Syria and the Decapolis in the late fourth century.

The Literalist propagandist Eusebius explains the fact that the Jerusalem Church had turned out to be made up of Gnostics by claiming that they had obviously all "apostated" from their original Literalism and become heretics - but he does not explain why or how this might have happened! Actually the evidence suggests that the Jerusalem Christians had always been Gnostics, because in the first century the Christian community was made up entirely of different types of Gnosticism!

CONCLUSION

Answer for yourself: So was Paul a Gnostic? Let's review a little of what we have discovered:

- The Gnostics claimed that their spiritual lineage stemmed from Paul and that they were privy to secret oral teachings taught by Paul to select disciples.
- Gnostics had many gospels which they attributed to Paul, their "Great Apostle."
- Many Gnostic groups claimed Paul as their founding father.
- By the middle of the second century the communities to which Paul had written his letters are known to have been centers of Marcionite Gnosticism.
- Paul's anti-Gnostic Pastoral letters are fakes, forged in the late second century. In the genuine letters Paul is not anti-Gnostic and never mentions a historical Jesus.
- Literalist Christians of the early second century attack Paul, who they claim "contradicts" the true teaching and is the "adversary" of Jesus.
- Paul was born in Tarsus, a major center for the Pagan Mysteries, and often uses terms from the Mysteries in his letters. He even calls himself a "Steward of the Mysteries of God," the term for a priest in the Pagan Mysteries of Serapis. Paul quotes Pagan sages and teaches Pagan doctrines.
- When properly translated, Paul's letters reveal a powerful Gnostic content. Paul regularly uses Gnostic terms. He is a teacher of a Pneumatic initiation. He journeyed mystically to the third heaven. He teaches that Jesus came only in the "likeness" of flesh. He is disparaging of external religion. He describes the scriptures as "allegories" and "symbolic." He rejects the Law of Jehovah, who he calls "the mediator" and "the god of this passing age."
- While the Literalists saw the resurrection as the promise that they would rise from their graves and experience bodily immortality after the Second Coming, Paul teaches the Gnostic doctrine that the resurrection is a mystical experience that can be had here and now.
- The great secret that Paul claims to be able to reveal is not that Jesus literally walked the Earth, but the mystical revelation of "Christ in you."
- The Gnostics claimed that, like the gospels, Paul's letters encoded secret teachings. Paul taught in "two ways at once": the Outer Mysteries to Psychic initiates and the Inner Mysteries to Pneumatic initiates. Paul's letters can be understood in different ways because they were designed to speak on different levels simultaneously.
- Paul is frustrated with his disciples because they are not ready to abandon "elementary" Christianity and move on to the deeper level. It is time to grow up our Souls!

All of the evidence strongly suggests that Paul was indeed a Gnostic just as the Gnostics themselves had claimed all along (see T. Freke and P. Gandy's book: Jesus and the Lost Goddess). Yet, upon reflection we felt that to call Paul a Gnostic was, in a sense, misleading. The more one looks at the evidence the more it seemed that to apply the terms "Gnostic" and "Literalist" to the Christianity of the first century was actually meaningless. From Paul's letters it is clear that the Christian community of this period was deeply divided, yet this schism was not between Gnostics and Literalists, as was the case by the end of the second century. Paul is neither anti-Gnostic nor pro-Gnostic, because in his day the great schism between Gnostics and Literalists had yet to occur.

At the time of Paul, the strands of thought that would become Gnosticism and Literalism were harmoniously co-existing as the Inner and Outer teachings of the Jesus Mysteries. The theological battle that Paul is engaged in is between those initiates of the Jesus Mysteries who want to maintain a traditional and distinctively Jewish identity and those, like himself, who wish to make their new Mysteries completely "modern" and cosmopolitan.

Paul has all the characteristics we would expect to find in an initiator of the Jesus Mysteries. When something is true then "everything" starts to fall into place. We see that repeatedly in these articles. The picture presented of the origins of Christianity explains the evidence, is internally consistent and beautifully simple once you understand Gnosticism and can differentiate between what writings are authentically Pauline and which ones were later anti-Gnostic forgeries in Paul's name.

Now...you should not doubt as to the truth about the authentic Paul being a Gnostic and not a "literalist" as he is made out to be by Irenaeus and other proto-Catholic "literalist" which take the Gnostic New Testament and corrupt it beyond belief and later present the world with a book full of "lies" that render us who learn to cherish such false concepts idolators.

HIDDEN TEACHINGS OF THE GNOSTIC CHRISTIANS CONCERNING THE SOUL #1

I have said it before and it bears repeating; namely, "Archeology is your friend". We owe so much of our true knowledge of Christianity and our religious past today because of the efforts of these dedicated scientists that gave their lives and energy that the world might profit from the truth of its ancient past. Having said that let me introduce the reader to the Nag Hammadi library which is a collection of early Christian Gnostic texts discovered in the town of Nag Hammadi in 1945. That year, thirteen leather-bound papyrus codices buried in a sealed jar were found by local peasants. These codices have been collected and examined and undergone intense scrutiny by archeologist and theologians alike. The writings in these codices comprised 52 mostly Gnostic tractates (treatises), but they also include three works belonging to the Corpus Hermeticum and a partial translation of Plato's Republic. The codices are believed to be a library hidden by monks from the nearby monastery of St Pachomius when the possession of such banned writings denounced as heresy was made an offense. The zeal of Athanasius in extirpating non-canonical writings and the Theodosian decrees of the 390s may have motivated the hiding of such dangerous literature.

The contents of the codices were written in Coptic, though the works were probably all translations from Greek. Most famous of these works must be the Gospel of Thomas, of which the Nag Hammadi codices contain the only complete copy. After the discovery it was recognized that fragments of these sayings of Jesus appeared in manuscripts that had been discovered at Oxyrhynchus in 1898, and quotations were recognized in other early Christian sources. The 1st or 2nd century date of the lost Greek originals behind the Coptic translations is controverted, but the manuscripts themselves are from the 3rd and 4th centuries.

Along with the Dead Sea Scrolls the Nag Hammadi Library discovery has had earth-shaking repercussions regarding the traditional understanding of Christianity as taught by the Christian Church today. If the spectacular discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls enabled historians to completely rethink the religious context out of which the earliest Christian traditions emerged, these same historians were doubly enriched when the Nag Hammadi collection finally came to light. And although the Dead Sea Scrolls reveal a surprising variety in early Jewish piety, the Nag Hammadi writings illustrate an even greater diversity in the religious speculation and communal piety of early Christian groups.

Unfortunately, we know nothing of the history of the group who gathered together this particular collection of writings. We know only what we have been able to learn from the writings themselves. The twelve original codices each contained a number of shorter compositions or tractates, fifty-two in all. They are Coptic copies of writings that were originally composed in Greek. Coptic is a version of the ancient Egyptian language adapted to the Greek alphabet that was in use in Egypt during the early Christian period. These writings cover a wide variety of subjects, and they seem to have been composed originally by a number of different authors, at different times, and in a variety of locations.

The collection, now known as the Nag Hammadi Library, is of great importance for the understanding of the development of early Christian communities because it presents the social and religious perspectives of groups of Christians who did not prevail in the battles that eventually resulted in the formation of a single, unified church. Their differences with more orthodox Christians covered a wide range of issues, including whether the death of this Jesus on a cross was "real" or but an "allegory", and whether women were among the true disciples of this "Jewish Christ" and, therefore, had the authority to teach and to baptize. As you can see the whole "Jesus Story" is revealed under these writings in a completely different light.

Before the emergence of the Nag Hammadi texts, the views expressed in such early Christian writings as the Gospel of Mary, the Apocryphon (secret teaching) of John, and the Dialogue of the Savior were known only from the distorted descriptions found in the writings of their opponents. Since these opponents were famous church leaders such as Irenaeus, Hippolytus, and Tertullian, it is not surprising that their writings were not preserved by the church. Because of the discovery of the Nag Hammadi Library, modern Christians have a much more complete picture of their Spiritual family tree as well as the "beliefs" of these earliest "Christians" before the rise of Roman Orthodoxy.

The common thread that unites the disparate writings of the Nag Hammadi collection is an emphasis on secret, saving knowledge (gnosis), as well as an other worldly estrangement from human society in general and a desire to withdraw from the corruption of the material world. But not only that they focus on many "secret teachings" concerning "the Soul" of man.

Because early Christianity was so different than Christianity as it is practiced today, many scholars have said that the entire teachings of Jesus had more in common with Buddhism than it does with Christianity as it is practiced today. This is because the early Christian writings discovered in 1945 and the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls in 1947 has given scholars a better picture of the early Christians. They were Jews who did not renounce their Jewish religion. They were believers in reincarnation and taught a special form of "resurrection" that had to do with becoming Spiritually "born again." They believed that Jesus was a very, very special man but not God. They believed that Jesus would return within their generation. As you will see, the evidence also shows that the early Christians were much more believers in mysticism than probably most people are aware of today.

Answer for yourself: What is meant by mysticism? Mysticism is best explained as an immediate consciousness of the transcendent or ultimate reality or God and is closely associated with a belief in the existence of realities beyond perceptual or intellectual apprehension that are central to being and directly accessible by subjective experience. Simply said it is a "religion" based on mystical communion with an ultimate reality whom we define as "One" or "God" or "Godhead".

The impact of the discovery of these Nag Hammadi documents discovered in December, 1945, which have today been defined as the earliest Christian writings which contained these many secrets of the early Christian religion as found in upper Egypt, have challenged the later traditional interpretations of "the Christ" as taught by the Roman Church for the last 1,700 years. These documents were again located in an area where many Jewish followers of "the Christ/Messiah" fled during the Roman invasion of Jerusalem. Undisturbed since their concealment almost two thousand years ago, these manuscripts of Christian mysticism rank in importance with the Dead Sea Scrolls. Most astounding is that these writings affirm the existence of the doctrine of reincarnation being taught among the early Jews and Christians. These Christian mystics, referred to as Christian Gnostics, were ultimately destroyed by the orthodox Church for being in their mind "heretics". Their sacred writings were destroyed and hidden with the belief that they would be revealed at an appropriate time in the future. The discovery in 1945 yielded writings that included some long lost gospels, some of which were written earlier than the known gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John.

Now I want you to read a quote by Brian A. Bain, M.A., dealing with these Gnostic writings discovered in 1945: "Long considered to be heretical, ancient Gnostic Christian texts unearthed this century display compelling similarities between Gnostic conceptions of life and death and modern near-death experiences. The Gnostic texts devoted extensive tracts to what readers could expect to encounter when they died. Other passages make numerous allusions to near-death-like experiences that can be realized in this life, most notably the human encounter with a divine light. The Gnostic Christian literature gives us one more example of near death experiences and similar experiences in the ancient world." Wow!

Another interesting fact comes from Edgar Cayce who is known today as one of America's greatest psychics and who himself experienced a "near-death experience". He is quoted as saying that "Gnosticism is the highest form of Christianity".

The Christian Gnostics were regarded by some as a new Jewish sect who believed they had finally found the long-awaited Messiah and not a new religion. Some of the apostles became Gnostic and because of this, Christianity could well have grown up as a Gnostic religion had it not been for their eventual persecution by the organized Church centuries later. St. Augustine is the father of Western Christianity, both Catholic and Protestant since he was directly connected to Martin Luther and John Calvin. He would give Western Christianity its theological excuse for murder and genocide against heretics such as the Gnostics, Arians, Donatists, etc. Oddly, his theology originates with the Gnostics (Manichaeans). How sadly ironic.

Important for us to know and recognize now is that Gnostics believe that they have secret knowledge about God, the Soul, humanity and the rest of the universe of which the general population was unaware. Gnosticism became one of the three main belief systems within 1st century Christianity, and was noted for three factors which differed from the two other branches of Christianity:

- Their belief about God and His emanations, the Bible and the world which differed from those of other Christian groups.
- Tolerance of different religious beliefs within and outside of Gnosticism.
- Lack of discrimination against women.
- A belief that salvation is achieved through relational and experiential knowledge. In the words of The Gnostic Apostolic Church, humanity needs to be awakened and brought "to a realization of his true nature. Mankind is moving towards the Omega Point, the Great day when all must graduate or fall. This day is also the Day of Judgment in that only those who have entered the Path of Transfiguration and are being reborn can return to the Treasury of Light.

Scholars trace the core of Gnostic religious beliefs about God and the Metaphysical realm back through Jewish mysticism and Hellenistic mystery cults and Iranian religious dualism of Zoroastrianism all the way back past Babylonian to Egyptian religion and their knowledge of this Creator God.

Answer for yourself: What should that teach us? Namely, that since the beginning of recorded records that have been uncovered by archeology today and that are made available to us we find that mankind's awareness and knowledge of God as shared by these Ancients has a "core religious belief system" that remained intact down through thousands and thousands of years in which it changed little if any. Sure, the "names" for God changed and there are differences but one can detect that the core religious beliefs among nations remained basically the same. It appears to an illuminated study of comparative religion that there is a "thread of truth" from the beginning of the creation of mankind down through the histories of succeeding nations that was cherished and held to be sacred concerning this Divine Realm and its intersection with the physical plane of matter and man's existence. The definition of gnosis or "knowledge" as concerned with the Eternal and His embodiment in matter and "flesh" appears to have been with mankind since the beginning of the species and this knowledge can be traced and found in the rise and fall of nation after nation down through the corridors of history. In fact if we begin with Egypt and look down through history we find this "common thread" passing through nation after nation until the rise of Rome when all is then "reinterpreted" and given other meanings different from those held sacred before.

At the core of gnosticism is "a specific Spiritual experience, grounded in vision and union, that does not lend itself to the language of theology and philosophy, but instead has a close affinity to and expresses itself through myth. In this context, the term "myth" does not mean stories that are not true, but rather, stories that embody truths of a different order than the dogmas of theology or the theories of philosophy" (Hoeller, Stephan A., Gnosticism New Light on the Ancient Tradition of Inner Knowing, Quest Books, Theosophical Publishing House, Wheaton Ill. 2002 p. 13. Thus, Hindu myths regarding Brahma or Krishna, secular gnostic myths that speak of the goddess "Sophia" or "Ennoia" (variously translated "wisdom" or "thought" who leaves the upper realm to our lower realm, giving birth to an "abortion" the "Demiurge" or ruler of this world (Wand, J.W.C., A History of the Early Church to A.D. 500, Routledge, Great Britain, 1996, p. 43-52) and Christian myths based on reinterpretations of the Creation or Resurrection stories that cast Eve as wise and good, as well as the death and resurrection of Jesus and him not actually suffering at his death on this cross, can comfortably coexist in the family of gnosticism, as all these myths "embody truth" as seen through the "authority" of personal Spiritual experience.

We can never know for sure, but we'll just have to sit in amazement as we reflect upon the Church of Rome's centuries of persecution and extermination of heretics, massive and efficient book-burning campaigns and an active attempt to rewrite history. This should make us want to know why these Gnostic peoples and their writings were systematically destroyed over the earliest centuries of the rise of the Roman Orthodox Church. We must be fully aware that much of what we are taught today that comes from the formation early Orthodox Roman Christian doctrine was formulated in reaction to these Gnostics and their knowledge of God as handed down by mankind since its creation. So what is the truth? That is why we have to study to find out when and where the "train jumped the tracks" so to speak if we ever hope to restore the truth to our lives today.

Answer for yourself: How much truth have we lost concerning God and the Soul that was held sacred by these Ancients and these Gnostics? Let us find out shall we?

Let us continue in the second article in this series.

HIDDEN TEACHINGS OF THE GNOSTIC CHRISTIANS CONCERNING THE SOUL #2

Any Christian who has paid attention to the readings of the gospels in church will realize that there are significant differences in their perspective on the nature of Jesus. A close reading of the four canonical gospels will reveal strikingly divergent portraits. For example, throughout John's gospel Jesus is declared to be a transcendent and divine being, perhaps most recognizably in 3:16, a verse favored by fervent fundamentalists everywhere: "God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, so that everyone who believes in him might not perish but might have eternal life." In contrast, one of the most noticeable themes in the gospel of Mark is that of Jesus being a "hidden Messiah," a more human figure who speaks in riddles and only teaches to his disciples. It is not surprising, then, that the discovery of a set of Gnostic documents dating back to the first and second centuries that contained a radically different view of Jesus would arouse intense interest and add further fuel to the theological debate about who Jesus truly was.

Elaine Pagels, the Harrington Spear Paine professor of religion at Princeton University, delves into this controversy in her presentation entitled "Jesus and His Message in the Gnostic Gospels" that is based on her national award-winning book. The 45 minute lecture and 25 minute discussion period, recorded on audio and videotape at Bowdoin College in May of 1996 by Roger Leisner of Radio Free Maine, offers an excellent introduction to the topic that will challenge anyone's certain conclusions about Jesus.

The scriptures that have revolutionized our understanding of the origin of Christianity were unearthed accidentally in 1945 by a peasant digging for fertilizer at a place in the Egyptian desert called Nag Hammadi. The find consisted of 52 separate text written in Coptic, an ancient language translated from the Greek, some of which may have been composed a generation before the first gospel was authored in AD 70. The tract which had come to be known as the gospel of Thomas contains many sayings which parallel similar words attributed to Jesus in the gospels of Matthew and Luke, suggesting it may have been a source held in common by both of the later authors. However, there are also many unique and startling verses, like Thomas 108: "Whoever drinks from my mouth will become as I am, and I will become that person, and the hidden things will be revealed to him."

Answer for yourself: Could this be the teaching of the "Jewish Christ" whom we call Jesus today and could this be a secret teaching from "the Christ" of God that we have never heard or have explained to us yet today?

Answer for yourself: Are there "secret teachings" of Jesus and this "Jewish Christ" that exist today? Are they relevant and should we be as Christians and followers of "the Christ" aware of them? Will they impact our lives?

In order to consider this, Pagels and other modern scholars today take us back to the period just after the time allotted for this supposed death of a man named Jesus, a time when Christianity was "diverse in views and practices and full of competing value systems." Among the myriad of the followers of "the Christ/Messiah" in Israel were the Gnostics, a group so-called because they believed one could seek after God and find secret knowledge or wisdom by studying oneself (the Greek word gnosis literally means "those who know"). The Gnostics' appraisal of Christ's teachings was a stance we have come to associate today with the religions of the East, which are permeated by similar drive after personal enlightenment.

The Gnostics believed that by investigating the source of sorrow, joy, love and hate, one could cultivate insight and discover God as the fountainhead of all of these states of being. The significance of Jesus is interpreted to be that of a model, one whose instruction to come and know oneself as he did will transform human beings into sons (and daughters) of God like him. Consistent with the scholarly consensus that Jesus' purpose was not to found a new religion centering its devotion upon him, the Gospel of Philip, a companion text to the gospel of Thomas, urges followers not to become Christians, but rather new Christs.

Pagels juxtaposes texts from the Gnostic and the canonical gospels to highlight the contrasts between them. Was Jesus the unique Son of God (as in John 10:9: "I am the door. Whoever enters through me will be saved"), or was he not the source of all truth, but merely a guide to help us on our own way (as in the Gnostic Teaching of Sylvanus: "Knock upon yourself as a door...and you cannot get lost")? The two bodies of Scripture also hold rival accounts of the characteristics of the kingdom of God. The kingdom that Jesus proclaims in Mark 13 is due to arrive in the near future with a world-shattering cataclysm that will be recognized ahead of time by forbidding natural signs and social upheaval. In the gospel of Thomas, however, the good news of the kingdom of God is portrayed to be existing both outside and inside of people at a deep level that breaks free when our consciousness is transformed by the knowledge that we are all children of the living God.

What is interesting about the Gnostic gospels is that they do not deny what is said about Jesus in other gospels, but rather testify that they contain secret teachings of Jesus as the Jewish Christ that their authors believed needed to be preserved. Irenaeus, the Bishop of Lyon in France, was one of many Church officials who denounced this literature circulating Europe and defended the four gospels that the Church had selected to be in the canon as the only authentic gospels--because "there are four principle winds, four pillars that hold up the sky, and four corners of the universe; therefore, it is only right that there be four gospels."

Pagels and others give a more rational explanation for why the Church deemed the Gnostic gospels to be dangerous and banned them. The coexistence of this Gnostic Theology alongside other views of Jesus' divinity was a direct challenge to the consolidating power structure of the Church. She elucidates that "As the creed, the hierarchy, and other components of the institution began to be set into place, there was a demand by the power-holders for organization and unity in thinking." The orthodox position that developed was aimed at preserving the cohesiveness of the early Christian movement in order that it might survive the state persecution of the Roman Empire. The Gnostic understanding of Jesus rendered the Church's existence unnecessary; one did not have to go through Jesus and the Church, but could approach God on one's own. The popes of later eras formulated Church dogma as extra ecclesia nulla salus ("outside the Church there is no salvation"). Irenaeus said elsewhere about the Gnostics, "Whatever good they are trying to do cannot repair the harm they are doing in cutting up the glorious body of Christ."

Indeed, the suppression of the Gnostic gospels fits the pattern of rational patriarchy that has marked the Church throughout the centuries. Unlike the dominant imagery of God (The Father) in the institutional Church, the Gnostic gospels recognize a feminine influence in God as Jesus' origin, and also affirm Jesus' upending of Jewish tradition by including women in his ministry. In addition, it seems clear that the Gnostics had some contact with Buddhism in the formation of their ideas. The Church's rigid demand for participation in sacraments and other externally focused actions has severely cropped the inner religious experience, precipitating many Christians to go outside the Church and add meditation practices to fill the void in their Spiritual lives. The forced exclusion of these Gnostic elements have kept hidden from Christians many aspects of their faith--until now.

Pagels' clear and succinct talk leads non-scholars and students alike through illustrations from history and the texts to impart a deeper knowledge of the currents swirling around the figure of Jesus and the formation of the Church's orthodox doctrine of Christ that still persists today.

Answer for yourself: What did these earliest Gnostic Christians believe about this Jesus and "the Christ" and how did Rome later change all of this? What were these "secret teachings" of Jesus and "the Christ" as handed down since antiquity that Rome did not want us to know?

An important Christian Gnostic teaching was the "Logos" which in Greek is translated as "the image of the Word." It is an important concept found in the gospel of John 1:1: "In the beginning was the Word (Logos), and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." It is important for us to understand that the Logos is the part of God that acts in the physical world. It is the perfect unity of the human and the divine. This is affirmed by John when he wrote that "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." When John stated that Jesus is the Logos, he is stating that Jesus, likened to a man, became the Logos, the Christ. This portrayal of "the Christ" as a man named "Jesus" is our example that we, as men and women, can become Christs as well and like this example of "Jesus" we can experience God's salvation (the name Jesus means "God saves"). These Gnostics understood what the Ancients of Egypt knew in the beginning of time, namely, that this Logos is the divine "spark" of God within humans (matter) that needs to awakened in every man and woman in order for them to know their Godly origins and their purpose in existence as Souls on a journey and mission in this physical realm. Everyone has the "image of the Word (Logos)" within them and it is for this reason that Genesis describes humanity as created "in the image and likeness of God." The Logos is the divine Spirit in humanity. Now what I say next is very important and will be one of the major causes of Rome's destruction of the Gnostics and their teachings. By using the Christian Gnostic idea of the Logos, John is not only affirming the preexistence and divinity of God's Christ before becoming our example of incarnation, but he is affirming that all sons of God created in the "image of the Word" as Jesus our example, preexisted in the Spirit realm with God as Souls before being born in earthly bodies. In other words, every human is an incarnation of the Logos in flesh (as is our Jesus example) and every human has to potential of becoming like Jesus (living a Jesus-like life); thus realizing in their own lives that they too can become a manifestation of the human-divine unity. Every human can be a "Christ" and because of this, every Soul will eventually be drawn back to God. This is the goal for our Souls in their pilgrimage to this realm of existence. The Roman Church misunderstanding what the Logos was in John incorrectly concluded from received traditions hundreds of years old that this Jesus was a literal human being and ONLY he was "divine" and "the Christ" as the "Word made flesh". This was not the teaching of the Gnostics who never taught a "literal-historical" Jesus as the Christ. The orthodox Church either rejected or ignored this Christian Gnostic concept found in John. This may have been a factor when the gospel of John was almost rejected from New Testament canon when it was being put together. This was during a time when Christian Gnosticism became an enemy of the organized Church. Nevertheless, it was the idea of the preexistence of the Soul and the Christ and their corresponding doctrine of incarnation and reincarnation that the Roman Church had great difficulty with.

The Christian Gnostics emphasized Spiritual knowledge rather blind faith as the road to salvation. They indicated that they possessed secret knowledge (i.e., "gnosis" in Greek) concerning the hidden meaning of the "resurrection." Understand that Gnostics understood that Christ's resurrection is to be understood symbolically as the goal for all men and woman in a Spiritual sense and never interpreted literally as we have been taught since the rise of Rome. This was a part of the Gnostic's "secret teachings" of "the Christ" told through the medium and example of this Jesus which was handed down to them by the Jewish apostles of "the Christ". This special knowledge was restricted to people who were given the public teachings of Christianity before qualifying to be initiated and receive the secret teachings. In contrast, the very term "Catholic" means "universal", implying that anyone could become a member of the Church by adhering to the public teachings of faith and rituals. The Christian Gnostics were harsh critics of the orthodox Church. The Christian Gnostics accused the Church of watering down the gospel in order to popularize it for the masses. The orthodox Church stressed salvation through faith alone and by the rituals of the Church.

This secret gnosis emphasized Spiritual "resurrection" (i.e,. Spiritual rebirth..."born again") and physical "resurrection" which is entirely different from what we are taught today. This "physical resurrection" of these earliest Gnostic Christians was a belief in "reincarnation" as opposed to a resurrection defined as people sleeping in their graves until it is time their corpses to crawl out of their graves at the last day. This is what we have not been taught since the rise of Roman Orthodoxy. These earliest Jewish-Christian Gnostics held the view that if Spiritual resurrection was not attained in one lifetime, then the Soul would be subjected to as many reincarnations as it takes until Spiritual rebirth is attained. One of the great Church leaders was Clement of Alexandria in Egypt (150-211 A.D.) who indicated that he possessed the secret teaching handed down from the apostles.

In the Gnostic text entitled The Secret Gospel of Mark, one of the Christian Gnostic texts discovered in 1945 in Nag Hammadi, describes Jesus performing secret initiation rituals. Before the discovery of this secret gospel, our only knowledge of it came from a letter written by Clement. Clement, one of our earliest Church Fathers, quotes from this secret gospel and refers to it as, "a more Spiritual gospel for the use of those who were being perfected." He also states, "It even yet is most carefully guarded [by the church at Alexandria], being read only to those who are being initiated into the great mysteries." Clement mentions elsewhere that Jesus revealed a secret teaching to those who were "capable of receiving it and being molded by it" He also affirmed that, "The gnosis (secret knowledge) itself is that which has descended by transmission to a few, having been imparted unwritten by the apostles" (Miscell. Book VI, Chapter 7).

This is just part of what we were never taught since the rise of the Roman Orthodox Church and their centuries of extermination of these earliest Gnostic Christians and their writings and teachings. The efforts of the Roman Church to destroy every trace of what they considered "heretical blasphemy" proved so successful that, until the discoveries at Nag Hammadi only 50 years ago, nearly all our information concerning alternative forms of early Christianity came from the massive orthodox attacks upon them and these are almost always "negative" and we now know by examining these archeological discoveries that they are just more Roman lies upon lies. Think with me for a second. When we examine why Rome desired a belief in bodily resurrection of the dead from their graves we find political motives behind such a belief. Such a religious doctrine of bodily resurrection serves an essential political function: it legitimizes the authority of certain men (in this case Roman Church authorities) who claim to exercise exclusive leadership over the churches as the successors of the apostle Peter. From the second century, the doctrine has served to validate the apostolic succession of bishops, the basis of papal authority to this day. The Church Fathers, who were links in that chain of succession, regularly appealed to apostolic succession as a test for whether Catholics or heretics had correct doctrine. Clearly, something other than Scripture had to be used as an ultimate test of "correct" doctrine in these cases. As we come to see then it was these Gnostic Christians who interpret resurrection in other ways which had a lesser claim to authority: when they claimed priority over the orthodox, they are denounced as heretics by those of the Roman church who are the real "heretics". Such irony!

Time for a little Egyptian religion and the truth as it existed for thousands and thousands of years. The ancient Egyptians conceived man and cosmos to be dual: firstly, the High God or Divine Mind arose out of the Primeval Waters of space at the beginning of manifestation. Space, symbolized by the Primeval Waters, contains the seeds and possibilities of all living things in their quiescent state. At the right moment for awakenment, all will take up forms in accordance with inherent qualities. Or to express it in another way: the Word uttered by the Divine Mind calls manifested life to begin once more. Secondly, the material aspect expressing what is in the Divine Mind must be in a process of ever-becoming. In other words, the cosmos consists of body and Soul. Man emanated in the image of divinity is similarly dual and his evolutionary goal is a fully conscious return to the Divine Mind.

The Ancients taught in unison that growth is effected through a succession of lives which is a concept that is found in Ancient religious texts after texts and implied in symbolism in much of the Ancient wisdom we find from nation to nation. Herodotus, the Greek historian of the 5th century B.C.E., wrote that "the Egyptians were the first to teach that the human Soul is immortal, and at death the body enters into some other living think then coming to birth and after passing through all creatures of land, sea, and air (which cycle it completes in three thousand years) it enters once more into a human body, at birth". The theory of reincarnation is often ascribed to Pythagoras, since he spent some time in Egypt studying its philosophy and, according to Herodotus (bk. ii, § 123), "adopted this opinion as if it were his own." Dr. Margaret A. Murray, who worked with Professor Flinders Petrie, illustrates the Egyptian belief by referring to the ka-names of three kings (the ka-name relates to the vital essence of an individual); the first two of the twelfth dynasty: that of Amonemhat I means "He who repeats births," Senusert I: "He whose births live," and the ka-name of Setekhy I of the 19th Dynasty was "Repeater of births" (The Slendour That Was Egypt, 1949, p. 211).

Reincarnation has been connected with the rites of Osiris, one of the Mysteries or cycles of initiation perpetuated in Egypt. The concept of transformation as recorded in the Egyptian texts has been interpreted in various ways. De Briere expresses it in astronomical terms: "The sensitive Soul re-entered by the gate of the gods, or the Capricorn, into the Amenthe, the watery heavens, where it dwelt always with pleasure; until, descending by the gate of men, or the Cancer, it came to animate a new body" (Quoted in Egyptian Belief and Modern Thought, by James Bonwick, 1956 reprint; p. 80). I have this book and it is great and I strongly recommend it to every reader and when you read it then look for the similarities to Christianity; those that Rome did not change that is. This will blow your mind when you see that Christianity, like all religions before it, was to be but another form and reinterpretation of Egyptian religion and instead of an elaboration and further insights into these Divine Truth Rome "changed it beyond belief" to where little if any has roots to Judaism and Egyptian religion and the Divine Truths understood by the Ancients since the beginning of recorded history. Herodotus writes of transmigration, i.e., that the Soul passes through various animals before being reborn in human form. Here we see the Greeks agreeing with the Egyptians and other Ancient Spiritual masters in this regard.

This "transmigration" of the Soul refers not to the human Soul quite the way that we might think but to the molecules, atoms, and other components that clothe it. They gravitate to vehicles similar in qualities to their former host's, drawn magnetically to the new milieu by the imprint made by the human Soul, whether it be fine or gross. It is quite clear from the Egyptian Book of the Dead and other texts that the Soul itself after death undergoes experiences in the Duat (Dwat) or Underworld, the realm and condition between heaven and earth, or beneath the earth, supposedly traversed by the sun from sunset to sunrise. The evolution of consciousness is symbolized by the Solar Barque moving through the Duat. In this context the "hours" of travel represent stages of development. Bika Reed states that at a certain "hour" the individual meets the "Rebel in the Soul," that is, at the "hour of Spiritual transformation." And translating from the scroll Reed gives: "the Soul warns, only if a man is allowed to continue evolving, can the intellect reach the heart." In the Corpus Hermeticum Thoth -- Tehuti -- was the Mind of the Deity (the Logos), whom the Alexandrian Greeks identified with Hermes. The text states that Thoth, after planning and engineering the cosmos, unites himself with the Demiurgic Mind. There are other expressions proving that this Poimandres text is a Hellenized version of prior Ancient Egyptian doctrine. Again Egyptian religion is digested by nation after nation and that great Greek nation was built upon Egyptian truths. An important concept that we must address is that of "making-new-again." The treatise claims that all animal and vegetable forms contain in themselves "the seed of again-becoming" -- a clear reference to re-embodiment -- "every birth of flesh enSouled . . . shall of necessity renew itself." G. R. S. Mead interprets this as palingenesis or reincarnation -- "the renewal on the karmic wheel of birth-and-death" (Thrice-Greatest Hermes, 1: 94; 2:55.). These teachings are just a small part of what Rome hated about these Gnostics among other things. This is the secret of our God that you have never known that goes to the very core of our existence We, as human dualities of Spirit and Soul never die but live again till Souls fulfill their purpose and maturation in this realm of Physical existence; much of which is full of sorrow and pain. Hence the desire to escape the wheel of incarnation and reincarnation as seen by the Ancients whereby we can return home and rest with God our Father.

Answer for yourself: Can we find these same teachings of reincarnation in the New Testament? Yes we can.

The existence of a secret teaching can actually be found in the New Testament. Let us read some texts.

Mark 4:11-12 11 And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: 12 That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them. (KJV)

Matt 13:11-12 11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. 12 For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath. (KJV)

1 Cor 2:6-8 6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought: 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: 8 Which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. (KJV)

1 Cor 4:1 1 Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. (KJV)

Matt 11:25-26 25 At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. 26 Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight. (KJV)

Paul wrote about teachings which are taught to Spiritual "babies," teachings about righteousness for the more mature, and then teachings for the Spiritually mature. Paul reveals this fact immediately after equating Melchizedek to Jesus by stating:

"We have much to say about this, but it is hard to explain because you are slow to learn. In fact, though by this time you ought to be teachers, you need someone to teach you the elementary truths of God's word all over again. You need milk, not solid food! Anyone who lives on milk, being still an infant, is not acquainted with the teaching about righteousness. But solid food is for the mature, who by constant use have trained themselves to distinguish good from evil. (Heb. 5:11-14)

According to received tradition, after the Roman invasion of Jerusalem, the author of the Gospel of Mark established a church in Alexandria, Egypt. Mark may also have been the author of a "secret gospel" containing more advanced teaching for those being initiated into the Christian mysteries. This secret gospel contains passages portraying Jesus teaching secret doctrines. It is these "secret teachings" which Rome would view as a threat to their own agenda and doctrines that they wished to teach and have the masses follow.

HIDDEN TEACHINGS OF THE GNOSTIC CHRISTIANS CONCERNING THE SOUL #3

Answer for yourself: Did that divine knowledge of God and man's Soul which constituted the supreme possession of the Ancient priestcrafts survive the destruction of their temples? Is it yet accessible to mankind, or does it lie buried beneath the rubbish of ages, entombed within the very sanctuaries that were once illuminated by its splendor?

"In Egypt," writes Origen, "the philosophers have a sublime and secret knowledge respecting the nature of God.

Answer for yourself: What did Julian imply when he spoke of the secret initiations into the sacred Mysteries of the Seven-Rayed God who lifted Souls to salvation through His own nature? Who were the blessed theurgists who understood them profundities concerning which Julian dared not speak?

Answer for yourself: If this inner religious and secret "Divine Doctrine" of God and the Soul was always concealed from the masses, for whom a simpler code had been devised, is it not highly probable that the proponents of every aspect of modern civilization--philosophic, ethical, religious, and scientific-are ignorant of the true meaning of the very theories and tenets on which their beliefs are founded? Do the arts and sciences that the race has inherited from older nations conceal beneath their fair exterior a mystery so great that only the most illumined intellect can grasp its import? Such is undoubtedly the case and is easily proven today beyond anyone's doubt if they will but look.

Albert Pike, who has gathered ample evidence of the excellence of the doctrines promulgated by the Mysteries, supports these above assertions by quoting from the writings of Clement of Alexandria, Plato, Epictetus, Proclus, Aristophanes, and Cicero, all of whom unite in lauding the high ideals of these institutions. From the unqualified testimony of such reputable authorities no reasonable doubt can exist that the initiates of Egypt, Babylon, Greece and other ancient countries possessed the correct solution to those great cultural, intellectual, moral, and social problems which in an unsolved state confront the humanity of the twentieth century. The reader must not interpret this statement to mean that antiquity had foreseen and analyzed every complexity of this generation, but rather that the Mysteries had evolved a method whereby the mind was so trained in the fundamental truths of life that it was able to cope intelligently with any emergency which might arise. Thus the reasoning faculties were organized by a simple process of mental culture, for it was asserted that where reason reigns supreme, inconsistency cannot exist. Wisdom, it was maintained, lifts man to the condition of Godhood, a fact which explains the enigmatical statement that the Mysteries transformed "roaring beasts into divinities."

The preeminence of any philosophical system can be determined only by the excellence of its products. The Mysteries have demonstrated the superiority of their culture by giving to the world minds of such overwhelming greatness, Souls of such beatific vision, and lives of such outstanding impeccability that even after the lapse of ages the teachings of these individuals constitute the present Spiritual, intellectual, and ethical standards of the race. The initiates of the various Mystery schools of past ages form a veritable golden chain of supermen and superwomen connecting heaven and earth. They are the links of that Homeric "golden chain" with which Zeus boasted he could bind the several parts of the universe to the pinnacle of Olympus. The sons and daughters of Isis are indeed an illustrious line--founders of sciences and philosophies, patrons of arts and crafts, supporting by the transcendency of their divinely given power the structures of world religions erected to do them homage. Founders of doctrines which have molded the lives of uncounted generations, these Initiate-Teachers bear witness to that Spiritual culture which has always existed--and always will exist--as a divine institution in the world of men.

But historically as the orthodox church in Rome gained more and more political power the more it viewed "secret teachings" and "Ancient Wisdom" as a threat to their own public teachings. Yet let us not forget that the New Testament speaks much of these "secret teachings" of the Jewish Christ and Paul:

"He [Jesus] told them, ' The secret of the kingdom of God has been given to you. But to those on the outside everything is said in parables so that, they may be ever seeing but never perceiving, and ever hearing but never understanding; otherwise they might turn and be forgiven!'" (Mark 4:11-12)

"No, we speak of God's secret wisdom, a wisdom that has been hidden and that God destined for our glory before time began." (1 Corinthians 2:7)

"So then, men ought to regard us as servants of Christ and as those entrusted with the secret things of God." (1 Corinthians 4:1)

"For this reason, since the day we heard about you, we have not stopped praying for you and asking God to fill you with the knowledge of his will through all Spiritual wisdom and understanding." (Colossians 1:9)

The Church leader who made the final and greatest attempt to revive the secret teachings of "the Christ" within the orthodox teachings was the first Church Father named Origen (183-253 A.D.) of Alexandria in Egypt who was a disciple of Clement of Alexandra, Egypt. I want you to notice that in the beginning the Christian Church has strong connections with Egypt because it is from Egypt that the world will get its religions no matter how far today the apple has fallen from the tree. Origen was the first person since Paul to develop a system of theology around the teachings of "the Jewish Christ". His effort was the first within the orthodox church to systematize a theology on so vast a scale. Although Origen defended orthodoxy, he included in his system the wisdom of the Christian Gnostics. His theology was a perfect synthesis of "orthodox" and "gnostic" teachings and came the closest to reviving the "Lost Christianity" of the original sects, communities and schools, at a time when the Christian Gnosticism was falling into disrepute. Unfortunately, hundreds of years later, the Church declared him a heretic and his teachings as heresy mostly because they affirmed preexistence of the Soul and therefore reincarnation.

Origen had this to say about the secret teachings of Jesus:

"[Jesus] conversed with His disciples in private, and especially in their sacred retreats, concerning the Gospel of God; but the words which He uttered have not been preserved, because it appeared to the evangelists that they could not be adequately conveyed to the multitude in writing or in speech… and they saw… what things were to be committed to writing, and how this was to be done, and what was by no means to be written to the multitude, and what was to be expressed in words, and what was not to be so conveyed". (Contra Celsus, Chap. VI. 18)

Concerning these secret teachings, Clement stated:

"James the Righteous, John and Peter were entrusted by the Lord after his resurrection with the higher knowledge. They imparted it to the other apostles, to the seventy…" (Outlines Book VI)

A fragment of the Secret Gospel of Mark, one of the Gnostic texts discovered, describes this Jewish Christ named "Jesus" performing secret initiation rites. Before the discovery of Gnostic writings, our only knowledge of it came from a letter written by Church Father Clement of Alexandria (150 AD - 211 AD), which quotes this secret gospel and refers to it as "a more Spiritual gospel for the use of those who were being perfected." He said, "It even yet is most carefully guarded [by the church at Alexandria], being read only to those who are being initiated into the great mysteries." Clement insists elsewhere that the Jewish Christ among the religion of Judaism revealed a secret teaching to those who were "capable of receiving it and being molded by it." The same could be said for the operation of the "Egyptian Christ" and the "Greek Christ" and all others emanations from God sent to teach mankind the truth about their Spiritual identities and the life that they were given in this physical realm and existence. Clement indicates that he possessed "the secret tradition", which was handed down through the Jewish apostles and followers of "the Jewish Christ/Messiah" that taught the nation of Jews through Judaism and its tenants. Such Jewish Gnostics, and even Gentile Gnostics, were Spiritual critics of the orthodox Church of what they saw as not so much a popularization as a vulgarization of the real Christianity as originally imparted to mankind. This original teachings of "the Christ" among mankind is the real Christianity no matter what nation you find it or what term it is called. There is only one Divine Truth and teaching of God's Christ among men and this truth overlaps from nation to nation and is easily detected and recognized once the student and reader possesses the necessary "keys" needed to recognize the Ancient Wisdom given mankind since the beginning of recorded history. The orthodox church stressed faith, while the Gnostic church stressed a secret knowledge (gnosis).

Answer for yourself: And what is at the core of this "secret knowledge"? Namely that the "Jesus Story" is not a "literal-historical" story confined to but one person but an allegory and metaphor for the Soul in all of mankind and its intended incarnation and subsequent Spiritual growth in this physical realm leading up to is release from the body at death where it is reunited with God. This secret knowledge emphasized "Spiritual resurrection" of the Divine Nature in mankind rather than physical resurrection of the physical body at one's death. Instead of a physical resurrection of the dead body these Ancient Gnostics taught the re-incarnation of the Soul in a new body. Indeed, the Gnostic Christians believed reincarnation to be the true interpretation of "resurrection" for those who have not attained a Spiritual resurrection through this secret knowledge in their previous earthly life.

The first-century Jewish historian Flavius Josephus states that the Pharisees, the founders of rabbinic Judaism for whom Paul once belonged, believed in reincarnation. He writes that the Pharisees believed that the Souls of bad men are punished after death but that the Souls of good men are "removed into other bodies" and they will "have power to revive and live again." The Sadducees, the other prominent Jewish sect in Palestine, did not emphasize life after death and according to the Bible "say there is no resurrection" (Matthew 22:23). From what we have just discussed, it is clear that what Matthew really states is that the Sadducees "say there is no reincarnation". Let that sink in for a second.

The following are some the secret teachings of Jesus from the Gnostic gospels that affirm reincarnation, revealing the secret knowledge:

"Watch and pray that you may not be born in the flesh, but that you may leave the bitter bondage of this life." (Book of Thomas the Contender)

In the Book of Thomas the Contender, Jesus tells the disciple Thomas that after death those who were once believers but have remained attached to things of "transitory beauty" will be consumed "in their concern about life" and will be "brought back to the visible realm".

In the Secret Book of John, reincarnation is placed at the heart of its discussion of the salvation of Souls. The book was written by 185 AD at the latest. Here is the Secret Book of John's perspective on reincarnation:

All people have drunk the water of forgetfulness and exist in a state of ignorance. Some are able to overcome ignorance through the Spirit of life that descends upon them. These Souls "will be saved and will become perfect," that is, escape the round of rebirth into a world full of suffering and sorrow. John asks Jesus what will happen to those who do not attain salvation. They are hurled down "into forgetfulness" and thrown into "prison", the Gnostic code word for a "new body". The only way for these Souls to escape, says Jesus, is to emerge from forgetfulness and acquire knowledge (their true identity and live accordingly in obedience to the Torah, the roadmap for their Souls). A Soul in this situation can do so by finding a teacher or savior who has the strength to lead her home. "This Soul needs to follow another Soul in whom the Spirit of life dwells, because she is saved through the Spirit. Then she will never be thrust into flesh again" (Secret Book of John).

According to Pistis Sophia, some Souls do experience hell as a shadowy place of torture where they go after death. But after passing through this hell, the Souls return for further experiences on earth. Only a few extremely wicked Souls are not allowed to reincarnate. These are cast into "outer darkness" until the time when they are destined to be "destroyed and dissolved".

Several Gnostic texts combine the ideas of reincarnation and union with God. The Apocalypse of Paul, a second-century text, describes the Merkabah-style ascent of the apostle Paul as well as the reincarnation of a Soul who was not ready for such an ascent. It shows how both reincarnation and ascents fit into Gnostic theology.

Pistis Sophia combines the ideas of reincarnation and divine union in a passage that begins with the question: What happens to "a man who has committed no sin, but done good persistently, but has not found the mysteries?" The Pistis Sophia tells us that the Soul of the good man who has not found the mysteries will receive "a cup filled with thoughts and wisdom." This will allow the Soul to remember its divine origin and so to pursue the "mysteries of the Light" until it finds them and is able to "inherit the Light forever." To "inherit the Light forever" is a Gnostic code for union with God.

For the Gnostic Christians, resurrection was also a Spiritual event - simply the awakening of the Soul. They believed that people who experience the resurrection can experience eternal life, or union with God, while on earth and then after death, escape rebirth. People who don't experience the resurrection and union with God on earth will reincarnate. Jesus states the following the Gnostic Gospels:

"People who say they will first die and then arise are mistaken. If they do not first receive resurrection while they are alive, once they have died they will receive nothing" (Gospel of Philip).

Answer for yourself: The Gnostics claimed their terminology was sprinkled through the Epistles of Paul, himself a Gnostic. The people who wrote and circulated gospels like the Gospel of Thomas certainly didn't think they were heretics as they would be labeled by Rome later. They thought of themselves as the true followers of "the Christ" or "Chrestians" (Christians) who had received, in addition to the other gospels, secret teaching. For example in the 4th chapter of the Gospel of Mark, Mark says that Jesus taught certain things privately to the disciples. And Paul too says that he had secret teaching. And these claim to give some of the secret teaching of the Christ (Jesus). Whether he actually did teach secretly or not, we don't know otherwise. But the Gospel of Thomas claims to be this kind of secret teaching.

For example, the author of Ephesians whom many believe to be Paul or a Pauline follower uses the words "awake", "sleep" and "dead" in a Gnostic sense: Do these remarks above help us better to understand verses like these:

Eph 5:14-17 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, 16 Redeeming the time, because the days are evil. 17 Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is. (KJV)

Col 1:27-28 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: 28 Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may (KJV)

Now we need to pay close attention. Many of the Greek words in the New Testament translated as "resurrection" also mean to "rise" or "awake". Therefore, argued the Gnostics, when Paul says people can be part of the resurrection, he is really saying that their Souls can be awakened to the Spirit of God within them (awakened to the indwelling of 'the Christ') and by so doing come to know their "true identity, from where they have come, and to where they go when they die". Thus, the Gnostic Christian's motto was "Know Thyself" which referred to knowing the Divine Nature within them, their very Soul.

Paul writes in several places that resurrection involves a Spirit body. Such a definition corresponds with Spiritual resurrection and reincarnation and not a bodily resurrection.

"It [the dead body] is sown a natural body, it is raised a Spiritual body. If there is a natural body, there is also a Spiritual body." (1 Corinthians 15:44)

"I declare to you, brothers, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable." (1 Corinthians 15:50)

"When you were dead in your sins and in the uncircumcision of your sinful nature, God made you alive with Christ." (Colossians 2:13)

But even more startling we know that in some passages Paul writes about the resurrection as a present rather than a future event:

"Or don't you know that all of us who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? We were therefore buried with him through baptism into death in order that, just as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, we too may live a new life. If we have been united with him like this in his death, we will certainly also be united with him in his resurrection. For we know that our old self was crucified with him so that the body of sin might be done away with, that we should no longer be slaves to sin - because anyone who has died has been freed from sin. Now if we died with Christ, we believe that we will also live with him. For we know that since Christ was raised from the dead, he cannot die again; death no longer has mastery over him. The death he died, he died to sin once for all; but the life he lives, he lives to God. In the same way, count yourselves dead to sin but alive to God in Christ Jesus" (Romans 6:3-11).

Colossians also seems to describe the resurrection as a "present-day event":

"Since, then, you have been raised with Christ, set your hearts on things above, where Christ is seated at the right hand of God." (Colossians 3:1)

"Do not lie to each other, since you have taken off your old self with its practices and have put on the new self, which is being renewed in knowledge in the image of its Creator." (Colossians 3:9-10)

In the above passage, taking off the old self and putting on the new is a code for the resurrection, which, again, is described as a present-life event.

The Gnostic manuscripts present a clear, simple and strong vision of the resurrection. First, the Gospel of Thomas disabuses people of the notion that the resurrection is a future event:

"His followers said to him, 'When will the rest for the dead take place, and when will the new world come?' He said to them, 'What you look for has come, but you do not know it.'" (Gospel of Thomas)

In the Gospel of Thomas, Jesus is saying that the resurrection and the kingdom are already here. We simply do not realize it - or, in the Gnostic sense, we simply have not integrated with them.

The Jewish Christ teaching these truths through Judaism to Israel explained the concept of resurrection before raising Lazarus from the dead:

"Jesus said to her, "Your brother will rise again." Martha answered, "I know he will rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Jesus said to her, "I am the resurrection and the life. He who believes in me will live, even though he dies; and whoever lives and believes in me will never die. Do you believe this?" (John 11:23-26)

In these verses, Jesus tells Martha her brother Lazarus will "rise again". Martha mistakenly thinks Jesus means Lazarus will come out of his grave at Judgment Day. Jesus corrects her by stating that those who believe in Him will live, even before they die. Jesus is referring here to Spiritual regeneration. Jesus also states that those who die believing in Him, will never die. This clearly implies reincarnation. The flip-side to this is that those who die not believing in Him, will have to die again (i.e. reincarnate). It is interesting to note that by raising Lazarus from death, Jesus is forcing Lazarus to live out the rest of his life only to die physically again. By raising Lazarus from death, Jesus seems to be demonstrating that one does not wait until Judgment Day to rise.

Jesus flatly tells Nicodemus:

"I tell you a truth, no one can see the kingdom of God unless he is born again." (John 3:3)

Nicodemus misunderstands what Jesus means by "born again":

"How can a person be born when he is old? Surely he cannot enter a second time into his mother's womb to be born!" (John 3:4)

In response, Jesus states:

"I tell you the truth, no one can enter the kingdom of God unless he is born of water and the Spirit. Flesh gives birth to flesh, but the Spirit gives birth to Spirit." (John 3:5-6)

In context of these verses, Jesus or "the teachings of the Christ" is talking about the process of resurrection, that is, being born of water and being born of the Spirit. Jesus describes physical resurrection (to be born of water) and Spiritual resurrection (to be born of the Spirit). They are two similar yet different processes. From these verses, the case can be made that Jesus taught the concept of resurrection as being physical rebirth as well as Spiritual rebirth. In the Apocryphal book Wisdom of Solomon, recognized by the Catholic Church, is the following verse:

"... I was given a sound body to live in because I was already good." (Wisdom of Solomon 8:19-20)

Answer for yourself: Already good? That makes you think does it not? Does not the above verse raise the following question: How is it possible to get a body after you have already been good if reincarnation is not a fact?

Flavius Josephus records that the Essenes of the Dead Sea Scrolls lived "the same kind of life" as the followers of the Greek philosopher Pythagoras who taught reincarnation. According to Josephus, the Essenes believed that the Soul is both immortal and preexistent which is necessary for belief in reincarnation.

The Dead Sea Scrolls indicate that the Jewish mystical tradition of union with God went back to the first, if not the third, century before Christ was depicted as the embodiment of "Jesus". Jewish mysticism has its roots in Greek mysticism which espoused reincarnation and this is important to note. Some of the hymns found with the Dead Sea Scrolls are similar to the Hekhalot hymns sung by the Jewish mystics. One text gives us unmistakable evidence of Jewish mysticism. It is called "Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice". Also, fragments of 1 Enoch, which is considered the oldest evidence of Jewish mysticism, were also found with the Dead Sea Scrolls. Since Jewish mysticism existed in the third century before the Jewish Christ was depicted as Jesus, as Enoch indicates, then it would certainly have been present in first-century Judaism.

Answer for yourself: So what does all of this evidence show us when amassed? As stated earlier, this twin idea of divine union and reincarnation can be found in early Christianity and one can easily conclude that it was the key to the heart of Jesus' message in many places in the New Testament.

Reincarnation has been a tenet for thousands of years for certain Jews and Christians. The Zohar is a work of great weight and authority among the Jews. In II, 199 b, it says that "all Souls are subject to revolutions." This is metempsychosis or a'leen b'gilgoola which is the belief that at death the Soul passes into another human but it declares that "men do not know the way they have been judged in all time." That is, in their "revolutions" they lose a complete memory of the acts that have led to judgment. The Kether Malkuth says, "If she, the Soul, be pure, then she shall obtain favor.. . but if she hath been defiled, then she shall wander for a time in pain and despair. . . until the days of her purification." If the Soul be pure and if she comes at once from God at birth, how could she be defiled? And where is she to wander if not on this or some other world until the days of her purification? The Rabbis always explained it as meaning she wandered down from Paradise through many revolutions or births until purity was regained.

Under the name of "Din Gilgol Neshomes" the doctrine of reincarnation is constantly spoken of in the Talmud. The term means "the judgment of the revolutions of the Souls." And Rabbi Manassa, son of Israel, one of the most revered, says in his book Nishmath Hayem: "The belief or the doctrine of the transmigration of Souls is a firm and infallible dogma accepted by the whole assemblage of our church with one accord, so that there is none to be found who would dare to deny it. . . . Indeed, there is a great number of sages in Israel who hold firm to this doctrine so that they made it a dogma, a fundamental point of our religion. We are therefore in duty bound to obey and to accept this dogma with acclamation . . . as the truth of it has been incontestably demonstrated by the Zohar, and all books of the Kabbalists."

Answer for yourself: Having seen this evidence does it not make you wonder what we would have been taught about God and the Divine Realm had not Rome destroyed the libraries of the known world to cover up their "man-made" replacement religion known as Orthodox Christianity today?

HIDDEN TEACHINGS OF THE GNOSTIC CHRISTIANS CONCERNING THE SOUL #4

We made mention in earlier articles that Gnosticism is based on Gnosis, the knowledge of transcendence arrived at by way of interior, intuitive means.

Answer for yourself: Is it possible by studying Gnosticism that we can learn valuable truths and lessons concerning the Soul within mankind?

I believe we can and all of this is related in the final analysis to "the Christ" of God and the purpose for "this Christ" within the flesh of mankind and the true "revealer" of God to mankind. It is up to man to "find the Christ within" and through communion with Him partake of God and in so doing discern his true "makeup" as a Divine Creature within this physical plane of existence and the purpose for such an existence. This is made all the more important by coming to an understanding of man and the Soul within him and Gnosticism gives us plenty of insight into this miracle. The goal is for man to awaken to his true Spiritual Identity as a Divine Being and act accordingly and this is accomplished by finding the "Christ within" and receiving instruction and enlightenment from Him.

Answer for yourself: How did these Ancient Gnostics from Egypt down through history teach these truths? They taught these metaphysical realities through the agency of "myths". Let me explain a little.

Although Gnosticism thus rests on personal religious experience, it is a mistake to assume all such experience results in Gnostic recognitions. It is nearer the truth to say that Gnosticism expresses a specific religious experience, an experience that does not lend itself to the language of theology or philosophy, but which is instead closely affinitized to, and expresses itself through the medium of myth. Indeed, one finds that most Gnostic scriptures take the forms of myths; myths that are not to be understood as if "historical-literal" events in the "here and now" but yet expressions of "literal-truths" told via the agency of metaphors and allegory which lay beyond the physical realm in which we live. We see but a "shadow" of these truths in our visible and physical existences but the "real" exists beyond this physical realm in which we live in the invisible realm which we call "the Spirit" or "Energy" from which we have come and to which we return after our existence in this Earth.

Answer for yourself: What should we know about the use of "myths" and religion and Divine Truths imparted to the Ancients since the beginning of recorded time?

The term “myth” should not here be taken to mean “stories that are not true”, but rather, that the truths embodied in these myths are of a different order from the dogmas of theology or the statements of philosophy.

Our whole problem that lays at the very heart of Christianity and Christian doctrine as we have been taught it today is that when Rome comes around it "literalized" and "historized" and "carnalized" these Divine Truths handed down in the form of "myths" for thousands of years previously by the Spiritual Ancients and in so doing we lost the "real" truths as understood and taught by these Ancient Spiritual masters and have settled for a false "historical-literal" interpretation instead that obscures that this Divine Existence is not limited to but one person, this Jesus, but rather encompasses all of God's children. First before we begin a little history is needed.

The early Christian Church, before it was an organized body, emerged in an historical era known for its syncretism, variety, and religious experimentalism. Faced with an outbreak of interpretive zealots and apocalyptic mystics, the network of societies calling themselves "Followers of the Way of Christ" (later to be renamed "Christians") was steeped in confusion during the first three centuries of its existence. Without a distinctive, unifying body of dogma, this network would have no chance at survival; but first, the leaders of this emerging "authoritative" body had to draw distinctions between what they defined as their "orthodox Christianity" and other "heretical sectarians" (in their opinion) that sprouted up in major theological centers like Alexandria, Egypt and Rome. One of the most significant, if not the most significant sectarian movements and challenges to the later Roman Christian concept of faith during these centuries was the philosophical movement that modern scholars know as Gnosticism, which presented not merely a dogmatic challenge to the Church, but an entirely alien knowledge of the Divine that opposed the confined "literalized" interpretations of the Divine as taught by the emerging Gentile Church of Rome and applied to their concept of "the Christ" called Jesus. We must remember that Rome had "literal" gods and "literal godmen" setting on their thrones known as "Ceasars". To "literalize" these Ancient Divine metaphysical truths and apply them to real people and presumed "literal people" was no problem for them for they already had done this with their Emperors and Ceasars. And know that Rome, even knowing that the standard hermeneutic of these prior Divine Wisdoms and Spiritual Truths of these Ancients as handed down since the beginning of recorded time had never been understood by these Ancients as "historical-literal" in the first place, was no obstacle to Rome "reinterpreting" everything in their "literalized-historical" approach to "the Christ". These Divine Truths of these Ancient Spiritual Master since Egypt on down were "real" and "literal" as taught in these religious "myths" expressing the metaphysical but the personified characters embodying these Divine Spiritual Realities were not to be understood as "historical" or literal-real people. They were pictures and allegories expressing the whole of mankind. Rome will change all of that with their "literal-historical" Jesus as "the Christ" and confine such a Divine Concept to only "one person" and exclude the rest of mankind in the process. This is the tragic horror of what they did; they caused the whole of mankind under the Roman Church's influence to loose their true knowledge of their Divine Beingness and it remains so today in traditional Western Christianity.

A great body of sects that arose in Egypt and Asia Minor between the First and Fourth centuries had qualities that we call "gnostic"; these sects, however, never used this term to describe themselves. Mostly they called themselves, believe it or not, "followers of the Christ" ("Christians") ; making no distinction between themselves and the early Church. These "Gnostics" considered themselves "followers of the Christ and His teachings" as handed down since the beginning of mankind in every nation; thus the name "Christians". Originally they were "Chrestians" for the Gnostic term for the "indwelling Christ" was "Chrestus". But again Rome will change all of that when they over the first 5 centuries worked furiously to eradicate all traces of Gnosticism and did so by burning countless numbers of the world's libraries to cover up their agenda. Consequently, since many different sects that considered themselves "followers of the Christ" were grouped under the heading of "Christians" then modern scholars today are forced to lump these "Gnostics" all together based on their possession of similar knowledge, its presuppositions and foundations and their metaphysics or even how they dealt with the nature of man's being (both Spiritual and physical - duality). To elaborate on the beliefs of every sect would require a many-volumed opus; as such, scholars of gnosticism have deduced two main points that most Gnostic groups shared:

- a pseudo-dualistic cosmology of Spirit versus matter, including Emanationism from the One, the Father who "emits all things"
- the belief in "gnosis," or personal acquaintance with the God of the Spiritual realms.

Answer for yourself: What is "Emanationism"? This is important for us for one of these emanations is "the Christ".

Emanationism is a component in the astrophysics that studies the origin and evolution and structure of the universe and concerns itself with the cosmology of certain religious or philosophical systems that argue a Supreme Being did not directly create the physical universe, but instead emanated lower Spiritual beings who created the world (ie., intermediaries, aeons, angels, etc.). We accept this concept of "angels" in Christianity as other Divine Beings but we don't call it the same as did the Ancients and have lost all concepts of Emanationism as taught by these Ancient Spiritual Masters. In fact in many circles we believe in "angels" but refuse the teaching of Emanationism. Emanationism explains creation as a gradual process of emanation and descent from a transcendental Absolute to a mundane physical reality. Try to think of Jacob's ladder where he saw Diving Begins "ascending and descending" from Heaven to Earth. This is a great picture explaining this concept which we find in the Hebrew Scriptures. Jacob's ladders, named for the biblical Jacob who saw a ladder leading from earth to heaven in a vision, have shown up all over the world. Like the spinning top, the Jacob's ladder seems to be universal symbol, appearing at widely divergent world locations with no apparent historical connectedness. This is easily explained when you study Gnosticism for these Divine Truths of the Absolute and His emanation from Himself thus connecting the Invisible with the Visible realm in which man inhabits was known by all at one time on this planet.

Many Gnostics (especially the followers of Valentinius) taught that there was the One, the original, unknowable God; and then from the One emanated Aeons, pairs of lesser beings in sequence. The Aeons together made up the Pleroma, or fullness, of God. The lowest of these pairs were Sophia ("Wisdom," in Greek) and Christ.

Understanding this "ladder of Jacob" then there is no Creator God standing apart from, even if intimately connected with, the universe as in typical Christian monotheism; but rather a series of stages of down-grading of Consciousness-Being, by means of which the Absolute principle actually becomes the multiplicity of entities and objects (the All in the One). This is why at the center of Egyptian religion and even Judaism from which it came we find these same pure concepts not adulterated as we do in later Christianity. The Ancients of all nations once understood that God is everything and everything is God; that the world is either identical with God or in some way a self-expression of His nature. Similarly, it is the view that everything that exists constitutes a "unity" and this all-inclusive unity is in some sense Divine. These Ancient Spiritual Master of Egypt and other nations understood that every existing entity is, only one Being; and that all other forms of reality are either modes (or appearances) of it or identical with it. All matter, energy, and life are an interconnected unity of which we are an inseparable part. These Ancient Spiritual Masters from nation to nation taught that there is a single kind of substance, energy/matter, which is vibrant and infinitely creative in all its forms, both invisible and visible. This body and mind are indivisibly united. Finally let it be said that these taught that every individual has direct access through perception, emotion and meditation to this ultimate reality, which is the Universe and Nature with all its Energies, Powers, and Forces interworking together whom we call God and this "whole" exists on a small scale in every human being as man is a microcosm of the Cosmos and Universe which in the final analysis is the totality of his being, past, present and future. This God and His Universe as His expression is self-organizing, ever-evolving and inexhaustibly diverse and man is an interconnected unity with this Universe of which we as mankind are an inseparable part. This understanding of God and His workings allowed these Ancients to revere and celebrate the Universe as the totality of God; His being, past, present and future. This Universe and God was understood as self-organizing, ever-evolving and God is thus inexhaustibly diverse. His overwhelming power, beauty and fundamental mystery compel the deepest human reverence and wonder and we can read of these insights today when we study and properly understand the Ancient Religions of mankind like we find in Egypt and as Gnosticism cherished and preserved for the whole of mankind in their writings which Rome tried desperately to utterly destroy. Thus these Gnostic Spiritual Masters understood that man is an integral part of Nature, thus man should cherish Nature as the workings of this God and revere and preserve all manifestations of "life" in all its magnificent beauty and diversity. Thus they strove to live in harmony with Nature locally and globally and in so doing acknowledged the inherent value of all life, human and non-human, and strive to treat all living beings with compassion and respect for at their core they are all expressions of this Divine Energy we call God. Likewise all humans are equal centers of awareness of the Universe and nature, and all deserve a life of equal dignity and mutual respect. This in a nutshell is the Gnostic Mystery of God in all things.

Col 1:16 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: (KJV)

And the communicator of these Divine Truths and these "all things" mentioned above is "the indwelling Christ" who brings down to man these Divine Truths from Heaven above. Thus Egypt says it best and yet does so still today: "So Above, So Below". This is the cosmology that produced the worlds greatest cultures that have ever existed and which allowed Ancient man to reach such pinnacles of truth and knowledge that we set as dwarfs today with all our science and technology and but wonder at their insights and achievements. A blessing to us today is what archeologist consistently dig up and provide us which we can read that reveals these unbelievable Divine Truths hidden from us for thousands of years. Archeology is restoring these Ancient Spiritual Truths today to those who desire to know them and when you encounter them as I and others have they absolutely take your breath away; sadly few hear of these truths since Christianity turns a deaf ear to all but its rigid religious doctrines.

It has been suggested by Professor Huston Smith, in his book Forgotten Truth that the basic cosmology, and this Emanationism arrived at independently by many different philosophies and Spiritual traditions by nation after nation down through recorded history, shows Reality to be divided into a very minimum of four levels or planes of reality:

- the Infinite or Absolute
- the Celestial or Divine,
- the Intermediate or Psychic
- and the Terrestrial or Physical

Each of these can in turn be sub-divided. Thus, applying this in an Emanationist perspective, the process of creation, in the Emanationist cosmogony and cosmology, proceeds through a number of distinct stages. First the Absolute produces the Spiritual reality (or "God"). The Spiritual reality in turn produces the Psychic reality. And finally, the Psychic reality produces the Physical reality; the material world. Each reality constitutes a specific stage of manifestation interconnected to the one above and the one below. Emanationism understands the more subtle and Spiritual realities as preceding and generating the grosser and more material ones, sort of like a "ladder" as mentioned before and as seen in the Kabbalah and not vice-versa as materialism assumes; and that additionally those grosser realities are the result of an out-flowing from the subtle, rather than being created ex nihilo - out of nothing - as the Theistic religions claim. There is a "First-Cause" for all that comes after and is the Source for "all" that later exists; both invisible and visible.

We only need to go to Egypt to see this best expressed even yet today. The most common knowledge about Ancient Egyptian divinities comes to us as the result of the "interpretation" of western academic Egyptologists of the Ancient Egyptian texts. Sadly I have found as have other objective scholars that this Western Christian mindset of these Egyptologists and their "interpretations" are skewed and constrained by their western and Judaeo-Christian paradigms. As a result, they report a confused religious system with a great many number of "so-called gods". Academic Egyptologists, while worshipping everything Greek or Roman, totally ignore eyewitness accounts of Herodotus, Plutarch, Plato, Diodorus, and other historians who reported about the Ancient Egyptian traditions, and who were much closer to the scene than the further removed Western "Christianized" academic Egyptologists. In line with Gnostic thoughts of the Divine down through history Egypt taught what we explained above; namely that there exists "neter" and "netert" but these are not defined as "gods" and "goddesses" as unenlightened Western Egyptologists erroneously do. Instead of calling Egyptian religion "polytheistic" and "heathen" as do these Christian Egyptologists today we find upon objective study that rather Egypt understood this Divine Absolute correctly and explained this Absolute as "neteru" (plural of "neter/netert") and explained these "neter" as Divine Principles, Energies, and Functions of the One Supreme God. Call them "attributes" of the One if you wish. Egypt taught that there is One God who is self-produced, self-existent, immortal, invisible, eternal, omniscient, almighty, etc. This One God was represented through the many functions and attributes of "His" domain. These many attributes of this One God were called collectively the "neteru". The terms "gods" and "goddesses" as given by many Christian Egyptologists today as separate divinities from this One God are a gross misrepresentation of the Egyptian term "neteru". Egypt defined this God through His emanations which are these "neteru". The more we learn of these qualities or "neteru" the closer we are getting to know our own Divine origin as mankind. Far from being a primitive, polytheistic form or religion as erroneously seen by Christianity, this is, when properly understood, the highest form of monotheism that ever has existed among mankind even yet today. The logical and only way to explain anything to human beings is on human terms and in human forms. As such, the complicated scientific and philosophical information was reduced in Ancient Egypt to human and animal images and terms which were but pictures and symbols of the "inexpressible". These "neteru", like Horus with a hawk's head, are but "symbols" and "metaphors" expressing a concept behind the image given or idea given to this indescribable God. This was again best done through the agency of "myths" and other nations which followed Egypt did the same. Thus all of these "godmen" and their "stories" are at their core metaphysical stories of the Descent of the Soul through different levels and stages of Emanation until it finds its home in the flesh of mankind.

Not knowing this then when we first read of these myths of Osiris, Isis, Horus, and Set we are startled by their similarities with our "Jesus Story" and discount them outright either out of fear or want to blame the Devil for "copying" the "Jesus Story" as did the Church Fathers when these similarities were brought out to them by their critics. Christianity essentially plagiarized Ancient Egyptian religion, and some elements of other religions too. The Church fathers of the 3rd-5th Century AD practically appropriated the myths and legends of other religions as their own, and took them away from the realm of myth and back-wrote them and thus made them "literal" History. This is the problem that lies at the very core of our "Jesus 'only' Story".

Such is the veracity of the Gnostic Spiritual Truths which lay behind these "godmen" like Osiris, Horus, and Jesus; Gnostic metaphysical Spiritual and Scientific Truths which Rome desired we never know or learn. But again at their core these myths were never intended to be seen and believed as if they were "historical-literal" accounts of real people who lived in the past but only symbols and metaphors and allegories that taught at its core the Divine Soul in its incarnation in this physical realm.

Important for us one again is to note that this "mediation" occurs between these different levels of creation and being and "descent" from the Absolute One. The one we are most concerned with in these articles is "the Logos" or "Christ". Although not all of the gnostic sects were Christian, the most significant did follow the teachings of "the Christs" of Ancient nations to some extent, and it is these that we must investigate when we attempt to show the gnostic concept of "faith," which is inextricably intertwined with both their phenomenon of gnosis and their cosmology. But of concern for us is not just the concept of "Emanationism" but "Dualism" which lies at the very core of this Absolute we call God. We move to this study in the next article in this series.

Let us continue in the next article in this series.

HIDDEN TEACHINGS OF THE GNOSTIC CHRISTIANS CONCERNING THE SOUL #5

It never ceased to amaze me when taking Church History in Seminary and doing my "outside" reading the shock and horror that I felt when reading about the glorious history of the Christian church down through history. Let me give you an example.

In 1209 A.D. the entire population of the Albigens was slaughtered at the order of Pope Innocent III. The Albigens, in the south of France, was then the most populous, the most technically, socially, and economically advanced part of Europe. Its population was largely Gnostics and Arian Christians, and were a sanctuary for Jews who were persecuted almost everywhere else in Europe. All of these groups had a high percentage of literacy and read the Bible, which was prohibited by the Vatican. Innocent III was seeking to put a stop to the "Gnostic heresy", but found it to be entrenched throughout Europe, so he followed the "Cathar Crusade" with the creation of the Inquisition, resulting in countless millions of people being slowly and brutally tortured to death over the next 500 years for even the mere suspicion of being witches. Innocent also reinstated a prohibition against the owning or reading of Bibles by anyone other than clergy, under penalty of death.

Of course we have mentioned before the terrible persecution of the Gnostic Christians by Orthodox Roman Christianity but we never pointed out that Rome is responsible for the death of 18,000,000 people who were put to death for the "beliefs"; beliefs many of which held which were the Ancient Beliefs of the Spiritual Masters of Antiquity which had been handed down since the beginning of recorded time. These "beliefs" could easily be classified as "Gnostic". Gnosticism usually refers to an esoteric cult of divine knowledge (in reality a synthesis of Christianity, Judaism, Greek philosophy, Hinduism, Buddhism, Egyptian religion and the mystery cults of the Mediterranean which flourished during the 2nd and 3rd centuries and which was a rival to, and influence on, early Christianity before the rise of Romanism. The medieval French Cathar heresy and the modern Mandean sect (in southern Iraq) descend from Gnosticism and likewise felt the point of the Roman sword for their religious traditions concerning "the Christ".

As mentioned elsewhere Gnostic 4th-century codices were discovered in Egypt in the 1940's and they include the Gospel of St Thomas (unconnected with the disciple) and the Gospel of Mary which probably originated about AD 135. Gnosticism envisaged the world as a series of Emanations from the highest of several gods or Aeons. In this cosmology the majority of Gnostics saw as stated before that all creation emanated from One Absolute Intelligent Energy-Force-Power-Spirit and that from this One Source came all later attributes or emanations from this One which comprise the "All in the One". The lowest emanation was seen as less "pure" than this Absolute and associated with the idea of "evil" and this "evil god" (the Demiurge) was believed to have created the material world with all is death and suffering as a prison for the divine sparks that dwell in our human bodies. In other words this Demiurge was "way down the ladder" from the Perfect Absolute. The Gnostics identified this evil creator with the God of the Old Testament.

Answer for yourself: Why would they do that? Well this question is self-explanatory if you have ever read the Old Testament and can remember what you read. The God of the Jews is depicted as quite arbitrary and cruel at times. This evil god of this world (who is identified with the god of the Old Testament) is separate from a higher more abstract God revealed by the "Christ" who taught a religion religion that regards this world as the creation of a series of evil archons/powers who wish to keep the human Soul trapped in an evil physical body, a religion that preaches a hidden wisdom or knowledge only to a select group as necessary for salvation or escape from this world.

These Gnostics taught that this physical world was created by this Evil God who they identified as the Old Testament God who acted without proper authorization from the Good Absolute God, who was the secret and true God. The material world, for either the reason above or some other reason, is therefore inherently evil and flawed. Adam and Eve were thrown out of the Garden of Eden by the Evil God for the "sin" of seeking knowledge (gnosis, get it?), thereby rendering the serpent into a heroic figure. Only later is the serpent made evil in the religion of Rome. No wonder the serpent is identified with "wisdom" all the way down through history. This Evil God is a male figure, sometimes referred to as Samael, which means "blind God," or Yaldabaoth, which means "born of chaos" or some such thing. The Good God was often depicted as a mother goddess named Sophia, which means "wisdom." One only has to read Proverbs to see the beauty of the "feminine" aspect of this Absolute God or "Sophia" as one of His Emanations. Jesus, or "the Christ" functioned as an intermediary and an emissary of the Good God (or Goddess), who was sent to Earth to impart secret knowledge to the chosen few. Now you can begin to see more clearly why the Gnostics saw that the ministry of "the Christ" within mankind was so important for he had come to attempt to liberate humanity from the dominion of this Evil God and this again was done by imparting Divine Truth and Secret Wisdom (Sophia) of the Divine Realm to those who had shown themselves worthy of such truths.

Naturally, the Roman church decided the best way to resolve their differences with these Gnostics was to kill all the Gnostics and burn all their books. This took a while, but they did a really thorough job. With the extermination of the Cathars and the Knights Templar by the Inquisition in the 13th century, the last vestiges of Gnosticism were eradicated... or so it seemed.

Rome would set out to "edit" the Bible because there were traces of gnosticism scattered through the Christian bible (specifically the Gospel and letters attributed to the apostle John, as well as the Book of Revelation). But the real survivals of the religion came in three distinct branches.

- Gnosticism continued to survive in the Mandeans, a ascetic sect of between 30,000 and 60,000, located along the border between Iran and Iraq. The Mandeans believe there is a world of light to the North and darkness to the South, and the two are engaged in war (dualism again). Other than that, they seem to follow generally Gnostic lines, although they hold some secrets to themselves.
- The second survival of Gnosticism came through secret societies, which purport to carry on Gnostic traditions through various means. Freemasonry is thought to be influenced by the Gnostics, as were the Knights Templar, who were based in the same French territory where the Cathars lived. Various groups claim the Knights Templar as part of their lineage, including the Illuminati and the Ordo Templi Orientis. The latter organization overtly identifies itself with Gnosticism, and one of its major rituals is the Gnostic Mass, written by Aleister Crowley.
- The third survival of Gnosticism is a weird historical oddity mentioned before. In 1945, a collection of ancient texts were found at the site of Nag Hammadi, Egypt. They had been sealed in jars and buried by an small sect which had a monastery on the site, then forgotten. Because they had been so thoroughly concealed, they escaped the vast book-burning campaign of the early Catholic church. The discovery of the texts provided the first legitimate record of the Gnostics; previously most historical information about Gnosticism was extracted from published church tracts attacking their beliefs.

Answer for yourself: So why is all of this so important for Christianity? The Gnostic scriptures provided a lot of insight into the development of early Christianity, as well as providing textual clues to the origins of the New Testament gospels, which may have been plagiarized in part from the Gnostic originals.

Because of this "plagiarism" and "the rewriting" of the Gnostic Gospels which taught only an "indwelling Christ" and not a "literal-historical Christ" as a man who lived in Israel in the first century Rome felt compelled to silence their opponents. Thus the persecution and killing of the Gnostics and the destruction of their "knowledge" and "gnosis" was undertaken by the emerging Roman Church. Grace is a word which has so oftentimes been mentioned by the lips of Bible-thumping Christians in these earliest centuries but the Gnostics found none at the hands of Rome.

Now I want you to think with me. There has been so much emphasis on grace that most Christians have comparatively little knowledge and understanding of the Law as in the Old Testament. In fact I showed in an earlier article done years ago that the Hebrew word for "grace" carries with it the idea of "conditionalism"; that man "merits grace" from God or else he does not. And this "conditional grace" come only in man's attempt to live according to God's Torah and Commandments and Laws and when and if man fails then repentance and renewal to the task of obedience brings the "grace from God" to such a man. This is a starling revelation to the Christian Church who prides themselves today to not be "under the Law or Laws of God" and not "under grace" and who seldom ever hears of "repentance" except in a new members's class when you join the church. The fact the Church and Protestants in particular won't really follow anything in the Old Testament or even the teachings of "the Christ" himself in Matthew, Mark, and Luke has always puzzled me. We always seem to spend our time in Church reading "the black" of Paul and not the "red" of the Christ. Amazing to me as a ex-Pastor is that hardly any of God's Ten Commandments are followed at all by most mainline churches and their teachings:

- We ignore the Commandment mandating the worship of God "only". Thus our Christian theology is full of idolatry and blasphemy as evidenced by the orthodox positions of Christianity concerning their interpretations of Jesus as being "God" according to the Gospel of John and the later Nicean Creed which undergirds all Christian theology today.
- Our churches are full of icons and statues to which many bow and figurines of "angels" and "Jesuses" adorn our homes because we think it "cute" or "religious"; but yet the Lord says "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth". We never stop to think that this yet today applies to us for our God is an "invisible" God and not a God with form or flesh as the Church has tried to make in their "Jesus". This is what Rome has done to us people. Sadly, the church stands guilty of creating "God in mans' image" and failed to understand that is is "man made in the image of God who is invisible".
- We continually take the name of God in vain; if not in casual cursing in just simple speech and both are forbidden. But are forbidden in this Commandment. God's name is not to be used in "secular" speech.
- We ignore and break the Sabbath Commandment every week by not observing the Sabbath and redefining the day of the Sun, Sunday, as the "Sabbath". Again we can thank Rome and Constantine for this.
- We are a nation that has failed to honor our Fathers and Mothers and neglect the elderly and the lawlessness of our Land testifies to this great sin again our horonable parents who gave us life.
- We completely misunderstand the Commandment that forbids killing never understanding that it is about "premeditated murder" only. In fact the God of the Bible commands "killing" as a judgment upon sin to root out the evil from the world and warns man that he will be judged by God if he fails to purge the "garden of its weeds".
- We completely misunderstand the Commandments forbidding adultery and sanction divorce in our Churches instead of repentance and forgiveness as the goal for adultery when the Commandment really refers to fornication before marriage and not sexual discretions after marriage (see Matt. 19 for more elaboration). According to the Hebraic interpretation adultery is not a "God" sanctioned reason for a divorce; only "fornication" before marriage when the man entered the marriage believing his wife a virgin and later finds out he has been defrauded in the marriage. The man has a right to divorce in this instance if he so chooses but discretions after marriage is the opportunity for God and the couple to seek healing between themselves and work out their problems which led to such a betrayal.
- The Commandment to "not steal" is specific and means "not to kidnap" another person. It does not apply to "stuff" which might be stolen from another's possession. This Commandment is interpreted to refer to only one kind of theft; namely, to someone who kidnaps a person, forces him or her to work for him, and then sells him or her into slavery.

And I could go on.

Most amazing is that the level of brainwashing is so severe that Christians in general are not even aware that this shift of focus away for God's Laws and Commandments had been propagated in the 2nd century. At the beginning, after all the apostles had died, the leaders who replaced them were mostly Gentile pagans. These Gentiles had comparatively little understanding of the Old Testament Scriptures unlike the Jewish apostles and followers of "the Christ in Israel" who had been exposed to the teachings of the Law and the Prophets since birth. This caused a shift in focus to the New Testament (written by fellow converts) and the elimination of anything Jewish. This was very true of the moral codes which Jesus exalted his followers to obey.

Answer for yourself: So what caused the church to virtually ignore the Law, the Hebrew Prophets, all the Apostles (except the Gnostic John), and even the teachings of the "Jewish Christ" himself and focus full attention to Paul and his writings on grace? The name is Marcion who is Gnostic.

Marcion was born around 100 C.E. at Sinope, a seaport located on the Black Sea coast of modern Turkey. His father was a leader in the church and so Marcion grew up in fellowship with the church in Asia Minor. Around 138 C.E., he traveled to Rome and became a member of one of the Roman churches. As a wealthy ship-owner, he large contributions to the church and he became a respected member in the Christian community. He was eloquent and learned in the contemporary form of the Gospel and the early Christian community and so gave the impression of being a Christian teacher with apostolic authority.

While Marcion was later condemned as a heretic over his unorthodox views and booted out of the Church in Rome, by the end of the 2nd century his doctrine became a serious threat to the mainstream Christian Church. His strange kind of Christianity had swept across large sections of the Roman Empire.

Marcion's reference was always the teachings of Paul (the only apostle whom he trusted), especially that of the saving grace. In his belief, the saving grace of God was miraculous. He held the Gnostic idea the whole creation to be faulty, being the creation of a lesser god, thus containing no element of the divine. Marcion got it partly right and partly wrong and we need to read closely to understand this if we are to every understand "Dualism" correctly.

Marcion was influenced by Persian dualism which is often called Zoroastrianism which is a belief in two forces in the universe, one good and one bad, who are constantly fighting it out for supremacy. As well Marcion believed that the Creator God who created the material universe was the God of Israel (Demiurge), who was a totally different God from the Father spoken of in the gospel of Christ (the Good God).

Answer for yourself: Is Marcion teaching Emanationism? Yes. Believe it or not so far so good as Marcion was expressing Ancient Concepts of Emanationism as taught by the Ancient Spiritual Masters for thousands of years. But there is a problem with Marcion and his Emanationism and later Dualism that is a departure from what the Ancients believed.

Answer for yourself: What was that? Well the answer comes later in this article so hold on.

It was here in Maricon's idea of Emanationism and the reality of "belief in two forces in the universe, one good and one bad, who are constantly fighting it out for supremacy that we find the seeds for later theological error. The problem is in Marcion's understanding of the "source" of these opposing powers which we will get to later.

Answer for yourself: Did Marcion see that the "Evil God" came from the Good God (the Absolute) or did he teach that both the Evil God and the Good God were in existence from the beginning? This is very important for our concept of Emanationism!

This is where Orthodox Christians and Gnostic Christians part company on the Creation. Orthodox believe Creation (physical world and man) became "corrupt" with Adam and "the Fall" where Gnostics believe Creation was corrupt to begin with since all Creation was the work of the Evil God (Demiurge) while yet the Absolute Spirit was good. Thus we have our basic "Dualism" of light vs dark, good vs bad, etc.

In the Second Century, when Christianity was coming to light as an important new theology, the ideas of personal acquaintance with God and dualistic worldview were old hats. Important for us to notice now is that a tendency towards dualism was evident in the West as far back as Zoroaster, author and prophet of a four thousand year-old Persian religion that we know only as Zoroastrianism. Assuming a dualistic battle between the God of Truth (Ahura Mazda) and the God of Falsehood (Ahriman), Zoroaster displays the universe as the interplay of these opposing forces in battle, as the two sides share in the Creation. He understood that in created being which we call "the physical realm" that it is but a picture of the "invisible realm" as Egypt had taught in the beginning; "so Above, so Beneath". Thus there are basically two opposing Forces or Energies in the Cosmos; we can call them "positive" and "negative" for simplicity. These over time become "God" and "Satan". With the advent of Zoroastrianism, dualism was in place within Western society, and would later be evident in Gnostic scripture. Also neither Greek and the Jewish religion can be said to be decidedly free of all Zoroastrian concepts of "dualism".

Dualism states that two opposing, or opposite, ideas, things, or categories mutually exist. A person holding such views is a dualist. Dualism explains the theory of knowledge by the confrontation of two different realities, subjective or objective; the religious cosmos in the terms of a perpetual conflict between good and evil, which has always existed. As one examines any dualistic situation he discovers that the two opposites are usually considered as coming from the same or similar source (the Divine Absolute). Thus "all comes from the One"; both visible and invisible. Thus this perpetual conflict of good and evil come from the One Absolute. This is a prime dualistic subject which we find over and over again when discussing the history of religion.

Answer for yourself: What do we have here? We have the attempt of early mankind to find the origin of "evil" in Creation and as we see he does not want to lay it at the feet of the Absolute One who we desire to be all "love" without "evil".

When hearing this statement of such "dualism" many think it only pertains to recent formalized religions, but such dualism has an ancient aspect as well. This is seen in the ancient religions centered on animism; that is the belief in Spirits of the same genus or origin capable of doing good or benevolent things or evil and injurious things. Understand that it is the results of the actions of these Spirits or mediators which determine whether it is good or evil, not the qualities themselves. Since all these Spirits are Energies or Forces of nature of the Cosmos they can be good in some respects or circumstances and bad in others but again understand that they all come from the One Absolute.

Moving onto more highly developed religions one finds that a supreme, all-powerful Spirit has emerged, called a great God. According to tribal legends and the Ancient Wisdom collected from around the world this supreme God is not the sole creator of the world, but has an adversary or collaborator who committed a malicious or stupid act that lead to irreparable harm. Thus we have saved the reputation of the "great God" and no evil can be connected to Him.

Answer for yourself: Why was this "second God" theorized? Simply to explain the existence of evil, sin, death, destruction, and the existence of suffering that must be kept apart and far away from the "Good God". In protecting God's character and identity and preserving His appearance as "all Good" men theorized the existence of another entity responsible for this suffering and sorrow in this physical Creation. Thus, the birth of "dualism" is a necessity and it follows that we have the later hypothesis that there is a second entity or "God" responsible for the flawed Creation in which we live.

Such legends express the astonishment of men finding themselves in the presence of evil and death, and expressing their belief that these terrible things do not belong to the essence of things, and they are not attributable to the supreme God. Here lies the germ of the dualism; the terrible things are believed to have come from the second being even though his independent origin is never positively expressed. This being may be a creature of the Supreme God or Absolute, or his origin is omitted.

Yes there are some who will believe that this "second being" had an independent origin and this confuses this whole system of Emanationism and such a one is Marcion as we shall soon see. This is why Rome will take issue with him believing him to believe in two separate "Absolute Gods".

Answer for yourself: Where did this dualism all start?

This dualistic struggle finds it literary origin in Ancient Egypt where we find it expressed in their religious "myths". This dualistic struggle between good and evil is exhibited between the sun god Re, symbolizing life and truth, and his antagonist snake god Apep (the Greeks called him Apophis) in the ancient Egyptian religion. Apep, a monster living in perpetual darkness, perpetually tried stopping Re's Barque on its nightly journey through the underworld. During this struggle between light and darkness, the gigantic serpent is wounded by knives and spears hurled by Re's divine entourage. In legend, Apep was the personification of darkness, evil, and chaos. Occasionally the deity was victorious for a short duration, but in the end Re triumphed (Sunrise). Apep was slain by Re who cut up his body and burned it (the heat of the Sun). Again it is very important that we notice that it is observed that both deities have the same divine nature but have opposite objectives. They find their origin in the Absolute One from which both "good" and "bad" emanate.

The dualism theme is expressed again in the ancient Egyptian religion with the legendary battle between Osiris and Set or Seth. Osiris, the grain god, was considered by some the counterpart of Re after death. He was crucial to Egyptian agriculture; therefore, every king was the divine embodiment of Horus in life and became Osiris after death. From this evolved the Osirian legend found in the Pyramid Texts to be later popularized and embellished by the Greek writer Plutarch. The legend describes Set as the adversary and jealous brother of Osiris who during a drunken party was persuaded by his brother to step into a sarcophagus. Once inside the coffin was nailed shut and thrown into the Nile. This was followed by years of searching by Isis who eventually found the body. She brought it home. On the journey back, she breathed breath into the body and impregnated herself with Osiris' semen and bore his son Horus. Set was not always depicted as being evil. According to one legend he helped the sun-god Re when he was about to be swallowed up by Apep. However, later Set became the personification of evil.

Answer for yourself: What do we see here? Here again, both parties share a divine nature but have opposite objectives.

Notice in the following examples down through history we have the same understanding of the Divine Realm passed on from nation to nation over thousands of years.

- The Babylonian mythology shares a similar legend. Marduk, the chief deity and tutelary god of Babylon, engages in the primordial battle with Tiamat, the power of the ocean. He kills her, splitting her in half and uses parts of her corpse to fashion heaven and earth. Tiamat fought him in revenge for the death of Apsu, the deep. These were two opposing deities sharing a divine nature.
- In Greek mythology the primordial battle was waged between Zeus and the Titans, Cronus, his father, in particular. Cronus swallowed all of his children. Zeus escaped the fate by trickery of Rhea, his mother. In battle Zeus overthrew his father, making him vomit up his brothers and sisters and also freed his aunts and uncles whom Cronus had imprisoned (Jordan 296). This ushered in the Olympians. Both deities shared the same nature; one was begotten from the other.

- The strict personification of evil in a deity began with the religion of Zoroastrianism, founded by Zoroaster or Zarathustra. The exact time in which Zoroaster lived is uncertain; many give the date of 6000 BC while others state 1200 BC. In Zoroastrianism the Holy Immortals included Ahura Mazda, Lord of Wisdom, and the six lesser Ahuras which he created through his Holy Spirit, Spenta Mainyu. According to Zoroaster these with other divinities were the Yazatas who helped mankind. Opposing them was Angra Mainya and the Daevas. This was the premise of the dualism of Zoroastrianism. The basis for the premise was formed by the eternal struggle between Ahura Mazda and Angra Mainya. These were both uncreated Spirits, existing eternally in time, they were destined by nature to be constant combatants within the physical world that Ahura Mazda, the good Spirit, created; Angra Mainya, the evil Spirit, by nature would continually try to destroy the world and everything in it. The Zoroastrians believed that Angra Mainyu would win some battles but at the end of the world, the eschatological theory, he would be defeated and good would triumph.

Answer for yourself: Did you catch the big difference above in the Zoroastrian concept of Dualism? How does this concept of "dualism" change in Zoroastrianism that causes such a huge impact upon later Judaism and Christianity as we see today? Give up?

It is in Zoroastrianism that the nature of dualism changes and assumes its more permanent characteristic. The common meaning of a dualistic conflict became good versus evil, right and/or wrong, and so on; the sources of good and evil were separate, both no longer came from a single source as in the Aegean era. Both sources of "good" and "evil" had independent uncreated origins for their source. Both were essentially eternal Forces and Powers and Energies; equals. There is no longer any Emanationism involved in the sources of "good" and "evil". No longer do we have a "unity" from the Absolute but rather a "war in heaven" between two opposing Powers with separate origins and beginnings. Now God is fighting Satan; not Satan doing God's bidding!

The Aegean gods, such as Zeus, were both good and bad; they shared both qualities as their worshippers considered them deities with human traits. Within the Zoroastrian theogony this changed, good and evil came from separate sources, not one; dualism no longer was a combat between a more powerful versus a weaker god; it now involved the struggle between the good, or perfect, deity against the evil one. This struggle, or war, between equals is to be seen influencing most-later religious philosophies.

It is here in Zoroastrianism that the concept of the "All in One" and "Emanationism" is altered and ended for the most part and the influence of Zoroastrianism in later Judaism and even emerging Christianity is responsible for the loss of these Ancient Divine Truths of "Emanationism" from the Absolute God.

The Christian Gnostics continued the cosmic dualism, but varied it in a different fashion. Good and evil still existed, but resided in two different Gods; but they yet had the same source. The Christian God, Yahweh, they called the Demiurge, the "bad God", and they believe the "good God" was impersonal and aloof from the world. Contact with the Absolute was to be made through "His Christ" within mankind. Christ was the "bridge" so to speak. The Demiurge had been born of the Spirit of God and wisdom, personified as Sophia, is the divine creative force. To explain again the evil in creation the Gnostics used as they had before various myths to explain Spiritual realities. Let us look at one. Sophia, without the knowledge of the Absolute God, her mate, gave birth to her son, the Demiurge, a horrible looking child who is the "evil God". Unbeknown to the Demiurge his mother had given him some of her power which contained the Spirit, which he thought was his and with which he created the physical world. When doing this the Gnostics believed the Demiurge entrapped the Spirit (Divine Sparks) in matter. They viewed the Demiurge as being the Yahweh, Christian God, the creator, basing their belief on the statement, "I am God, and there is no one besides me."

For the Gnostics this changed the dynamics of the dualism. It was no longer the opposition between good and evil; they held the Christian God, called Demiurge, was evil representing the Devil; but the opposition was now between Spirit and matter since the Spirit was entrapped in matter. This oppositional change of "good versus evil" to "Spiritual versus material" generated an overwhelming desire to eliminate the material among members of the Gnostic sects. This desire to eliminate the material was based upon the belief that the Demiurge through creation had entrapped the Spirit, especially in man, in matter, and the only way to ultimately free the Spirit was not to prolong life through propagation and sexual union. This view was part of the intuitive or reflective knowledge, which the Gnostics called "gnosis," which came from the study of man's inner self or Soul and illuminated the Logos to bring salvation.

- A more prominent dualistic influence on Gnosticism was Platonic philosophy. As is well known, Platonic thought is dualistic in a variety of ways. The philosopher, in his cosmological work Timaeus, states that the Earth is created by a Demiurge and that there are two "World Souls:" the good, and the not-good, both of which are equal in power. Most Gnostic sects shared this idea, as we have seen. More of Plato's thought than his cosmology displays an innate separation between matter and Spirit. Perhaps his most famous idea of all, the "divided line," found in Book VI of the Republic, presents us with a dualism that most definitely sparked off similar currents of thought within the world of human reason. According to this idea, there exist extra-material realms that contain "Ideals" (an important concept to the Gnostics). These Ideals are archetypes – blueprints, as it were – upon which material creations were modeled. The realms of the ideal were much closer to "reality" than the realms of the Created in which we live. He expounds on this idea more firmly in his "Allegory of the Cave" which is highly regarded in Gnostic circles. And, who can forget the famous phrase that so inspired Socrates in the Apology: Gnosti Sauthon --- "Know thyself." In fact, an excerpt from the Republic was discovered in a cache of gnostic scripture at Nag Hammadi, Egypt in 1945.

It is time to refocus. Central to our purpose in these articles is the obtainment of the metaphysical knowledge of these earliest Ancients and whom they influenced like the earliest Christians regarding their later beliefs about God and the Soul. Let us take one by one the cardinal points of the Gnostic creed and trace them back to their earliest appearance. Central to the above ideas is that before Zoroastrianism "the All is from the One" and not separate sources if we recall. This again beings us to "Emanationism" as first understood by the Ancient Egyptians as mentioned before. What we are really talking about here is Quantum Physics.

Emanationism is contemporary with the beginning of high civilization in Egypt. The "Memphite Theology" is a tractate from the Old Kingdom. In it, Ptah, the deity whom the Egyptians of Memphis considered the eldest of the gods, has emanated from him four couples of gods, male and female, in descending order of being. Ptah thought, spoke, and his word created them. Each god or goddess had no other being than the "heart and tongue of Ptah" and by them all things were made and without them was not anything made that was made. Ptah himself, incidentally, is represented not with the ordinary body of a man, but as a swaddled mummy with a huge protruding phallus, the combination of life and death. Earlier still than the Memphite Theology is the Ennead of Heliopolis, where the same four pairs are derived from the creator Atun. This, however, is an ordinary creation myth and does not share with the Memphis tract its remarkable philosophy. The unique idea of Emanationism is that the Great God acts only through his emanations.

Let us continue in the final article in this series as we look at some important historical changes to Emanationism and Dualism.

Now let us continue with the last article in this series.

HIDDEN TEACHINGS OF THE GNOSTIC CHRISTIANS CONCERNING THE SOUL #6

Changes were being made to the evolution of this "Dualism" and "Emanationism" over time and from nation to nation down the corridors of history. In Egypt and Judaism as the fruit of Egyptian religion we don't find the concept of a "war" of Good and Evil and the debauching of creation like we will in later Babylonian and later Persian ideas. It never seems to have occurred to the Egyptians or the early Semites that there was anything seriously wrong with the world; "good" and "evil" worked in harmony (ma'at). But with the rise of Mesopotamian and later Persian religions they are fixated and haunted by the power of evil. This is an important distinction. The Egyptians were well aware of evil, but they granted it no metaphysical, let alone ontological importance:

- Isis and Osiris saved men from death and the grave.
- The saviors of Persian religion save man from sin, against which, unaided, man, and all creation with him, could not prevail.

We have an abundance of texts which indicate that the Egyptians, like the Quakers, found it relatively easy to be good. The same can be said for Judaism which teaches that the Torah serves to "train the Soul" of man for "goodness. Farther east, the Babylonians, then the Persians, and after them the majority of Christians which built their concept of "good and evil" off of Zoroastrianism seem to have found it difficult indeed.

The Gnostics went still further. Although in Persian religion evil often functions as an autonomous principle, there is no suggestion that creation, matter, or man, is bad as such. This idea, of the intrinsic evil of the world, is the peculiar and distinguishing notion of most of the Gnostic cults.

From Persia comes the concept of the universe as a moral battleground, existence in itself as the struggle of light against darkness. We are familiar with this language in the New Testament and among the Jewish sectaries of the Dead Sea Scrolls. With it, into Gnosticism, came a whole physics and metaphysics of light which was to survive in various forms in Western thought for centuries.

This "battleground of Emanationism and Dualism" which we see in Heaven above and in Nature below with all of its opposition of light and darkness, positive and negative, warmth and coldness, spring/summer and autumn/winter, the equinoxes and solstices, life and death, is but a picture to teach man of the dualistic struggle within himself and his Soul. In order to understand the Soul of man one must begin with the Gnostic understanding of Whom we call God for this Mystery begins there and true knowledge of the Universe in which we live is best taught there. The Gnostic God concept is more refined than that of most religions. In its way, it unites and reconciles the recognitions of Monotheism and Polytheism, as well as of Theism, Deism and Pantheism. In the Gnostic view, there is a true, ultimate and transcendent Absolute God, who is beyond all created universes and who never created anything in the sense in which the word “create” is ordinarily understood. This is the Ultimate Consciousness, Energy, and Intelligence for all which will be. But from this impersonal, ultimate and transcendent Absolute One came the "good Force/Energy/God" and the "evil Force/Energy/God" which mediates all planes of Creation; both invisible and visible. While this True God did not fashion or create anything, He (or, It) "emanated" or brought forth from within Himself the substance of all there is in all the worlds, visible and invisible. In a certain sense, it may therefore be true to say that all is God, for all consists of the substance of God. By the same token, it must also be recognized that many portions of the original divine essence have been projected so far from their source that they underwent unwholesome changes in the process which led to corrupt portions of the Emanated Divine Essence.

The basic Gnostic myth has many variations, but all of these refer to Aeons, intermediate Deific beings who exist between the ultimate, True God and ourselves. They, together with the True God, comprise the realm of Fullness (Pleroma) wherein the potency of divinity operates fully. The Fullness stands in contrast to our existential state, which in comparison may be called emptiness. One of the aeonial beings who bears the name Sophia ("Wisdom") is of great importance to the Gnostic world view. As mentioned before in the course of her journeyings, Sophia came to emanate from her own being a flawed consciousness, a being who became the creator of the material and psychic cosmos, all of which he created in the image of his own flaw. This being, unaware of his origins and the Absolute One, imagined himself to be the ultimate and absolute God. Since he took the already existing divine essence within himself he fashioned it into various forms, he is also called the Demiurgos or "half-maker". There is an authentic half, a true Deific component within creation, but it is not recognized by the half-maker and by his cosmic minions, the Archons or "rulers".

Human nature mirrors the duality found in the world: in part it was made by the false creator God and in part it consists of the light of the True God. Humankind contains a perishable physical and psychic component, as well as a Spiritual component which is a fragment of the Divine Essence. This latter part is often symbolically referred to as the "divine spark". The recognition of this dual nature of the world and of the human being has earned the Gnostic tradition the epithet of "dualist". Now it become clearer.

Humans are generally ignorant of the divine spark resident within them. This ignorance is fostered in human nature by the influence of the false creator and his Archons, who together are intent upon keeping men and women ignorant of their true nature and destiny. Thus the cry of the Gnostics to "awaken" to the truth concerning ourselves as living being; half "good" with the potential to do "evil". Thus the need for instruction, thus the need for the Torah to train the Soul. This Torah is interpreted by 4 levels; one of which the Rabbis teach is the "Sod" or "Mystical" meaning of the text. This is the "secret wisdom" taught by the Ancients which helps "awaken the Soul within us", "the Christ" within us that allows it to fulfill our Soul's incarnational destiny. Anything that causes us to remain attached to earthly things serves to keep us in enslavement to these lower cosmic rulers. Man has "forgotten" his Divine nature and from where he has come and his Heavenly home. According to Gnostic theology, a series of "falling away" from the Whole and Absolute that is God occurred in eternity which resulted in all that there is today. After the first "fall", the divine consciousness descended to the level of the divided consciousness; now after another "fall", it has fallen even further, into the depths of the unconscious; the divine consciousness has been "forgotten." It is now humanity's privilege to discover the potential realms of human existence and face the great challenge of the "ascension of consciousness" through the Man-God-Spirit transformation. And lest we forget the training ground for the Soul is the Torah which means the "instruction" of God intended to perfect ourselves in our Earthy sojourn.

Once Souls fell into the lower levels of consciousness, they became enamored of it and burned with the desire to experience the pleasures of matter. The Souls then no longer wanted to disengage itself from these lower levels. Thus the world was born. From that moment Souls forgot themselves. They forgot they original habitation, their true center and eternal being.

Gnosticism proceeds from one fundamental insight: this world in which we find ourselves is thoroughly and irretrievably less than holy. Thus the admonition given all mankind:

Lev 20:7 7 Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the LORD your God. (KJV)

The Soul is trapped in a prison of flesh, and the flesh is intrinsically less than divine. According to Gnostic theology as stated above, this whole creation of the cosmos came about as the result of a tragicomic mistake: the fall of the Soul from God. Thanks to the advent of the Absolute God's Emanations, "the Christ" in the lower realms of consciousness, the power of reconciling the fallen Souls has been given to restore the Oneness with our Creator "good God" and usher in the kingdom of light over the kingdom of flesh and matter. The unity of the Godhead is assured thanks to the introduction of the new uniting force, the Logos, the part of God who acts in the flesh and the material. It is important to distinguish the Logos (Christ) from the personification of "the Christ" in religious texts named Jesus who is representative of a "complete and perfected" person. Any person has the potential of becoming a Logos but it is the example of a perfected Soul named and exampled by this "Jesus" that we as men and women can learn that we likewise are incarnated as a Logos ourselves and therefore we can become a Christ on earth as our example give us in the "Jesus Story". You see the "Jesus Story" is the story of the Soul; a perfected Soul which is our goal in our Earthly existence.

We, as humans, cannot comprehend the omnipotent power available to us until we utilize the Christ power. When we effectively use the divine "Christ awareness" we have the ability to help in the liberation of the imprisoned "sparks of divinity" from flesh and rejoin them to the Source. The divine plan of creation will become complete as the divine outpouring of Christ gnosis liberates humanity from ignorance. The result of this will be the redemption of all human beings.

The Christ power can only liberate Souls through the call and revelation of Christ gnosis to, "Awake, remember who you are and where you come from!" It is time to act the part. This begins with repentance and instruction in the Torah and the Laws and Commandments of God. Now you understand that "grace" comes as we merit it by trying to obey the intended program for our Soul in the "Jesus Story" which is nothing more than the Torah lived-out in an example for us. But since the Soul cannot by itself hear the gnosis, the Christ power resorts to elaborate strategies to create the conditions for which all Souls will be saved.

Christian Gnostics felt that initiation into the Cosmic Christ gnosis is inseparable from "the light which lighteth every person coming into the world." It is this light within, our Higher Self, which each individual must bring to at-one-ment with the divine Source if liberation is to occur.

As more and more people hear the call to "Wake up!" and attain the Christ gnosis and become liberated, their Souls are received back into the bosom of Divine Consciousness. The Soul becomes free from unholy flesh and the cycle of birth and rebirth. Christian Gnostics seek to achieve this by cultivating the Higher Self within people to seek reunification with the Godhead. But each Soul returning to its divine source must, after death, pass through the various levels of consciousness. Sometimes Christian Gnostics describe seven of these heavenly realms, other times ten.

Death releases the divine spark from its lowly prison, the body, but if there has not been a substantial work of Gnosis undertaken by the Soul prior to death, it becomes likely that the divine spark will be hurled back into, and then re-embodied within, the pangs and slavery of the physical world. Not all humans are Spiritual (pneumatics) and thus ready for Gnosis and liberation. Some are earthbound and materialistic beings (hyletics), who recognize only the physical reality. Others live largely in their psyche (psychics). Such people usually mistake the Demiurge for the True God and have little or no awareness of the Spiritual world and the aeons (angels) beyond matter and mind. In the course of history, humans progress from materialistic sensate slavery, by way of ethical religiosity, to Spiritual freedom and liberating Gnosis. As the scholar G. Quispel wrote: "The world-Spirit in exile must go through the Inferno of matter and the Purgatory of morals to arrive at the Spiritual Paradise." This kind of evolution of consciousness was envisioned by the Gnostics, long before the concept of evolution was known.

Man is in need of "salvation" from his plight as Souls entrapped in bodies capable of such evil. Evolutionary forces alone are insufficient, however, to bring about Spiritual freedom. Humans are caught in a predicament consisting of physical existence combined with ignorance of their true origins, their essential nature and their ultimate destiny. To be liberated from this predicament, human beings require help, although they must also contribute their own efforts. From earliest times Messengers of the Light have come forth from the True God in order to assist humans in their quest for Gnosis. Only a few of these salvific figures or "Avatars" are mentioned in Gnostic scripture; some of the most important are Seth (the third Son of Adam), the Jewish Christ who teaches through the Jewish Faith and Religion, Paul, Marcion, Basilides, Valentinus and, Prophet Mani, C. Jung, etc. The majority of Gnostics always looked to these and other teaches who taught the Gnostic Christ, the Jewish Christ, as the principal savior figure (the Soter).

Gnostics do not look to salvation from sin (original or other), but rather from the ignorance of which sin is a consequence. Ignorance or should I say ignorance of Spiritual realities is dispelled only by Gnosis, and the decisive revelation of Gnosis is brought by the Messengers of Light, especially by Christ, the Logos of the True God who lives and operates in our fleshly bodies. It is not by His suffering and death but by His life of teaching and His imparted revelation and illumination within man that Christ establishes the mysteries and performs his work of salvation in each man and woman. The Gnostic concept of salvation, like other Gnostic concepts, is a subtle one. On the one hand, Gnostic salvation may easily be mistaken for an unmediated individual experience, a sort of Spiritual do-it-yourself project. Gnostics hold that the potential for Gnosis, and thus, of salvation is present in every man and woman, and that salvation is not vicarious but individual. At the same time, they also acknowledge that Gnosis and salvation can be, indeed must be, stimulated and facilitated in order to effectively arise within consciousness. This stimulation is supplied by Messengers of Light who, in addition to their teachings, establish salvific mysteries (sacraments; baptism, passover/eucharist, anointing with oil, marriage, mystery of the bridal chamber) which can be administered by apostles of the Messengers and their successors. One needs also remember that knowledge of our true nature, as well as other associated realizations, are withheld from us by our very condition of earthly existence. The True God of transcendence is unknown in this world, in fact He is often called the Unknown Father. It is thus obvious that revelation from on High is needed to bring about salvation. The indwelling spark must be awakened from its terrestrial slumber by the saving knowledge that comes "from without".

At times in the New Testament we encounter the "Paul Problem" where Paul both "taught the Law" and "taught others to not obey the Law". This is confusing until you understand Paul was a Gnostic and Gnostics came to possess an "inner knowing" that eclipsed the knowing of the mind. I pray you understand what comes next and while your read this remember that there are levels of mankind as understood by Gnostics.

- Hyletics are people earthbound and are strictly materialistic beings who recognize only the physical reality.
- 'Psyche' is the word we get 'psychology' from, and you may remember the tale of Cupid and Psyche, from Greek myth. It can refer to the personality, to one's character, Soul, etc. Often it is translated as Soul, but it can in some contexts refer to emotions and instincts, one's life energy (similar to the animating essence/anima/Soul), too. So to say someone was limited by their psyche, in religious terms, or is 'Soulish' would mean their psyche is limiting or acting up. What is translated as carnal fruit in Paul's letters, is really 'psychic' fruit, if you look at the Greek. The psyche acts up and causes needless strife, meddles or tries to control others, enjoys judging others, etc. Spiritual fruit on the other hand transcends the psyche, and might even heal/transform the psyche. In some Gnostic texts, the way the psychics are described indicates they were understood to be people who have the capacity to improve their character and to purify their Soul, to seek to do more of what is right and wise, but who are nonetheless not aware of, understanding of, open to, or receptive of, deeper Spiritual teachings of Gnosis. In certain Gnostic texts/teachings, 'psychics' was contrasted with 'pneumatics'.
- Pneumatics are Spiritual people, and in Gnostic texts they are people who are rising above the merely psychic.

Now knowing this we are ready for what comes next. If the words "ethics" or "morality" are taken to mean a system of rules, then Gnosticism is opposed to them both. But yet Gnostics taught God's Law and Harmony as a way of life. So we are missing something here. Typical Gnostics taught that such systems of Laws usually originate with the Demiurge and are covertly designed to serve his purposes. If, on the other hand, morality is said to consist of an inner integrity arising from the illumination of the indwelling spark, a spark that embodies these Laws and Commandments of God, then the Gnostic will embrace this Spiritually informed existential ethic as ideal. He will live as "the Christ" that lives within him. He will be "in Christ" as Paul speaks. We are all "Christs in waiting"! This explains why Paul grew to a higher understanding than the literal obedience of a Law for he came to understand the intent behind the Law; a higher Law. When not realizing that at times his audiences needed these "simple laws" for they were yet "psychics" needing more training of the Soul he seems to rush to move past these Laws hoping to make them "pneumatics" that we have a Paul problem. They simply were not ready for these "higher laws"; they had not got the elementary things of the Laws down good enough yet. Thus the rebuke by James in Acts 21:

Acts 21:21 21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs. (KJV)

The Christ taught these higher Laws as did Paul:

Matt 5:21-22 21 Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment: 22 But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire. (KJV)

Matt 5:27-28 27 Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: 28 But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. (KJV)

I think you see the point. It takes time for a seed to grow and we are all at different levels of Spiritual Growth of our Soul.

To the Gnostic, commandments and rules are not salvific; they are not substantially conducive to salvation. Judaism never taught that one is saved by obeying the Torah! That is why the Law does not save...but it elevates one "saved". Rules of conduct may serve numerous ends, including the structuring of an ordered and peaceful society, and the maintenance of harmonious relations within social groups. Rules, however, are not relevant to salvation; that is brought about only by Gnosis. One must "KNOW" why he must obey these Laws of God; one must come to know that he is a Divine creation and to do any less is a waste of his Soul. Morality therefore needs to be viewed primarily in temporal and secular terms; it is ever subject to changes and modifications in accordance with the Spiritual development of the individual.

As noted in the discussion above, "hyletic materialists" usually have little interest in morality, while "psychic disciplinarians" often grant to it a great importance. In contrast, "Pneumatic Spiritual" persons are generally more concerned with other, higher matters. Different historical periods also require variant attitudes regarding human conduct. Thus both the Manichaean and Cathar Gnostic movements, which functioned in times where purity of conduct was regarded as an issue of high import, responded in kind. The present period of Western culture perhaps resembles in more ways that of second and third century Alexandria. It seems therefore appropriate that Gnostics in our age adopt the attitudes of classical Alexandrian Gnosticism, wherein matters of conduct were largely left to the insight of the individual.

Gnosticism embraces numerous general attitudes toward life: it encourages non-attachment and non-conformity to the world, a "being in the world, but not of the world"; a lack of egotism; and a respect for the freedom and dignity of other beings. This is just the opposite of Roman Christianity. Nonetheless, it appertains to the intuition and wisdom of every individual "Gnostic" to distill from these principles individual guidelines for their personal application.

Phil 2:12 12 Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. (KJV)

When Confucius was asked about death, he replied: "Why do you ask me about death when you do not know how to live?" This answer might easily have been given by a Gnostic. To a similar question posed in the Gnostic Gospel of Thomas, Jesus answered that human beings must come by Gnosis to know the ineffable, divine reality from whence they have originated, and whither they will return. This transcendental knowledge must come to them while they are still embodied on earth.

Death does not automatically bring about liberation from bondage in the realms of the Demiurge. Those who have not attained to a liberating Gnosis while they were in embodiment may become trapped in existence once more. It is quite likely that this might occur by way of the cycle of rebirths. Gnosticism does not emphasize the doctrine of reincarnation prominently, but it is implicitly understood in most Gnostic teachings that those who have not made effective contact with their transcendental origins while they were in embodiment would have to return into the sorrowful condition of earthly life.

In regard to salvation, or the fate of the Spirit and Soul after death, one needs to be aware that help is available. Valentinus, the greatest of Gnostic teachers, taught that Christ and Sophia await the Spiritual man -- the pneumatic Gnostic -- at the entrance of the Pleroma, and help him to enter the bride chamber of final reunion. Ptolemaeus, disciple of Valentinus, taught that even those not of pneumatic status, the psychics, could be redeemed and live in a Heavenworld at the entrance of the Pleroma. In the fullness of time, every Spiritual being will receive Gnosis and will be united with its higher Self -- the angelic Twin -- thus becoming qualified to enter the Pleroma. None of this is possible, however, without earnest striving for Gnosis.

Answer for yourself: How would like to have lived before the rise of the mighty Roman Empire and heard the above as the "true gospel" as the teachings of "the Christ"? Having now heard this how do we reconcile the Gnostic Gospel or can we with the Roman version and reinterpretation of the Gnostic "true gospel"? We can't. That is the problem. Now you know why on my other websites I mention the First New Testament and the Roman Second New Testament.

CAN WE FIND THE NAME OF "JESUS CHRIST" IN EGYPT 10,000 B.C.E.?

Answer for yourself: If it can be shown that the name "Jesus Christ" existed in Egypt some 10,000 years B.C.E. then what impact does that have upon the supposed "historical-literal" Jesus Christ of the first century? Did the ancient Egyptians look some 10,000 years into the future toward the birth of a Jewish Rabbi for their salvation when Israel would not exist for some 9000 years? Or, was the Spiritual Concept of the indwelling God and evolving Divinity within mankind known by them and we find this knowledge of the indwelling God incarnated into mankind chiseled in stone as the equivalent to the more familiar "Jesus Christ" of what we read today? If this "Jesus Christ" can be shown to have been known in ancient Egypt and was never understood as a "literal" or "historical" personage that is limited to but one person then why has this same ancient Egyptian Spiritual concept been expressed to us as a solitary supposed "literal" and "historical" person since the 2nd through 5th centuries by Rome? Equipped with this ancient knowledge and questions let us investigate the information presented in this article and obtain the answers we need.

An unbiased study of modern scholarship regarding history reveals to the "truth-seeker" that there is not a shred of legitimate historical evidence anywhere that the "Jesus Story" originated as the biography of a man named Jesus; in fact an abundant amount of scholarly evidence exists that he did not. An unbiased study of Comparative Religion reveals that the basic plot of the "Jesus Story", including the motif of a crucified savior, already existed in many other religions long prior to the alleged time of Jesus. Lastly when one studies Solar Mythology he finds beyond any doubt that "Jesus Story" is actually an allegory for the annual passage of the seasons of the year and the Sun as its moves through the Equinoxes and Solstices. This Celestial phenomena was understood by the Ancients to be but a symbolic representation of a higher invisible Energy of the Cosmos which found a place to tabernacle in the flesh of mankind. This Celestial picture was understood to be an archetype for a Invisible Spiritual Reality that centered in the Descent of the Soul into matter (flesh). This Cosmic Truth was captured not only in the receptive spirits and minds of gifted men and women in Ancient Egypt some 10,000 years B.C.E. but was immortalized through the aid of personification and anthropomorphic language in the depiction of Egypt's religious myths of Osiris and Horus but in subsequent nation's Sungods, Saviors, Karests, and Christs. This fact was known but yet concealed by the Early Church Fathers whereby they reinterpreted this Divine Allegory and presented it anew as if a "literal-history" of a godman; known today as the Jesus Christ of Christianity.

In the last two hundred years with the restoration of the Egyptian Hieroglyphs such charges can be proven beyond any doubt. With the enlightenment of Europe and the advances made by archeology in these last two hundred or so years the the modern world is awakening slowly to the fact that in the days which describe by the noun "ancient", though it was but a few thousand years ago in the run of millions, advanced men with a heightened spirituality and deserving of the name "sages" were deeply experienced and versed in profound philosophy and possessed knowledge of things both human and the Divine that exceeds quite often the fare we see exhibited by "religious" men and women today. These "Spiritual Masters", as I prefer to call them, well comprehended the great sciences of both cosmology and anthropology. Possibly these terms need to be defined for new readers:

- Cosmology: the branch of philosophy dealing with the origin and general structure of the universe, with its parts, elements, and laws, and especially with such of its characteristics as space, time, causality, and freedom. It included the branch of astronomy that deals with the general structure and evolution of the universe.
- Anthropology: the science that deals with the origins, physical and cultural development, biological characteristics, and social customs and beliefs of humankind which includes of course religious beliefs and their origins. It is also called philosophical anthropology and includes the study of the nature and essence of humankind.

The fruits of archeology and historical discovery has made evident today that it is men of this caliber who inscribed and recorded the great Scriptures of ancient religions which have won and held the reverence of mankind. It is the great wisdom found within these sacred writing which have made them the unique objects of religious veneration and the canons of spiritual authority for most of the world over long ages. Indeed for many the reverence paid these "sacred writings" has been often described as "worship": something of the character of reverence offered to something regarded as Divine. So we find that over the whole of the world various traditions that have prevailed for thousands of years that attests that the Bible authors were men of a divine or semi-divine order, or at least men inspired by a divine inspiration to transmit to mankind the heavenly dictation of sacred truths which they witnessed both above, around, and within their own species.

Many never undertake such a study of these sacred writings but if one were do attempt such a scholarly study he will be amazed as I was that there exists within these writings we call "the Bible" as well as other exiting tomes of ancient literature the presence of a definitely formulated and high organic truth-structure that shows all the marks of an much earlier period or ancient period beyond the time of their assumed writings. But not only that these "spiritual truths" that we grow too revere often overlaps between various ancient nations which when considered can be shown to form a "unity" that consists of essential elements of a great logical systematization of fundamental principles of a cosmic order of being, expressed in many varied forms of representation everywhere over the field of ancient culture. Primarily, of course, the great wisdom was embodied in volumes of a vast body of literature, a literature so cryptically profound that its hidden and original secret meaning has almost completely eluded the most scholarly of the world's wise men today. In other words we have lost a tremendous amount of Ancient knowledge about the Divine from the ancient day to the present and just in the last one hundred or so years as this "lost knowledge" concerning these Ancient secret writings have once again seeing the light of day. Owing to the loss of this "gnosis" or knowledge concerning the proper interpretation of what mankind has erroneously read for some 1700 years when considering alone the Christian Bible needless to say we often arrive at religious beliefs 180 degrees contrary to what the original writings first intended let alone what the writers originally desired to convey. Due to this loss of "gnosis", the key to proper interpretation of the sacred documents we inherited, we have fallen pry to perversions and misinterpretations of that ancient corpus of wisdom which has afflicted the religious consciousness of the world, particularly in the West, with an intellectual fog that approaches the status of a universal madness for some two millennia.

Not only in the scripts and handwritings of religion, however, but also in a wide variety of other modes of expression was the wisdom tradition of the Ancients embodied and transmitted by these Ancient "Spiritual Masters". It is found, but always in subtle forms of concealment and because of this method or preserving of these Divine Truths by the Ancients mankind since has been bewildered and confused at many of the later conclusions of investigators. The areas of which I speak include ancient art, architecture, myth-making, secret society ritual, dramatic scenario, music, mathematics, anthropological science, logic, rhetoric, philosophy, astronomy, semantics, psychology, festival ordinances, social ceremonies and throughout life generally. Now, perhaps strangest of all the channels through which it was given expression, comes the momentous revelation that the shrewd genius of antiquity had even insinuated a form of its basic outline into the very structure of that ground-base of all literature; namely the alphabet. The announcement and elucidation of its presence in this, the fundamental semantic code for the transmission of human thought, should rank as an epochal event in the history of world culture.

Contrary to what we might think growing up in our "literalized Western culture" the Ancients who possessed such incredible wisdom viewed the high spiritual culture in a different light from that in which it is envisaged today. While modern intelligence desires to share and disseminate its blessings and knowledge over the widest popular area, hoping that it may edify the greatest number of people generally, the sages of old did not hold to such a "Modus Operandi". These "Spiritual Masters" who possessed these heightened Spiritual insights viewed the cultural potential of the "vulgar masses" as practically nothing, and therefore deemed it a sacrilege to cast the precious jewels of esoteric truth and knowledge to the "swine" that would trample them in the mire of unconscionable crudity of misunderstanding. This should bring to mind one of the teachings put into the mouth of "the Christ" in the New Testament:

Matt 7:6 6 Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you. (KJV)

This religious philosophy did not begin in the first century with some unique saying by some Jewish Rabbi but rather can be found exiting to the beginning of Ancient Egypt some 13,000 years B.C.E. It may be said that the history of religious practices and devotion of many religious groups have over many centuries and millennia demonstrated the practical wisdom of this conservatism in preserving higher "Spiritual Truths" in the veil of secrecy known only to their "initiates". This process of preservation of higher Spiritual Truth is known by various names but the two most common are divided between the terms "Inner Mysteries" and "Outer Mysteries".

Matt 13:10-11 10 And the disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables? 11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. (KJV)

John 16:12 12 I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. (KJV)

As you can see there were groups privy to special revelation and even within them there were divisions to be found between those "in the know" and those "not in the know".

It is my conclusion having done the necessary study into the Ancient wisdom of the nations, including both Egypt and Judaism, that the perversion, corruption, materialization and especially the "literalization" of the lofty mystical sense of ancient cryptic literature, has caused perhaps the most colossal debacle in the culture of spiritual values in the course of known history. Its easily discernible evil fruit is found in the complete misrepresentation of the Occidental mind regarding all things religious, theological and Scriptural. This loss of "gnosis" and the keys to interpreting these Ancient writings has caused the "literalization" of the "Mystical" and "Spiritual" has caused mankind to ascribe erroneous understandings and meanings to these volumes of inherited spiritual writings that on the surface seem reasonable and valid but that actually are unrelated to the true interpretation of them intended by the Ancients who wrote them in the first place. Such a loss of the "keys of interpretation" of these inherited spiritual writings has caused millions down through the Roman history of the Church of knowing the sublime meaning of the Jewish-Christian Scriptures, which are a collection of ancient mythographic portrayals of spiritual truth, sadly and grievously mistaken for history.

Not only were the Sages constrained to adopt methods of crypticism of varied forms to safeguard precious cosmic and "Divine Truths" from desecration by the "rabble," but they employed a technique which found its basic authentication in nature itself. As the world below is a mundane reflection and copy of an overshadowing world of spiritual truth, they strove to portray the structural forms of that higher truth by representing it under the forms of its counterparts everywhere existent in the natural world. Egypt had a term for this: "So as above so below". Let me stop right here and show you a case in point. Most everyone is familiar with the "Star of David" as it is associated with King David of the Jews.

Answer for yourself: But are you aware that its origin comes again from Egypt? What we find is this Spiritual principle, "So as above so beneath" modeled in these intersecting pyramids; one pointing up toward Heaven and one pointing downward to earth which is to be a reflection and embodiment of these "Spiritual Truths" given to mankind from Heaven above. Again we find the same principle echoed even in the New Testament but again stripped of its greatness and reference to the Ancients:

Matt 6:10 10 Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. (KJV)

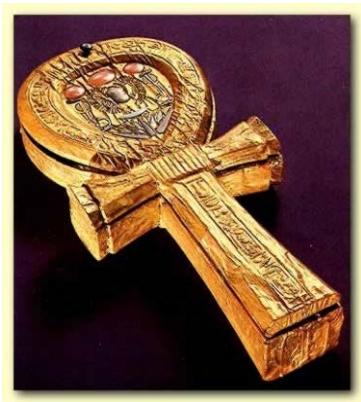
This beautiful verse and Divine Truth is but another manifestation of the Ancient wisdom of Egypt: "So as above, so beneath".

LOOKING AT THE ALPHABET....CAN WE FIND GOD AND HIS CHRIST?

It is time we begin to focus on the alphabet to see wonders beyond our own imagination that lay there unnoticed by many. Remember as we begin that this great structure of elements comprising the cosmic logic of creation was woven into the pattern of all human cultural expression and even the alphabet itself as we shall see presently as we look, possessing these "keys of proper interpretation", just what lies hidden and in cryptic form in the "words" of our Bible and the individual order of letters and the alphabet beneath them.

It is the words themselves which carrying the elements of the original letters that represent the forms of the archaic thought of the Ancient Spiritual Masters which only as their symbols they portrayed. We find the deep "Spiritual Insights of the Ancients", hidden in their thoughts which was reserved for initiates, in the examination of the groupings of letters making up the word which captured the Spiritual Truths long lost to the world today. It is in reconstructing the hidden outlines of meaning from the alphabet that we pierce into the very core and heart of the most profound undertones of all literature.

Answer for yourself: What is a letter in the alphabet?



It is a commonplace of present educational theory to say that letters of the alphabet are symbolic representations of the sounds universally possible to the human vocal organs. Unknown to most is that the very letter's shape is more than than mere algebraic x's or sheer echoic imitations. They are in fact evident forms shaped to picture basic ideas. In other words letters express ideas. Let us look at one example when considering the capital letter A. The letter "A", for instance, is obviously the cardinal letter "I", the symbol of primordial unity (since it is also the number "1"). This "I" is split apart from the top and spread apart representing, as the Ancients describe it, the creative duality of spirit and matter, the cross-bar indicating the interrelation which dynamically subsists between both spirit and matter. This is seen in the "A".

Answer for yourself: How many of you ever saw the dichotomy between spirit and matter when looking at the letter "A" before now or its importance since being the first letter of the alphabet? What is the message to mankind owing to the fact that the letter "A" is the first letter of the alphabet and contains such a hidden meaning right from the start in man's communication with both God and others make in His image?

Let us look at other examples. The letter "U" or "V" symbolizes, exactly as it is drawn, the descent of spirit into matter and its return above. We are speaking here of the "descent of the Soul or God into matter". We express this concept by the more common saying today that man is the "Temple of the Holy Spirit". This basically is quantum physics as understood by the Ancient Spiritual Masters. Quantum physics is such a vast subject I will leave that for your own study but basically what it teaches is that "energy", or "God", can become "matter" or "flesh". Now you have it in a nutshell.

Now the letter "W" pluralizes the "U", and we find, not strangely, the "W" to be the letter that pluralizes words in the Egyptian hieroglyphics. The "O" readily symbolizes the endlessness of matter and of eternity; a never ending cycle of time. Often the wedding ring is mentioned in such a capacity at marriage ceremonies. These concepts are very, very important; so important that the Gnostics, when they named the unit of deity in the cosmos, chose the "IAO". In so doing they had condensed by three letters a Eternal Spiritual Concept in the triadic name which signified the initial dividing of the first unit divine consciousness, the "I" (primordial unity), apart into the duality, "A" (spirit and matter), and the concept of the eternal cycle "O" (the pattern and cycle of spirit conjoining with matter). And so even the book of Revelation can say: "I" (am the) "A" (and the) "O", the beginning and the end, the first and the last,"--IAO.

It is possibly true that literation started with the utilization of the two simplest elements of written symbolism, the vertical line "I" and the circle "O". An amazing fact to note is that nearly all divine names in antiquity were built up from and upon these two letters: "I" and "O". For the Egyptians of remote past time had combined the two in the form of what is almost certainly the most ancient of cross symbols, the crux ansata, ansated cross, called by them the A N K H. When looking at the A N K H notice if you will we have an "O" topping an "I" with a horizontal line at the point of contact. It represents by the "O" above, the endless existence of that which is the indestructible primordial matter, the eternal Mother of all things; and by the "I" below, it indicates the emanation of Universal Soul or creative Mind of God, or Spirit power, from the heart of the great sea of first matter plunging downward. Not to be missed "the horizontal bar" shows both their conjunction and their separation, as does any boundary line between two areas. This is similar to what we have just learned about the "A". But the median line is important also because it marks the meeting point between the two poles of spirit and matter, since it is at this point that all reality is brought out to manifestation through the union of the two. The ANKH is also an astrological symbol. The Ankh is the Egyptian symbol of eternal life. The circle is a symbol known worldwide in many different cultures. It represents the woman, eternity, cycles, seasons. It is the representation of the wheel of the year, the wheel of fortune, and the wheel of life.

The two symbols with which literate symbolism begins are thus with the "I" and the "O".

Answer for yourself: Can you, when looking at the "I" and the "O" see gender?

The item of the gender connected to the "I" and the "O" comes first to notice to many. The "I" is masculine, as standing for the Father's power of generation, which is spirit; the "O" is the eternal feminine, which is matter, the universal Mother, personalized and personified in ancient religions by such goddesses as Isis, Cybele, Mylitta, Aditi, Venus, Juno and others. The appropriateness of this symbolism "I" denotes the phallus of the male and the "O" the womb of the female. As all progeneration of life can come only through the union of male and female elements of the cosmic duality, a symbol that would dramatize life would have to combine both the "I" and the "O". We find the first recognition of this with the Spiritual Masters of Egypt as they captured this truth with their great A N K H symbol, which thus is their written word for life, and which carries also with it the connotation of two other elements entering into life, or necessary for life as taught by Egypt, namely "love" and "connection". Even more than the "IAO" the Ankh condenses in its three renderings the meaning of life. Rendered in one sentence the symbol means life because life can exist only where two things, spirit (I), and matter (O), are bound together by a sufficiently cohesive power which Egypt tell us is "love". Love ties the two together to procreate life. The "A N K H" is therefore the first and greatest symbol in the world, which should make us aware that*"the cross"* is the first and greatest symbol because it is the symbol of life and not of death.

Answer for yourself: How have we misunderstood the meaning of the cross down through history?

The ancients taught differently than what we have been taught in Roman Christianity. Their writings and their religious mysteries are the origin for all religious concepts we have today; both those that have been "blurred" almost beyond recognition which we have inherited from Rome today and those which have not. Egypt has left us today a great treasure which is being restored to us in only these last two hundred years and it teaches us that the soul, when incarnated in the body on earth, was in its spiritual "death," and therefore the cross became the emblem of death but not the death of the body but the death of the soul since its descent into matter was but a prison and limitation imposed upon it. The Gnostic Paul, the real Paul, teaches us that in the New Testament:

Rom 7:24 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? (KJV)

Because of the later Roman corruption and forgery of Paul's letters his "Gnostic faith" is blurred almost beyond recognition but with a little study you can find the "keys" needed to reevaluate Paul and see the very truth of his Gnostic views strewn throughout his "forged" letters we have inherited from Rome today.

We are not speaking of body-death but rather a soul-death; a death viewed wrongly by almost all Christian theology since the days of ancient mystery teaching was suppressed by Rome in the early centuries of the emerging Gentile church, since the reference is to the "dead" condition of the soul when immersed in body, and not to the demise of the physical body. Even in this view it equally signified life, for it was the soul's relative "death" that gave life to the creature and matter, whose bodily demise in turn liberated again the soul for its freer life above. This is the teaching not only of Egypt and other nations which were bequeathed this Ancient wisdom by these Egyptian Priests and Spiritual Masters but was the same "belief" as held by the Christian and Gnostic Jews whom Rome would torment and eradicate in its 5 centuries of persecution and murder in order to censor any and all Gnostic spiritual views not endorsed by the Papacy and the Roman church.

Answer for yourself: What else is "hidden" in the "IAO"?

Detaching the two emblems from each other as they are united in the A N K H symbol, the "I" and the "O", and combining them in lateral juxtaposition, we have the first divine word and name in all literature, "IO". That it figures with equally fundamental significance in ancient typological numerology is evident from the fact that the two, now converted into numbers, constitute the cardinal base of all mathematics, the number "10" [ten]. Modern study seems not to have recognized this close connection, amounting almost to identity, between the letters of the alphabet as originally devised, and numbers. Numbers were indicated by letters. In fact before letters and words primitive man first noticed the digits on his hand and fingers; it is from here primitive man first became acquainted with "number" before "letters" and "words". "God built the universe on number." Pythagoras, himself taught by Egypt, would tell us this. Only then could it be said that "God built the universe on the letters of the alphabet" as found in theZohar.

Each letter carried a number value. Hence words were composed of those alphabetical units that would together express an idea, a mental value, but as well a numerical value. As far as the Scriptures are concerned, even whole sentences were constructed to total a number quantity. I was fascinated when seeing this years ago in my beginning studies in Biblical Judaism. The Jewish faith has a word for this entitled "gematria" which is a cabalistic system of interpretation of the Scriptures by substituting for a particular word another word whose letters give the same numerical sum. As Pythagoras has said, God geometrized in creating the world; he built the universe on number. Such esoteric works asThe Zohar, of ancient Jewish Cabalistic literature, reveal clearly also that the deity formed the creation by means of the letters of the alphabet. This can have sense only on the predication that as (according to the Scriptures) God spake and the worlds formed themselves in order under the vibratory impact of the letter tones of His voice, every letter sound of the creative reverberation became a constituent element in the cosmic framework. Every letter expressed or in fact constituted a principle or fundamental part of the universal structure. Perhaps this is one of the greatest keys to our recovery of the cryptic meaning of ancient writing. This is all the more important when your studies come to see how Egypt used "vibration" and "sound waves" to not only cut stones "made without hands" but "elevate them" to the the necessary heights required to place these 2 million limestone blocks, each weighing an average of 2 1/2 tons, which were required to built the pyramids to such great heights.

The antiquated "IO" (10) then should be understood as the first projection of God's creative "thought-force", but only in its first partition into duality, not in its later and further subdivisions and derivations as we shall see momentarily.

Duality becomes triplicity. Let me explain. From the "two" we derived the "three". In its expression as the prime triplicity the "IO" would later become the "IAO" which became "IAH" and "JAH", and its still further differentiation toward endless multiplicity at the quaternary stage brought it to the form of the great Tetragrammaton, the Cabalistic "J H V H". What I have just expressed is the evolution of creative ideas which form the understructure of later derivation of words which carry this same idea. Genesis says God "separated" and "divided" and in so doing increased His creation. The same we see with the evolution of "IO" into "IAO" and "JAH" and even later into "JHVH". We recognize it today in its full seven-letter evolution or later expression, "Jehovah". This seven letter name is the same only now including vowels. The Greek alphabet still retains seven vowels, "a", short "e", long "e"," i", short "o", long "o" and "u". This was to express the fact that every cycle of creation runs through seven sub-cycles, each of which sounds out the reverberation of one of the seven successive component form-tones.

Godfrey Higgins, in Anacalypsis, Vol 1, p. 323, states that in the ancient books of the Jews we constantly find mention made of the god "Jehovah," who ought to be called "Jah" or "Ieue". This God answered to the person whom the Hindoos designate by the name of Cristna, the second person in their trinity, or their God the saviour or preserver; and was he whom the Persians designated by the name Mithra, the second person in their trinity, and also their preserver or saviour; and was he whom the Romish Christians designate by the name of "Jesus", also the second person in their trinity, and their saviour and preserver.

Answer for yourself: Did you catch this? Godfrey Higgins, in his great two volume work Anacalypsis, shows how the "IAO" become later the "Jah" which later was likewise evolved into "Jehovah" and which was later connected with both the Hindoo "Cristna" and the Persian "Mithra" and all of this predated the later appearance of the Roman "Jesus" or "Ieue" which follows the same pattern of etymology. Etymology, by the way, is the study of historical linguistic change, especially as manifested in individual words or derivation of words from associations of various letters.

It is plain that Cristna of India and the Persian Mithra furnished the copy for the later Jesus of the Romish Church, all of whom mean one and the same thing–the second person in the Solar Trinity. This explains why there are so many similarities between Mithra and the "Jesus Story".

This same entity is called by the Jews the "Lord of Hosts" and God of Sabaoth" which means "God of the stars and constellations".

Answer for yourself: Did you catch this? We just got our first glimpse of the connection between the later New Testament "Jesus" and the stars and the constellations (Keep This In Mind)! If you have been studying our new website, the site on astrotheology and the personification of the path of the Sun through the Heavens as told through the "Jesus Story" then you should be seeing the puzzle pieces come together rather well by now for this site reveals to the interested student how the events in the "Jesus Story" are nothing more but the personifications of the path of the Sun through the Zodiac and the Heavens which have been mixed with the "logia" or "sayings" of "the Christ" which have been collected down through Ancient History. You have to see it to believe it.

Now it is time we go deep; possibly deeper than you have ever gone before. This same name, "IAO", "Jah" (Jehovah), and "Ieue" (from which I will later show you we derive the name 'Jesus') with the Greeks, Romans, and Gentiles in general, was understood and meant to designate both the Supreme Being (God) and the Sun, Dominus Sol, the Lord of heaven and the heavenly host. The Sun was the Lord of heaven and the heavenly host. We must not loose sight of this connection.

The titles "lamb," "anointed," etc., which were applied to Christ, and all appear attached to former incarnations of the sun, the first named standing for the sun in Aries (lamb, ram). Now pay attention. Effigies or representations or sculpured images, as on monuments, of a crucified savior found in Ireland and Scotland have been found in connection with the figure of a lamb, a bull, and an elephant, the latter of which is not a native of those countries.

Answer for yourself: Why is this finding of a crucified elephant so astounding?

Simply because it shows that these effigies or crucified representations do not represent Christ, a human being, but a crucified sun-god worshipped by the inhabitants of the British Islands ages before the supposed birth of the great Judean philosopher and teacher.

For those not acquainted with our "sun-worship" website and the crucifixion of the Sun from which all later crucifixions of later sungods derive some background is in order. In the poetical myths of the ancients the sun is yearly overpowered by cold or by the destructive agencies in Nature following the Summer solstice and the sun's slow death and descent into "hell" following the Autumn equinox. Astronomically, or astrologically, the sun wanders in darkness and desolation during the winter months; in fact it was said to die on December 22, the Winter solstice, which it remains motionless in the sky in its trajectory, and is resurrected 3 days later at December 25th as it begins to reverse its course in the sky, and during these three days the Ancients told myths about this celestial orb as it was human and in so doing described it as descending into hell following its death at the Winter solstice. This hell is nothing more than personified darkness, and this descent was necessary in order that he may rise from the darkness of Winter and continue its resurrection on its way to Spring and the Easter season where with renewed warmth and photosynthesis and renewed harvest it would gladden the hearts of mankind and make all things new again. Literally man was saved by the resurrection of the Sun which was later personified into the "resurrection of the Son" of "the Sun". Then you got it. Mythologically, this new sun, through the medium of "personification", becomes incarnate; enters again his mother's womb, and is born into the world in the form of a man whose mission is to renew human life. Hence we have an explanation of the Eastern Buddhas and Crishnas, all of which were born of virgins at the winter solstice. This is the genesis of the later "Jesus Story".

The new sun at this "Spring" or Vernal equinox following the Winter solstice (which at the close of each cycle was believed by the more ancient people of the globe to "issue forth from the womb of Nature to renew the world," now that the truths underlying Nature-worship were lost), became a redeemer or mediator between earth and heaven, or between spirit and matter. It is stated that at the time for the supposed appearance of the New Testament Christ it was just the Jews who were expecting this "Coming One", but the Persians, the Romans, the ancient Irish, and in fact all the nations of the earth, were anxiously awaiting the event of another incarnation of the solar Deity; and that maidens of all classes and conditions were in a state of eager expectation, the more pious, or at least the more ambitious among them, being in almost constant attendance at the temples and sacred shrines, wither they went to pay homage to the male emblem of generation, thereby hoping to be honored as a Mai or Mary. The Ancients understood what we have forgotten as a people; the "Coming Sun" of a New Age, the Age of Pisces that was replacing the Age of Aries, was announced by the rising Sun at the Vernal Equinox and such an event as the Sun "crossing" the intersection or "CROSS" of the celestial orbit of the earth and the equator of the earth was its rising from the dead (as it rises from the southern hemisphere into the northern hemisphere" from which it brings the hope or renewed life and salvation which was commemorated at the Spring or Vernal equinox). The Sun was understood as man's savior from darkness and the death of winter. The Sun echoed this same message of salvation daily in its cycle of sunrise and sunset, yearly at the Winter solstice and the resultant emergence of Spring, and every 2,160 years with the changing of the age when a new constellation would become the stellar backdrop for the rising sun. The message of hope and salvation was ever tied to Sun and its path through the heavens.

On the wall of the temple at Luxor are a series of sculptures, "in which the miraculous annunciation, conception, birth, and adoration of Amunoph III., the son of the Virgin Queen Mautmes, is represented in a manner similar to what is described in St. Luke's Gospel (ch. 1 and 2) of Jesus Christ, the son of the Virgin Mary, and which is found also in the Gospel of St. Matthew (ch. 1) as an addition not met with in the earliest manuscripts, "which fact has caused Samuel Sharpe, from whom the above is quoted, to suggest that both accounts may have been of Egyptian origin. I don't know whether you caught it or not but the "nativity" is inscribed in hieroglyphics on the Temple of Luxor and again this is the but the personification of the birth of the Sun in its paths and cycles.

Again it is important that we stop and notice that no person actually believed the "Sun" was the literal God of all creation but ONLY a representation of the Uncreated Intelligent Energy-Architect Father of the Cosmos which was the First Cause of all Creation and ONLY a symbol of God who is the ONLY Savior! This "God" and "First Cause" was symbolized by many different ideas and ALLEGORICAL concepts down through history and we must be careful to not "literalize" them since those who created them to express the inexpressable, God, never intended these concepts be understood in such a manner or fashion. Personification is one thing but when we literalize these concepts and believe that it referred to a "real historical person" in any age then we err greatly. These are but symbols and pictures expressing deep Divine Truths.

Of this God, "IAO", "Ieue", "I H S", "Jehovah", the author of Anacalypsis, Vol i, pp. 323-327, says that he was the son of the celestial virgin, which she carries in her arms; the "aur" or the Horus of the Egyptians, the Lux or "light" of the Egyptians, the same "light" expressed by the writer of the Gospel of John. It is from this infant that Jesus took his origin; or at least it is from the ceremonies and worship of this personified infant (the birth of a new sun), that the Egyptian religion came to be corrupted into what we have today. From the traditionary stories of this god "IAO", which was represented by the Sun, which feigned annually to be born at the Winter solstice, and to be put to death and raised to life on the third day at the Vernal equinox, the Romish searchers after the evangelion or gospel, made out their Jesus. The total destruction of every thing at Jerusalem and in Judea, buildings, records, every thing, prevented them from coming to any absolute certainty respecting the person who, they were told by traditions (the Sun now personified), had come to preach the gospel of peace, to be their saviour, in fulfillment of the prophecy which their sect of Israelites found in their writings, and who had been put to death by the Jews. Simply they lacked the "gnosis". From all these circumstances the Roman Jesus would come to have applied to him the monogram of "IHS", the name of "IHSouj", and to him at last all the legendary stories related of the god "IAO" were attributed. This "Jesus" was commonly now called Christ.

The three letters I H S, from the very earliest age of the Romish Christians, have been adopted for the insignia of their religion. We now very commonly see them embroidered in golden letters upon the velvet pulpit cloths of the churches in England, and the clergy say they mean Jesus Hominum Salvator. It is amazing when you study and find for yourself that these three letters, IHS, in the Greek language, are the insignia of Bacchus or the Sun, and stand for the mystical number 608, which is sacred to him; a pretty striking proof of the identity of the "IHS" and the Sun being identical.

Diodorus Siculus, a Greek historian, born at Agyrium in Sicily, lived in the times of Julius Caesar and Augustus, and he says that that Moses pretended to receive his laws from the God called "IAO".

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? This shows that the Greeks considered the name of the Jewish God to be, not Jehovah, but, "IEU" or "IEO" (Beaus. Hist. Manich. Vol. II. liv. iv. chap. iv. p. 59).

M. Beausobre says, "One must allow that it is that of Jehovah, which the ancients have written and pronounced sometimes "Jaho" (Euseb. Dem. Ev. Lib. iv. p. 129), sometimes "Jevo" (Euseb. Præp. Evan. Lib. i. x.), and sometimes "Iaou" (Clem. Alex. Strom. Lib. v. p. 562). But it is necessary also to allow, that "IAO" is one of the names that the Pagans give to the Sun. Higgins goes on to say that he has noticed in the oracle of Apollo at Claros, in which Pluto, Jupiter, the sun, and "IAO", divide the seasons amongst them.

Answer for yourself: What divides the seasons? It is the Sun.

Gen 1:14 14 And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? Namely that Jupiter, Pluto, the Sun, and Bacchus (Dionysus) have the same identity; namely they are all names for the Sun. Higgins goes on to say "I declare to you that IAO is the greatest of the Gods. It would be doing too much honor to the Demon, if one believed that the god called "IAO" is the Jehovah of Scripture, or the true God. This is no other than the sun…." (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i, p. 323).

One more fact we must consider. In innumerable places in Italy very old paintings may be seen of Christ in various situations, labelled with the words in the middle of the painting, "Deo Soli". These words have two meanings:

- To God alone
- To the God Sol

In most cases of the mention of the above two terms in relationship to the paintings we see the attributes of the latter (the God Sol), such as the glory or halos above the head of Jesus Christ indicating his solar attributes. The former sense (to God alone) is in no way applicable to Christ, because as one person of the Christian Trinity he cannot be called "solus" or "sole" since there are 3 identities in the Christian Trinity.These pictures and paintings of the Christ, with their two different meanings and terms, show two different "meanings" of Christ; one for the priests (the Hidden Mysteries) and one for the common people (the Outer Mysteries). Dr. Parkhouse, in his Lexicon, proves from the authority of Diodorus Siculus, Varro, and Saint Augustine that "IAO", Jehovah, "IEUE" or "IE" of the Jews was the "JOVE" of the Latins and Etruscans. He goes on to say that this "IE" is the name of Apollo which stands over the door of the Temple of Delphi. This he also admits "IEUE" or Jehovah is also the same as Jesus Christ and this let us keep in mind is centuries before the historical time assumed for the birth of a literal Jesus Christ.

Answer for yourself: Are we beginning to see that the terms "Jesus Christ" may refer more to a concept than to a literalized person? Well that is something to really think about is it not?

The Latin god Sol, associated with the Greek god Helios, was the deity who drove his chariot, which carried the sun, across the sky every day. Understandably this made Sol a god of some importance to farming and crops as we should expect seeing the Sun plays such an important role in the growing seasons and harvests of mankind. It is in his guise as 'Sol Invictus' that this god became a major deity in later Roman history, when he can be found on many coins. Several emperors of the later era seemed to show preference to Sol in their worship. Some might therefore see this preference for Sol Invictus as a stepping stone from a Roman pantheon littered with hundreds of gods towards Christianity with only one god. In particular Sol's presence on the Arch of Constantine in Rome is the cause of some controversy. In any case the Roman Senate, after the Battle of Milvian Bridge, erected a triumphal arch in the Coliseum. According to the inscription on this arch Constantine's victory was won "through the prompting of the Deity." But the deity in question was not Jesus. It was Sol Invictus, the pagan sun god. Constantine was almost certainly a Mithraic, and his triumphal arch, built after his 'conversion', testifies to the Sun-god, or 'unconquered sun'. Many Christians did not make a clear distinction between this sun-cult and their own. They referred to Christ 'driving his chariot across the sky'; they held their services on Sunday, knelt towards the East and had their nativity feast on 25 December, the birthday of the sun at the winter solstice. During the later pagan revival under the Emperor Julian many Christian found it easy to apostasize because of this confusion; the Bishop of Troy told Julian he had always secretly prayed to the sun. Constantine never abandoned sun-worship and kept the sun on his coins. He made Sun-day into a day of rest, closing the law courts and forbidding all work except agricultural labor. In his new city of Constantinople, he set up a statue of the sun-god, bearing his own features, in the Forum; and another of the mother-Goddess Cybele, though she was presented in a posture of Christian prayer.

Answer for yourself: For if Constantine dedicated the arch to celebrate his Christian victory over the Pagan Maxentius, then why is this Pagan god depicted on the arch? Simply for this reason; Constantine connected Christ with the Sun.

As we can see from the words above "to God alone" is no way applicable to Christ, because as one person of the Christian Trinity he cannot be called "solus" or "God alone". Thus we see that the words "Deo Soli" under many paintings of Christ Jesus in Italy and the Vatican officially declare Jesus Christ to be the God Sol or the Sun god. As you can see this does not refer to a human being but more to a "concept" which was later "literalized" and "carnalized" as if a human being.

Stukeley is recorded to say "I doubt not but it is the great name of Jehovah, which they learnt among the Jews: and that Evòhe Sabòhe is the Jehovah Sabaoth, Lord of Hosts, in the Scripture; whence Bacchus was called Sabazius likewise. Diodorus Siculus says expressly, the Jews call God IAO; and the learned universally agree that this is Jehovah. Evòhe (Jehovah) is but another awkward way of pronouncing it" (Stukeley, Pal. Sac. No. 1 p. 21).

According to the ancient historians Theodoret, Diodorus Siculus and Clemens Alexandrinus, "IAO" is the ancient Hebrew version of the modern Jehovah, Yahweh, or God.

IAO=JEHOVAH=YAHWEH=GOD

This name of "IAO" also occurs in the ancient Askew Codex or Pistis Sophia. In the Oracles text, "IAO equates with Yahweh". When used in conjunction with Elohim, "IAO" refers to the masculine side of Deity.

Alvin Khun states "None dare to enter the temple of Serapis, who did not bear on his breast or forehead the name "JAO" or "J-ha-ho", a name almost equivalent in sound to that of the Hebrew Jehovah, and probably of identical import; and no name was uttered in Egypt which more reverence than his of "IAO"."

Shuckford says, "The name Jehovah was, I believe, known to be the name of the Supreme God, in the early ages, in all nations." As you can see now this name of Jehovah was know by almost all nations as "IAO" or "JAO" and it finds its origin in Ancient Egypt and not Israel.

Answer for yourself: Did other nations in the world know of Yahweh other than the Jews? Were you aware that we an find the name of Yahweh as far back as Ancient Egypt, Arabia, Babylon, etc?

Concerning the name Yahweh it might be surprising to note that this name was common to religions other than Israel's, according to Friedr. Delitzsch, Hommel, Winckler, and Guthe, having been found in Babylonian inscriptions. Ammonite, Arabic and Egyptian names appear also to contain it (Davidson, Old Testament Theol., 52 f); but while, like 'Elohim', it was common to primitive Semitic religion, it became Israel's distinctive name for the Deity. But let us not forget what we have learned so far; it all began with "I" and "O" and from this we arrived at "IAO" and through successive evolutions of words even later became "JAH" and even later into "JHVH" and "Jehovah". Jehovah is "IAO".

Nothing has been more revealing than the list of words, in English, Greek, German, Hebrew, which can be traced to the old Egyptian name of this mighty symbol...the ANKH. If you have kept up this all began with the ANKH. Its central idea, it was noted, is the production of life through the bonding or union of spirit and matter and eventually the masculine/feminine combination. The central clue to the meaning of all these derivatives is the idea of binding two things together. It must be elucidated that in building words upon the A N K H stem, the "H" may be virtually dropped out of consideration, as "K H" is equally well expressed by "K" alone. But "K H" is also equivalent to "C H", which often replaces it. The vowel "A" is of inconsequential value and can also be dropped. So there is the bare "N K" left as the hard root.

The next matter to be noted is that in later philosophical usage it was immaterial whether it was written "N K" or "K N". In other words the letters were often reversed. And in Greek the "N K" or "K N" became "N G" or

"G N". This as we will see will be a significant item. With these specifications it is possible now to discern a whole new world of meaning in many common words never dreamed to have come down from so divine a lineage.

WHO IS JESUS?

As important as this is there is one area where it is mandatory that we understand these linguistic concepts and interpret them correctly; namely, the derivation and proper interpretation of the name of "Jesus" and the proper interpretation of the concepts behind the term "Jesus".

By the aid of archaic sacred books we have been enabled to trace authentically the origin of the name Jesus. And it is of great importance to present this material, because it throws a flood of clear light upon the ancient conceptions of the Messiah and the coming Son, or Sun-god. In this light the name of "Jesus" will be seen to be a type-designation and not the personal name of an historical being.

Building upon what we just learned above the name of "Jesus" is derived from the two letters (or numbers) which in the beginning of typology symbolized the two first elements, spirit and matter, into which the First Cause, or the Uncreated Energy of the Cosmos, God, divided as we saw above when "spirit" and "matter" divided.

Answer for yourself: And do we remember what are these two letters?

They again are the "I" (or #1) symboling the male or spirit, and the "O" (letter) or the number "0" (zero,cipher) symboling the female or material universe. Together they represented the biune male-female deity.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that until 2000 B.C.E. God was primarily known as "female" and not "male"? Let us not forget as well that the Hebrew Scriptures contain both masculine and feminine names of God; in fact God was first recognized as female long before recognized as male for it was only around 2000 B.C.E. that the masculine understanding of God overtook and replaced the feminine understanding of God (Merlin Stone, When God Was A Woman).

We have, then, the letters "IO", or the number "10" once again. As the vowels were freely interchanged, in ancient languages, the name was written either "IO", "IA", "IE", or "IU", and all these forms are found when one does the research. Next the "I" transformed into consonantal value and became a "J" (as it is yet in Latin), so that we find the names "JO", "JA", "JE" and "JU", from each of which many names have arisen. When the creation had combined the male and female and the two had given birth to the Son, or the Logos, the name for the Logos/Son was given the form of three letters as we saw above in its 3rd and 4th generations and it is there then find such forms as "IAO", "JAH", "IEO", "JEU", "ZUE". When the universe became founded on the four cardinal points or the square of four dimensions, the name was spelled according to the next generation variously as "IEOU", "JOVE", "ZEUS", "JEVE", "DIOS", "T/HEOS", "HUHI", "IHUH" and others. In its character as a sevenfold or seven-lettered name, it took the form of "JEHOVAH", "SABAOTH", "DEBORAH", "DELILAH", "SEP/HIROT/H", "MICHAEL", "SOLOMON", and others of seven letters. Later the letter "I" permuted was interchanged with the letter "I" (el) or "1" (one), so that "IE" became "LE" or, inverted as "EL". Now we have the great Hebrew character of deity. The "EL" and the "IAH" ("JAH"), became the most frequent determinatives of divinity, as a study of the many names of deity will testify. There are Bethel, Emanuel, Michael, Israel, Gabriel, Samuel, Abdiel, Uriel, Muriel Azazel, and many others, in which the "EL" is prefixed. The "JAH" is seen in such names as EliJAH, AbiJAH, while the "IAH" comes in a host of such names as Nehemiah, Jeremiah, Obediah, Hezekiah, Isaiah, Messiah, Alleluiah and more.

Answer for yourself: Where comes the "s" in Jesus's name? Now this gets very interesting and we go to Egypt once again. All roads I found do not lead to Rome, no matter how much they would like this, but they lead to Egypt. Let us see this.

This is of great importance. We are looking for the "s". It is derived from an Egyptian suffix written either "SA", "SE", "SI", "SU", or "SAF", "SEF", "SIF" or "SUF" ("SAPH", "SEPH", "SIPH" or "SUPH") and meaning "the son," "heir," "prince" or "successor to the father". The "F" is an Egyptian ending for the masculine singular. When the original symbol of divinity, "IO" or "IE", "JO" or "JE", was combined with the Egyptian suffix for the succeeding heir, "SU" or "SA", the resultant was the name "IUSA", "IUSE", "IUSU", or "IOSE"; or "IESU", "JESU", "IUSEF", "IOSEF", "JOSEF". One of the many forms, as you saw above, was "JESU" and another was "JOSEF". The final "F" became sibilant at times and gave us the eventual form of "JESUS".

Answer for yourself: Do you mean we find "Jesus" in Egypt from thousands and thousands of years ago and was all of this, as shown above, is connected to "IAO" which we have seen above was understood as the Sun?

The Egptian name "JESU" is the name that meant the "divine son," and combined in the Egyptian "IU" carries the idea of the "coming one". When your study advances in this area you realize that Egypt never worshipped the "Sun" but only as a "SYMBOL" for the Uncreated Intelligent Energy of the Universe whom we call "God" today which was represented in perfect manner by our actual Sun in our solar system. The "Sun" was a picture of the God to them. It goes without saying that the idea of the "coming one", or "Jesu" was connected with the Sun in its regular course not only through the sky daily from sunrise to sunset, through the sky through the equinoxes and solstices (seasons) as followed through its rising and setting in different "signs of the Zodiac" or constellations connected to various months, but also carried the idea of the "coming one" (the Sun) as connected with the precession of the equinoxes as each new Sun was welcomed by a different constellation of the Zodiac at each new age that existed for some 2,160 years. Truly the "Sun" was the "coming one" who "came" over and over again and was understood in Egypt as "JESU" which is our "Jesus" today. We have this hidden knowledge or "gnosis" as evidenced by the carnalization of this concept by Rome.

Answer for yourself: And who was this " coming one"? It was Sun at sunrise, at the Vernal equinox following its resurrection at the Winter solstice, and the Sun on the cross at this same Vernal equinox where it gave its life and energy for all man, and it was the Sun every 2,160 years at this same Vernal equinox as it announced the new age as a new constellation of the Zodiac moved itself behind the Sun for another 2,160 years due to the precession of the equinoxes.

Answer for yourself: Does this explain why Jesus is made to say following his resurrection (personified sun rising from the death of winter):

Matt 28:20 20 Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What is wrong with the above verse? The word for "world" has been altered in many manuscripts. Scholars today teach us that originally the word used in the verse was "age".

Thayer's Greek Lexicon:

165 aion-

1) forever, an unbroken age, perpetuity of time, eternity
2) the worlds, the universe
3) a period of time, an age

Of course if you are keeping up then you notice that the Sun is with man for eternity and definitely from "age" to "age", from unbroken time only separated by divisions of time as determined by the Zodiac; from the age of Gemini, Taurus, Aries, Pisces, and will be with us throughout the age of Aquarius. The change of the word was necessary again to cover up the real intended meaning known in the Ancient oral traditions; that the personified Sun, in the life of Hercules, Mithra, Horus, and Jesus, is the actual identity of the characters expressed through the religious myths of history and this Sun "never

Matt 24:3 3 And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world (age)? (KJV)

It all began in Egypt as you now can see and if you want to find Jesus, the Egyptian Messiah long before the creation of the "Jews" who were the children of intermarriage between Egyptians and Semites then you begin to look at Ancient Egypt. This coming one was the personification of the Sun at the Spring or Vernal equinox as it "crossed" the intersection of the ecliptical orbit of the earth around the Sun with the equator of the earth. It was at this "Crossification" or "crucifixion" that the Sun was not only only on the "cross of the Zodiac" but was rising from the death of winter to bring mankind in the Northern Hemisphere their salvation which they experienced through renewed light, heat, photosynthesis, safety, security, etc. Man's salvation came in the form of the Sun whom was but their personification of the Invisible Intelligent Uncreated Energy and Architect of the Universe. They called this Energy God and He had many names and attributes as exampled by Egypt as their "neteru" or "gods" and "goddesses".

"That the Sun rising from the lower to upper hemisphere should be hailed the Preserver or Savior appears extremely natural"* (Drummond, Cedip. Jud. p. 195).

The word Jesus is the same as the word Joshua in Hebrew, and has the same significance. Joshua literally signifies the preserver or deliverer and that by such titles he was known.

Answer for yourself: Should we be surprised that Joshua made the "Sun" stand still as we read in the texts?

Joshua, just like Jesus may be correctly derived either from the Hebrew word "ISO", or from the Greek word "to save". It may be correctly derived from the Greek as well as the Hebrew, because the Greek is itself derived from the Hebrew. It may be derived from "IE", the name of the Hebrew God, often rendered "JAH", and "ISO", savior; or Jehovah or "IAO" savior (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i, p. 326).

As we summarize then you can now see when this God divided Himself into Spirit and Energy and the masculine combined with the feminine they produced a "Logos", a "Son", a Messiah which is the "Son of the Sun". This Son was as much their savior as the Father. This Son was first the Egyptian Messiah before it was inherited by the Jewish children of Egypt and adopted as "their Messiah". That explains for those who read the Hebrew Scriptures closely why the first "messianic promise" in Isaiah is made to Egypt and not the Jews. Hard to believer but check it out.

These concepts began with Astronomy and Quantum Physics as expressed by the Ancient Masters of Egypt. Hence "JESUS" is an Egyptian word for their Messiah, the coming son of the divine life who was pictured and personified as Horus, the Son of Osiris, to the Egyptians for thousands of years. Our "Jesus" is but another "personification" just like so many other nations that in antiquity learned from Egypt; the difference is whereas all other " messiahs" for other nations were but allegories or personifications of celestial forces and powers which benefited mankind ours as Christians was later "literalized" by Rome in their rejection of the "Gnostic Christ". This "rejection" of the Gnostic Christ "within all mankind" is today found in the New Testament where we find the "literalized" and "historicized" and "carnalized" fleshly Christ whom we call "Jesus" today.

This coming one was the Sun rising to new life following its death at the Winter solstice. There he can be found in Egypt for ten thousand years B.C. in his personified character of this functionary under the name of "IUSA". Later he was the "Iu-em-hetep", which means "the divine son who comes with peace (hetep). He is the Prince of Peace. But most interestingly, this last word also means seven. Hence Jesus is he who comes as the seventh principle to complete the six elementary powers of natural evolution with the gift of divine intelligence, which supplants the elementary chaos with the rulership of love and intelligence and thus brings peace into a warring situation. Hence finally, this Jesus is the seventh cosmic principle, announced in all religious lore as he who comes to bring peace and good will to men. And as such he was announced in the Christian Gospels. But there was more than one Jesus or "IUSA" or "IU" before the coming of the alleged and presumed historical Jesus. There were many down through history as every nation under the Sun personified this same Power whom they identified with God the Creator.

As we close this article there is something I hope the close reader noticed in this article. As we can see from the evolution and derivation for all words relating to God; from "I" and "O" and the ANKH of Egypt we find that all nations down through history have known the "same" God but only called Him by different names. I grew up in a Christianity that told me that "only we as Christians" had the truth and all other nations were damned not having our "Jesus" or not having a faith in "our God" through belief in this Jesus and the acceptance of his sacrifice on "the cross" for their sins to redeem them from some fall. In fact we prided ourselves as having the "only way to God" and this fueled the missionary outreach and the collection of large inestimable sums of money to "save the world" which often was achieved during the history of the church by the sword and the murder of over 18 million people at best estimates of modern scholars. Well if you have been reading closely then you should have seen a completely different view of the "Pagan world" than what Christianity have given us. In fact I have come to see that these supposed "pagans" often knew this God we love much better than we "learned" Christians. I mean to tell you my studies confirmed it to me beyond a doubt over these last 20 or so years; namely, that God..."IO", "IAO", or the God "Amen", Amun", or "Aten" of Egypt, the God "IEUE", Jehovah, "IE" or "Jah" of the Jews, the God "EL", the "Apollo" of Delphos, the "Jupiter", "Jovis", "Jovispiter" of the Latins, the god "Mithra" of the Persians, and all the gods of the Heathens, are identically the same person or being as the God Jehovah of the Jews; not merely derivatives from one another, but that they are one and the same; and this same being, the Sun, or Shekinah of the self-existent Being Whom is the Uncreated Intelligent Creator and Architect of all the Cosmos.

In short, that Jehovah was the sun; for if Jehovah was "IAO", and "IAO" was the sun, Jehovah must be the sun. Dr. Parkhurst, in his Lexicon, admits that Jesus was Jehovah; but if Jesus was Jehovah, and Jehovah the sun, it follows that Jesus, that is, the Romish Jesus must be the sun. Study where you contrast the personified events of the prior sungods and the sayings or "logia" of the sungods with the events and sayings of the New Testament Jesus Christ will CONFIRM such an identification beyond any doubt; a blind man can see this for himself.

It cannot be said that these doctrines are merely a fantasy or some incredible coincidence, an invention of one's own imagination; almost every assertion which is made in this article is taken from and supported by the authority of some one or other of learned Christian divines who have studied the subject most carefully that the average Christian. Jesus being mistaken through inherited oral traditions, by the founders of the Roman church, was identified with the god Sol and thus the sun may be expected to be found in their religion and one is not disappointed in such a search for similarities and patters for such identification of Christianity with Sun worship. Upon study one finds that most of the rites and doctrines of modern Christianity are nothing more than the rites and doctrines of the old religion, collected by devotees of very diluted understandings, and applied either to an assumed real historical personage when looking back some one hundred to one hundred fifty years by the likes of Ignatius, Justin Martyr, or Irenaeus , or to an imaginary personage which never lived but whose traditions got mixed up and misunderstood by those lacking the "keys" to interpretation of such traditions since lacking the required "gnosis" to properly understand the inherited "oral traditions" and "logia" of the Lord (whom was the personified Sun). That is why Rome called Sun-day the "Lord's Day" instead of honoring the Sabbath as did the Jews.

I have expressed a very simple but yet very important principle in this article so far. The farther removed we are from the origin of a concept, be it religious or not, the further we move away from its intended interpretation given by those who originated these dogmas in the first place. All one has to do is read James Bonwick's Egyptian Belief and Modern Thought to see that almost all Christians religious doctrines today had their origin in Ancient Egypt and that being so then we should desire to know what these "dogmas" meant to the Ancient revelators of such concepts and trace them down through history to see how they changed in "meaning" with the pens of Rome.

Answer for yourself: Having read this book and many other good ones like then they you must ask yourself these questions: "Why did these ancient religious concepts change? When did they change? Who changed them? Did God change them or did man change them for hidden agendas?" Such a quest to find these answers has consumed me for almost 20 years presently and the answers slowly came and so did my religious freedom and my ultimate joy and happiness in seeing the plan of God so clearly as I do today unincumbered by the guilt heaped upon me by the later "fables" and "religious bondage" of man's religions which rejected the simple understanding of God given man in the beginning of time. Christianity heads the list!

Simply said we as Christians and followers of the Roman literalized "Christ" have lost the Gnosis of the Ancient Spiritual Masters and without the "keys" to interpret correctly what we read today we follow blindly every "wind" of doctrine never realizing that we do not have the truth. In particular and the reason for the existence of Bet Emet Ministries is that without such restored "gnosis" or knowledge we are left alone in the sea of idolatry worshiping a fictitious godman, a historical creation of Rome officially adopted at the Council of Nicea, which set about destroying these Ancient Gnostic truths from Egypt and other nations which existed in the first century in the teachings of the earliest Christian and Jewish Gnostics which never believed in or could ever accept a "carnalized Christ" or a fleshly historical Jesus. Now you see what Rome tried to cover up and conceal not only by burning the libraries of the world but by the murder of over 18,000,000 people who knew and accepted this "gnosis" of old. We call what we have in the absence of this "gnosis" today "replacement religion" and its is responsible for most of the wars that this planet has known over the last 2,000 years.

Answer for yourself: How are we to understand these personifications of the sun which are represented to us as assumed historical characters and their messages to us?

Now let us see what the conception of our divinity as a Sun-god in reality meant to the sages of old, and what it should mean to us. It meant that the divinity resides within us, our divine soul or Self, was itself the Sun-god, or solar deity that fell into matter in times of old and today lives through us to experience His creation through us. All the more reason to live holy lives and "be holy for I am holy" says the LORD.

Rom 6:13 13 Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God. (KJV)

Understood correctly the above passage says everything. When one came to the understandings of old, as old as Egypt itself (an understanding that Rome would do their best to destroy and mutate by focusing this "divinity" in one assumed historical person to the exclusion of all others); an understanding of divineness within these mortal bodies of clay which entrapped the soul or Christ of God as taught by the first century Jewish and Gentile Gnostics, an understanding that mankind was "divine" which when realized was understood as man's resurrection from the dead as they came to see that they were God's presence, God's Christ and God's potential Messiah in His world, that man and woman were the sons and daughters of Ra of old, the sons and daughters of God who were to let their light shine from their clay bushels, their internal sun, and bring Heaven to bear upon this world through their actions and deeds as they restored and maintained harmony and order among the whole of the earth and its inhabitants and let their "leaven leaven the whole lump" of human existence for the better. This was the dream which was the responsibility of every man and woman personally who realized this potential that lies dormant inside himself until awakened.

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

This is the real Christ and the real Paul whom Rome has tried to mask with a "historical Jesus". Rome, not wanting this righteousness which comes with the resurrection of Christ within each of us which is now revealed in our day through the restoration of the Nag Hammadi Library and the Gnostic's "gnosis" which proves the fallacy the New Testament Jesus and the assumed historical Christ who never came to the neglect of all "Christs" within each of us which slumber and sadly await some supposed "coming of a historical Christ" which is so long overdue. It is time to realize that the "coming of Christ", like the Sun, is but a moment away and only dependent upon our awakening to the truth of "God's Sun within, God's glorious light within that slumbers waiting on no one but ourselves to arise to the truth to our identity as divinity and the experiential truth that we truly are the Temple of the Holy Spirit and that God resided within waiting to get out through our surrender and our righteous deeds. We have waited too long for another to come when it is us who remained dead in ignorance believing a lie in a black book and thereby have so often missed our day of visitation and our unveiling as God's Christ in the world.

Mal 4:2 2 But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth... (KJV)

Wow! That was quite a study and our knowledge sure increased. Let us continue digging out the truth behind the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and our "Jesus Story".

Now when this knowledge is added to the fact of the corruption and falsification of the Hebrew Scriptures and the human messiah of Judaism expressed in the Hebrew Scriptures, then one has to seriously question the existence of the "literal" and "historical" Jesus of the New Testament; especially when it is known for a fact the the "Jesus Story" is little more than the retelling of the "sungod stories". This knowledge mandates that one reconsider the religious dogmas created around the Jesus of the New Testament which Rome has given the world in their Bible and assured mankind are necessary to believe for man's salvation. There is no higher religion even given mankind than "TRUTH".

CAN WE FIND THE GOD YHVH -YAHWEH- IN ANCIENT EGYPT....AND DID JUDAISM INHERIT THE EGYPTIAN RELIGION?

The name Adonai, translated "Lord" (only the "L" capitalized), occurs approximately 300 times in the Old Testament. It's interesting to note that it is almost always used in the plural possessive form meaning "My Lords". When the plural is formed using a singular possessive ending ("my Lords"), it always refers to God, and occurs over 300 times in the Tanakh in this form. The Masoretes ensured that the sacred Name of the LORD YHVH would not be taken in vain by putting the vowel marks for Adonai under the letters י-ה-ו-ה in the running text.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever wondered why a "monotheistic" religion like Judaism would express the concept of its God in the plural tense? It stands to reason that it should be expressed in the "singular" tense but that is not what we find. Before I give you the real reason first understand that Judaism teaches us that the plural form Adonai, like the plural form Elohim, is regularly used with singular verbs and modifiers, so it is best to construe the Name as an "emphatic plural" or "plural of majesty." Well that sounds like it could be right but I will share with you something in a second that will make a lot more sense as to why the name of God is expressed in the "plural" tense.

The word "Adonai" is used in Judaism as a spoken substitute for the ineffable (Incapable of being expressed; indescribable or unutterable) name of God. The name "Lord" or "Adonai" signifies ownership or mastership and indicates the truth that God is the owner of each member of the human family, and that He consequently claims the unrestricted obedience of all. This Hebrew word "Adonai", meaning "my lord, my master", comes from "adon" which also means "lord, master". "Adon", the basic form for the word "Adonai" is a title variously used to refer to men, angels, and to the true God of Israel, meaning "lord, master, owner." It is derived from the Ugaritic "adn" meaning "lord" or "father" and the Akkadian "adannu", "mighty." In the Tanakh, the word "Adon" can, as I mentioned above, refer to men and angels as well as to the LORD God of Israel (e.g., Exodus 34:23). The reference to "angels" is very important as we shall see because it connects with the idea of the "neteru".

Answer for yourself: Why is this connection between "angels" and "God" as expressed as "Adon" so important? Well you will have to wait a second to find out.

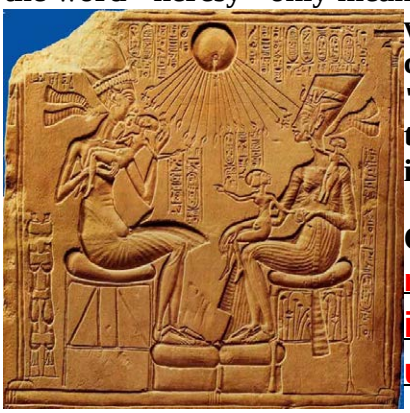
From Hellenistic times onward "Adonai" was used verbally to replace the written Yahweh. When the tetragrammaton (YHVH) appears in the Biblical text, it is usual to read it out loud either as Adonai or as Ha-Shem ("The Name"). "Jehovah" is one of the English renderings of the Hebrew YHVH (illustrated below, note that Hebrew reads right to left), a Name of God revealed to the early Hebrews, long before there were any "Israelites".

Answer for yourself: Did I say "before" there were Israelites? Yes I did and we know this for sure today.

The name and word "YHVH" was, after about 300 B.C.E., held in such high regard by Jews, in accordance with a "take no chances" interpretation of The Third Commandment to not use the Name of God in vain, that it was not spoken at all. The only exception was the high priest on The Day Of Atonement when he entered into the Most Holy Place of the Temple. This practice was carried over into The Septuagint (the Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures of the Old Testament which was done by Greek-speaking Hebrew scholars...the Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt) where the YHVH was translated as the Greek word "Kurios" i.e. Lord. This was further carried into modern times where English-language Bibles now commonly translate the YHVH as all-capitals LORD. One of the major exceptions was the American Standard Version (ASV) of 1901 that uses "Jehovah" when translating the YHVH. Also, whenever YHVH occurred in the Scriptures, the Jewish people pronounced it, as is still done today, "Adonai" (i.e. "Lord"), thus replacing the YHVH with Adonai.

Thus we see that the Hebrew Spoken Name for God is Adhonai. In writing it is YHVH, yet this tetragrammaton is always pronounced as Adhonai. Now we can better understand why the Masoretes ensured that the sacred Name of the LORD, "YHVH", would not be taken in vain accidentally by putting the vowel marks for Adonai under the letters in the running text. They did this to remind the reader to pronounce Adonai regardless of the consonants in the text. Let us not forget, please, that I mentioned earlier that the word "Adonai" is plural.

Answer for yourself: Why is this "plural"? What is this to teach us? Have we understood correctly why this monotheistic religion, Judaism, has for the biggest name for God a "plural" concept instead of a "singular" concept? In order to understand this we have to come to a proper understanding of the "neteru" which we shall do momentarily.



Now "Adonai" is the plural of Adhon, which in Greek translates as Adonis with the usual meaning of 'The Lord'.

Answer for yourself: It is possible to find the name "YHVH" in Ancient Egypt and it is possible that the Hebrews and Israelites obtained their understanding of God and His "names" in Egypt and only "borrowed" them and grafted them onto their own understandings of God following the Exodus? Could this reason revolve around the Egyptian "neteru"? Yes, it does, as I will show you.

In Egyptian, "Adhon means Aten".

Answer for yourself: What is meant by "Aten" and just Whom is "Aten"?

Our study begins with the fact that "Aten" is the name for the God of the supposed Heretic King Akhenaten, one of the Hebrew Pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty in Ancient Egypt. I learned long ago that the word "heresy" only meant "another opinion"; not necessarily a "wrong" opinion. But few understand this when they hear or read the word and unfortunately it carries a "negative" connotation today when in reality it should not. Often, in fact, those deemed "heretics" by Roman Christianity are those who possessed more Divine Truth than those who classified them as "heretics" in the first place. This is the irony of all ironies.

Of great importance for us now is that we recognize that there is a general misconception that those who were faithful to Aten worshipped the Sun. This is utter nonsense, yet easily swallowed by the gullible and the unlearned in the truth behind the Egyptian Religion.

A young pharaoh comes to power in Egypt in 1379 B.C.E. and it will change the world and its effects are seen today the world over. Like his father he is called Amenhotep/Amenophis (IV) (Amenhotep='Amon is satisfied') in the beginning. Later on he changes his name to Akh-en-aten. He tries to impose a new belief system on his Egyptian subjects, which is in contrast with the traditions and habits of thousands of years. This new belief system is an orthodox monotheism, the first example of its kind in history. Amenhotep's rule lasted 17 years (1379-1362 BC.). Following his death this new belief system meets its end abruptly, and anything and everything that belonged to this 'heretic' ruler is banned. Unlike the previous Egyptian religious system, the religion imposed by Amenhotep IV, the Biblical Moses, was a fairly simple one, albeit radically different in character. In place of a pantheon of gods (neteru), God being separated into each of His attributes, characters, and features, each with separate functions and forms, they were all grouped under a single deity - to the exclusion and denial of all other deities and attributes of this One God. Now, instead of God being thought about as different manifestations of the Divine He is understood as the "All in the One"; a Divine Unity of all that exists. This god was Aten or Aton, the Intelligent Life-giving Force or Energy of the Universe that was symbolized by the the disk of the sun (the physical example of the Cosmic Energy that exits behind all matter). Quite simply, Aten was the supreme God of all creation, responsible for all existing life regardless of place or culture. No longer would mankind be divided over this "understanding of God" or "that understanding of God"; now all mankind could come together under the One God of All. Mankind could finally be "one brotherhood". Furthermore, besides the very obvious image of the sun, Atenism was basically a religion without any image for its God; it assigned no mythological visual representation to Aten. Aten was never represented in the form of either man or beast, simply the impersonal disk of the sun.

Answer for yourself: Why do you think Moses writes the following when Ancient Egypt was full of representations of these "neteru" and "attributes" of the One God?

Exod 20:3-6 3 Thou shalt have no other gods before me. 4 Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: 5 Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; 6 And shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments. (KJV)

Now Egypt was not without its images and these were not wrong mind you; but they had the potential to be divisive. There were hundreds of them and without a proper understanding of Egyptian Religion it is easy to jump to conclusions and say that Egyptian Religion was "polytheistic". But it was not. Bet that as it may these "neteru" did not always bring unity. We see the same principle in the New Testament addressed by Paul:

1 Cor 1:12-13 12 Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. 13 Is Christ divided? ...(KJV)

In a previous article I introduced the reader to a new concept: the Neteru as the "Attributes of God" as well as the Neteru As the "Angels" of God as understood by the Ancient Egyptians. I shared a little about the neteru as the personifications of universal principles, functions and attributes of the One great and supreme God. The neteru who were called "gods" by some, were endorsed and incorporated into Christianity under a new name, "angels".

Now above I mentioned that in the Tanakh, the word "Adon", the root for "Adonai" can refer to men and angels.

Answer for yourself: Now then can you see that this concept of "Angels", accepted in both Judaism, Islam, and Christianity and "Neteru" are the same spiritual concept that reflects the Emanation of God and the Spiritual Hierarchy in the Godhead? I hope you can. This behooves us to understand the "neteru" if we ever hope to grasp the truth behind our Creator God let alone the name "Adonai" and "YHVH".

The ancient Egyptian word "neter," and its feminine form "netert," have been wrongly, and possible intentionally, translated as "god" and "goddess," by almost all scholars. There is no equivalent word in meaning, to the word "neter," in the English language. Honest translation should use the native word, if they cannot find its equivalent in their language. "Neteru" (plural of "neter/netert") are the Divine Principles and Functions that operate the Universe. They are all aspects and functions of the One Supreme God. The words "god" and "goddess" leave the impression that ancient Egyptians had a multitude of gods, which is absolutely untrue.

As such, an Egyptian neter/netert was not a god/goddess but the personification of a function/attribute of the One God. With this understanding comes likewise the understanding that the labeling of Egyptian religion as "pagan" or "idolatrous" betrays the complete lack of understanding of the Egyptian religion by the writer or would be scholar.

The Song of Moses in Deuteronomy (32:43), as found in a cave at Qumran, near the Dead Sea, mentions the word "gods" in the plural:

"Rejoice, 0 heavens, with him; and do obeisance to him, ye gods."

Answer for yourself: Does this reference by Moses to "gods" by one motivated by Monotheism seem strange? Does this principle possible indicate that the Essenes, who would find their home in Alexandria, Egypt, later were influenced not only by Egyptian religion but by the evolution and paganization of it in their day? The Essene answer will come later for we have not gotten that far yet but the answer you will find upon examination is "yes." I have devoted a whole website to this problem which you need to see for yourself if you want to know how these ancient Divine Revelation and truths and personifications of universal principles, functions and attributes of the one great and supreme God were later corrupted by these Essenes in Alexandria and Qumran where these concepts once expressed as "attributes" of the One True God were later personified as if "real people" and later applied to Jesus; thereby making him God.

The passage we find in the New Testament (Hebrews, 1:6),

Heb 1:6 6 And again, when he bringeth in the firstbegotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. (KJV) reveals to us the transformation of the idea of the neteru. The the word "gods" as understood by Moses in the Song of Songs pointed about above has been modified. These attributes of the One True God now have a life of their own and they become "angels." The word for "gods" is substituted with "angels of God". Again this concept of the "neteru" shows the hidden influence of Egyptian religion not only among Judaism but even the movement later termed Christianity and because of this fact it is imperative to understand Egyptian religion in its earliest form as well as the corruption of it down through history if one wants to correctly understand both Judaism and the later corruption of Judaism and the simple Divine Revelation under Christian hands and Gentile Christianity. The term "angels", according to the Metaphysical Bible Dictionary, refers to those who "guard and guide and direct the natural forces of mind and body, which have in them the future of the whole man."

Angels, or neteru, are living energies. In the wisdom teaching of various cultures, these Causal Powers are called by many names including Agents, Angels, Conscious Thought Forms, Creative Energies, Devas, Fathers, Fountains, Gates, Governors, Hands of God, Lords, and Shining Ones.

Edwin C. Steinbrecher, an astrologer, metaphysician, and author of, The Inner Guide Meditation, says that angels are, "living energies that contain ideas and information, specific patterns of instinctual behavior and thought. They are the energies which somehow attach themselves, without our conscious awareness, to everything we meet in the world we call real. [They] are the life energies that pour out of each of us unceasingly night and day. . . influencing everyone in our lives and causing us to be influenced in return."

Just like the Egyptian's neteru, each "angel" has been given a name and specific function(s). And just as each neter of Egypt did not always take the same form and shape, so is the case for each angel. As your projection of them changes, so will their appearance. Sometimes, they are so blocked by the ego that you can only see their dim, hazy outlines. Many have seen angels change from a shining light to a form resembling a human being, then into a symbol (cube, triangle, etc.), and back to human features. Upon careful examination, the concept of the Egyptian neteru was accepted by ancient and modern societies, who merely chose new names to express Egyptian ideas. The neteru became angels.

The roots of monotheism in Egypt could be found in earlier times. For a significant period there have been in Egypt attempts among the priests of the Sun Temple at On (Heliopolis) to develop the thought and emphasize the moral aspect of an universal god. During the reign of Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon, (the father of Akh-en-Aten, Moses...I know the chronology in our inherited Bible is wrong...blame Ezra) worship of the sun-god seems to have achieved some degree of popularity. In so doing the very ancient name of the sun-god, Aten, Aton or Atum, has regained importance. Understand that "Aten" was an older name for God and that Moses, Akhenaten, did not originate it; in fact we can find Aten worship during the reign of his father Amenhotep III. Thus we see the young king Amenhotep IV found a ready movement based on Aten/Aton belief system already existing when he came to the throne. Although he was not the first to have initiated this belief system, he became a loyal follower. While all this was going on, Egypt became a world power, and the resultant imperialism found its reflection in religion as universalism and monotheism. This god had to go beyond the boundaries and spread its sovereignty to the occupied lands. Amenhotep IV has never denied his loyalty to the sun cult. Amenhotep IV worshipped the sun not as an object but as a symbol of the Divine Being whose energy is manifested as rays of light, and he described himself as "first prophet of Re-Horakhte, rejoicing in the Horizon, in his name 'Sunlight which is in Aton.' " The high priest of Aton was called 'greatest of seers'. Instead of the word god, Aton is used and god is differentiated clearly from the sun as a body, and the pharaoh has sanctified the sun's power to influence the world.

What is of great importance for us is the fact that this new understanding of God emphasized the personal nature of the relationship between the god and the pharaoh. No longer anthropomorphic the sun was depicted as a golden orb shedding rays of light on the king and his queen Nefertiti, each ray ending in a little hand proffering the sign of life, the ankh, to the royal pair. Amenhotep's influence was an energetic intervention. He has introduced for the first time the 'exclusion factor' which transformed the doctrine of a universal god into monotheism. In one of the hymns he says: "O, sole god, there's no other god beside you!" (An identical impression could be found in Zoroastrianism, Judaism, and Islam). As a result of the reaction amongst the priests of Amun towards this new religion Amenhotep's belief system gradually became clear, coherent, unyielding and intolerant. This opposition has risen to such a level in the sixth year of Amenhotep's reign that he changed his name - a part of which was the name of god 'Amun/Amen' to Akh-en-Aten (Akh-en-aten='Aten is pleased' or 'It pleases Aten').

After changing his name he left the city of Thebes, and has established a new royal capital lower down the river, which he named 'Akhenaten' (Akhenaton='The horizon of Aten/Aton') the ruins of which is Tell el-Amarna in our day. He closed all the temples of Amun, worshipping in those temples were banned, all the assets of the temples were confiscated. According to Akh-en-aten what is said about the other gods were all lies, and deception. Akh-en-aten accepted the energy of the sunlight as the source of life on earth, and worshipped the Energy behind this light as a symbol of his god's power. He boasted his happiness caused by the 'creation', and his Ma'at (honest and just) life. Despite all the richness and extravagance that could be seen in the art of the Amarna period there was no other representation or a personal image of the Sun-God Aten/Aton. Because Akh-en-aten did not allow the making of the idols or images of the Sun-God. The king said that the real god has no form, and kept his position until the end of his life. And a last point: There was an absolute silence about Osiris and the kingdom of the dead; there would no longer be any worship of the icon of the "godman".

Despite the fact that Akh-en-aten has banned all the other gods and insisted on his sun-god as the sole god to be worshipped, (in other words he was really a monotheist), he was accused first with anti-theism then with atheism. Egyptian pharaoh Akh-en-aten is the first registered atheist in the history of mankind. Although Akh-en-aton has worshipped the sole god, the sun-god Aten/Aton, he was accused by his son in law Tut-ankh-aton-who replaced him - with atheism, because he has rejected the official gods. Tut-ankh-aton's name was changed to Tut-ankh-amen as the belief system of Aten was abandoned following the death of Akh-en-aten. Since Akh-en-aten all those who have rejected or opposed the official gods (the multiplicity of the neteru) in Egypt, Greece or Rome were accused of atheism. Socrates, Anaxagoras, Diagoras, Protagoras and others thinking like them were amongst those who were accused of atheism. The idea of monotheism which had risen with Akh-en-aten had to stay in darkness for a long time. There are those scholars who find the origin of the sole god, the father god of the code books of Judaism, Christianity and Islam here, in Egypt, in the Aten belief system. The belief system Moses imposed on Hebrews must have been nothing but the Aton/Aten religion.

Answer for yourself: Could YHVH be the Aten and we not know it? We will get to that in a second.

Answer for yourself: So what have we seen? We have seen that Egypt understood this One God as "the All in the One".

The energies represented by the various neteru may function together in groups or as individuals. The interaction between the neteru are expressed in myth, which is to be understood as the dramatization of cosmic and natural laws. We discussed the role of myth in an earlier article. The union of certain pairs of complementary energies/attributes (masculine and feminine forms) resulted in a third energy/attribute.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? Simply when reading of Osiris and Horus and Isis as well as other "neteru" or "gods of Egypt" we are not speaking of "literal historical people" or actual "competitive gods of the One God" but Divine Concepts that operate in this One God that are very real that are later personified by the Egyptian Spiritual Masters to help mankind better understand and relate to his God and Creator. This is not an odd concept, and it was copied in the trinity of the Christian faith and few know it. This explains why the corridors of history and nation after nation express these same "Divine Concepts" under different names whom we mistakenly believe were "pagan gods" and ridicule them as "stupid" in fact when a proper understanding of this Divine Concept, the Descent of both the Soul and "the Krst/Karest/Christ" into "matter", as expressed in these myths and Spiritual concepts are absolutely breathtaking when you see them as they were understood by the Ancients. Behind the Sungods and goddesses of the ancient Mysteries and the ancient Spiritual Wisdom lie the personification of the metaphysical concept of the Descent of both the Soul and "the Krst/Karest/Christ" into "matter" and humanity. This is not "pagan"; it is highest Spiritual revelation than mankind was ever given by our Creator and ancient Egypt was the custodian for humanity of this Spiritual reality. Our blindness today is due to Rome who burned the worlds libraries and murdered millions to cover up the fact that their "literalization" of these "allegorical expressions of God" was a lie and a gross misrepresentation of truth. Rome basically "literalized" the Christ within, one of the neteru, as a historical "god-man" whom we know today as "Jesus" to give validity to their Emperor as the Roman "god-man". Today we don't know this when reading accounts of a "literal" and a "supposed historical Jesus" but in fact the "Christ" was always real...but not a historical person but rather "a Divine Spark" that lives in all people. God's Christ dwells within us all as does this God Whom we love and Whom Manifests Himself as Osiris, Isis, Horus, etc. When we speak of "resurrection from the dead" we speak of the reality of Osiris. It is but a picture expressing a holy and Divine concept which tragically down through history lost its true meaning and today as Christians we truly look through a glass darkly. Tragically the Bible speaks of what has happened to Christianity since loosing the true "gnosis" behind these concepts:

Isa 42:18-19 18 Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see. 19 Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the LORD's servant? (KJV)

Now you better understand why Judaism has other names for God, in particular Eli, or in the plural Elohim (like Adhonai). Since Hebrew like Egyptian is a consonantal language, we cannot be sure how the vowels were pronounced. In Hebrew, the spellings for Eli and Alah are almost identical, so it is quite easy to understand whence the Islamic name of Allah originates.

In a country which seemed to recognize many manifestations of God as "gods/neteru", one may wonderwhy Aten caused such an upheaval and division. Akhenaten never said that the "neteru" did not exist; only that we are not to worship one to the exclusion of all others; it is better that we worship God in his totality and promote the unity not only of God but of mankind at the same time. In the first place, as I just showed you, the Egyptians did ONLY recognize one supreme being, who was generally known as 'Amen', 'Amun' or 'Amon'.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the word "Amen"? Ever heard this before?

With no written vowels we can only be reasonably sure that it was 'Amen' for this is the pronunciation still used at the end of prayers. The multiple names for God in Ancient Egypt arises not from there being many Gods, because there is only One as taught by Egypt, but the different characteristics of the One God each being given a different name along with its symbolic representation (archetype). Thus as a Potter the One God was known as Ptah, and so on.

Answer for yourself: So what is going on that Akhenaten enforced Aten worship upon the whole nation?

We have to go back to the time of the Hyksos Pharaohs to understand why there was such an upheaval when Amenhotep IV, the Biblical Moses, changed his name to Akhenaten and tried to eliminate the cult of Amen, along with its temples and the very strong Amen-Ra priesthood. The Thirteenth and Fourteenth Dynasties were powerless to put down the Hyksos, tribal warlords with foreign support who seized control of the Delta, establishing the capital of Avaris and moving south. Despite their alien origins (Hyksos means "Princes of Foreign Lands") and foreign ties, the Hyksos assumed an Egyptian identity and ruled as pharaohs.

Important for us to note is the fact that the Hyksos were Semites who infiltrated Egypt around the 18th Century B.C.E., and eventually took over as rulers. They were eventually driven out of Egypt by Ahmose I, who founded the New Kingdom and 18th Dynasty in 1570 B.C.E. The Hyksos had ruled Egypt for some two to three hundred years. The hostility between Egyptian and the Semite Hyksos never ceased in spite of intermarriage and their living together eventually in a precarious peace. Important again for us to note is the fact that in adopting the Egyptian God, the Semites added their own interpretation of the One Supreme Creator, and they retained their own language.

Answer for yourself: What does the Precession of the Equinoxes have to do with this and the changing the end of the Age?

Having arrived in Egypt during the Age of Aries these Hyksos Semites associated themselves with the Sign of Aries (lamb, ram) in the Zodiac because it was now to rule the Vernal Equinox. That being so they became known as the "the Shepherd Kings". On the other hand, Egyptians still remembered the old Age of Taurus (bull) and maintained customs that pertained to the sign of the bull, the Age of Taurus which was passing away and being replaced by the Age of Aries.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important?

This was the reason that Moses became so enraged when he saw some of his flock making graven images of The Calf of God, for by then "the Son of God" was being reinterpreted as the "The Lamb of God" since the Constellation of Aries was replacing the Constellation of Taurus at the Spring/Vernal Equinox.

To make matters worse long after the Hyksos had been driven out of Egypt, their people still maintained high places in the Egyptian Administration.

Answer for yourself: Can you think of one in the Bible?

Joseph became Chief Minister under the Pharaoh Tuthmosis IV. When his daughter Tiye married the next Pharaoh Amenhotep III (the King Solomon of the Bible), it is plain to see that the Egyptian hierarchy was horrified at the prospect of the hated Hyksos-Semites regaining the Royal Throne. And that is exactly what would happen as we find the line of Hebrew Pharaohs in Egypt during the 18th Dynasty. Queen Tiye was naturally afraid that her baby son, the future Amenhotep IV and Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses), would be in danger. We do know that he was hidden away, for there is no record of him in the Egyptian Royal family, until he suddenly emerges as a young man.

Joseph's sarcophagus, coffins and funerary furniture bear eleven different versions of his godly name. Just as a Christian name may be derived from biblical names, and Muslim from the Prophet's family, the Egyptians bore the name of the god (neteru) they worshipped as well as their family name. Joseph's God, YHVH (a shepherd...Aries) was a problem for the Egyptian funerary scribes, and his Mummy is now known as 'Yuya'. The name given Joseph by the Pharaoh was Zaphnath Paaneah (Book of Jasher and Genesis 41:45). He would have been better known as Yu-Zaph, or Joseph. What is really important though, is that YHVH, the hidden name of God of the Hyksos invading Semites, finding equivalency with Adon, Adonai, and the Aten", was known as the same God of the both the Semite population of Egypt as well as the Egyptians far back as the 18th Dynasty and earlier, and more importantly to Akhenaten, thought by many scholars to have been Moses. Bearing all of this in mind, we can now see how YHVH was the hidden name behind Aten, the spoken Adhonai.

Answer for yourself: So is YHVH the Aten and is Aten YHVH? Are they the same? Did Akhenaten, Moses hide the "neteru" behind the idea of the Aten and use the Hyksos name for this same God (YHVH) since he was a Hebrew part-Semite? Yes.

Answer for yourself: Now can you understand why in Judaism we have the idea of "plurality" in the name for God? It carries the idea not of "majestic plurality" but rather the Divine Concept of the "neteru" as the Emanations of God who is the many All in the One. I have found the study of the "neteru" simply fantastic and I understand why Akhenaten had to do what he did but sadly lost behind all of this is the glorious knowledge of these "neteru" which helps paint the glorious picture of God like I have never beheld it before.

This Hyskos dominion was shaken by Thebes which established the Seventeenth Dynasty and, under Wadikheperre Kamose, Egypt laid siege to Avaris. When his successor Ahmosis expelled the Hyskos from Egypt in 1567 B.C.E. , the New Kingdom was born. Ahmosis founded the Eighteenth Dynasty (1567-1320 B.C.E.) which reigned over the first part of a prosperous and stable imperial period during which Pharaonic culture flowered and Egypt became a world power.

Lawrence Gardner states: "It was upon the mountain at Sinai that Jehovah first announced his presence to Moses. Being an Aten supporter, Moses asked this new lord and master who he was, and the reply was "I am that I am", which in phonetic Hebrew became 'Jehovah'. However, for the longest time afterwards, the Israelites were not allowed to utter the name 'Jehovah' - with the exception of the High Priest who was allowed to whisper the name in private once a year. The problem was that prayers were supposed to be said to this new godhead".

Answer for yourself: But how would this God know the prayers were said to him if his name was not mentioned?

The Israelites knew not this Jehovah as well as Moses; for them it appears that they were confused, for after all the concept of the "neteru" is vast and problematic to one who does not have the proper "keys" for its understanding and interpretation. This is evident today when would be scholars interpret the great Egyptian Religion as "polytheistic". Lacking this the Israelites presumed he must be the equivalent of the great State-god of Egypt (Amun, Amon, Amen). It was decided, therefore, to add the name of that State-god to all prayers thereafter, and the name of that god was "Amen". To this day, the name of "Amen" is still recited at the end of prayers. Even the well-known Christian Lord's Prayer (as given in the Gospel of Matthew) was transposed from an Egyptian original which began, "Amen, Amen, who art in heaven..."

As for the famous Ten Commandments (said to have been conveyed to Moses by God upon the mountain), these too are of Egyptian origin and they derive directly from Spell Number 125 in the Egyptian Book of the Dead. They were not new codes of conduct invented for the Israelites, but were simply newly stated versions of the ritual confessions of the Pharaohs. For example, citing the 42 Negative Confessions, the confession "I have not killed" was translated to the decree "Thou shalt not kill"; "I have not stolen" became "Thou shalt not steal"; "I have not told lies" became "Thou shalt not bear false witness"; and so on.

Not only were the Ten Commandments drawn from Egyptian ritual, but so too were the Psalms reworked from Egyptian hymns (though they are attributed to King David, Thutmose III). Even the Old Testament Book of Proverbs - the so-called 'wise words of Solomon' - was translated almost verbatim into Hebrew from the writings of an Egyptian sage called Amenemope. These are now held at the British Museum, and verse after verse of the Book of Proverbs can be attributed to this Egyptian original. It has now been discovered that even the writings of Amenemope were extracted from a far older work called The Wisdom of Ptah-hotep, which comes from more than 2,000 years before the time of Solomon."

Answer for yourself: Can you begin to see the importance of Egypt in our Judeo-Christian heritage? Then if any of these earliest understandings of God have been purposefully or even accidentally changed and new replacement religious dogmas and doctrines have taken their place then can you grasp the severity of the nature of the problems lurking behind our inherited Roman "literalistic" Christianity which rejected their Jewish Roots and ultimately the Egyptian Religion on which it was built? Time to study and study hard before we die as Christian idolators and blasphemers and never know it because we inherited an anti-Jewish religion to which we never verified for ourselves that what we are told to believe for our "salvation" is indeed the Ancient Divine Truths held sacred by mankind since the beginning of time and up until the rise of the mighty Roman antisemitic Empire and its Orthodox Christianity.

CAN WE FIND THE HOUSE OF DAVID IN EGYPT?

In an earlier article I made mention of the fact that the chronology of the Old Testament and the chronology of Egyptian records and King-lists often disagree. This makes the following study more difficult than it had to be but we are stuck it. Your attention will be needed to follow what will be said in the following article.

The task of recognizing the person in which we are familiar as the "historical David" in the Old Testament is complicated from the beginning by the fact that the Old Testament provides us with two contrasting "Davidic" characters with which span over 500 years whose accomplishments are found inscribed "exactly the same" in Egyptian stone which are the records of two different Pharaohs of the 18th Dynasty. Needless to say when you see these things for yourself it is beyond any wild coincidence and without a doubt the evidence points to two different "Tuthmose" Pharaohs of the 18th dynasty whose events are recorded and attributed to a "King David" in the Old Testament. These blendings of two different characters and events from 1500 B.C.E. and around 1000 B.C.E. show us concretely that they cannot have been the same person. History and archeology prove the above statements beyond any doubt and the evidence will be presented in the accompanying articles. There are two different Davids of the bible and few ever notice that they are separated by some 500 years yet the story line is that they were one and the same person:

- The first "David" is a warrior king who lived 1500 B.C.E. that established an empire from the Nile to the Euphrates. He devoted himself to the expansion of the Egyptian empire, leading many campaigns into Canaan, Palestine, Phoenicia and Syria. When we mention Palestine you need to think Israel! Scholars teach us that this is Tuthmose III. Thutmose III was an Egyptian king of the 18th dynasty (reigned 1479-26 B.C.E.), and is often regarded as the greatest of the rulers of ancient Egypt. Thutmose III was a skilled warrior who brought the Egyptian empire to the zenith of its power by conquering all of Palestine and Syria, crossing the Euphrates to defeat the Mitannians, and penetrating south along the Nile to Napata in the Sudan. He also built a great number of temples and monuments to commemorate his deeds. He recovered the previous empire of his great grandfather for Egypt from the "Nile to the Euphrates" (this is very important for our identification).
- The second "David" is a tribal chief generally agreed by biblical scholars to have lived from 1000 to 960 B.C.E. who ruled over the traditional Promised Land (from Dan in the north to Beersheba in the south of the Israel-Judaean and spent most of his life in conflict with the Philistines (the 'Peoples of the Sea' who had invaded the coastal area of Canaan in the middle of the 12th century B.C.E.).

So we have a time span of around 500 years telling us that these two different "Davids" cannot be the same person. Now here is where the problem begins. Despite the lack of any genealogical link between him and the start of the Christian era, many Scholars have chosen to identify this tribal chief as the "King David" of the Old Testament texts. This King David we know well as the young shepherd boy, son of Jesse who become the later rival to Saul and later lshbosheth, one of Saul's surviving sons. It is this young shepherd boy, harpist, friend of Jonathan who is the son of Saul, slayer of Goliath, a man of war and one who struggles for Israelite leadership and finally unified Israel under his Kingship. Yet he is depicted as a coward who fled from the wrath of his son, Absalom. But here is where it gets interesting. The Biblical writer tells us that he also, as a warrior king, he also established an empire that stretched from the "Nile to the Euphrates" just like the warrior king of 1500 B.C.E. which history teaches us was a Tuthmose Pharaoh. The phrase "Nile to the Euphrates" is going to be very important in our studies as you will see.

2 Sam 8:3 3 David smote also Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates. (KJV)

2 Sam 8:13-14 13 And David gat him a name (erected a stele) when he returned from smiting of the Syrians in the valley of salt, being eighteen thousand men. 14 And he put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and all they of Edom became David's servants. And the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went. (KJV)

This account is repeated in I Chronicles, 18:3:

1 Chr 18:3 3 And David smote Hadarezer king of Zobah unto Hamath, as he went to stablish his dominion by the river Euphrates. (KJV)

The above passages are the exploits of the King David of which we are fall familiar. This is the tribal King David. I direct you attention to the map and notice the vast expanse of territory that existed from the Nile to the Euphrates which this young shepherd boy was supposed to have controlled. Pay attention in particular to the Nile river that splits the Egyptian delta territory.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that these above statements are major problems for historians and scholars today? Why?

Needless to say this is a vast empire. The statements of the Biblical text does not equate with the fact that this tribal chief "David" is said in the Old Testament to have had an army of just a few hundred men yet he is recorded killing "thousands". We know these few courageous men of David by the term "David's mighty men". It defies common sense that a few hundred men could conquer and control such a vast territory belonging to Egypt during this time of Egyptian domination of this part of the world let alone conquer the vast armies of Egypt which historians teach us that they had in light of many of their historical battles that Egypt fought to conquer such a huge territory as depicted on the map. Records often teach us that Egypt commanded armies of hundreds of thousands of men and the idea of some shepherd boy with a few hundred men conquering hundreds of thousands of Egyptians and controlling this vast area from the "Nile to the Euphrates" is beyond any conceivable idea. It would seem to a thinking believer that a few hundred men would be hard pressed to conquer Egypt and dominate the territory from "the Nile to the Euphrates". Something is wrong with this idea; something is missing here.

But that is not the only problem.

Answer for yourself: Do you know what it is? There is not any existing archeological or historical evidence of any kind to support the view that an empire stretching from the Nile and the Euphrates was founded in the early years of the 10th century B.C.E. that can be attributed to this Israeli tribal chief "King David". Indeed, archeology and history teach us that no such empire can be said to have been created between the reign of Tuthmose III in the 15th century BC and the second half of the 6th century BC, when Cyrus of Persia conquered both Mesopotamia and Egypt. Nowhere do we find any evidence where some "King David" in Israel created any such empire. Nothing, I mean nothing exists that verifies these Old Testament texts as truthful. Nowhere can we find any records that indicate that a similar empire was created in the 10th century by some tribal David. However, during this time frame, the 15th to the 6th century this empire was well know in world history and archeological records testify to its presence; the only problem is that it was strongly governed by Egypt and not Israel! Take a second to let that sink in!

Now you did not know it but I just introduced you to the "Warrior King" Tuthmose III who was a Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty. In light of the absence of such evidence for the existence of such an empire in the 10th Century ascribed to a tribal King David Jewish and Christian scholars have therefore had to explain or rather explain away this invisible empire story of David by saying that the biblical narrator simply invented it as an act of aggrandizement towards an important biblical figure (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 21). Others avoid this embarrassing problem that casts doubt upon the historical reliability of the existence of a King David. The good news is that we find in history this "King David"; the only problem is that he is a Pharaoh; in fact he was two Pharaohs blended together in such a way that his true identity is concealed to all but those with a keen eye and a grasp of history and Egyptian religion.

However, blending the stories of two Davids, one a warrior king who lived in the 15th century BC, the other a tribal chief who lived five centuries later, should be seen as another facet of the attempt by Old Testament editors (Jewish scribes living in Babylon between the 6th and 3rd centuries BC...beginning with Ezra) to conceal the fact that Tuthmose III was this "King David".

Answer for yourself: Why would they do that? What was their motive? What were they trying to cover up?

Simply they knew what few today know; namely, that Isaac is not the biological son of Abraham. This has staggering implications.

Gen 12:14-15 14 And it came to pass, that, when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians beheld the woman that she was very fair. 15 The princes also of Pharaoh saw her, and commended her before Pharaoh: and the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house. (KJV)

That would mean that Sarai, when married to the Pharaoh Tuthmose III, begat a son with the Pharaonic bloodline of Egypt. Here we have a mixed bloodline where "Hebrews and Egypt" melt into a later lineage of King-Pharaohs which later come to the throne of Egypt prior to the Exodus and the religious revolution in Egypt.

That would mean that from Isaac would come the bloodline of later Pharaohs through Jacob, and the twelve tribes of Israel. That would mean that Tuthmose III, and not Abraham, was the father of Isaac, and therefore also the founding father of the 12 tribes of Israel.

Answer for yourself: How can we make the connection between Tuthmose III and King David besides the empires "from the Nile to the Euphrates" that are identical which are separated by some 500 years? We can begin with the name for David.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the first part of the Pharaoh's name, "Tuth" (or Thoth), becomes

"Dwd" in Hebrew? Are you aware that makes the word for "David" as used in the Hebrew of the Bible?

Answer for yourself: Is this just a coincidence? Now we have seen the name is the same and the accomplishments of creating the "same" empire is the same. Is there more? Yes there is.

Answer for yourself: What do you know about the battle between this King David and Goliath?

The story of the epic duel between David and Goliath, inserted to enhance tribal David's reputation as a "man of war". The Bible tells us that Goliath was a Philistine and the evidence indicates that the Philistines became established in Canaan after the reign of Ramses III (1182-1151 B.C.E.) which is long after the reign of Tuthmose III. After the reign of Ramses III, Egypt lost control over Palestine and the Philistines established themselves in the coastal plains of Canaan and started expanding toward the Dead Sea and the River Jordan. It was at the same time the Israelites were trying to establish themselves in the same areas. Because of the power vacuum left after the reign of Ramses III, both Philistines and Israelites began fighting and thus the stories of Saul, David, and Goliath came into being (M. Gadalla, Historical Deception: The Untold Story Of Egypt, p. 149). Historically speaking, if David did do battle with the Philistines, he could not have lived before the twelfth century B.C.E., because that was when the mass invasion of the coastal plain of Canaan by the Philistines took place. Therefore, historical facts contradict the Biblical time period of the David and Goliath duel, to occur during the first half of the 10th century B.C.E. (Ibid).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this story of "King David" ("Dwd" in Hebrew/"Tuth" in Egyptian), is an adaptation of a much-admired Egyptian literary work, The Autobiography of Sinuhe, which describes events that took place 1,000 years earlier? This story is found as far back as the twentieth century B.C.E. Therefore it was developed a thousand years before the Biblical account of David and Goliath was supposed to have occurred (some 800 plus years before the historical time period given by the Bible for the supposed events).

Answer for yourself: Should it not expect that such a tale would certainly have been familiar to the Israelites from the earlier period of their Sojourn in Egypt, the four generations they spent in Egypt during the 15th and 14th centuries B.C.E.?

Sinuhe was a courtier in the service of Nefru, daughter of Amenemhat 1, the founder of the 12th Egyptian Dynasty in the 20th century BC. The form in which his autobiography is cast, the story of his sudden flight from Egypt, his wanderings, his battle with "a mighty Canaanite man" like Goliath, and his eventual return to be buried in the land of his birth, makes it clear that it was inscribed originally in his actual tomb. Many copies of the story, which is recognized as being based on fact, were found subsequently, dating from the 20th century B.C.E. (when the events actually occurred) until as late as the 21st Dynasty in the 11th century BC. It was a popular tale in ancient Egypt, taught as a literary example to students, and there can be no doubt that all educated persons in Egypt, no matter what their ethnic background, would have been familiar with its contents (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 21-22). As a result of Sinhue's win, he was appointed the commander of the army. Likewise, David was given an identical position as recorded in I Samuel 18:5: "Saul set him over the men of war".

The Biblical account of David and Goliath occurred, accordingly to the Book of Samuel, when Jerusalem was not yet under Israelite control.

Answer for yourself: Why and how did David take Goliath's head to a foreign city under enemy's control? Again I Samuel 17:54 states: "David took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem, but he put his armor in his tent". This should be nigh impossible since Israel did not control Jerusalem at this time (Ibid).

The similarities between the two accounts have been noted by many scholars. For example, William Kelly Simpson, the British Egyptologist, makes the point in his book The Literature of Ancient Egypt that the "account of the fight with the champion of Retenu has frequently been compared to the David and Goliath duel, for which it may have served as a literary prototype. The Autobiography of Sinuhe survived in the memories of the Israelites when Moses led their Exodus to the Promised Land in the 14th century B.C.E. to escape from the harsh oppression of their Egyptian masters. Later, in the 6th century BC, the Hebrew scribes, writing the Book of Samuel during the Israelite 70-year exile in Babylonia, which had invaded Judaea and destroyed the Jerusalem Temple, and anxious to enhance the image of the tribal David in order to make it possible for readers to accept that it was he who established the great empire stretching from the Nile to the Euphrates, included Sinuhe's encounter with a "mighty Canaanite man" (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 21-22).

Based on the evidence cited we can easily see that the story of David and Goliath is not only out of the proper time period of its origin but is nothing more than a fictional account and story which was later inserted into the Bible in order to enhance King David's hero status as a great warrior and that the events of the duel between David and Goliath was actually borrowed from the Egyptian literary work The Autobiography of Sinhue (Ibid, p. 150).

The evidence keeps mounting indicating that there has been a cover-up of the true identity of this King David of the Bible. Yes the most conclusive evidence is yet to come. We have seen a lot but the most significant fact of all in establishing the identity of King David with Tuthmose III comes when one takes the time to compare the military battles and campaigns of Tuthmose III with the biblical accounts of King David. If you do then you find what I did; namely, that the military battles and campaigns of both match in precise detail. The battles of this King David of 1000-960 B.C.E. match those exactly of Tuthmose III in 1500 B.C.E.!

Answer for yourself: How is that possible unless they are blended accounts? I this another coincidence? How many have we seen so far?

We can read these details of these battles of Tuthmose III today and many have and having done so then compared them with the details of the military battles ascribed to this King David of the Old Testament. The details of the military campaigns of Tuthmose III are to be found found inscribed in the Annals, a 223-line document at the granite holy of holies the king built after his Year 40 (1439 BC) at Karnak (modern Luxor) in Upper Egypt, on the east bank of the Nile opposite the Valley of the Kings. Tuthmose III was admired and revered for generations to come for having a great impact on Egypt both as a nation and as a culture. He constructed many great buildings and obelisks throughout his empire. The first of seventeen successful campaigns happened only a few months into his reign, at the city of Megiddo. The reader should take time to notice that this city where Tuthmose III won a strategic battle is just north of the city of Jerusalem which we find instrumental in the reign of Tuthmose III as well for it is there that he placed the Ark of Amun-Ra which made this city "holy" for eternity.

Answer for yourself: Does this not remind you in the slightest of the Ark of the Covenant and the Biblical David who likewise placed the Ark in Jerusalem? Is this but another coincidence?

This campaign, which is recorded in great detail on the walls of the temple he built in Karnak, revealed Tuthmose III as a military genius. Tuthmose III used the element of surprise attack when he invaded Megiddo, using the least expecting route. This route was narrow, hilly, and difficult to pass, and it took over twelve hours to reach the valley on the other side. Tuthmose III lead his men through the hills and when he made it to the valley he waited until the last man made it through safely. This attack from the rear gave the Egyptians an upper hand and played a big part in their victory. The battle lasted more than seven months and when it was over Tuthmose III let the enemy leaders go so that they could tell everyone who the new leader of Egypt was. This victory not only gained Tuthmose III the respect of the people of Egypt but also the respect of leaders and kings of other nations as the rightful pharaoh and a very skilled and intelligent general. Through the rest of his reign, Tuthmose III engaged in sixteen more campaigns and won every one of them. Because of his undefeated record, Tuthmose III is often referred to as "The Napoleon of Egypt".

Tuthmose III was also a master builder. Buildings were constructed at Heliopolis, Memphis, Abydos, and Aswan, as well as the additions made to the great temple at Karnak, where he had his annals inscribed in the walls.

LOOKING AT THE HOUSE OF DAVID...THE ARMANA DYNASTY

The first king of the 18th Dynasty, Ahmose I, completed the expulsion of the Hyksos from Egypt, which his brother Kamose had begun. This action set apart these Kings set apart "the New Kingdom". Once again, the south united a fractured land, giving rise to the New Kingdom (about 1550-1070 BC). During Ahmose's reign, which lasted from about 1550 to 1525 BC, the central government was reestablished, the economy improved, and Egypt's borders were extended to the south and east into Palestine. His reign set the stage for the continuing expansionist activities of the kings who followed.

During the 18th Dynasty, Egyptians began using the term pharaoh (literally "great house," a reference to the palace) to refer to their king.

Answer for yourself: Do you remember the verse where Sarai was taken into "Pharaoh's house"? Is this another link to the 18th Dynasty of Egyptian Pharaohs; in particular Tuthmose III who married her and fathered a child that necessitated that Sarai be given a handmaid to help in her pregnancy after leaving Egypt when it was found out she was already married?

At its zenith, Egypt under the 18th Dynasty controlled an area that extended south into what is now Sudan and east into the Middle East. Much of this imperial expansion is credited to Thutmose III, the dynasty's fifth king, who extended Egyptian control farther than had any other ruler ("Nile to the Euphrates" which is the same thing said of the Biblical King David).

The 18th Dynasty of Egypt had been founded 100 years earlier when, after just over a century of rule over the Eastern Delta of Egypt by the invading Hyksos (Asiatic shepherds, with some Semitic and other elements among them, who subdued the territory around 1630 BC and set up their capital at a fortified city on the eastern borders of Egypt, which they named Avaris), the princes of Thebes united in the 16th century BC in a successful attempt to drive them out of the country. This victory over the Hyksos shepherd "kings" resulted in the crowning of Ahmosis I (c. 1575-1550 B.C.E.), as the first ruler of the 18th Dynasty, which started what is known as the New Kingdom. In all, he spent 15 years battling to ensure that no part of Egypt remained under foreign control, including pursuit of the remnants of the Hyksos into the Gaza region.

Ahmosis I was followed by his son, Amenhotep I (c. 1550-1528 BC), who pushed further into Palestine and Syria in continuing campaigns against the Hyksos. He, in turn, was followed on the throne by Tuthmose I (c. 1528-15 10 BC), one of his generals, after the king had arranged for him to be married to the royal heiress and appointed him as his co-regent. Despite his relatively short reign, Tuthmose I was the original founder of the Egyptian Empire. He marched into western Asia at the head of his army and reached the River Euphrates in the area between northern Syria and Mesopotamia, south of Anatolia. There they succeeded in crossing the river into the territory of Mitanni (the ancient kingdom of northern Mesopotamia) where Tuthmose I erected a stele commemorating his victory. At this time, however, the Egyptians were satisfied simply to crush their enemies and never tried to establish control over the vanquished territories (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 23).

The next ruler was the king's son, Tuthmose II (c. 1510-1490 BC), born of a minor wife and not the Great Royal Wife (Queen Ahmose). In order to inherit the throne he married, as was the custom, his half-sister, Hatshepsut, the heiress daughter of his father and Queen Ahmose. Now here is where it gets interesting again. In his turn, Tuthmose II chose his son, Tuthmose III (c. 1490-1436 BC), by a concubine named Isis, to be his successor. Thutmose III, the son of a concubine (being not full blood Egyptian since a son of a slave concubine), began his reign as a co-regent in 1479 BC but ruled alone after the death of Hatshepsut, his stepmother, who ruled from 1473 to 1458 BC. As a daughter of a pharaoh (Thutmose I) and the wife of one (Thutmose II), Hatshepsut took full control of the throne as the ruling pharaoh during her reign. The relationship between her and Thutmose III apparently was one of mutual coexistence. However, late in his reign as sole king, and after her death, Thutmose III began removing Hatshepsut's name and images from all painted or carved surfaces, thus expunging her memory for posterity.

Now we need to pay close attention. Since being the "son of a concubine" and not of pure blood then in order to ensure his son's right to the throne Tuthmose II took the precaution of having Tuthmose III "adopted" by the state god Amun-Ra. The story of the god's choice of Tuthmose III to be King-Pharaoh of all of Egypt is found in an inscription at Karnak, written long after he had come to the throne. It describes how the selection ceremony took place in the Temple of Amun at Thebes as the Ark of the state god was carried in procession: ". . . On recognizing me, lo, he [the god] halted. . . [I threw myself on] the pavement, I prostrated myself in his presence . . Then they (the priests) [revealed] before the people the secrets in the hearts of the gods. . .?

At this point, the story describes how the young prince was whisked off to Heaven to be appointed king by Ra, the king of the gods: "Ra himself established me. I was dignified with the diadems which were upon his head, his serpent diadem, rested upon [my forehead]... I was sated with the counsels of the gods, like Horus... at the house of my father, Amun-Ra" (Ahmed Osman, Out of Egypt, p. 24).

Tuthmose III, who had been given the throne name (that given at his coronation, different from the one given at birth; in fact, the king usually had four names) MenkheperRa ("established in the form of Ra"), was still a young boy, aged about five, when his father died. His "adoption" by Amun-Ra as king would in the normal course of events have been confirmed by marriage to his half-sister, Neferure, a daughter born to Queen Hatshepsut shortly before the death of Tuthmose II. This marriage did not take place and we do not know why. We do know, however, that her mother, Queen Hatshepsut, prevented the young king from ruling. Instead, she (his aunt-stepmother) appointed herself as his guardian, allowing him only to appear behind her in reliefs of the period.

Soon, as early as Tuthmose III's 2nd year of his co-regency (1489 BC), she even took the step of sharing the kingship, posing and being dressed as a man. For as long as she lived she kept Tuthmose III in the background and regarded her daughter, Neferure, as the real heiress and heir, "Lady of the Two Lands, mistress of Upper and Lower Egypt" (a title found on inscriptions of Hatshepsut). Her plans were frustrated, however, when Neferure died in the 16th year of the co-regency, and from this point onward Tuthmose III gained increasing importance. He seems to have joined the Egyptian army as a young man, and there is evidence to suggest that he fought in the area of Gaza towards the end of the co-regency.

The chance for Tuthmose III to rule Egypt on his own came in the middle of the 22nd year of his reign (1469 BC) of the co-regency when Hatshepsut died. It seems that the first task he undertook was to deface many of the monuments erected to his aunt-stepmother: her reliefs were hacked out, her inscriptions erased, her cartouches (the oval rings containing names and titles of Egyptian rulers) obliterated, her obelisks walled up. It was late in his reign as sole king that Thutmose III began removing Hatshepsut's name and images from all painted or carved surfaces, thus expunging her memory for posterity. So now, technically speaking, as he was neither the son of the Egyptian queen, nor had he married the heiress to inherit the throne, he ruled only by virtue of having been appointed by the state god Amun-Ra. Nor was Tuthmose III the legal descendant of the earlier Ahmosside dynasty. Tuthmose was the "adopted son of God".

Ps 2:7-12 7 I will declare the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. 8 Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. 9 Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. 10 Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. 11 Serve the LORD with fear, and rejoice with trembling. 12 Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him. (KJV)

The Hebrew word "yalad", translated "begotten" means "to declare one's pedigree" and that is exactly what we have seen when Tuthmose III was "adopted" as God's son. Now we can better understand this very important psalm that describes Tuthmose III's adoption as the "son of God", the "son of Amun-Ra". This passage historical meaning was concerning Tuthmose III being adopted as the "son of God" and has nothing to do with a later supposed historical Jesus of the New Testament. We could go so far as to day that it apples to the Old Testament King David since he and Tuthmose III are the same person.

From this time until the end of Amarna rule in Egypt (the rule of Akhenaten, Semenkhkare, Tutankhamun and Aye in the 14th century BC) it was this 18th dynasty of the New Kingdom which was legitimized by the state god Amun-Ra by his adoption of Tuthmose III.

His lack of stature and the physical appearance did not have a damaging effect on the domestic life of Tuthmose III. His chief wife and the mother of his successor, Amenhotep II (c.1436-1413 BC), was his half-sister, Meryt-Ra. Nothing much is known about her, but she was certainly not the heiress. In addition, Tuthmose III had at least three Asiatic wives, whose shared tomb was found in western Thebes, and a large harem.

Scripture indicates that King David also acquired wives and concubines, David's blessings, including his wives, were given to him as a result of God's favor (2 Sam. 5:12-13; 12:8).

Answer for yourself: Is this just another coincidence?

We find no evidence of the relationship with the visiting Sarah that resulted in the birth of Isaac. Perhaps Egyptian scribes regarded it as an unimportant episode or as a great sin whose memory should not be preserved in official records in the same way that Hebrew scribes, while admitting the marriage, tried to obscure the identity of the father of the child born to it. Yet some scholars believe the incident with Bathsheba is the concealed story of Sarai and she was later taken to be his wife (see the article on the true father of Isaac).

By the time that Tuthmose III became sole ruler of Egypt in the 22nd year of his co-regency after the death of Hatshepsut, four decades had passed without a major Egyptian military campaign in western Asia. Now the situation changed completely. The King of Qadesh (a strong fortified city on the River Orontes in northern Syria) led a Syrio-Canaanite confederacy in a general rebellion against Egypt. In response, Tuthmose III marched into western Asia to regain the territories between "the Nile and Euphrates" that had been conquered 40 years earlier by his Tuthmose I. In the next 20 years he led a total of seventeen campaigns in western Asia, at the end of which Tuthmose III (David) had earned himself the reputation of being the mightiest of all the kings of the ancient world and had re-established the empire that was the subject of the Lord's promises to Sarah's descendants.

Gen 15:18 18 In the same day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed (through Isaac on Sarai's side) have I given this land, from the river of Egypt (Nile) unto the great river, the river Euphrates: (KJV)

Gen 15:18 18 In the same day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed

(through Isaac on Sarai's side) have I given this land, from the river of Egypt (Nile) unto the great river, the river Euphrates: (KJV)

Gen 17:8 8 And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God. (KJV)

In summary fashion we need to look at other key "Armana Pharaohs" before we conclude this article on the House of Tuthmose III, the Biblical King David.

Amenhotep III, the Biblical Solomon, the ninth king of the 18th Dynasty, had a long and fairly peaceful reign of almost 40 years (1391-1353 BC). It was marked by unprecedented wealth, cultural creativity, internal strength, and prominence in the ancient world. The king built a magnificent pleasure palace at Thebes, constructed and decorated huge temples throughout the land, and encouraged a flowering of the arts. The influence and power of the priesthood of Amun also increased in Egypt at this time, but the stature of the ruler remained supreme. In fact, Amenhotep III emphasized his own divinity with a focus on divine birth, as seen in reliefs on the walls of Luxor Temple (portions of which he built) at Thebes and in statues bearing his divine name.

Amenhotep IV, the Biblical Moses, the son and successor of Amenhotep III, reigned for less than 20 years (1353-1335 BC). However, his reign represented a focal point in history. He introduced the concept of a single supreme deity, Aton (Aten), the disk of the sun, radically changing the belief systems that had been in place in Egypt for more than 1,000 years. The somewhat monotheistic religion that he developed was a major repentance for Egypt in the face of the overemphasis of Osiris worship (worship of the "godman") in the 18th Dynasty.

Along with the religious changes came modifications in other areas, such as art, language, and architecture. Amenhotep IV changed his name to Akhenaten ("The one who is beneficial to Aton"). He abandoned Thebes and built a new capital at Akhenaten, between Thebes and Memphis. The new capital had innovative plans and structures. For example, temples had no roofs, to let the sunlight in. The art used to decorate its walls displayed a more natural style, and texts composed there used a unique hybrid grammar. Akhenaten's revolution, sometimes known as the Amarna period (after the site of modern excavations of Akhenaten), was short-lived, however, and his successors quickly restored the traditional beliefs. Akhenaten tried to change the Egyptian people to a concept of Godhead which was both monotheistic and abstract. He worshiped the Divine Uncreated Intelligent Energy of the Universe represented by the sun (Aten) as the one true god and it is possible that the Hebrew prophets' concept of a universal God was derived in part from this cult.

It is of great importance as I see it to note that Akhenaten did not originate the Aten. The Aten was not a new invention of Akhenaten - rather, it was portrayed as a sun disc even in his father's time. It has been identified with various pharaohs in previous times. This is nothing new which helps us better understand that behind all the icons of Egyptian religion was the basic idea of "monotheism" as expressed in the concept of the "neteru". Some scholar maintain that Akhenaten, possibly in a move to lessen the political power of the Priests, introduced the worship of one god, the Aten, or Sun disk. The Pharaoh, not the priesthood, was the sole link between the population and the Aten which effectively ended the power of the various temples.

Tutankhamun, who some scholars think may have been the king's son by a minor wife, married the princess Ankhesenamun and succeeded to the throne. He is known to history not so much for reestablishing order after this chaotic period as for the discovery of his nearly intact tomb, filled with magnificent treasures.

Furthermore, in the (unfinished) first tomb of Ay, Tutankhamun's successor, a hymn to Aten was found that bears an uncanny resemblance to Psalm 104. The Psalms are attributed to David. According to David Rohl, David lived in the Amarna period. So that fits nicely.

The last pharaoh of the 18th dynasty, Horemheb, was a general under his predecessors. He reigned from 1319 to 1307 BC and set the precedent for the military pharaohs who ruled during the 19th Dynasty, which lasted from 1307 to 1196 BC. The ability to command troops became critical for Egypt's survival, since rival powers in Asia and elsewhere created difficulties in the coming years.

There you have it. A lot of facts from history and archeology combined that paints a pretty clear picture; namely, that the Biblical David is truly a composite figure mixing the exploits of two different 18th Dynasty Pharaohs separated by some 500 years and all this was done to conceal by Ezra and the later Jewish redactors of the Hebrew texts the truth about Abraham and Sarai and their "adopted" child Isaac from which the promises of the "Lord" (Tuthmose III...the presentative of God on earth) were given them concerning his descendants through this child. It would be from this mixed bloodline that the twelve tribes of Israel would emerge and the messianic promises of the Throne of Egypt be fulfilled in the Hebrew Pharaohs of ancient Egypt.

FINDING THE "ORIGINAL ACCOUNTS" THAT LIE BEHIND THE BIBLICAL STORIES: THE NECESSITY OF PROPER HERMENEUTIC

Answer for yourself: Is the first eleven chapters of the Book of Genesis "myth" or "factual history"? Is this material to be understood "literally" or is it but an allegory for what really happened behind these "stories" we inherited? Where can we go to learn the truth about this book we call today "Genesis" and what these stories really meant before they were handed down for thousands of years and finally collected and recorded by the Jewish race in the Hebrew Scriptures?

Answer for yourself: Was the book of Genesis and these accounts of Creation taken from earlier Babylonian and earlier still Egyptian accounts of Creation? Is Genesis but a summary "reworking" of earlier spiritual writings of other nations which existed for hundreds, even thousands of years and if read and properly understood can be much more enlightening concerning mankind's existence and creation?

Answer for yourself: Could the reading and proper interpretation of these Egyptian Creation accounts, for existence, allow for Science and the Bible to finally meet in reconciliation and harmony which does not seem to exist today?

Answer for yourself: Can Egyptian mythology be behind the later Hebrew interpretation and beliefs about the earliest history of the Jewish race which we read about in the Hebrew Scriptures?

Answer for yourself: Is Christianity's least important features as well as its most important doctrines and components well developed in the Ancient Egyptian culture as well as others that flourished well before the time that Christ is alleged to have walked the paths of Roman Palestine?

Answer for yourself: Is Christianity's Christ and religions dogmas not unique and can they be shown to be merely an adaptation of a vast ancient Egyptian religious drama that was already many thousands of years older than the Christianity that emerged from Rome? Is Jesus Christ no more historical than Zeus, Osiris, Krishna, or Bel?

The lack of attention to Egyptian influences on the Bible by both biblical scholars and today's Christianized Egyptologists is truly unfortunate. If you study these materials for yourself then you can see without a doubt a conscious and deliberate effort to keep the two spheres of knowledge, Egyptian and Jewish, separate. Yet the Bible shows a long and continuous relationship between ancient Egypt and Israel. It places Israel's formative years in Egypt, living an Egyptian life-style, educated in Egyptian ideas, and dwelling there for centuries before the Exodus. Is even describes Joseph as prime minister of the nation and married to the daughter of the chief priest of Heliopolis (the Biblical On), one of the most influential Egyptian cult and education center of the Egyptian religion. Not only that but Ephraim became heir to Joseph and was later a Hebrew Pharaoh and founded the kingdom of Israel. Moses, according to the biblical account, was raised and educated in the Egyptian royal court, and many members of his tribe, Levi, had Egyptian names. King Solomon was himself a Pharaoh and married a pharaoh's daughter and built an Egyptian temple in Jerusalem for her. Jeroboam, when he fled from Israel to escape Solomon's wrath, dwelt in Egypt before leading Israel away from Judah. The impact and influence of Egypt upon Israel is without question as well as its later developing religion unique to its people who departed Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that historically Egypt had a powerful cultural influence on Canaan from well before the Exodus to late in the first millennium B.C.E.?

Answer for yourself: What are we to make of the fact that an eight-century seal of a Hebrew official from the court of King Hoshea of Israel (730 B.C.E.) shows the Hebrew official dressed in a typical Egyptian garb standing over an Egyptian winded-disk icon; thus indicating that Egyptian ideas heavily influenced the royal court of the kingdom of Israel in 730 B.C.E.? Take time to note the date please!

These facts should make us wonder just when we can date the origin of Hebrew monotheism for certain. No doubt Biblical monotheism appears to have gone through an evolution of sorts. In the earliest stages, the Hebrew imagined an all-powerful Creator deity, but evidenced a belief in other deities that is seen buried in stories in the forms of various "Emanations" from God whom we call "angels". This appears to be the primary form in which Hebrew monotheism originated and the form in which it has fundamentally survived even into the present times. The three major monotheistic religions, Judaism, Christianity, and Islam, still believe in a "host of supernatural beings", particularly angels and the devil. They are beings created by the one all-powerful Creator and all find their source from the primal ONE. This same Divine origin for ALL will change after the influence of Zoroastrianism upon Israel and will manifest in Judaism following Israel's return from Persia.

Answer for yourself: Are the beliefs in these "angels" and "devil" nothing more than the same ideas expressed by Egypt and the "neteru" as deities which were also the product of the one all powerful Egyptian Creator? If do you do not know what are the "neteru" then please stop now and read the above "link" before you continue. Have we only changed the names of these "Emanations" from the ONE God and in so doing covered up the Egyptian foundation for Judaism, Christianity, and Islam? Are our "angels" today the "neteru" of Egypt? Yes they are! But you will come to see this as your studies advance. Egyptian religion lies as the foundation upon which both Judaism and Christianity lies today.

Answer for yourself: Where do we find for the first time the idea of an all-powerful Creator who brought forth from Himself other supernatural beings? Yep, you might have guessed it. We find such an idea in the beginning in Ancient Egypt and this helps us understand that Egyptian religion is the very foundation for Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. Our unfamiliarity today with Egypt and Egyptian religion is the reason why we don't recognize the Egyptian religion when we read the Hebrew Scriptures let alone the New Testament and the Koran.

It is in Egypt that we find for the first time the idea of a single Creator who is responsible for all creation and existence, including the appearance of other deities which are but other delegated manifestations of Himself. The Ancients called these "delegated manifestation" of God "Emanations" from the ONE. These "Emanations" from the ONE are depicted in Egypt in the multiple forms, statues, and icons that we see today carved in stone and painted on the wall of Temple and inside the Pyramids. It is these Egyptian views of God and His "Emanations" that initially influences Hebrew understanding of the first times, and we will see that many of these Egyptian Creation myths are replicated in biblical history that we read in Genesis and other places in the Hebrew Scriptures as well as the New Testament but sadly go unnoticed today by most since few possess any knowledge concerning the Ancient Egyptian Religion.

What we find is that over time the nature of the "theology" behind these Creation accounts will change in the hands of Jewish, Christian, and Islamic scribes. They will distance themselves from their "Egyptian Roots" the same way that Gentile Christianity distanced itself from its "Jewish Roots". Whereas Egyptians also worshipped the many other deities created by the prime Creator as part of the ONLY ONE there will be times when overemphasis upon these "deities" will eclipse the worship of the ONE. This is not good and great spiritual men like Moses will do something about it. By the time of Moses there is a movement to return to the worship of the ONE and we find a renewed emphasis in which this ONE Creator deity is deemed to be the only god to be worshipped. The idea that only one deity among many should be worshipped is the highest of monotheisms and is called "henotheism" but understand the worship of other deities from this ONE is yet still monotheism and not polytheism as some suppose since they find their origin in the ONE. It is only when the worship of these "manifestations from this ONE God are separated from Him in pedigree and given origins apart from Him that we find "polytheism" but that is not the case with Egyptian Religion. Rather, we find this condition of "polytheism" in Zoroastrianism and later Gentile Christianity. Thus we now understand better the commandment which Moses found necessary in his day:

Exod 20:3 3 Thou shalt have no other gods before me. (KJV)

For a brief time in the mid-fourteenth century B.C.E. Egypt experienced a from of authoritarian monotheism under a Pharaoh Akhenaten (many believe this to be the Biblical Moses). This occurred at a time when Israel was still in Egypt and the influence of the ideas of Akhenaten upon the educated people in Israel cannot be doubted. Yet, in spite of this reform by Moses/Akhenaten the Hebrews depicted in the Bible never embraced a pure monotheism, nor was there a single universal religion. Over time due to the influence of Persia and Zoroastrianism, where Israel was to be captives for a while, they would later emerged with a purer monotheism but sadly these "deities" which came from the ONE now are separated as entities that originated and "emanated" from this primal ONE are separated from Him in "origin" and thus now at war with Him. Not only that but these returning Hebrews succumbed to the religious influences of the Canaanites and Philistines as well. Lost now is the pure Egyptian influences that they once had and molded their religion around. Under King Josiah (640-609 B.C.E.) many severe religious reforms were instituted and strong opposition to "polytheism" and idol worship emerged. But by this time, the earlier Egyptian beliefs had become embedded in Hebrew traditions and writings along with later Babylonian, Persian, Canaanite, and Philistine religious influences. Ultimately a single redactor or a school of redactors after the 5th century B.C.E. gathered and collected the main sources and traditions together and produced the first version of biblical history as seen through the nation of Israel in its present form, editing as best they could to eliminate inconsistencies between monotheism and the varieties of earlier religious beliefs owing to the fact of the influence of Babylon and Persia and Canaan upon Israel.

If you follow this train of thought then you can understand that this loss of the sum and substance of "Emanationism" of the "many deities and manifestations" from the ONE was the reason for giving new identities to this devil and even "the Christ". Instead of being part of the ONE now these manifestations of God existed separate from this ONE and were given new agendas and "lives" of their own. The world today lies in the sad condition of blaming this "devil" for the evils done by men's hearts whereby they focus on "binding the devil" instead of repentance as well as looking at "the Christ" entirely different from those who first gave the world these spiritual concepts in the first place. We have so fallen away from our Egyptian roots in Judaism, Christianity, and Islam that we don't have a clue quite often about what we speak or worship or read in our Bibles. Wars and the blood of untold millions have been spilt down thought recorded time because of this deviation from our Egyptian roots that once underlaid all world religions. Such is the tragic fruit of the loss of the worlds' first pure monotheism which was Egypt's greatest gift to the world. We only have know the deep truths of Egyptian religion for the last 200 years or so since by it man was able to recover the ability to read the Egyptian heiroglyphs (pictures that were used to write the ancient Egyptian language). For 1400 years, no one knew how to read Egyptian hieroglyphs and all we knew of the Egyptian religion was but speculation. Virtually all understanding of this mysterious script had been lost since the 4th century AD. The breakthrough to the decipherment of hieroglyphs came in 1799, a year after Napoleon's armies successfully captured the Egyptian Nile Delta. A French soldier, while working at a fort on the Rosetta branch of the Nile River, found a black basalt stone slab carved with inscriptions that would change the course of Egyptology. The Rosetta Stone (now in the British Museum) was carved with an inscription in three different scripts: Egyptian hieroglyphs at the top, demotic script (a late cursive form of hieroglyphs) in the middle, and Greek at the bottom. The translation of the Greek passage revealed that the inscription was a royal edict issued on March 27, 196 BC. The decree recorded the benefits conferred on Egypt by the 13-year-old pharaoh Ptolemy V Epiphanes at the time of his coronation. The Greek inscription was a translation of the upper two Egyptian passages and thus provided the key to deciphering ancient hieroglyphs. Copies of the Rosetta Stone inscription were sent to linguistic experts in Europe. The final breakthrough was made by the Frenchman Jean-François Champollion (shown nearby) who published his results in 1822. Because of this discovery then we are able today to reconstruct not only the Egyptian religion and its detailed dogmas but see the influence of Egyptian religions in both Judaism and Christianity and Islam as well.

Answer for yourself: So what are we to make of fact that the government of Israel in 730 B.C.E. was dressing in Egyptian ways? What does this say about Israel and its religion at that time? What happened to obscure all of this later in Israel to where the Egyptian ideas and religion is lost to all but those with a keen eye on Hebrew Scripture who can spot these "masked" Egyptian references that go unnoticed by most in these religious texts? Why does Israel distance themselves later from Egyptian religion after 730 B.C.E.? What does this say about them not doing so for some 700 or more years following the Exodus? What happened?

Wow. What a detective story we have here. Turn off your televisions and begin the study of the greatest cover-up in the world's history, second only to what Rome will do with this information later. But it has to wait for a second. A few more introductory statements must be made.

But before we begin this study we need to plant our feet upon secure ground if we ever hope of dealing with these issues in a satisfactory manner. We need to focus for a second on matters of "interpretation" as it applies to the Hebrew Scriptures which we possess today.

I would like to focus on some principals or ways of thinking related to how we read and interpret Scripture. This article is the study of "hermeneutics"; the theory and methodology of interpretation, especially of scriptural texts and includes the branch of theology that deals with principles of exegesis. I think we need to do this before we move into actually working with the Genesis passages, because how we come to Scripture and the way we think about Scripture as we come to it, affects how we can hear it and what we get out of it.

What we tend to do as we casually read Scripture since being reared as most likely Christians in this nation is to approach the Bible as if it were a sequentially written historical account that is simply recounting events for us to follow through history. In other words we assume that we can pick up this many thousand year old document that we read and easily understand it and proceed from book to book within it without any training whatsoever. We approach this book with a pre-formed idea that all we have to do is read the Bible and approach it as if is the recounting of "literal" history of some event or events or an individual story that occurred "literally" in the past sometime. From this perspective, when we read Scripture we think we are accessing the Bible, entering into the biblical message, on that level as if we are reading of a "literal" historical event. We then move, as we have been taught, from historical event over to application to our lives. We tend to think that the historical event relates directly to how we apply it to our lives of it these passages were really written for "us" today. We reason that since this happened to a certain individual, so it works that same way in our lives today.

I think there is a serious problem with how we come to Scripture in this way of thinking, and I would like to suggest a different way of approaching Scripture. However, when we move to serious study of the text and culture from which these Scriptures sprung then we are overwhelmed by serious problems that quickly confront us and challenges our "literal" approach to reading these Ancient Spiritual documents.

What I would like to suggest is that we take these features of the biblical text seriously and direct our attention to what the biblical text itself actually does in telling these stories, rather than trying to impose on the biblical text our ideas of what it ought to be in terms of modern history and writing. Here is the observation that will underlie this study: what we have access to in Scripture is not always a directly related historical event, but rather it is the testimony of the community of faith to the ongoing significance and importance for Faith "of that event". It is that significance and importance for Faith that the biblical witness is communicating, not just the historical details and data.

When we pick up this book, this Bible, we need to realize that it is a piece of literature, it is a writing. It is the written testimony of the community of faith as that community has already interpreted the significance and importance of the biblical event that it is relating. We are reading ancient "interpretations" of some event that was witnessed or experienced by an ancient people and we are reading their "interpretations" as a unique people as they relate that event in question. What we have in Scripture is not directly the historical event but someone telling us about some event (physical or metaphysical). What we have in the Bible is testimony in the form of literature. The access that we have to Scripture is on the level of literature, of reading what people, what the community of Faith, are telling us. We must not forget that these "interpretations" we read are not always "eyewitness" accounts but rather the "retelling" of previous "retellings" that have gone one often for thousands of years!

Now, it will be helpful for us to consider some of the implications of looking at Scripture through the lens of testimonial literature rather than trying to find historical details. Several observations will help us as we work thorough Genesis which is the cause of these articles in the first place. One observation that we are not used to making as we look through the lens of historical reporting is that things are not always exactly as they appear on the surface in Scripture; it does not always just mean what it says!

Important for us to note is that almost all the passages that we study in Genesis will be narrative, or will occur in a narrative context. Even by identifying this type of literature as narrative gives us some parameters for interpretation. Most narrative, especially narrative from the world of the Ancient Near East, intends to do something other than describe how things really are or "what really happened."

The setting and the scene for the narrative itself must be taken seriously into consideration as we read as well as the immediate context of the story. Hard for us to understand having a "Western-literal" mindset formed in us since childhood is that fact that in reading these Ancient Scriptures it does not matter whether the context is improbable or illogical, because the setting of the story itself tells us how the story is to be heard. Some passages may require an attempt to find out more, if possible, about the historical setting in order to understand the narrative, but it must be kept in mind that the historical setting is just that: a setting. The truth or message of the passages does not always lie in the historical setting.

The setting of the narrator telling us the story is critical. He is situated in his own historical, cultural, and social context, and we need constantly to be aware of the "voice" of the narrator in the story. We will miss much of the significance and message of the story if we forget the role of the narrator, or forget that often the events or narrative being presented is being recounted by an author, a community, sometimes hundreds or thousands of years after the events themselves that we are reading which are presented as occurring. These two time references of the setting of the story and the setting of the narrator are critical and we must take them into consideration when reading these texts of the Bible. It is a wise and skilled reader of Scripture who is constantly aware of both of these parameters.

For example when reading the Genesis creation accounts it is important to note that Israel was exposed first to the Egyptian creation accounts during their intermarriage with Egyptians and their sojourn there before later being exposed to the Babylonian creation accounts through their captivity and both of these literatures as well as time periods figured heavily into the later presentation of the Jewish creation accounts which we read in Genesis today. Hardly any Christians know to even look beyond the slim 69 verses in Genesis dealing with the creation and look to the volumes of pages contained in the Egyptian creation accounts and the Babylonian creation accounts from which the Genesis accounts were taken. In other words if you want the "full story" you have to go beyond Genesis and then a whole new world of understanding about this supposed "Jewish God" opens to your mind and heart and you see the real story like it was once understood by all mankind since behind handed down by Egypt originally.

There is also a third thing that we must be aware if we hope to better understand Genesis and the Creation accounts and that is the time frame that must be considered in interpreting biblical texts. We have mentioned above the time from between event and the recording and interpretation of that event by a community of faithful people but what we must consider now is the time frame of the reader, us, as we bring yet another perspective to the text. Sensitivity to these different time frames of the text will not guarantee a correct interpretation, but neglecting them will almost insure an inadequate if not wrong interpretation. In other words we cannot interpret these ancient Scriptures with our newspapers or televisions or Hollywood.

As we will see, cultural setting will also play a very large role in some texts, as in the first chapters of Genesis. We must not underestimate the influence of Egypt and later Babylon upon the Jewish people who relate to us in the Bible these "Creation Stories" which they learned from exposure to the great civilizations of Egypt and Babylon. But let us not forget that all through these Scriptures Israel is relating to the reader as well much of the very foundation of Egyptian religion as "filtered" through the eyes of the Jews. That cultural setting is not obvious directly in the text, but when we become sensitive to the cultural context in which the Israelites lived who are telling us this story, the features of the text that seem obscure take on new clarity. How we hear certain kinds of words and metaphors comes from a cultural background, and we have to realize that the cultural background of the biblical text is not ours, and that it is simply assumed and not explained in the biblical text. We have to literally get "into the shoes" of people of Egypt who were taught these Spiritual Truths and later yet Babylon who relate these prior Egyptian religious narratives and Creation stories and "religious dogmas" if we ever hope to understand them as the Jewish nation did originally. We have to follow the thread that connects Egypt to Babylon and later to Israel and understand that the later Babylonian and Genesis creation accounts are but later reinterpretations of Egyptian religion by different "communities of faith" as they previously heard, digested, and interpreted these Egyptian stories and myths and related them later through their distinctive nations, culture, and religions. The same can be said for other religious dogmas of Egypt which were later inherited by Israel and this is very critical for our understanding of God and His earliest revelation to mankind because until we get acquainted with the "real" then we cannot be equipped to detect the "counterfeit" when we get to Roman religion called Christianity in the New Testament.

At this point, we will have to put forth some effort to understand the world of the ancient Israelites and Judaism. Sometimes it is hard for us to realize that the Bible, particularly the Old Testament, is an oriental book since we live in a Western culture. The thought world of Oriental culture is radically different from the thought world of Western culture, particularly when we recall that there is a period of three to ten thousand years or more between us and the cultures that relate these creation accounts to us. We have to keep reminding ourselves that this is not our world, and this is not our culture. Again, this does not mean that we can't understand Scripture; it simply means we are going to have to put out some effort to understand the cultural background of Egypt, Babylon, and Israel if we ever hope to come to the truths behind these simple stories we read which we call Scripture today. They were writing from within their culture for their time and their people; not the Christian Church. They were not writing three to ten thousand years in the future for our time and our culture knowing that one day you will be holding summary stories of what they understood about the Cosmos and its God. That's why they are not writing about evolution in Genesis 1; that's 3,000 to 10,000 years in their future. They were not concerned with evolution in Genesis 1. They were not concerned with our problems nor were they trying to answer the questions we would ask. They were answering their own questions for their own people in their day.

The authors of this Genesis text were Israelites who lived 3,000 years ago! They lived in a radically different world than the one with which we are familiar. Yet, they encountered the Creator in ways that allowed them to understand Him and bear witness to others of their unique understanding, an understanding that we still affirm as true after 3,000 years! It is that truth that we seek to hear anew in these articles and studies that we do. Deeper truths than these can be obtained if one goes beyond Israel and looks even deeper into what the Ancient Egyptian both knew and cherished about this God of the Cosmos! Israel give us the summary; Egypt gives us the original in detail. Reading and studying Judaism is like reading "Cliff Notes" in school rather than the original masterpiece that comes only from Egypt.

If you understand the above statements made in this article then we are better prepared now to understand that there are two major hurdles that often prevent us from hearing the stories in Genesis and in our Hebrew Bibles. Ironically these same hurdles prevent us from understanding the truth behind the "Jesus Christ" and "the Christ" we read about in our New Testaments today as well. Let me explain.

- First, we tend to think that Israel emerged in a vacuum, fully formed and totally mature, nearly Christian, in their religious thinking. There are a lot of other factors that go into us making this assumption, but the effect is that we have a hard time seeing Scripture against the cultural and historical background of the people who wrote it (whether Egyptian, Babylonian, or Israelite). Simply said we have a tendency to approach all of these ancient texts and try to read "Christianity" into them whether we know it or not.
- Second, partly because of some of those same factors, we tend to assume that the Bible is directly addressing our concerns. We tend to spiritualize the text into addressing our questions without first asking what questions the text itself is actually addressing. Both of these hurdles will take some effort to surmount, especially in these first chapters of Genesis, which are overlaid with centuries of interpretations from Egypt and Babylon and which have become battlegrounds for all sorts of religious wars.

Two further principles will also guide this analysis:

- the text is primarily theology, telling us about God, humanity, and their relationship; and
- the text itself and its background are the primary object of analysis, with the guideline "stick to the text" which is intended to make us aware to exclude interpretations imported from later Christianized systematic theology or doctrinal assertions. In other words we must not try to "Jesusize" everything we read.

We must not underestimate the importance and influence of Egypt and Babylon upon the emerging nation of Israel. These are the cultural backgrounds out of which the Israelites would emerge. Basic elements of religious beliefs of these prior nations would form Israel's world view and their later relating of these Spiritual Truths that they learned from first Egypt and later from Babylon. We must understand at the beginning that Israel only retold them "through their eyes" as a separate people who carried with them the influence of Egypt and Babylon stamped deeply upon them as a people. The Creation accounts of Egypt, metaphysical realities told via the medium of myths, will be later retold by Babylon who only change the names of the "neteru", forces, powers, Energies, and characters but fortunately the central truths of the story will be intact and unchanged. In our world of scientific investigation and the millennia-old worship of a single deity, we sometimes dismiss myths as simply false without realizing how incredibly important myths were to ancient peoples for it was in the medium of myth and allegory that Divine Truths were captured for all mankind for all time. Such genius! Myths were ways to describe how the physical world exists and what makes it operate, or to express complex social relationships.

Myths speak about something on a cosmic level, trying to describe the unseen forces, powers, and energies that shape human existence. The basic premise of Scripture is that Israel experienced God through their association with these great religious nations such as Egypt. God is not just "out there" on some cosmic level, but has revealed Himself here where we live as human beings and this became very real to Israel while in Egypt as it had as well to the Egyptians.

Now we must pay close attention. In stark contrast to the mythology of the Canaanites, Israel began developing a very incarnational view of God very early in its history. That did not mean that Israel quickly abandoned all the vestiges of the mythological world view associated with it. It would take Israelites nearly 800 years of fierce struggle to chart clearly that new path among the nations. Yet, what was often the minority voice in Israel understood that God had chosen to enter into relationship with humanity in the arena where we live. Israel knew what she knew about God not because they projected their ideas out "there" somewhere, or speculated about what God was, or what He might be, or ought to be, or what they needed Him to be. Israel came to know something about God because their view of God was a synthesis of what they had learned and had imparted to them as a people by both Egypt and Babylon. It was their task to digest this knowledge as a "new people" and let these truths chart their way and allow them to be the foundation for their new emerging nation; truths that they will both see and relate through "their eyes" as a separate nation as had been done previously by Egypt and Babylon. This explains why then one reads the opening chapters of Genesis one sees clearly the Egyptian and Babylonian influence behind the "Jewish view" providing that one possesses such knowledge before he begins such a reading or study. Both Egypt and Babylon had "creation narratives" and "flood narratives" long before there every was a Jewish people and it is from these that Israel will provide us today with a "synthesis" of sorts from both.

Israel tells us the same things about God and creation the same way as did Egypt and Babylon, except that it is to be related through the culture and mores of the Jews instead of Egypt or Babylon. Israel's understanding of God is nothing more than a synthesis of prior knowledge of the Divine that they picked up when in Egypt and Babylon/Persia. Now, however, this existent Spiritual Knowledge will be remolded and reformed and taught through the a nation that had separated itself from these nations that helped mold it in the past. Those cultural perspectives of Egypt and Babylon are the only frame of reference they have; they cannot describe the world or God in terms of our modern perspectives, so they use the only language and symbols and metaphors they have to confess this radically new faith in a single Creator God; that being a post-exilic people who are following this Creator the best they can. Israel had learned things about God over some 800 years of history because God had revealed himself to them through that history while in Egypt and Babylon. It would be Israel's understanding of Egyptian and Babylonian religion as experienced by them while both in these nations and apart from these nations which will be recounted in narrative form during their history as a unique people of this God and Creator. This we call the Hebrew Scriptures today.

Answer for yourself: What other culture could they write in except those to which they had been subjected as well as their own? Thus the importance that we begin in the beginning and understand mankind's first understanding of God and His Cosmos came from Egypt and later was shared with Babylon through later Egyptian colonization of Mesopotamia. But the core idea you need to understand now is that the foundation for all world religions and religious dogmas began with Egypt and from there Israel will gather its knowledge of God and the Cosmos and man's responsibilities to His Creator in it. Thus, although Babylon is important for its later role, the primary focus of our studies must be in obtaining the knowledge and "gnosis" of Egypt if we ever hope to understanding our Creator God as well as did these Ancient Egyptians who shared this knowledge with Israel a long, long time ago.

In the forthcoming articles we will look at the Egyptian Roots" of Judaism and Christianity but before we do let us get prepared for what will come by these summary statements.

Judaism is the precursor to the two Western religions of Christianity and Islam. The creators of this religious system are known as Hebrews. The term often used to refer to the Hebrews is "Semitic." This word however has varying meanings denoting either race, ethnic group, language, or a combination thereof. In ancient Egypt they are clearly depicted as Semitic types. Yet as late as the Roman period there are references to Hebrews being compared to Ethiopians and Egyptians and having "black skin". We are forced to conclude from this that the ancient Hebrews derived from an ethnically diverse group such as Hittites, Amorites, and Canaanites, who intermixed with African types through a variety of means, perhaps during the New Kingdom era when Egyptian and Nubian troops were regularly in the region.

When Jospeh H. Greenberg in the late 1940s set about the monumental task of classifying African languages, the origins of Hebrew were probably far from his mind. Five years later even he would be astonished at his findings. Of the many groups Greenberg placed together, the Hamito-Semitic yielded the most astounding finds. Greenberg had identified five different branches of Hamito-Semitic: Cushitic, Egyptian, Berber, Chadic and Semitic. It was always assumed that the relationship of these languages stemmed from Caucasian invaders into Africa from the Middle East. But Greenberg's research far from supported this. Greenberg realized that the Cushitic branch languages were far more divergent from each other than were those of any other branch. Such sharp differences indicated that the sub-branches of Cushitic had diverged from each other at a very early date and had been evolving independently for much longer than any of the other branches. This all implied that the Hamito-Semitic language was evolving in Cush (Ethiopia) longer than anywhere else. Thus Ethiopia had to be the original homeland of all Hamito-Semitic languages. It is now believed that perhaps as early as 12,000-10,000BC, African proto-Cushitic speakers migrated from Ethiopia spreading out into Africa and the Near East. This proto-Cushitic tongue evolved not only into Cushitic, Egyptian, Berber, and Chadic tongues, but into the Semitic branch as well. This included Hebrew, Phoenecian, Arabic and Assyrian. Thus the Hebrew tongue is of rather recent (prehistorically speaking) African origin. Greenberg renamed this Cushitic derived family group more appropriately, Afroasiatic. It is not surprising then that Hebraic religion can be found with so many African mythic symbols. The picture above illustrates the close proximity of East Africa and the Near East or "Biblical World."

The Hebrews were a small nomadic tribe located in a land of giants. All about were immense and powerful nations in Africa and the Near East. It is not surprising then that the Hebrews were so heavily influenced by the splendor they saw about them. If the ruins of these nations still hold us in fascination today, imagine the awe of the nomadic shepherd gazing upon the Great Pyramid or Her-Em-Akhet (the Sphinx) for the first time. It is generally conceded the Kingdom phase of Hebrew history was an influence of the many kingdoms about them. This influence upon the Hebrews can be most seen in the figure of Moses. It should be noted that the story of Moses tells us very much the importance Africa played in Hebrew religion. It must be remembered that Moses, mythic or real, was said to be "learned in all the ways of the Egyptians."

To the left is the symbol of Judaism, the Magen Star. Unknown to most, even the Jewish people today, the geometric symbol of two overlapping triangles is thought to be of Afro-Egyptian origin. The very motto of Egyptian Religion is "So Above, So Below" which can easily be seen in the inter-locking triangles, one pointed to Heaven "above" and one pointed to Earth "below". Judaism takes this as their symbol today in the absence of Egyptian religion. Also within can be seen the poles, the tropics and the ecliptic. This symbol is especially important to the esoteric Hebrew sect known as the Cabala. It is interesting to note that the Cabala holds a similar sound with the Ka and Ba, the two parts of the Egyptian soul (John G. Jackson, Man, God and Civilization).

In the first book of Moses, Genesis, the earth's description as "dark and without form" has its origins in African creation mythos. Thousands of years before Genesis was written, the Nilotic Egyptian Nu was the feminine chaotic, dark, formless, watery manifestation from whom all Creation sprang. Just as the spirit of God moved across the waters in Genesis, so did the Egyptian manifestation of air, Shu, move across the waters (Nu). And long before Adam was molded from the Earth, the Egyptian manifestation Khunum molded man from clay. Long before Adam was the first man made in God's image, the Egyptian manifestation Atum rose from the waters of Nu to become the first being in the form of God. In Hebrew the first woman was Eve, which in Hebrew is Havvah, who was seduced by a serpent. Havvah in Egyptian is Hefa, the Great Mother Serpent of the world. Thus the greatest stories of Genesis, that of the Creation and Eve and the serpent, are set to unfold. Pictured above is the Egyptian deity Ptah, "Grand Architect" and "Creator of the Universe" in the Memphite Theology (John G. Jackson, Man, God and Civilization).

The Hebrew religion was filled with a host of Egyptian deities. One of the most known of these and one in which we are all familiar was the sacred Golden Calf of the Exodus saga. This so-called "idol" was in reality the Egyptian manifestation Het-Heru, which originated from the strong cattle culture which permeated much of Africa. Depicted as a nurturing cow with a sun disc, she was the guardian of marriage, the donor of life and protector of the dead. She was heralded as the giver of joy, love, sensuality, song, music, and dance. Het-Heru may at one time was the most important deity to the Hebrews. With the coming of Mosaic law, she was replaced by an all powerful male deity, Yahweh.

Answer for yourself: What did we just witness? Did you catch it? It is a well known fact that the earth's earliest religions and revelations of the Divine were "feminine" and "matriarchal" and these would slowly be replaced by "masculine gods" and "patriarchal" religions after 2000 B.C.E. Thus the Exodus story of the Golden Calf may allude more so to the coming patriarchal aspects of Judaism and Hebrew nationalism than idol worshipping because in the text Aaron says, even with the presence of the "golden calf" they were to worship "the Lord". It is important to note that Het-Heru was also associated with the moon and also seen as feminine.

Answer for yourself: Do you know what "Yahweh" means when translated back from Hebrew into Egyptian? It is interesting to note that in Egyptian "Yahweh" means "the growing moon." Coincidence? I sincerely doubt it.

In closing let me give you something to think about as we prepare for other studies in forthcoming articles. When we think of Egyptian contributions to the Hebraic culture we must include the practice of circumcision, and baptism, both traditional African practices. The name Moses itself is Egyptian and means, "baptized by water." Maat was said to have 42 moral laws and commandments which were to be declared by the deceased in order for them to be judged. These laws were not only for the common individual, but for everything in the universe to obey. It is from these 42 Laws of Maat that we find the source of the Hebraic Ten Commandments in Exodus 20. Pictured is Maat in her winged form. Some also argue that Maat may be the source of the Hebraic notion of angels (with a Canaanite link) as they appear nearly identical on the famous Ark of the Covenant. And I could go on and will in the articles that follow.

That which so typifies Hebraic religion is its staunch monotheism. This is an attribute generally attributed to the Hebrews and the western religious systems, however such attribution is not warranted because it can be shown that many African religions were also monotheistic. The Egyptians held that from the ONE "emanated" a "pantheon" of other manifestations from this ONE; all having their primal origin within the ONE. The difference with the Hebraic version is its strong disassociation with all other deities in favor of one Supreme Being. But this is strange as they also have within Judaism the presence of "angels" and "the Satan" whom are but "neteru" themselves that "emanated" from this ONE. But the point you need to remember is that this spiritual ideology which we can term, "total Monotheism," had existed elsewhere long before the rise of Israel and Judaism. The ruler Akhenaten is known to have begun a spiritual reformation in Egypt around 1350 B.C.E. to limit somewhat the worship of the ONE along with His "Emanations". This reformation by Akhenaten, whom many believe to be the Biblical Moses, did away with the entire Egyptian pantheon of "neteru", replacing them with one Supreme Being known as Aten. Akhenaten, born Amenhotep IV, even changed his name to reflect his new found "total Monotheistic" deity. Akhenaten's reforms are called a "heresy" by some and were short lived however as political and social pressure forced him to return to traditional Egyptian spiritual practice. Many have speculated that the Hebrew idea of "total Monotheism" was derived from this earlier version of religious reform instituted by Akhenaten in 1350 B.C.E.

Answer for yourself: How much of Judaism today is nothing more than the Egyptian religion as handed down for thousands of years? How much of Christianity is nothing more than the Egyptian religion as handed down "changed and altered" today almost beyond recognition by the antisemites of the Early Roman Church? If you catch my drift you see and possibly understand that not only did Gentile Roman Christianity divorce itself from its "Jewish Roots" but their "Egyptian Roots" as well. A great repentance in religious beliefs are needed today as the forthcoming articles will detail.

WHY HIDE SPIRITUAL TRUTH WITH PARABLES & SPIRITUAL ALLEGORIES &MYTHS IN OUR BIBLE?

The Christian Bible, as also the Divine Scriptures of other faiths, has from remote times been regarded as belonging to a special, even unique, category of literature. Exponents of Oriental religious writings, the early Kabbalists, the disciples of Ammonius Saccus, other Neoplatonists of Alexandria known as Analogeticists and their successors down to modern times all had one thing in common.

Answer for yourself: What was this?

All regarded the world's Sacred Scriptures and Sacred Books as being largely, but not entirely, allegorical. They have been described by scholars as "pseudo-histories" at best. They looked upon them as being constructed of symbols, analogies and parables which were filtered down through time through different races of peoples and in so doing they all passed through unique understanding depending upon the different peoples and nations who served as the agents and vehicles of God's Divine Revelation. For example, this same Divine Wisdom of ancient Egypt is portrayed in Judaism to a large extent and within Judaism we find this same "Divine Wisdom" and "Esoteric Religious Philosophy" that we find in ancient Egypt as well as other ancient nations like Persia and Babylon. As stated before in earlier articles and elsewhere on this website there exits in the world today a common "teaching" concerning God, His Krst/Karest/Christ and the Soul of mankind from ancient nation to ancient nation that remained intact for thousands and thousands of years until the rise of Roman Christianity during the 2nd through the 5th centuries. As previously stated these allegories are said to preserve for posterity, to reveal and yet to conceal, profound spiritual and therefore power-bestowing truths.

There are many good reasons for such secrecy in "hiding" this Divine Wisdom in allegory and myth in our Bibles and other Sacred Books of the world. This method of writing as found in most ancient religions and their Sacred Books and writings is referred to as the Sacred or Mystery Language and is said to have been invented and used by sages of old in order both to reveal to those who would be helped and to conceal from those who might be harmed by a deep Spiritual wisdom which can bestow theurgic powers (Divine or supernatural intervention) upon its possessors. The necessity for this reservation becomes clear when the use to which modern scientific discoveries are but observed. One example of the misuse of knowledge is the release, as the explosive agent in atomic bombs, of the energy derived from nuclear fission and fusion. In the hands of those who cannot be trusted with such power the consequences of such knowledge could and would be devastating for humanity and could threaten the delicate balance of life as we know it on this planet. One only has to read the newspapers to know the reality of this threat in our present world by those who cannot be trusted with such power. This type of power pales in comparison with the power of the Divine which lies latently within us just waiting to be "awakened" when we reach a Spiritual maturity capable of exercising Divine wisdom in their use and handling to serve mankind and not destroy it.

Recognizing that their discoveries belonged to humankind, the philosophers and scientists of former days knew that such knowledge placed in general hands, and particularly in those of disruptive elements in society, could be extremely dangerous. They therefore constructed the cryptic language in which the inspired Scriptures and mythologies of the world have been written. Now this is important to note; although based in general upon historical events, these narratives, as earlier suggested, have undermeanings and, in some cases, even a sevenfold significance. While apparently founded on fact unique to each nation which carried with them this ancient Divine Wisdom, each story in the Sacred Books of such nations is rather an historical metaphor, having an inner purport and containing within itself layer upon layer of hidden knowledge.

When reading our Bibles we see that in Judaism, both in the Old Testament as well as the teachings of "the Christ" through Judaism that "the Christ" taught mankind through this method of teaching. When addressing his disciples, he spoke openly of Spiritual Truths, but to nondisciples, in parables. Indeed, we find that "the Christ" taught in Judaism such truths as:

"Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet and turn again and rend you" (Matt. 7:6).* He also said to them, *"Unto you is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without all these things are done in parables" (Mark 4:11).

One reason for this differentiation is not hard to see. Knowledge can bestow power, and the writers of the sacred language were in the same position in which a small group of modern scientists would find themselves after having first discovered atomic energy and the means for its controlled release. They would not dare immediately to make their discovery universally available. In like manner, the sages of old, having investigated the structure of "matter" and the composition of both universe and human beings and having discovered the forces and "Living Energies" which are locked up and concealed within them, felt a tremendous sense of responsibility. They had to prevent the misuse of their Spiritual knowledge and, at the same time, to insure its preservation for the future benefit of humanity. This necessitated that they create a literary method which would both "conceal" and "reveal" such Divine Truths to those initiated into the higher mysteries having shown their Spiritual maturation to the point where they could be trusted to safeguard such power and serve humanity with them; not destroy it.

The word "mystery" comes from Greek word meaning "one who keeps quiet" and implies an "initiate," a person introduced to the secret rites of a mystery. Mystery religions and secret societies existed in ancient Egypt, Babylon, India, Persia, Rome, Greece and many other countries. These mysteries restricted membership, required secret initiation ceremonies, and swore their initiates to secrecy and allegiance. These ancient Wisdom Religions had 2 sets of doctrines:

- A public doctrine which was socially acceptable and which gave the group good public image. These were called the "Lesser Mysteries" which are the parables, myths, and allegories of which I refer. Not possessing the "keys" to their proper interpretation often these "myths, allegories, and parables" were seen as but simple childish tales or often mistaken as we do today for "literal" events and stories; never being suspected of concealing Divine and Spiritual Truths that can impact the Soul of mankind as it can.
- A secret/esoteric doctrine which was the real purpose for the society and as initiates qualified for higher levels in the secret society, they were gradually introduced to the esoteric doctrine which lie behind such simple parable, myths, and allegories.

Actually, in the case of knowledge of the superphysical and Spiritual worlds, their structure, their natural forces and intelligences associated with them and their correspondences with the superphysical vehicles and powers of human beings we see that the need for secrecy is far greater. In wrong hands the power which such knowledge makes available is far more dangerous than physical atomic energy. The products of nuclear fission and fusion can destroy only physical objects. If misused, hidden or esoteric knowledge and the power associated with it can, in addition, impair the integrity, harden and warp the nature and, in consequence, seriously retard the evolution of the transgressors and those under their malign influence. The ancient seers, therefore, devised a cryptic language in which some of the words retain their normal meaning, while others are cryptograms for Spiritual, esoteric, and metaphysical truths. In doing this, the writers of old knew that only those who possessed the "keys" of interpretation would be able to discover the truths which the sacred language both reveals and conceals. The secret is rendered still safer by the fact that, in order to use the keys successfully, one must have developed the intuitive faculty and be imbued with a sense of moral responsibility.

After years of study I never cease to be amazed by the irony of Christianity as I and many other scholars see it. Christianity, in its earliest days, shared a good deal in common with the many "mystery religions" which became popular in the Roman Empire. In fact, it's hard not to place Christianity among the mystery religions (even though Christian apologists refuse to do this for obvious reasons because Christianity prides itself as being the "only way" to God and Heaven). Christianity had many points in common with most mystery religions whether we know it or not. The "Divine Pattern" is reproduced in both; yet terribly blurred as it exists in contemporary Christianity today. Much of the material in the "genuine" Pauline epistles, reflects belief in a mystical godman (whom Paul calls "the Christ"). Also significant is the fact that Paul, formerly Saul, was a native of Tarsus, in his day still the chief seat of Mithras, and a Stoic refuge. The mystery influences in Paul's writings are obvious, if one simply knows to look for them. Other early Christian writings contain certain phrases borrowed from the mystery religions — sort of like code-words.

For example, the opening verse of the gospel of John says: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." In the original Greek, the word translated "Word" is "Logos". This term had a special and secret meaning in the philosophies of the mystery religions: It signified the creative power of thought and speech, and by extension, the manifestation of wisdom. In the context of the verse, which is the creation of the world, this is clearly what is being alluded to! The same is true of many other verses in the New Testament: They are almost in code, if you will, having special meaning above and beyond what is overtly indicated, for those initiates who had learned to understand these special terms. And the rituals likewise had a special, additional layer of meaning.

Look at this:

Rom 16:25 25 Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, (KJV)

1 Cor 2:7 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: (KJV)

Eph 1:9 9 Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: (KJV)

Eph 3:3-5 3 How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, 4 Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) 5 Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; (KJV)

Eph 3:9 9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: (KJV)

Eph 6:19 19 And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel, (KJV)

Col 1:26 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: (KJV)

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Col 2:2 2 That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ; (KJV)

Col 4:3 3 Withal praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds: (KJV)

I dare anyone to try to tell me that Paul did not preach the "mysteries" or the "Mystery Religion" as the "original Christianity" of the first century within Judaism and in relation to "the indwelling Christ" which lies at the heart of all ancient Sacred Books and Divine Wisdom. Sorry, there is no place for a supposed "literal" and "historical" Christ in any of the authentic Pauline Epistles; one has to look to the later Pauline Roman forgeries to find such ideas. Due to debates with supposed "pagans" and "heathens" using Roman vocabulary we find since being put on the spot by Celsus and many others possessing the "keys" to this "Divine Wisdom".

Celsus, the Epicurean philosopher, wrote that "the Christian religion contains nothing but what Christians hold in common with heathen; nothing new" (Justin Martyr, Apol 2.).

Rome, in losing debates with such "enlightened ones", in the middle of the 2nd century, Rome will begin to persecute out of existence these Mystery Religions and their Sacred Wisdom along with burning the libraries of the world to destroy all records of this Scared Knowledge and Wisdom from face of the Earth. In a few short generations Rome will have complete theological dominance and no hinderance will stand to the might of the mighty Roman Empire, its legions, and its "theology" from conquering not only mankind but his "mind" as well. Had not much of this been buried to escape such purge of Divine Truth from the Earth we would possibly know little if nothing about this Divine Truth today.

One couple of more examples are appropriate. Baptism, for example, is a metaphorical representation of the believer's death, and his rising out of the water, thus representing his rebirth into a new Spiritual life, awareness, and enlightenment where he see that he is a Divine creature and a Soul living in the body of an animal; no longer to be dominated by such a carnal instinct and nature. The sacrament of communion, in which (some) Christians are taught to believe today that they ingest the actual body and blood of a "literal" Jesus Christ (cannibalism), had originally another deeper Spiritual meaning; it indicated the constant process of taking in the divine "force," or logos or wisdom within oneself. This was a basic part of the life of the initiate, as routine as eating. For all of these reasons, and many more that are discovered in comparative study of Christianity with the ancient Mystery Religions and their "keys" to their sacred ancient Wisdom I cannot help but associate Christianity with the mystery religions. Nor could the authentic Paul and his 7 authentic Epistles. It's no coincidence that Christianity saw the mystery religions as its chief competition. Early Roman Christians argued extensively against the "mysteries," and when it appeared that Christians were veering into mystery-territory, heresy-hunters appeared to stop them. In southern Gaul, for example, a mystical version of Christianity founded by Valentinus, became popular, in the second century. Irenaeus, bishop of Lyon, penned a diatribe against it, known as Against Heresies, around 180 C.E.. His main argument was that Valentinian Christianity was neither Scriptural nor apostolic, and therefore it had to be wrong. Other Christians faced the accusation that their Christian beliefs were simply a weaker "reinterpreted" copy of older ancient Spiritual traditions common to most ancient world religions. Church Fathers such as Justin Martyr responded by asserting that Satan had somehow anticipated the career of Jesus Christ, and had inspired the older pagan traditions, as a way to sidetrack people! It's worth noting that even Justin Martyr did not deny the obvious similarities between Christianity and "the mysteries," even if he came up with a rather lame rationale for them.

Eusebius, in his Church History, tells us that Justin, in his Dialogue with Trypho, says "there exists not a people, civilized or semi-civilized, who have not offered up prayers in the name of a crucified Savior to the Father and Creator of all things" (Hist. Eccl. lib i. ch. iv). Here is proof positive of my claim above.

The honesty of Justin Martyr as portrayed here is the heart of the subject matter of these web pages. I intend to show you that from the beginning of time the pagan nations had their "crucified Sun-gods" and "Goddesses" and the Spiritual realities connected with them as the allegorical "Descent of the Soul" into "matter" was personified through the lives and deaths of these personalized Sungods and Goddesses. Our "Jesus Story" is but a copy of the same Divine Wisdom and metaphysical reality in which we find ourselves as incarnated Souls on this plane of existence. Much recorded about Jesus of Nazareth in the New Testament is nothing more than the "re-telling" of the same Sun-Myths; the only difference is that now they are applied to the life of Jesus the Jew as if a "historical" and "literal" event to which mandatory belief is required or else one faces damnation by God. This is a horrible mistake perpetrated by Rome upon the ignorant of the "keys" of interpretation of the ancient myths and Spiritual Wisdom which was reinforced by Rome through fear of damnation. But as I showed this "Divine Knowledge" had to be kept secret from the profane who would abuse such powers. We see a perfect example in the New Testament concerning Simon who wished to "buy the power" of the Holy Spirit for selfish agendas and not us it as a servant of humanity. Desperately wanting the power Simon offered to give Peter money for it saying, "Give me this power, that any on whom I lay my hands shall receive the Holy Spirit."

In fact, Gnosticism in general was a mystery-version of Christianity. Literalist Christians opposed it, and eventually, they won out.

Answer for yourself: Don't you find it rather odd that Christianity, itself originally but a duplicate of prior mystery religions would eventually after 2 centuries reject all of its own "mystical" content, and later reinterpret the whole of the prior Divine Wisdom and Sacred knowledge of the ancient and in so doing basically destroy it?

This is one of many paradoxes that surround the origins of Christianity. Unfortunately, later Christians destroyed many records of the period, so we may never know precisely why this happened. This Sacred hidden knowledge of the ancient never really died out. Christianity survived, and dominated western culture. Within it sprang many mystical traditions, many of them inspired (indirectly) by the mystery religions. The reason for Christianity's victory is both obvious and simple: Politics. It so happened that it became popular among the intelligentsia of the eastern imperial cities; especially in places such as Antioch, Alexandria, Nicaea, Carthage, etc. These cities had managed to ride out the turbulence of the first three centuries of the Empire. Roman Emperors, beginning with Constantine, needed the support of the eastern cities, if they were to make the Empire work. So Constantine, in 313, declared tolerance for Christianity, making it safe to be a Christian. Later Emperors added even more favors to the young religion (with the exception of Julian "the Apostate" who made an abortive attempt to make Mithras the state religion of Rome). Once they had Imperial favor, Christians began ruthlessly stamping out all other religions. In other words, they did to others what had been done to them for nearly three centuries! They coerced conversions, and destroyed texts and monuments which were sacred to other religions. For this reason, as well as the mystery religions' own inherent secrecy, we have little to go on, in trying to learn about them. This is unfortunate, as we know that the mystery religions had inherited millennia of traditions. The loss to humanity is incalculable to humanity today.

But through it all the ancient Wisdom Religion lay buried under allegory, myth, and metaphor in the Sacred Books of the nations including the Gnostic First New Testament which Rome would later adopt and "alter" and "corrupt" and in so doing present to the world such fabrication as their New Testament; in reality the "Second New Testament". Ironically, hidden within it due to it being a previous Gnostic writing complied by Marcion, lay sleeping on the pages in places which escaped the Roman tampering with the texts lie the ancient Spiritual Wisdom in myth and allegory intended for the evolving Soul of mankind. Oh, had we the "keys" to open this Sacred Wisdom for our Soul that lies hidden under presumed "literal" and "historical" events at taught by Rome and their "literalism" which in reality are anything but that. But we will never know these Divine Truths as they were originally taught for thousands of years and our Souls never benefit for such Divine Truths as intended by our Creator as long as they escape our recognition in the pages of our Bible which remain a "closed book" to the vast majority of Christians today. Imagine this; 2.5 billion people who read a book they think they understand but in reality never do. This has to change; it is time for mankind, as least the Christian part of them, to "catch" up the the Divine Truths that much of mankind possess today which lay "outside" of traditional Christian exegesis of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which yet today is contained in our Bibles.

FOUR "KEYS" TO HELP YOU INTERPRET YOUR BIBLE CORRECTLY

In these "introductory" articles on "restoring the correct interpretation of our Bibles" I have given many precepts and principles to the student and "truth-seeker" concerning the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the techniques used by these ancient sages to both "conceal" but yet at the same time "reveal" the secrets of this metaphysical reality in which we, as descended Souls, find our present existence. The foregoing enunciation of the principal theme of all allegories, that being if you recall is that the manifestation of "life" from its Spiritual Source, God, is composed of both a emanation and "forth-going" or "descent" on its involuntary journey and "crucifixion on the cross of matter". In this descent we find this manifested life "falling" deeper and deeper into "material existence" and "matter", its evolution therein where it become clothed, imprisoned, entombed, and mummified in vehicles of increasing density until the densest level is reached where upon the completion of Spiritual evolution is attained to its highest degree whereupon this Soul, or manifested life, then returns and ascends to Heaven and Home once again. This grand "design" for the Soul is a "Divine Pattern" recognized by the ancient Spiritual Masters and Adepts and expressed by the application to humankind by four possible main interpretations of the allegories and symbols of the world and its Sacred Books.

- First, in order to come to correctly interpret the Bible we need to realize that some recorded, external, supposedly historical events, or pseudo-historical events, are to be understood as occurring interiorly within the very bodily essence of humanity. All happens within every people, nation and individual, each recorded event in the world's Sacred Books from nation to nation, although depicted in the setting of a pseudohistory, it is descriptive of a subjective experience of and within the individual. This application is essentially twofold, referring both to the experiences and attainments of peoples and individuals advancing by the normal, gradual, evolutionary method, and to individuals who are endeavoring to live *"the way of holiness" (Isa. 35:8).

The need for the veiling in allegory and symbol of magical and esoteric knowledge is especially great in the latter of these two applications; for quite early in the approach to and entry upon the path of swift unfoldment, an enhancement of the willpower and of the mental and supersensory faculties begins to be apparent. Premature awakening and development of these supernormal faculties and powers within a person, and their employment for purely personal and destructive purposes, could prove extremely harmful both to those who misuse them and to their fellow beings.

The apostle Paul would seem to have accepted this mystical interpretation of Scripture of which I have just mentioned. For him the Nativity of Christ, for example, was not a particular event which occurred at a certain time in Bethlehem to a "litera" or "historical" person but is descriptive of a universal human experience. The narratives of the Annunciation, the Immaculate Conception and the Nativity of Christ, which can be found inscribed on the Temple walls of Luxor in ancient Egypt, thousands of years before the time alloted for the "Jesus" of the New Testament, are so written as to describe allegorically the gradual awakening of Christ-like powers of perception, action and attainment into conscious activity within the Souls of advanced individuals. The presence and the activities of Christ on Earth evidently were for Paul but mirrors of the interior awakening and perfecting of the inherent, redemptive Christ-power and nature within human beings; the Logos of the Soul. Thus he wrote:

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Col 1:26-27 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

As students of the Bible both approach their Bible and read the great narratives with this "key" to proper interpretation of their Bible in hand, as it were, they can consciously share in the recorded experiences "personally" for these narratives were not to be understood as if "historical" or "literal"; they were metaphysical realties that were clothed in allegory and metaphor because they occurred and were to be experience Spiritually" within" the person. In such a way they might ascend the mount with Abraham, Moses, Elijah and Jesus and, in however slight a measure at first, begin to participate in their illumination. With the two dejected disciples, they may walk the road to Emmaus and hear the wise words of their temporarily unknown companion. With them, at the breaking of the bread, they will then experience that inner light which came when "their eyes were opened, and they knew him" (Luke 24:13-31). Such, indeed, is part of the intention of the inspired authors. As one studies the Scriptures of the world, therefore, one must read intuitively, sensitively, with one's mind open and responsive to that vast consciousness which so often seems waiting to burst through. Thus the First Key is that some recorded events also occur interiorly.

- Secondarily, in order to come to correctly interpret the Bible we need to realize that almost each of the persons introduced into the stories of our Bible represents a condition of consciousness and a quality of character that exists within mankind as a whole. Almost all of the actors in the Bible are personifications of aspects of human nature, of attributes, principles, powers, faculties, limitations, weaknesses and errors of human beings.
 - When purely human beings are the heroes or heroines, the life of a person historically evolving at the normal rate is being described. But this is by far and large the lesser of the depiction of "people" in the Bible.
 - When the hero is semidivine, however, the accent is upon the hastened progress of the Spiritual Self in the individual after it has begun to assume predominant power.
 - When the central figure is an Avatar or "descent" of an aspect of Deity, the experiences narrate those of the Spiritual Self during the last phases of human evolution to the stature of perfected humanity. Such is the general purpose, and such is the literary method used by the ancient writers of the world's immortal allegories, parables and religious myths.

The Deity or father, when introduced into a narrative, generally refers to the highest Spiritual essence in human beings, the "Divine spark", the immortal seed, the Logos of the Soul, the Dweller in the innermost, the Monad. This is especially true where the Supreme and Eternal Deity, the Logos, is brought into the story. The Supreme Emanator, referred to as "God" and "the Spirit of God" (Gen. 1:1-2), is above all things universal and Divine. Whenever the Eternal One is introduced into a narrative, it is always susceptible of interpretation as a personification of the Monad of the individual, as also of the Oversoul of a people.

In the parable, the bosom of Abraham (Luke 16:22) into which Lazarus, "a certain beggar," was carried by the angels, refers to the state of consciousness in which the human Monad perpetually abides and to which the Spiritual Soul or immortal Ego eventually attains. Those following the initiatory path seek to hasten this realization, in waking brain-consciousness, first of their divine, immortal nature, and thereafter of their unbroken unity with the Supreme Lord of all. The full recognition of the individual's unity with God, of the oneness of human-Spirit with God-Spirit, is the ultimate goal of all who seek the strait gate and enter upon the narrow way. In Hinduism this state is called moksha or liberation; in Buddhism, Nirvana or conscious absorption; and in Christianity, salvation, ascension, Christhood, and being "carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." The symbol of the disciple John leaning on the bosom of Jesus (John 13:23) is susceptible of a similar interpretation. Thus Abraham, as also many other people in the Bible, personates both a principle of human nature and a state of consciousness.

In this method of Biblical study the characters, Divine, semidivine and human, are regarded as personifications of principles and powers of nature as the macrocosm and of human beings as the microcosm. This reading is supported by Paul, who writes:

1 Cor 10:11 11 Now all these things happened unto them for examples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. (KJV)

Gal 4:22-24 22 For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. 23 But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. 24 Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is this the only reference of the Bible that teaches us in allegorical fashion? Not on your life! The vast majority of the Bible writers did not make mention that what they were teaching and writing in these Sacred texts were allegories as so explicitly exclaimed later by Paul for the simple fact that their audiences were all too familiar that their teachings and writings were nothing more than Spiritual allegories and parallel adaptations of the prior ancient Spiritual Wisdom and its myths and symbols known to mankind since the beginning of time. As I stated above it bears repetition. It is not unreasonable for each reader of the Bible to assume that such a supposal may also be true of many other portions of the Bible. One may even go further than this and assert that the practice of studying the Scriptures of the world in their literal meaning and as records of actual historical events alone can lead to serious confusion of the Spiritual truths intended by the writers.

These difficulties involving the forced literal interpretation and understanding of the Biblical texts are all avoided, and profound inspiration consistent with reason is gained by the recognition of a mystical intent and meaning underlying many portions of the Scriptures and mythologies of ancient peoples; the Christian Bible included. Thus the blatant sin of Simpson with a prostitute while breaking his Nazarite vow to God, the betrayal of the Christ by Judas, the devotion and the selfless love of Mary Magdalene who gave her all and the spikenard in anointing the Christ, the human frailty and failure of Cain who slew his brother, the adultery of David and Bathsheba, the many other contemplative aspects of human nature and modes of human life displayed by these as well as other Biblical characters are more than not human examples of the frailty of the incarnated Soul and the temptations that it must overcome in this Earthy incarnation.

As readers of the Bible we must be aware of the interaction between these various aspects of human nature, the effects they produce upon one another, the waxing or waning of one or more of them at different times and in different lives, and the gradual, triumphant emergence and predominance of the evolved Spiritual Self, the hero/heroine of every saga. All of these various manifestations of human nature is allegorically portrayed by the initiated authors of the Scriptures of the world, including our Bibles. Similarly, the marriages in which many of these exploits culminate may be interpreted as symbolic references to the unification of the consciousness of the outer and the inner Self. In mystical literature they are therefore referred to as "heavenly marriages." Thus the narratives themselves describe the experiences, particularly the tests, ordeals, defeats and victories, of one person, who is symbolic of human beings in general. Successful exploits describe interior achievements, while partial and complete failures, defeats and surrenders are allegories of temporary victories of the purely human over the divine in the individual and conquests of "matter" over Spirit. In the main, the manifold experiences of the immortal Self of the human being in its journey toward perfection are narrated as the adventures of numbers of persons in any one story. The twelve labors of Hercules, each susceptible of association with one of the twelve signs of the Zodiac, the voyage of the Argonauts, the journeys and experiences of the Israelites, the lives of the Lord Shri Krishna and of the Lord Christ, among many others, are all descriptive in the symbolic manner of the journey of the Soul and the psychological, intellectual and Spiritual experiences passed through on that journey. Thus, we see that this Second Key is that most the supposed human dramas in the Bible are but allegorical narratives representing a condition of consciousness and a quality of character of the Soul.

- Thirdly, in order to come to correctly interpret the Bible we need to realize that each story is thus regarded as a graphic description of the experiences of the human Soul as it passes through the various phases of its evolutionary journey to the Promised Land, or cosmic consciousness. This cosmic consciousness is the goal and summit of human attainment. Inspired allegories are always distinguishable from mere novels and biographies by several characteristics, such as the intrusion of the supernatural and the inclusion in the story of angelic and divine beings, and even of Deity itself. When these are found, the existence of a hidden revelation may always be suspected. The reader possessed of the keys may then penetrate the veil of symbolism and find that hidden wisdom which it had concealed.
 - In this third method of interpretation each story may be studied from at least two points of view. The first of these refers to normal evolutionary experience and natural mental and emotional states, while the second point of view reveals the sacred allegories as more especially descriptive of the experiences of those who enter in at the strait gate and pursue the narrow way. Let me give you an example. In the parable of the sower (Matt. 13:1-23), the different conditions of the ground, as "the Christ" explained privately to his disciples, represent various evolutionary phases and states of Spiritual receptiveness of the nation and the individual, from complete unresponsiveness (rocky ground) to full perception and ratification (fertile ground). One more example will suffice. In the parable of the ten virgins (Mart. 25:1-13), the foolish ones may be regarded as those who are not as yet sufficiently Spiritually evolved to be able to respond to impulses descending from the higher Self (the bridegroom), and therefore not really to be blamed. The wise virgins, on the other hand, may be interpreted as personifying all those in whom the Spiritual Self has attained to a considerable degree of evolutionary unfoldment and the outer, physical nature is sufficiently developed to be aware of this fact and to give expression, in the conduct of daily life, to the higher idealism and the fruits of Spiritual experiences. This is followed by the progressive illumination of the mind-brain by the Spiritual Self (betrothal), leading to the fusion of the immortal and mortal natures (marriage). As you can see the "heavenly marriage" of "Soul with Christ" is the goal. Thus the Third Key is that many scriptural stories allegorically describe phases of the Soul within humanity and its evolutionary Spiritual journey and their accompanying experiences.
- And fourthly and finally in order to come to correctly interpret the Bible we need to recognize that some physical objects, as also certain words, have each their own special symbolic meaning. The sacred language of the initiates of the mystery schools of old is indeed formed of hierograms and symbols rather than of words alone, the symbols' meanings being ever constant, as constant also is the doctrine which this language everywhere reveals. What is amazing to the student here is the constancy of the "same" interpretation of the symbols in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom down through recorded history up and until the rise of Roman Christianity in the 2nd century. Words and the symbols behind them are thus used as "keys" with which to unlock the inner meanings of scripture and mythology. This fact is allegorically referred to on many occasions.

Answer for yourself: So what should we have learned here?

We should have learned that in order to discover the Sacred Wisdom hidden with the Christian Scriptures and other world Scriptures we must divest ourselves of the idea that they were conceived and written entirely as chronologically and historically accurate accounts of actual events. The Gospel narrative, for example, in its initiatory interpretation, describes the progress of an advanced and elevated Soul through the final ascending phases of evolution until the highest, the Ascension, is attained. To be fully appreciated, the great drama must be transferred from the material to the psychological, intellectual and Spiritual realms and levels of human experience.

The disciples, then, are personifications of the noblest attributes of human nature. Though still imperfect, they are becoming increasingly spiritualized, or brought into the presence of their Master, who symbolizes the dweller in the innermost, the God-self within. The disciples are not yet equal to Christ, being younger in evolution and, in consequence, still under the delusion of self-separateness. This is shown by their question as to who will be greatest in the kingdom of heaven (Mart. 18:1). They are still tainted by grosser material attributes, hence the symbolic washing of their feet by their Master (John 13:3-17). A traitor still lurks in their midst, who must be self-revealed and self-slain before the great Ascension can occur. The Master admonishes, rebukes and warns them, indicating the spiritualizing activity of the Divine Presence within.

Now by understanding the allegorical aspects of interpreting our Bible then we can more easily see that the exercise of theurgic powers, many of the recorded and miscalled "miracles" could have been performed by an Adept, or even by an initiate of lesser degree. In possible mystical interpretations, they also illustrate the processes of arousing into activity the faculty of responsiveness to Spiritual vision (restoring sight), and to the still, small voice within (restoring hearing), the free exercise of the intellect liberated from rigid orthodoxy (curing those paralyzed) and awakening to full Spiritual awareness and knowledge (raising from the dead).

The Gospel story, and indeed all the inspired portions of the Bible, are addressed less to the reasoning mind, which they frequently affront, than to the intuition, which can perceive in them references to the evolution of the Spiritual Soul of the individual. The processes of the development and active use of latent Deific powers are portrayed in world Scriptures by means of symbols and dramatic allegories. This mystical view, it may be repeated, does not totally deny the presence of history. The kernel of tradition within the stories can still be a record of real events, however much the illumined authors may have lifted them out of time and space by the use of the sacred language.

GERALD MASSEY AND RESTORING PROPER INTERPRETATION OF ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM

We have devoted a good bit of time revealing to the reader that the reason why we have remained so blind to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom hidden in our Bibles is because we are visionless to the very method of its presentation and preservation. We have lost the power to grasp the postulations of this ancient Spiritual knowledge laid down by the ancient Spiritual Masters of old because we are simply untrained to see a different methodology for interpreting these Bible stories than from our own inherited "literal-historical" interpretation. This restoration of original truth and intended understanding of these ancient Spiritual Texts which find their way into our Bibles today will only be regained if we come to understand "key" theological dogmas in Christianity in their original understanding as they were taught in the beginning of time.

We have made mention that the ancients used a strategy of concealment of deep Spiritual Truths and presented and preserved them in the mode of religious myth and allegory. This subtle disguise ensured their survival. Such divine truth in ancient days was not made available to the public at large unless individuals showed interest in obtaining this Spiritual Knowledge. It was the secret of the Priests. Such divine truth had to be safeguarded from the undisciplined who would misuse it; thus the need to keep it secret. But more than than it had to be preserved. To this end it had to be hidden in myths, legends, allegories, folk-tales, and parables in order to become "unforgettable" memories through the power of tradition. But even more it had to be expressed in a language that would be universally comprehensible--a language of living symbols. Therefore the ancients Spiritual truth was dramatized and symbolized. The figures in these ancient Spiritual dramas were the elements of divine and human nature; and the symbols vehicles to conceal divine truth. These symbolic constructions carried to the mind of the hearer and reader their message of invisible truths because they were those invisible truths themselves which could be known by recognition of man's visible world. Words are themselves but symbols. Objects of living nature are more definite speech to a discerning mind than a formal language. And the ancients understood that the Universal Mind of this Cosmos, this God, did cast His archetypal ideas onto and into all forms of "matter", where mortal man may look at them in their appearance that is not false or corruptible by mankind.

Most likely the readers of Bet Emet are like me, Christian or "ex" traditional Christian, that are "truth-seekers" at their very core. Given Bibles to which we were devoid of the proper "keys" for its interpretation we were rendered unable to decipher the archaic language used in them along with the Spiritual "symbols" within it as well and thereby have made a jumbled mess of the Bible's true and intended meanings and never knew we were since being taught erroneously to depend utterly upon a "literal interpretation" in reading and digesting this Bible. The grandest of structures for truth-telling, the Sacred Scriptures of old, have been made into the grossest of fabrications due to an incorrect hermeneutic and interpretation. And the gross perversion and loss of its intended sense have come solely through our unfamiliarity with the special and involved techniques employed in writing of the ancient sacred books. This tragic condition would have been avoided had our Pastors and teachers been equipped with the knowledge to teach us that the ancient scribes of these Sacred texts were, first of all, esotericists and wrote esoterically. We were never taught that all spiritual wisdom of antiquity was held in secret brotherhoods and rigorously safeguarded from common dissemination. There existed a spiritual aristocracy quite difficult for us to conceive of today because of the public dissemination of knowledge and publicity today of which we are so conditioned. There were intellectual and spiritual castes, and the lower orders of mental capacity were not regarded as fitted to receive such high spiritual information. This hidden "Gnosis" behind the parables and folk-takes were kept from these. Sheer pious faith could not alone gain one admission into the Mystery Schools. Actual discipline of body and mind were held as prerequisites for the grasp of this deeper Spiritual truth. Initiation was to some real extent dependent upon the purity of one's life. Esotericism arose primarily from the necessity of safeguarding the use of this dynamic Spiritual knowledge. Religion, for the ancients, aimed at liberating the powerful forces hidden in the depths of man's psyche which they understood as part of mankind's evolution. Within this spiritual process mankind's dynamic energies had to be controlled and intelligently trained. What I say next might anger and confuse many but just listen. What we have derided as "magic" in the religion of old was just the control of subtle powers which we mostly permit to slumber in dormancy beneath the surface of our superficial life. Let us not forget that man is made "in the image of an all powerful God". I have found in my studies that religion touched man so deeply in antiquity, like in ancient Egypt, that it awakened the potencies of his godlike endowment, an enterprise which seems so remote to us in our darkened Spiritual conditions of today. Let us not forget that the depiction of "the Christ" was portrayed for us capable of changing the laws of nature often in this New Testament and this "Christ" lives within each child of God. The same things we find in similar stories of the ancient Sungods. This power of God in mankind slumbers in us today but its potential is real and the fulfillment of such passages as below lay unfulfilled in our lives:

John 14:12 12 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. (KJV)

Great writers of antiquity, writes like Plato, Porphyry, Apuleius, Herodotus, Plotinus, Proclus, Iamblichus, Euripides and Cicero speak of this Spiritual Wisdom that is "hidden in a mystery". It defies understanding under the traditional depiction of these ancient Mysteries by the pens of critical Christians and early Church Fathers. Contrary to the early Christian depiction of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom men like Cicero could say:

"There is nothing better than those Mysteries by which, from a rough and fierce life, we are polished to gentleness and softened. And Initia, as they are called, we have thus known as the beginnings of life in truth; not only have we received from them the doctrine of living with happiness, but even of dying with a better hope" (quoted in Preface to Lectures On Ancient Philosophy, by Manley P. Hall).

Added to this is Plato's statement:

"But it was then lawful to survey the most splendid beauty, when we obtained, together with that blessed choir, this happy vision and contemplation. And we indeed enjoyed this blessed spectacle in conjunction with Jupiter . . . at the same time being initiated in those Mysteries which it is lawful to call the most blessed of all Mysteries. . . . Likewise in consequence of this divine initiation, we became spectators of entire, simple, immovable and blessed visions in the pure light. . . ." (Phaedrus, p. 64).

Religious books have been written since the time of old in cryptic form, with truth heavily veiled under the garb of cipher and symbol. Figures and glyphs had to be devised that would convey meaning to the initiated, but conceal it from the uninstructed. To interpret archaic literature one must learn to discern the intent of truth under the disguise of deliberate deceptiveness in the telling of these folk-tales and myths. To this effect I would find upon my studies that there exists mountains of evidence proving this beyond any doubt. The demands of an esoteric methodology for both hiding and protecting this ancient Spiritual Wisdom is the reason why the ancients used what we term "myths" today. Here we encounter the real reason why this ancient procedure of using myth has bred the prevalent wide confusion with respect to past religious myth embodying a truer representation of "reality" than a supposed "literal-historical" rendering. We find the solution of our bewilderment and ineptitude in face of this ancient mythology which Christianity has characterized for us as but "rubbish". Myths were the vehicle for carrying Divine Metaphysical Reality and Truth; the highest Spiritual Truth than mankind was ever given and can hope to ever understand while living in these bodies of flesh.

It was through the use of such symbolism and myth that the whole cycle of the unfolding of "divinity in humanity" was dramatized for the stage enactment in the annual round of Mystery festivals. And, more importantly for us to realize is the fact that portions of this Spiritual drama have filtered down into the ritualism of practically every religion in the world. The epic of the human Soul in earthly embodiment was the theme of every ancient poet and dramatist, and each strove to portray this Spiritual struggle in a new allegorical garb, with a new hero, whether it was Achilles, Hercules, Horus, Theseus, Aeneas, Orpheus, Jason, Dionysus, Buddha, Ulysses or Jesus. At the center of each of these "stories" and "myths" is the central metaphysical reality of the divine presence in mankind conquering the animal nature within himself. This is the classic battle between Set and Horus, or as seen in Judaism the Yetzer Ha Ra (the evil nature) vs the Yetzer Ha Tov (the good nature). The writers of antiquity dealt basically with one theme, that of the pilgrimage of the Soul through the gamut of the elements or creation. Behind these religious myths lie the common theme of the immortal Spirit's immersion into this sea of matter. In all of the mythological combats with dragons, wrestling with serpents, temptations by devils, harassments by beastly creatures, enchantments by Temptresses, plottings of coconspirators, imprisonment in dungeons and struggling through to an ultimate return to the original home of tranquility, we find the plight of the Soul and its quest to struggle with and conquer the animal nature within mankind and eventually to return to Heaven from which it came. In one type of adventure after another we see played out before us the same story; namely, the evolutionary progress of the Divine Soul and its goal of graduating "Earth" and its return to the skies of Heaven which were repeatedly allegorically portrayed in one form after another.

What is equally clear now is that, in the hands of ignorance, an exoteric rendering has taken the place of the esoteric, depriving the mind of its grasp on the essential truth intended in the shadow of such religious myths that we find in our Bibles. The danger of such a confusion was seen by Philo, the learned Jew, who when speaking of the Mosaic writings told his countrymen that "the literal statement is a fabulous one, and it is in the mythical that we shall find the true" (quoted by Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, The Light of the World, p. 543).

Our Christianized supposed "literal-historical" interpretation of Jesus has caused most Christian writers and Pastors to be reluctant to admit this "allegorical" and "mystical" interpretation of the "Jesus Story" as the correct interpretation intended by originators of these ancient Sungod stories (portraying the Descent of the Soul into matter). But amazing at it might appear there have been men who valued truth more than "acceptance by the religious establishment" and have spoken clearly on this misunderstanding of ancient religious myth such as Kingsland, Massey, Churchward, Higgins, and others.

The broad modern assumption has been that the mythos was in toto a lot of mummery and that the rituals were a lot of hollow ceremonialism based on superstition. That they shadowed the greatest of spiritual truths has not yet entered the mind of the ranks of orthodox scholarship. Yet they have been told, and by no one more courageously and vehemently than Gerald Massey, a scholar of surpassing ability whose sterling work has not yet won for him the place of eminence which he deserves. The destruction of the mythos and its rightful interpretation by ignorant literalism stirred Massey to bitter resentment against the perpetrators of this tragedy. His own words will speak best for him, while they support our own contentions:

"The aborigines did not mistake the facts of nature as we have mistaken the primitive method of representing them. It is we, not they, who are the most deluded victims of false belief. Christian capacity for believing the impossible is unparalleled in any time past amongst the race of men. Christian readers denounce the primitive realities of the mythical representations as puerile indeed, and yet their own realities alleged to be eternal, from the fall of Adam to the redemption by means of a crucified Jew, are little or nothing more than the shadows of these primitive simplicities of an earlier time. It will yet be seen that the culmination of credulity, the meanest emasculation of mental manhood, the densest obscuration of the inward light of nature, the completest imbecility of shut-eye belief, the nearest approach to a total and eternal eclipse of common sense, has been attained beyond all chance of competition by the victims of the Christian creeds. The genesis of delusive superstition is late, not early. It is not the direct work of nature herself. Nature was not the mother who began her work of development by nursing her child in all sorts of illusions concerning things in general. . . . Primitive man was not a metaphysician, but a man of common sense. . . . The realities without and around him were too pressing for the senses to allow him to play the fool with delusive idealities. . . . Modern ignorance of the mythical mode of representation has led to the ascribing of innumerable false beliefs not only to primitive men and present-day savages, but also to the most learned and highly civilized people of antiquity, the Egyptians" (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, The Light Of The World, p. 33).

Gerald Massey studied the Egyptian hieroglyphics for forty years and had a force of transcribers employed in his later years of investigation to assemble the material from the monuments, tombs and papyri. His interpretation of Egyptian writings has been all too largely ignored by scholars, yet he has the merit of having approached the task with a mind free from scholastic, theological or conventional biases, which have so utterly blinded the discernment and vitiated the conclusions of orthodox authorities. Too often results are obtained or accepted because they validate exiting Judeo-Christian or Islamic positions. Massey would have none of that. Massey and only a handful of others today are the only scholars in whose hands the recondite Egyptian material begins to take on rational significance. All the others leave it resembling unintelligible nonsense.

Massey asserts again that the Egyptians "knew, more or less, that their own legends were mythical, whereas the Christians were vouching for their Mythos being historical." Concerning symbolism and mythical representation he emphasizes that "the insanity lies in mistaking it for human history". Mythology, he avers, is the repository of man's most ancient science, and "(mythology) when truly interpreted once more, it is destined to be the death of those false theologies to which it has unwittingly given birth." Holding that all mythologizing originated in Egypt, he fights the conclusion of some scholars that hat "neither Hebrews nor Greeks borrowed any of their ideas from Egypt." The eminent scholar could not have known of Herodotus' statement that it was Melampus, the son of Amytheon, who introduced into Greece the name of Dionysus (Bacchus) and the ceremonial of his worship, having become acquainted with these and other practices in Egypt. Herodotus concludes: "For I can by no means allow that it is by mere coincidence that the Bacchic ceremonies in Greece are so nearly the same as the Egyptian" (Lecture on Luniolatry, p 2. by Gerald Massey). Elsewhere (II, 81) he repeats: ". . . the rites called Orphic or Bacchic are in reality Egyptian and Pythagorean." Massey claims that modern misinterpretation of ancient typology has made a terrible tyranny in the mental domain, much of our folklore and most of our popular beliefs being fossilized symbolism. "Misinterpreted mythology has so profoundly infected religion, poetry, art and criticism that it has created a cult of the unreal." He asserts that "a great deal of what has been imposed upon us as God's direct, true and sole revelation to man is a mass of inverted myths."

We must understand that these ancient Spiritual Myths were not the product of "primitive" mind, but on the contrary were devised by the highest genius of man's Spiritual evolution of that time. They were the secret of the sages which Paul mentions; namely, that the inner world of ideality is understood by those things which are made visible by the Creator to mankind:

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

These ancient sages traced as astonishing series of parallels, correspondences, analogies between things seen and things unseen, the better to illustrate the latter. They knew that physical nature typed spiritual reality, and used the outlines of the former to pictorialize the latter through symbols.

Answer for yourself: What is an example? The sacred scarab beetle of Ancient Egypt is a perfect example.

The particular species of beetle represented in the numerous ancient Egyptian amulets and works of art was commonly the large sacred scarab (Scarabaeus sacer). This beetle was famous for his habit of rolling balls of dung along the ground and depositing them in its burrows. The female would lay her eggs in the ball of dung. When they hatched, the larvae would use the ball for food. When the dung was consumed the young beetles would emerge from the hole. It seemed to the ancient Egyptians that the young scarab beetles emerged spontaneously from the burrow were they were born. To the Egyptians and other ancient civilizations, dung beetles symbolized immortality. They saw the beetles disappear in the earth, and later to come back out as if resurrected, or reborn. Therefore they were symbolized as representative of "Khepera", which means "he was came forth." This creative aspect of the scarab was associated with the creator god Atum. As you can imagine the scarab beetle came into being spontaneously from balls of dung and they associated this with their religious ideology of self-creation and resurrection. Small jars and coffins containing dried (mummified) scarabs were often placed in Egyptian tombs as part of their ancient funeral rites to ensure eternal resurrection.

Answer for yourself: What is another example? They took the hawk as the symbol of the risen Soul because they saw the bird soar into the airy heights. They found in the mole a fit symbol of the soul immersed in the dark underworld of flesh, because the analogy was evident and under their eye.

Nature supplied the suggestive identity, and they used it to teach subjective truths. Primitive man may well known the simple processes of nature from first-hand contact; but he will not know that they bespeak a spiritual counterpart of themselves in the interior life of man unless the sages so inform him.

Whole generations of civilized folks have gazed upon the phenomena of nature and failed to be instructed spiritually by the spectacle. One must ask himself if primitive fancy could construct allegories so profoundly elaborated that the united intelligence of the world for centuries has been unable to fathom their hidden significance. Millions of intelligent persons today have looked upon the sun and moon throughout the whole of their lives and have never yet discerned in their movements and phases an iota of the astonishing spiritual drama which the two heavenly bodies enact each month, a drama disclosed to our own astonished comprehension only by the books of ancient Egypt. Hundreds of celebrities in the field of Egyptology have mulled over the same material and have not yet lifted as much as a corner of the veil of Isis. Primitive simplicity could not have concocted what the age-long study of an intelligent world could not fathom. Not primitive minds, but exalted Spiritual and intellectual acumen, formulated the myths. Reflection of the realities of a higher world in the phenomena of a lower world could not be detected when only the one world, the lower, was known. You can not see that nature reflects spiritual truth unless you know the form of spiritual truth. And such knowledge would be an a priori requirement to making the comparison at all!

Massey states that the Christian Fathers, with the exception perhaps of Clement of Alexandria, "had scarcely enough knowledge of the ancient symbolism to put any perceptible boundary to their ignorance" (Gerald Massey, The Natural Genesis, p. 431). These early Church Fathers did not know that their Gospels were old Egyptian myths ignorantly literalized. Massey notes that Celsus "asked concerning the Christian legends, made false to fact by the ignorant literalization of the Gnosis,--What nurse would not be ashamed to tell such fables to a child?'" One might paraphrase Celsus' question today by asking: "What age would not be ashamed to confess that it could not tell the difference between myths and actual history?"

Years of study convinced Massey that all the folk-tales were the wreckage of old Egyptian wisdom-structures. He avers: "We must go back to the Proto-Aryan beginnings which are Egyptian and Kamite. In Africa we find those things next to Nature where we can go no further back in search of origins. Egypt alone goes back far enough to touch Nature in these beginnings, and . . . Egypt alone has faithfully and intelligently kept the record" (G. Massey, Ancient Egypt: The Light Of The World, p. 30).

Now we must pay attention. It served partisan ecclesiastical purposes in early times to weave some history into the texture of the allegory or to use certain bold historical events as the frame for the allegorical depiction. And this mixture has made the determination difficult in places. It is not an overstatement of truth to affirm that the systems of mythology have served little better purpose in the Christian era than to detail the entire train of meaning. They have proved to be insoluble puzzles and enigmas. Our inability to make sense of them has totally distorted our estimate of Greek, Egyptian, Hindu and Chinese mentality, causing us to belittle their product most egregiously.

It must be said in closing that the sagacity of the Egyptians refrained from doing the very thing of which Christianity has mistakenly done; namely, portraying deities as persons. Not the Egyptians but the Christians did this, in the person of Jesus. Personal gods were precisely the kind they did not have. What they had was representations of the gods, which is a whole kingdom's length away from the other conception. Their "gods" were in reality the actual energies of nature, of matter and of mind in the universe, graded in a wonderful hierarchy of emanation from the Absolute Source of all. These are intangible powers, and what can puny man do other than represent them by one or another type of image? The Egyptians had quite unaccountable knowledge of these more elevated forces, with some of which, as the ethers and the rays, modern science is now slowly becoming acquainted, and they poetically imaged them under Deific names, as Thoth, Anup, Kheper, Khnum, Osiris, Horus, Ptah, Set, Isis, Nephthys and Ra. But gods in human flesh (except by personation) they expressly did not have. The time has come to cry out against such incompetent muddling and to bend ourselves with what capacity we have to unravel the golden threads of supernal wisdom running their magnificent design through the old books of Egypt.

The apex of fairness is reached in Budge's statement in the Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, Vol. I, p. 198:

"From first to last there is no evidence whatever that the Egyptians worshipped a figure or symbol, whether made of metal or wood, stone, porcelain or any other substance".* Again, these were but symbolic representations of higher Spiritual realities. Christianity cannot say that with their "historical-literal" Jesus Christ.

DID THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS IDENTIFY THE BIRTH OF CHRIST WITH BOTH THE VERNAL EQUINOX & THE WINTER SOLSTICE? HOW CAN THAT BE?

To better understand this article it helps to have read the previous articles on "Did Jesus Have Two Mothers"? Having acquainted yourself with this necessary information then let us continue our study into the astronomical background for the later "Jesus Story".

Well if you understood the title to this article then you have already understood that such an occurrence, a historical and literal birth of the "same person" twice in the same year is not biologically possible for there is only one time that one person is born "literally" and such a thing violates the Cosmic Laws of the Universe. Well that Cosmic Law applies until you read the early Church Fathers who speak of the two supposed births of Jesus Christ in the same year. Yet in spite of such logic and biological principles and Universal Law we are astounded when reading the early Church Fathers to their absolute ignorance of such a fact let alone their own admission of their deception and lying to further their religious agendas; in particular their presentation of "Jesus Christ" to the masses. Let us examine the evidences and in so doing the results of our inquiry should tell the discriminating reader that these early Church Fathers were aware that their "Jesus Christ" and their resultant "Jesus Story" was not only a hoax but in the final analysis nothing more than an astronomical phenomena which was later "personified" and presented to the masses as if a literal historical reality when in fact it was not.

Answer for yourself: It is one thing to say it; another to prove it. What is the inescapable conclusion if we see that the early Church Fathers taught that "Jesus Christ" was born both at the Winter Solstice as well as the Spring Equinox? Well for starters we will be hard pressed to believe that "Jesus Christ" was a real "literal historical" person. This of course brings into doubt any and all Christian Doctrines and Dogmas which have been taught by Christianity as connected with either the person of Jesus Christ or events and sayings in his life. As if that is not enough we are then pushed to reconsider the whole of the "Salvation Message" of Christianity since it is squarely based upon the supposed life and sacrifice of this "historical Rabbi-Messiah" of the first century. Let us begin looking at the facts and evidence in this regard.

In the first 200 years of Christian history, no mention is made of the calendar date of Jesus' birth. Not until the year 336 do we find the first mention of a celebration of His birth.

Answer for yourself: Why this omission? In the case of the Church fathers, the reason is that, during the three centuries after Christ's life on earth, the event considered most worthy of commemoration was the date of His death. In comparison, the date of His birth was considered insignificant. As the Encyclopedia Americana explains, "Christmas... was, according to many authorities, not celebrated in the first centuries of the Christian church, as the Christian usage in general was to celebrate the death of remarkable persons rather than their birth..." (1944 edition, "Christmas").

- Speculation on the proper date began in the 3rd and 4th centuries, when the idea of fixing Christ's birthday started. Quite a controversy arose among Church leaders. Some were opposed to such a celebration. Origen (185-254) strongly recommended against such an innovation. "In the Scriptures, no one is recorded to have kept a feast or held a great banquet on his birthday. It is only sinners who make great rejoicings over the day in which they were born into this world" (Catholic Encyclopedia, 1908 edition, Vol. 3, p. 724, "Natal Day").
- During this time eight specific dates during six different months were proposed by various groups. December 25, although one of the last dates to be proposed, was the one finally accepted by the leadership of the Western church. A summary of the debate on the dates of Christ's birth appears in The Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church: "Though speculation as to the time of year of Christ's birth dates from the early 3rd century, Clement of Alexandria suggesting the 20th of May, the celebration of the anniversary does not appear to have been general till the later 4th century. The earliest mention of the observance on Dec. 25th is in the Philocalian Calendar, representing Roman practice of the year 336. This date was probably chosen to oppose the feast of the Natalis Solis Invicti [nativity of the unconquerable sun] by the celebration of the birth of the 'Sun of Righteousness' and its observance in the West, seems to have spread from Rome" (1983 edition, Oxford University Press, New York, 1983, p. 280, "Christmas").
- Around 200, when Clement of Alexandria mentioned the speculations about Christ's birthday, he said nothing about a celebration on that day. He casually reported the various ideas extant at that time: "And there are those who have determined not only the year of our Lord's birth, but also the day..., the 25th day of Pachon... Furthermore, others say that He was born on the 24th or 25th of Pharmuthi" [19th or 20th April] ("The Stromata, or Miscellanies," The Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. 2, Eerdmans, Grand Rapids, 1986, p. 333).
- Later, in 243, the official feast calendar of the time, De Pascha Computus, places the date of Christ's birth as March 28. Other dates suggested were April 2 and November 18. Meanwhile, in the East, January 6 was chosen, a date the Greeks had celebrated as the birth of the god Dionysus and the Egyptians as the birth of the god Osiris. Although pagans commonly celebrated the birthdays of their gods, in the Bible a birthday is never celebrated to the true God (who, of course, had no birth or day of origin).

What is of interest to us in this article is the fact that in spite of all this speculation the original date of Jesus' birth was never known for certain in Christianity. But toward the end of the second century, Clement of Alexandria was known to have cited various opinions of concerning Christ's birth date, the two most prominent of which were January 6th and December 25th. Later in the fifth century, Augustine commented: "For He is believed to have been conceived on the 25th of March (Spring Equinox), upon which day He also suffered... but He was born according to tradition upon December 25th" (Winter Solstice) (De Trinitate, Augustine).

Notice with me that neither the writer of the Gospel of Luke nor the writer of the Gospel of Matthew gave any indication of Jesus' actual birthday. Like many things Christian, the origin of this supposed date for the birth of the "Christ Child" comes from the celebrations and rituals of the Ancient existing religions which beginning Christianity had to compete against. Here too, we see Christianity assimilating portions of the Ancient Wisdom and Astrotheology into its structure for its own unique interpretation of "the Christ" and his supposed birthday.

One of the remarkable things about early Christianity is the fact that the early devotees made no mention of the birth of their supposed saviour or even his supposedly fleshly existence for that matter. The conflicting genealogies in our current Gospels are believed by modern scholars to have been added to the existing Gospels after the second century. The earliest Gospel, Mark, speaks nothing about the ancestry, birth and genealogy of Jesus and contemporary Greek and Roman writers and historians of that period have nothing to say about him either save vague, generic references to the title of "the Christ". In some cases where writers like Josephus and Paul make "specific" mentions of Jesus, these references turn out to be forgeries written in by zealous students, and redacting bishops. Also, there was strong opposition to the "pagan" custom of celebrating birthdays – ironic when one considers that from top to bottom "paganism" is woven into Christianity's beliefs and customs. At first, his birth date was on January 6th; however, by the 4th century it was noticed that Christian worshippers were also partaking in Mithraic celebrations of the Sun [natalis solis invicti] on December 25th. Realizing that their followers were gravitating towards the worship of Mithra, Roman Christian authorities moved the feast date of Jesus from January 6th to December 25th. Trying to compete with an earlier religious celebration was not such a good idea Rome figured so wisdom prevailed; "is you can't beat them, join them". Such were the lengths these early proselytisers were prepared to go to win or retain converts.

In Rome December 25 was made popular by Pope Liberius in 354 and became the rule in the West in 435 when the first "Christ mass" was officiated by Pope Sixtus III. This coincided with the date of a celebration by the Romans to their primary god, the Sun, and to Mithras, a popular Persian sun god supposedly born on the same day. The Roman Catholic writer Mario Righetti candidly admits that, "to facilitate the acceptance of the faith by the pagan masses, the Church of Rome found it convenient to institute the 25th of December as the feast of the birth of Christ to divert them from the pagan feast, celebrated on the same day in honor of the 'Invincible Sun' Mithras, the conqueror of darkness" (Manual of Liturgical History, 1955, Vol. 2, p. 67).

Protestant historian Henry Chadwick sums up the controversy: "Moreover, early in the fourth century there begins in the West (where first and by whom is not known) the celebration of December 25th, the birthday of the Sun-god at the winter solstice, as the date for the nativity of Christ. How easy it was for Christianity and solar religion to become entangled at the popular level is strikingly illustrated by a mid-fifth century sermon of Pope Leo the Great, rebuking his over-cautious flock for paying reverence to the Sun on the steps of St. Peter's before turning their back on it to worship inside the westward-facing basilica" (The Early Church, Penguin Books, London, 1967, p. 126).

The Encyclopedia Americana makes this clear: "In the fifth century, the Western Church ordered it [Christ's birth] to be observed forever on the day of the old Roman feast of the birth of Sol [the sun god], as no certain knowledge of the day of Christ's birth existed" (1944 edition, "Christmas").

I assume the reader is familiar with December 25th being the Winter Solstice but let me reiterate that December 25th was the date of the birth of the Sun from the dead at the Winter Solstice. After this momentous day in the Sun's path through the Zodiac, the winter, having reached its peak, slowly gives way to spring. The Winter Solstice therefore, had been traditionally in Roman times, a period of unrestrained celebration. The celebration was called the "Dies Natalis Solis Invicti" or "the birthday of the unconquered Sun." In the pagan religion of Mithraism, which was a form of Sun-worship, the Winter Solstice was naturally an occasion of great celebration since the death of "old man winter" was assured as the Sun was "raised from the dead" and renewed its northward trek in the Sky after remaining motionless in the Sky for 3 days as if dead. It was during these 3 days that the Sun, or the personified "Son of the Sun" fought the Devil; or as we more properly understand "fought the Dark-Evil, the D-Evil, the DEvil", the Devil (see it?); thus the "descent into hell for 3 days" where the Christs fight the darkness of Winter (the Devil) which we read about in the lives of the Solar Sungods as well as the "Jesus Story". As the Sun rose from its "grave of darkness and Winter cold" it brings with it again the hope of Spring and Harvests which was literally "salvation" and "life" to mankind. The worship of Sol Invictus, the Sun God, became so popular that by A.D. 274, the Roman Emperor Aurelian (c212-275) gave official sanction to December 25th, the Winter Solstice, as the birthday of that God.

The December 25 calendar date often overlaps the Winter Solstice, honoured throughout the ancient world for the annual return of the Sun, and the longer hours of daylight needed for the planting of the next year's crops. The Winter Solstice was the mythical birth date of a number of archetypal fertility gods, such as Mithra, Adonis, Dionysus, Osiris, Baal, and many other versions of the Solar Sun God, who bore such important titles as the:

- Son of Man,
- Light of the World,
- Sun of Righteousness, and
- Saviour.

Most pagan mysteries celebrated the birth of an "allegorical" Divine Child at the Winter Solstice and this paralleled the "birth" of the Sun.

Being a new religion in town is not always easy. Christianity in it battle with the pagan religions for converts had to make compromises in order to survive and therefore was forced to slowly assimilate their celebrations and beliefs into its religious synthesis. Christmas day became one of the assimilated celebrations. Over time this became a very successful day of observance and its popularity grew:

- The annual celebration of Christ's birth can be traced back to at least 336 A.D., when it was observed by western churches on December 25th. Since the event was honored in the form of a religious service, the term "Christmas" came from the Old English term Cristes Maesse, meaning "Christ's Mass."
- By the year 354 A.D. we already have documents referring to December 25th as the birthday of Jesus.
- By 440 A.D. Christians were celebrating the Winter Solstice as the birthday of Jesus.
- By the sixth century, during the reign of Emperor Justinian (527-565), it had become recognized as an official Christian holiday (Asimov, Guide to the Bible: p931-932, Asimov, Book of Facts: p370, Craveri, The Life of Jesus: p47, Keller, The Bible As History: p338).

As with the earlier prototypes whose body and blood given in sacrifice enriched the earth and caused wondrous plants to grow, so do countless popular legends and songs tell of flowers and medicinal herbs that grew under the cross or on Jesus' tomb. As the dead and resurrected Savior, the archetype in a long "pattern" of dying and rising gods, Jesus is clearly the embodiment of the same similar mythos and marks the continuation of such earlier gods as Mithra, Baal, Dionysus, and others.

We saw above that Rome sanctioned Dec. 25th as the birthday of Jesus. But not all agreed that the "Christ Child's" birth was to be reckoned at the Winter Solstice in December. As stated, up until the fourth century AD, many Christians were celebrating Jesus' birth on January 6. At the time, December 25 was the traditional birth-holiday of the Persian savior Mithra. Catholic Church Fathers were angered at the celebration of this other Sun King proceeding their own festivities, so they appropriated the earlier date and moved Jesus' own birthday up by some twelve days. Now you know where the famous Christmas Carol "the Twelve days of Christmas" came from. January 6 became known as The Feast of the Magi, or Three Kings Day. Not only was Mithra's birthday of December 25 adopted by Christians, but also the halo of light surrounding baby Jesus' head, the resurrection of both the god and his faithful followers, and numerous other aspects were all borrowed by the early Christian church directly from the preceding mythos of the Mithraic cult.

Christianity was divided throughout its kingdom regarding the birth of Jesus. In early on Christianity there were fierce debates about whether December 25th or January 6th should be celebrated as the birthday of Jesus. Lurking for consideration was March 25, the Spring Equinox as well as we shall see.

Uncertainty about Jesus' birthday in the early third century is reflected in a disputed passage of the presbyter Hippolytus, who was banished to Sardinia by Maximin in 235, and in an authentic statement of Clement of Alexandria. While Hippolytus favoured January second, the learned Clement of Alexandria (Strom., i. 21) enumerates several dates given by the Alexandrian chronographers, notably the twenty-fifth of the Egyptian month Pachon (May 20th) in the twenty-eighth year of Augustus and the twenty-fourth or twenty-fifth of Pharmuthi (April eighteenth or nineteenth) of the year A.D. 1, although he favoured May twentieth. This shows that no Church festival in honour of the day was established before the middle of the third century.

Mentioned above was that Origen at that time in a sermon denounced the idea of keeping Jesus' birthday like that of Pharaoh and said that only sinners such as Herod were so honoured. Arnobius later similarly ridiculed giving birthdays to "gods." A Latin treatise, De pascha computus (of ca. 243), placed Jesus' birth on March 21st since that was the supposed day on which God created the Sun (Gen. 1:14–19), thus typifying the "Sun of righteousness" as Malachi (4:2) called the expected Messiah.

A century before Polycarp, martyred in Smyrna in 155, gave the same date, the date around the Spring Equinox (March 21st) for the birth and baptism placing it on a Wednesday because of the creation of the Sun on that day.

The Incarnation of Jesus (bodily manifestation of a supernatural being in the flesh) was assigned to the 25th of March because this day, as early as Tertullian, was believed to be the date of His Passion.

Answer for yourself: Why is Polycarp's remarks concerning March 21st so important? Theologies come and go and the further you get away from a seminal idea or theology or religious belief the "story changes". This is human nature unfortunately. We can find easily what the early Church Fathers "believed" about the birth of Jesus in the 3rd, 4th, and 5th centuries but let us not forget that as time progressed the variety of "beliefs" increased accordingly. Therefore all the more important is Polycarp's admission to the birth of Jesus at the Spring Equinox. Polycarp's statement as to the Spring Equinox birth of Jesus is the earliest testament to the belief about the birth of "the Christ" that we have outside the New Testament and this time period, March 21st, approximates very closely the Spring Equinox. Polycarp is one generation removed from those alive in the first century and is the oldest attestation that we have today other than the Gospel accounts which are highly unreliable.

Answer for yourself: What should Polycarp's early comments on the birth of Jesus being at the Spring Equinox teach us? It should teach us that the further we can go back concerning the birth of this "Jesus" we find that it is reckoned from the Spring Equinox. In time as Christianity will spread to the masses and the leaders of this new religion will see that it will become fortuitous for this new emerging Christian Faith to adopt the Dec. 25th. birth of the Sungods, for the birth of the "Christian Jesus" in order to gain converts. So before us we have for a supposed historical person who supposedly lived in the first century fully grown men, religious pillars in this new religion of Christianity, professing that this Messiah-to-be had two physical births in the same year that just happen to align perfectly with Astronomical Phenomena; phenomena by the way which was already well known by the Ancients for thousands of years and reiterated previously over and over again in the lives of their Sungods as expressed through myths, allegories, similes, legends, etc.

So in examining the evidence we see that the Spring Equinox was first mentioned outside the Bible as the date for the birth of Jesus and that Christmas was not among the earliest festivals of the Church until much later. We also see that before the 5th century there was no general consensus of opinion as to when the birth of Jesus should come in the calendar, whether on Jan. 6, March 25 or Dec. 25.

Meanwhile, in the East, January 6 was chosen, a date the Greeks had celebrated as the birth of the god Dionysus and the Egyptians as the birth of the god Osiris. Jan. 6 was earlier fixed upon as the date of the baptism or spiritual birth of Christ, and the feast of Epiphany … was celebrated by the Basilidian Gnostics in the second century … and by catholic Christians by about the beginning of the fourth century. The Armenian church still celebrates January 6th as Christmas to this day (Freke & Gandy: The Jesus Mysteries: p41). It would appear to the "thinking believer" that this whole concept of "birth of the Christ" has to do totally with Astronomy one way or the other; either the Winter Solstice or the Spring Equinox and the path of the Sun through the Houses of the Zodiac reflective of these Solstices and Equinoxes reflective of the "Age" as determined by the Precession of the Equinoxes. Hidden in this celestial phenomena is the Spiritual Message from the Creator to mankind speaking of the necessity of "two births" for mankind; a natural and a spiritual birth.

Answer for yourself: Did you see it? Christ's example for mankind is "two births; a natural and a spiritual birth" (Spring Equinox, March 25th [natural birth] followed by the Winter Solstice, December 25th [spiritual birth]).

In truth this should not be shocking for we have heard it our whole lives:

1 Cor 15:46 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. (KJV)

Amazingly God is showing man that he must "be born again" by the path of the Sun through the Houses of the Zodiac and we never knew; that is before now. Read that again. The real "good news" (Gospel) is in the Sky above our heads. God's Salvation Message" is written above our heads as is the whole "Jesus Story" from Matthew 1 through Matthew 28; no not the story of some Jewish "historical person" but "your story"; God's intended plan for the Soul's incarnation, maturation in this physical plane of existence, and return to Heaven once again and Egypt knew this and this Ancient Divine Concept is at the very heart of Egyptian Religion; the father of Judaism. Egypt lies destroyed today but no nation or evil invented by mankind has been able to destroy their children "the Jews" or the Egyptian Faith they inherited which goes under the name of Judaism today.

Gen 1:14-15 14 And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years: 15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so. (KJV)

Brown-Drivers-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

The Hebrew word for "signs":

226 'owth-

- 1) a sign, a signal
 - a) a distinguishing mark
 - b) a banner
 - c) remembrance
 - d) a miraculous sign
 - e) an omen
 - f) a warning
- 2) a token, an ensign, a standard, a miracle, a proof

It makes all the more sense when we see that these seasons, Equinoxes and Solstices are "distinguishing marks" to bring mankind into "remembrance" while at the same time "warn all mankind" that they "must be born again"!

Answer for yourself: Do the early Church Fathers say that Jesus had two different births assigned to two different days on the Calendar and did they get this from the Constellations Virgo and Pisces? We saw that they did in the above linked articles. If you take the time to read them then you can see that they did beyond any doubt thus proving that "Jesus Christ" to these early Church Fathers was "astronomical" and not "historical". Now we find the very same teaching, that "Jesus Christ" is not "historical" but rather "allegorical" when other Church Fathers connect his conception, incarnation, and birth with the Winter Solstice and the Spring Equinox (allegorical again for the two births required of mankind; one natural and one spiritual).

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? It would appear to the insightful student that the Creator is speaking to mankind from His abode in Heaven the same message over and over again and this message concerns the Soul of mankind and man's necessity of "two births; one natural and one spiritual".

Answer for yourself: Does the fact that the early Church Fathers admitting to the two births for a supposed "historical Jesus" set the stage for us to reconsider if even they, these early Church Fathers whose works we read today, possibly knew that the "Jesus Story" was nothing more than a religious myth and that it was not a "literal" historical narrative? Have we today, as Christians, been totally misled to accept a "historical Jesus" when the truth of the matter is that "the Christ" of which these early Church Fathers spoke is a Metaphysical reality speaking to mankind about his Spiritual condition before God?

To the new reader don't be alarmed when I tell you that the birth of Jesus Christ in the New Testament is purely astronomical. You could have already guessed that if you put together the Winter Solstice with December 25th, the alleged birthday of the Son of God (the personified "Son of the Sun"). In order to make Christianity palatable to the pagan masses strenuous efforts were made to associate Christ with the Roman Sun-god, Helios. Pagan symbols were abstracted in order to teach the Christian Gospel, and Christ was readily associated with SOL INVICTUS -- the Invincible Sun. It was thus inevitable that the chief pagan Sun-worshipping day, 25 December, the Birthday of the Sun, became associated with the Birth of Christ. Indeed, the adoption of 25 December for the celebration of Christmas is perhaps the most explicit example of Sun-worship's influence on the orthodox Christian liturgical calendar. Many of the Christmas traditions known and beloved by the West are, as we know, direct adoptions of idolatrous pagan customs.

Unknown to most Christians is the fact that Augustine, whom some believe to be the greatest Father of Christianity, and Clement of Alexandria held to the tradition that the birth of "Jesus" was at the Winter Solstice and his incarnation was at the Spring Equinox. They understood that the birthday of Jesus is determined by the full moon of Easter (the Spring Equinox). Easter is observed on a Sunday between March 22 and April 25 (around the time of the Spring Equinox). The commonly stated rule, that Easter Day is the first Sunday after the full moon that occurs next after the Vernal Equinox. So we need to think and connect the ideas of "Easter" with the "Vernal Equinox" although the actual date might be off a couple of days.

There are 4 things we need to recognize:

- Easter must be on a Sunday;
- This Sunday must follow the 14th day of the paschal moon;
- The paschal moon is that of which the 14th day (full moon) falls on or next follows the day of the Vernal Equinox; and
- The equinox is fixed in the calendar as March 21.

Having adopted 25 December as the Birthday of Christ the Roman Catholic fathers were anxious to distance themselves from the responsibility of having borrowed a pagan festival and to avoid being accused of being betrayers of the Faith. Augustine and Leo the Great, for instance, strongly reprimanded those Christians who at Christmas worshipped the Sun rather than the birth of Christ [both were on the same day] (Augustine, Sermo in Nativitate Domine 7, PL 38, 1007 & 1032). It was the opinion of some of the fathers that both the conception and passion of Christ occurred at the time of the Vernal Equinox on 25 March (Polycarp and others...remember?).

Answer for yourself: How is the Spring Equinox and incarnation of Jesus connected to the Winter Solstice? Reckoning from that date the nine months of pregnancy of Mary (conceived, incarnated at the Spring Equinox, the date of the birth of Christ was be computed by necessity to be the 25 December (the Winter Solstice).

Not all agreed. More recently, some Christians have assumed that Jesus was conceived on 6 April and born nine months later, on 6 January, thus supporting the Eastern Orthodox position and the earlier position of the fathers before the festival was transferred from January 6th to 25 December in order to accommodate the masses and increase converts. Which ever date is defended -- 25 December or 6 January -- the computations used to defend them represent an a posteriori rationale advanced to justify an already existing date and practice that goes back as far as Ancient Egypt (Osiris). As far as 25 December is concerned, J.A.Jungmann has written: "It has become progressively clear that the real reason for the choice of 25 December was the pagan feast of the DIES NATALIS SOLIS INVICTI which was celebrated in those days with great splendour." (Joseph A. Jungmann, The Early Liturgy to the Time of Gregory the Great, 1962, p.147).

Answer for yourself: What was behind the transfer of the birth of Jesus from January 6th to December 25th by the Western Church?

In the Orient (East) the birth and baptism of Jesus were celebrated by the Eastern Church on the 5 & 6 January, respectively. All the available evidence strongly indicates that the 5/6 January date for Christ's birth was an assimilation of another pagan festival, namely the "Epiphany", which commemorated the birth and growth of light (B. Botte, "Les Denominations du dimanche dans la tradition chretienne," LE DIMANCHE, Lex Orandi 39, 1965, pp.14f). Epiphany therefore, is a Day of celebration of how mankind has not been left in darkness. It is a festival of light following the rebirth of the Sun at the Winter Solstice. Lest we forget the Sun is rising daily higher in the Sky and light is increasing every day as "Old Man Winter" is being defeated by the Sun. Salvation is coming to mankind once again to be realized in the Harvests of Spring and Summer. The term "Epiphany", which still remains in the orthodox liturgical calendar in the Catholic and Protestant world, literally means the "manifestation of a superhuman being". As O. Cullmann has explicitly stated: "The choice of the dates themselves, both January 6th and December 25th, was determined by the fact that both these dates were pagan festivals whose meaning provided a starting point for the specifically Christian conception of Christmas" (O. Cullmann, The Early Church, 1956, p.35).

Behind it all we find Egypt once again. Philip H. Pfatteicher, Festivals and Commemorations, p. 34, writes the following about Epiphany. Both Christmas and Epiphany are related to pagan solstice festivals. In Egypt in 1996 B.C., the Winter Solstice occurred on January 6, and there was a night festival on January 5-6 celebrating the birth of the god Osiris from the virgin. The waters of the Nile, it was thought, acquired miraculous powers and turned to wine that night.

Answer for yourself: Whose birth in Egypt was reckoned to occur at the Winter Solstice?

The birth of Osiris in Egyptian pagan worship also correlated with the Winter Solstice. An Egyptian Winter Solstice celebration of the birth of Osiris, the divine representation of masculine fertility, on January 6th became the Christian Epiphany. The Church declared that it signified the manifestation of Jesus' divinity. Yet, the spirit of both Christmas and the Christian Epiphany embodied timeless celebrations of the Winter Solstice. The difference between them was due more to a difference in calendars than a difference in meaning; the Egyptian calendar was twelve days behind the Julian calendar. (Ellerbe, Helen, The Dark Side of Christian History, Morning Star Books, 1995. p.146).

The Greeks identified Dionysus with Osiris and so on 6 January the sacred waters were blessed in both the religions of Osiris and Dionysus! Epiphany is a continuation of these Pagan rites. The Egyptian Gnostics known as Basilidians, seeing the immersion ceremonies as a symbol of the baptism of Jesus, celebrated it on 6 January and gradually Christians elsewhere adopted this date as the anniversary of the Jesus' baptism. By 386 AD the two great Christian festivals were Easter, the festival of the crucifixion, and Epiphany when rivers and springs were blessed and water was drawn and saved for baptisms throughout the year. Aristides Rhetor in about 160 AD tells us that water drawn from the Nile at the "Festival of the Immersion" is at its purest. Stored in wine jars, he says, it improves with time just like wine. And so does the myth! Two centuries later Epiphanius writes that the stored water actually changes into wine! In Dionysus worship, water turns to wine on 6 January. The miracle at Cana when Jesus turned water into wine is celebrated in the Christian calendar on 6 January!

Again all of these dates, March 25th, December 25th, January 6th find their original importance in Ancient Egyptian Religion in the myths of Osiris, Horus, and Isis. A few more comments on Epiphany (January 6th). A cycle of 40 days after the Egyptian Last Supper (November 27th) and the death of Osiris takes us to the Epiphany on January 6th. This date as you can see was adopted by the Christian faith and introduced into its religious calendar.

Like the Ancient Egyptian traditions, the original intent of Epiphany in the Eastern Church is for one to be baptized (the sacrament of Baptism). Baptism represents in the Egyptian Religion the figurative death and rebirth.

Answer for yourself: What are we to learn here? Again we see Egypt teaching the necessity for "two births" for mankind. A "born again" cycle typically takes 40 days (from November 27th and the death of Osiris) to January 6th). At the end of the cycle, January 6th, the people bathe in the Nile (baptism) and the fast is broken and they are "born again".

The results of such a study teach beyond all doubt that all the scholarly evidence therefore clearly points to the Ancient origins of the traditional birthdays celebrated by the Western and Eastern Churches and their utilization to merely justify syncretizing of Ancient Egyptian Religion with a "literalized and historicized" Christianity. Nowhere in any of these studies will we find unforged or uncontested evidence that promotes a historical Jesus that was born on either 25 December or 6 January.

We seem to consistently be mentioning the Winter Solstice and the Spring Equinox. That these celestial events as tied to the births of Ancient Sungods and "Karests/Christs" should give us pause to think that possibly behind what we assume to be a supposed historical person is nothing but spiritual allegories of the path of the Sun through the seasons and Zodiac. The evidence mounts and in so doing proves the astronomical and non-human nature of the birth itself, which is identical with that of the full moon of Easter in Egypt (3 months after the "natural birth" of the Christ child at the Winter Solstice we experience the "spiritual birth" of the "the Karest/Christ" child in mankind at Spring Equinox. The Divine Allegory is complete.

Gerald Massey, in his The Historical Jesus And The Mythical Christ, teaches us that Casini, the French Astronomer, demonstrated the fact that the date assigned for the birth of "the Christ" is an Astronomical epoch in which the middle conjunction of the moon with the Sun happened on the 24th March, at half-past one o'clock in the morning, at the meridian of Jerusalem, the very day of the Vernal (Spring) equinox.

The following day (the 25th of March) was the day of the Incarnation, according to Augustine, (354-430 C.E.) but the date of the Birth, according to Clement Alexander (150-211 C,E,)

Answer for yourself: What did we just see? Again we see that Clement Alexander agreed with Polycarp's date of the Spring Equinox for the birth of Jesus. Augustine will assume the Jesus' incarnation occurred on the Spring Equinox. That early Christianity was divided over the Astronomical significance of Jesus' birth and incarnation is easy to see. What I believe we need focus upon is that two of the earliest Church Fathers, Polycarp and Clement of Alexander agreed with the Spiring Equinox for the birth of Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Could this mean the whole "Jesus Story" is not historical or literal but nothing more than Astronomical parody and allegory and we not know it?

So We Have Seen That Two different birth days are assigned to Jesus and his birth by the Christian Fathers:

- The Vernal Equinox (Mar. 24-25th) (symbolic of a natural birth)
- The Winter Solstice (Dec. 25th) (symbolic of a spiritual birth)

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

First of all, these dates, Dec. 25th (Winter Solstice) and March 24th/25th (Vernal Equinox) cannot both be historical. Study will reveal to you that these traditions for the "birth of 'the Karest/Christ" arise from Ancient Egypt thousands and thousands of years ago. These two dates, Dec. 25th (Winter Solstice) and March 24th/25th (Vernal Equinox), refer to the two birthdays of the double Horus in Egypt.

Answer for yourself: What is meant by the saying "double Horus"? Does it refer to mankind's dual nature? Yes it does.

It was a saying of Philo's that "the logos is double". This it is as the double Horus, or as Jesus and the Christ, who was dual natured; as manifestor for the Virgin Mother and afterwards for God the Father:

- double by nature, human and divine;
- double in matter and in spirit;
- double as child and as adult,
- double as the soul of both sexes.

The reader is again prompted to understand this "dual nature" of Horus who is a prototype for mankind who has both a "natural" and "spiritual" nature. Horus, "the Egyptian Karest/Christ" is "the pattern" for mankind (mankind is a mixture of human/divine; matter/spirit; childhood/adulthood; male/female). These two expressions of duality in mankind, blended in one person (the Karest/Christ example), constituted the double Horus who was that double logos spoken of by Philo, the figure of which was founded, as Egyptian, on the two halves of the soul, or pair of gods in the mystery of Tattu (Rit., ch. 17). Horus in these two characters was Horus, the child and Horus who becomes bird-headed at the transformation in his baptism (born again nature).

Answer for yourself: Why "bird headed"? Such symbolism depicted the fantastic eyesight of the hawk; it is believed a hawk has an eyesight 8 times greater than the normal human. Behind such a symbolic depiction of mankind is the spiritual idea of increased Spiritual Enlightenment possible to the human species. Thus the "anointed" of Egypt, the Egyptian "Karest/Christ", Horus, is to bring Spiritual Enlightenment to mankind where he can see beyond the natural realm into the depths of the Spiritual realm.

Horus' personal epithet was "Iusa" the "ever-becoming son" of "Ptah," (God) the "Father."

Answer for yourself: Could this "ever coming one" or "every coming one" refer to the anticipated coming of mankind's "Spiritual Birth" as "sons and daughters of God" that is laid out it the Equinoxes and Solstices? THINK!

Answer for yourself: What is the meaning of "Iusa"?

According to Gerald Massey, Alvin Kuhn, Godfrey Higgins, and others the later name of Jesus was derived from the Egyptian "Iusa," which means "the coming divine Son who heals or saves".

Answer for yourself: Can we trace the etymology of the names Jesus from Ancient Egypt? Yes we can.

The "S" in Jesus's name curiously matches an Egyptian suffix written either SA, SE, SI, SU, or SAF, SEF, SIF or SUF—alternatively SAPH, SEPH, SIPH or SUPH. The "F" is an Egyptian ending for the masculine singular so the meaning of it is the son, heir, prince or masculine successor to the father. When the original symbol of divinity, IO or IE, JO or JE, was combined with the Egyptian suffix for the succeeding heir, SU or SA, the resultant was the name IUSA, IUSE, IUSU, or IOSE; or IESU, JESU, IUSEF, IOSEF, JOSEF. One of the many forms was JESU and another was JOSEF. The final F, in JOSEF, became sibilant at times and gave us the eventual form of JESUS. The name then meant the "divine son," and combined in the Egyptian IU the idea of the coming one. Hence JESUS was the Egyptian Messiah, the coming son of the divine life.

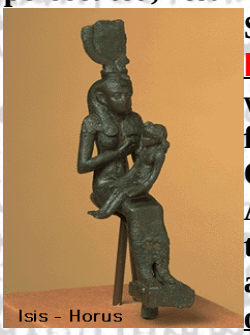
Jesus therefore means the divine son, and combined in the Egyptian IU the idea of the coming one. Hence JESUS was the Messiah, the coming son of the divine life. Indeed messiah is a combination of the Egyptian word "MS" and the Egyptian word for god, "IAH." MS means son so the meaning of Messiah is precisely son of God. It is the same word as Rameses where Ra, the name of the sun god replaces Iah and the words are reversed in order. Scholars, Christian and Jewish alike, say Messiah means the anointed one, deriving Messiah from the word for anointing with oil. They have, of course, got the derivations back to front. The word for making someone a son of God by anointing them with oil was derived from the purpose of the ritual, not the other way round.

Answer for yourself: What did we just see? There in Egypt, some ten thousand years B.C., we find the character of this functionary under the name of IUSA, JESU, or JESUS. Later he was the Iu-em-hetep, which means "the divine son who comes with peace (hetep). But most interestingly, this last word also means seven. Hence Jesus is he who comes as the seventh principle to complete the six elementary powers of natural evolution with the gift of divine intelligence, which supplants the elementary chaos with the rulership of love and intelligence and thus brings peace into a warring situation (flesh vs spirit). . Hence finally, Jesus is the seventh cosmic principle, announced in all religious lore as he who comes to bring peace and good will to men. And as such he was announced in the Christian Gospels. But there was more than one Jesus or IUSA or IU before the coming of the alleged historical Jesus. All nations had this Divine Concept but called it by different names. Even more startling is the revelation that there are over thirty Sun-god figures in the cults of the various nations of old, but there are immediately in the Bible itself, in the Old Testament, some twenty more Sun-god characters under the very name of Jesus! We just don't recognize them by other names.



As you can see Etymology, the study of the sources and development of words, can be a very good friend for the truth seeker. Follow with me if you would please:

Zeus, aka "Zeus Pateras," who we now automatically believe to be a myth and not a historical figure, takes his name from the Indian version, "Dyaus Pitar." Dyaus Pitar in turn is related to the Egyptian "Ptah," and from both Pitar and Ptah comes the word "pater," or "father." "Zeus" equals "Dyaus," which became "Deos," "Deus" and "Dios" - "God." "Zeus Pateras," like Dyaus Pitar, means,"God the Father," a very ancient concept that in no way originated with "Jesus" and Christianity. There is no question of Zeus being a historical character. Only simpletons would maintain such a belief. Dyaus Pitar becomes "Jupiter" in Roman mythology, and likewise is not representative of an actual, historical character either. None of the Sungods were "literal" or "historical figures". In Egyptian mythology, Ptah, the Father, is the unseen god-force, and the Sun was viewed as Ptah's visible proxy (symbol) who brings everlasting life to the earth; hence, the "son of God" is really the "Sun of God." Indeed, according to Hotema, the very name "Christ" comes from the Hindi word "Kris" (as in Krishna), which is a name for the Sun (The Egyptian Book of the Dead by Massey, pp. 1-2, Morals and Dogma of Freemasonry, p. 78. Taylor: "'. . . Chrishna in Irish means the Sun.'"

Furthermore, since Horus was called "Iusa/Iao/Iesu" the "KRST," and Krishna/Christna was called "Jezeus," centuries before any Jewish character similarly named, it would be safe to assume that Jesus Christ is just a repeat of Horus and Krishna, among the rest. According to Rev. Taylor, the title "Christ" in its Hebraic form meaning "Anointed" ("Masiah") was held by all kings of Israel, as well as being "so commonly assumed by all sorts of impostors, conjurers, and pretenders to supernatural communications, that the very claim to it is in the gospel itself considered as an indication of imposture . . " (Taylor, The Diegesis, p. 7). Hotema states that the name "Jesus Christ" was not formally adopted in its present form until after the first Council of Nicea, i.e., in 325 C.E. (Introduction to The Egyptian Book of the Dead by Massey, p. 9).

We are half-way home. We have now to track the ever-coming child Iusa, Iusu or Jesus in the sphere of time as the son of Iusãas and of Atum (the Invisible God), who was Ra in his first sovereignty; not merely in the round of the lesser year, but in the movement of precession as determined by the changing equinox or by the shifting position of the pole (axis of the earth in relationship to the pole star [today Polaris]). As we have shown, the Zodiacal signs were set in heaven according to the seasons of the Egyptian year and in the annual circuit of the Sun. The birthplace of the Inundation of the Nile and the Grapes was figured in or near the sign of Virgo or the Virgin, the mother of the child who brought the new life to the land in water as Ichthus the fish and in food as Horus on his papyrus (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, published 1907 AD, p 728). In the earlier articles we death with "Jesus' two births and two mothers"; one Virgo and one Pisces. If you are unfamiliar with this symbolism I strongly suggest that you read the articles.

Isis - Horus

Alvin Kuhn relates: "Egypt knelt at the shrine of the Madonna and child, Isis and Horus and Egypt had long known Jesus, Iusa - born of immaculate parenthood, circumcised, baptized, tempted, glorified on the mount, persecuted, resurrected, and elevated to heaven. Egypt had listened to the Sermon on the Mount, and the Sayings of Iusa for ages. But Egypt's Christ was not a living person and neither was it historicized in Judean times - but God's Karest/Christ has existed at all times. In other words the Gospels "life" of Jesus turns out to be out to be nothing but the garbled and fragmentary copy of the Egyptian and other prototypes, never lived. But the light of Egypt Occidental religion can now find its way from medieval darkness to Sunlit truth. The Dark Ages can now be brought to their dismal end means there is more to the later-day allegories than former - a way for the construction by the individual of that long sought divinity requires a much greater comprehension of the allegorical methodology" (Alvin Kuhn, Who is this King of Glory).

Horus's personal epithet was "Iusa," the "ever-becoming son" of "Ptah," the "Father" (Churchward, The Origin and Evolution of Religion, p. 365). He was called the "Holy Child." Horus was called "the KRST," or "Anointed One," long before the Christians duplicated the story (Churchward, ibid., p. 397. see also The Egyptian Book of the Dead by Massey, pp. 13 and 64; MC). Iusa, the Jesus of On, like Horus in the Osirian cult, was born bi-mater. His two mothers were Iusãas (Isis) and Neb-hetep (Nephthys), the two consorts of Atum-Ra. These two mothers were at first two sisters in the mythos. One of them was the mother in the western mountain, or later in the Winter Solstice (the Mother of the Winter Solstice); the other gave birth to Horus on the horizon in the Eastern Equinox (the Mother of the Spring Equinox). Here again is the two births by the two mothers in Heaven that speaks of the metaphysical reality of the necessity of two births for mankind and two natures of mankind; one physical and one spiritual.

Answer for yourself: Again what are we to learn here? Here is the "Divine Pattern" for mankind's path through life once again: "First the Natural birth (what we see in Heaven in the Spring Equinox) and then the Spiritual birth (what we see taught in Heaven/Sky paralleled in the Winter Solstice).

John 3:7 7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. (KJV)

We have been speaking of the "two births" and "two mothers" of mankind; one natural and one Spiritual. In so doing the early Church fathers, not longer possessing the Ancient "keys" to interpret the religious myths and "gnosis" fought over two supposed historical births for one supposed human being. When all along the whole "Jesus Story" is an Ancient Egyptian Astronomical Allegory expressing Divine Metaphysical Truths to which Rome was oblivious.

Over the centuries the Winter Solstice and the Spring Equinox had gotten "blurred" in the thinking of Rome and lost to both was the Spiritual Dynamic and the "two births" of mankind behind them both. Long lost was Polycarp's and Clement's understanding of the Spring Equinox as the birth of "the Christ Jesus" and how it integrates with the Winter Solstice that occurs in the whole of flesh of mankind.

The Winter Solstice is the most mysterious, magical and wonderful turning point in the yearly cycle of the Sun. At the time of greatest darkness in the Sun's cycle, where we experience the shortest day of the year and the longest night, the Sun enters the sign of Capricorn (thus the birth of Isua or Jesus at the Winter Solstice). At this time of the year the Sun has reached its southernmost point in the journey of its orbital path. Then, for about three days it appears to standstill, hence the name Solstice which means "Standstill of the Sun". During this three day period, the Sun appears to rise and set at almost exactly the same point, then it slowly makes its journey North again. We experience this powerful event as the return of the light. Now the days are growing longer and the nights shorter. At first it is barely noticeable but a shift has definitely taken place that holds the promise of the Spring and Summer to come.

In the ancient world this awesome time was commemorated by rites and magical workings to ensure the return of the light. For at this time spirit and consciousness have made their deepest descent into matter and have experienced the greatest darkness. Because of this, the theme of death and rebirth was played out in story, myth and ritual across the ancient world. A sacrifice for the good of humanity required that a God die, enter the underworld and overcome death to be reborn as the Child of Promise. This is how the birth of the Sun became the birth of the Son.

Plutarch tells us that Isis was delivered of Horus, the child, about the time of the Winter Solstice (Dec. 25th like Jesus),and that the festival of the second or adult Horus followed the Vernal/Spring Equinox. Hence, the Winter Solstice and Spring Equinox were both assigned to the one birth of both Horus and later to Jesus by the Christologists; and again, that which is impossible as human history and natural law and fact is possible in religious myth only as found in two Horuses (Spring Equinox/Winter Solstice), the dual form of the Solar God in Egypt (the Double Horus) (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, published 1907 AD, p 786).

Now we can better understand how it could be that the following day (the 25th of March), after the Spring Equinox, was the day of the Incarnation, according to Augustine, but the date of the birth, of Jesus according to Clement Alexander.

Answer for yourself: Again, why is this a problem for today's Christian? Unlike ages ago when the truth of the mythos was understood today's Christians possess almost no knowledge of this whatsoever; thereby they are easily misled into false worship and idolatry by the worship of this "man-made" Jesus as a God by Rome. Such is the unforgivable sin according to Judaism and the New Testament.

The bottom line in closing is that we are confronted with a major problem for two birthdays are assigned to Jesus by the Christian Fathers, one at the Winter Solstice (December 25th) and the other one at the Vernal Equinox.

Answer for yourself: How can Jesus have "two births" and "two mothers"? You might be surprised to find out how but to do so we have to look to the Heavens and the stars and not at a supposed human being or a historical personage that supposedly lived in the first century.

Obviously, these two conflicting dates for the supposed birth of Jesus cannot both be historical; either one or the other is or maybe neither. What we find upon study in Egyptian religion that such an idea of the two dates for the birth of "the Christ" are based on the two birthdays of the double Horus in Egypt.

Plutarch above tells us that Isis was delivered of Horus, the child, about the time of the Winter Solstice, and that the festival of the second or adult Horus followed the Vernal Equinox. The Vernal/Spring Equinox follows the Winter Solstice by 3 months. Even so we must take note that the Winter Solstice and Spring Equinox were both assigned to the one birth of Horus and later these same dates were applied to the one birth of Jesus by the Early Church Fathers. Again, that which is physically impossible as human history is the natural fact in relation to the two Horuses, the dual form of the Solar God in Egypt; but not impossible at all if this whole thing, the "Jesus Story", is a "myth" based upon Astronomy.

Answer for yourself: Now we want to think ahead for a while. Counting from the Vernal Equinox, from March 24th, then let me ask you what happens 9 months (the time for a baby's gestation in the womb) after this conjunction of the Sun and Moon (personified Sungod and Moon goddess) which occurred on the 24th of March?

Answer for yourself: What is an astronomical conjunction? The position of two celestial bodies on the celestial sphere when they have the same celestial longitude. They occupy the same "longitude" as if they overlapped or became one. Using sexual symbology it is as if they mated and produced an offspring.

Answer for yourself: What is this Astronomical Offspring? It is a "child". Follow closely what I say next.

Nine months after this conjunction of the solar father (Sun-Osiris...husband of Isis) and the lunar mother (Moon-Isis...wife of Osiris), which occurred on March 24th, the Spring Equinox, the divine child was born 9 months later at the Winter solstice, December 25th.

It fits perfectly. The Winter Solstice just happens to be the birth of the young Sun-god Mithras as well as one of the birth dates for Horus in Egypt. It also is Jesus' as well. Unknown to most Christians we know that the Ancient Egyptians paraded a manger and child resting in it (Sun in Capricorn) thus representing Horus, the "Karest Child" through the streets of Egypt at the time of the Winter Solstice (typically around Dec. 21). Horus was born of the virgin Isis-Meri (Mary) on December 25th in a cave/manger with his birth being announced by a star in the East (Sirius) and attended by three wise men (the 3 stars in the belt of Orion that just happens to point to the Christmas star Sirius). It sure does not appear too hard to see the "Star" as one might think.

{short description of image}

Answer for yourself: And why a manger? Simply because the Sun is in the House of Capricorn at the time of the Winter Solstice, the time for the birth of the Karest Child/Christ Child and the Constellation of Capricorn contains the "manger" configuration of stars. Matthew says Jesus was born in a house; Luke says he was born in a manger. They do not contradict as much as it appears. A House defines one of the twelve sectors of the Zodiac. The manger is more specific in pointing to the house of Capricorn. There are reasons for the choice of manger. Matthew says Jesus was born in a house; Luke says he was born in a manger. They do not contradict as much as it appears when one thinks that this "house" refers to the House of the Zodiac; in particular the House of Capricorn. There are reasons for the choice of manger. The zodiac constellation preceding Capricorn is Sagittarius, half man half horse. As the Sun descends, the horse is seen to be riding down towards its stable, or manger, into Capricorn. Also, it is a dark time of the year and mangers are dark places. In the legend of the Twelve Labors of Hercules, when Hercules was in Capricorn, he was to clean out the stables of King Augeas.

Plutarch tells us that the virgin mother Isis was "delivered of Harpocrates (ie. Horus considered as a child of the mother alone) about the Winter tropic (Winter solstice..Dec. 25th), he being in the first shootings and sprouts very imperfect and tender. Which is the reason, as the Egyptians say, that when the lentils begin to spring up (Spring Equinox) they offer him their tops for firstfruits" (Gerald Massey, The Historical Jesus And The Mythical Christ, p. 40).

They also observe the festival of Isis' afterbirth (the Hebrew Shiloh), or Horus, the son of the father, after the Vernal equinox.

Answer for yourself: Not possessing this "gnosis" and "knowledge" from Ancient Egypt concerning this Astronomical theology then could this be why the early Church Fathers debated and argued among themselves concerning the time for the birth of a supposed historical Jesus? Is it because they lost the "gnosis" and did not understand the Astronomical and Spiritual import behind the stories they inherited and in so doing mistakenly cast them and taught them as if supposed historical narratives when in fact they were not? It sure is.

These two astronomical dates were continued by Equinoctial Christianity, who could not account for them in the absence of the gnosis or ancient knowledge of them which they no longer possessed since lacking the "keys" to understand the Ancient Egyptian wisdom and Religion. Lacking this gnosis or knowledge from Egypt concerning the astronomy behind the Osiris myth, the Winter solstice and Vernal/Spring Equinox then both these calendar dates reflecting Astronomical realities were both "assigned as the time for the one birth" of Jesus as you saw above which is impossible as human history, but is true to the mythos and the two Horuses. The birthday of Mithra, the invincible one, was celebrated as an ancient festival, on the 25th of December, the day of the Winter solstice, our Christmas day. Mithra, like Jesus, was born in a cave, and wherever Mithra was worshipped, the cave was consecrated to him; as the "highly-mysterious cavern" was sacred to the Sun-god in Egypt. "The Pattern" can be traced from nation to nation until we get to Rome and then we lose it.

Answer for yourself: Was Jesus born in a cave?

- In the gospel of James, the child Jesus was born in a cave.
- The gospel of pseudo-Matthew says Mary entered the "cave below a cavern in which there was never any light" to bring forth the light of the world, and on the third day she "went out of the cave and entering a stable, put her child in a manger".
- In the History of Joseph the Carpenter the Christ affirms that his mother gave birth to him in a cave.
- According to the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy the birth occurred in a cave.
- The cave of Mithras was that of the Sun born in the Winter solstice when this occurred in the sign of the Sea-goat (Capricorn).
- Abba Udda, the Akkadian name of the tenth month, answering roughly to December, the month of Capricorn, denotes the Cave of Light.

The above testimonies should make us realize that the idea of a cave is connected to "darkness", the "Winter Solstice", and the "manger" were similar Astronomical ideas that were connected with the birth of the "Christ child".

The cave (darkness), or Winter Solstice (darkness) in Capricorn, December 22-25th, was the birthplace of the Mithraic Messiah from 2410 to 255 B.C.E. until the dawn of the Age of Pisces, and this was continued as the cave or birthplace of the Christian Messiah/Christ after it ceased to be applicable to the solar god. Justin Martyr, Christianity's first great apologist, says that Christ was born on the same day that the Sun was reborn in "Stabula Augiae", and the stable of Augias, cleansed by Herakles in his sixth labor, corresponds to the cave of the Sea-goat (Capricorn). "The Pattern" continues but is not recognized and the "literalization" of the Christ continues even though it might appear that some knew but taught not the truth of the matter thus serving a higher agenda.This is no higher agenda than truth!

Answer for yourself: So what have we seen? Both the cave and the stable are two types of the birthplace of the Sun at the Winter Solstice (time of great darkness). Justin Martyr, determined to include both, ignorantly asserts that Christ was "born in the stable and afterwards took refuge in the cave". He has to include the mythos in his relating of the "Jesus Story".

No Christ or Messiah, however, whether called Mithras, Horus, or Jesus Christ could have been born in the stable of Augias or the Cave of Abba Udda on the 25th of December after the date of 255 B.C.E., because the Solstice had passed out of that Zodiac sign into the asterism of the Archer.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? Namely, that Justin Martyr had nothing but the Mithraic tradition and myth of the by-gone birthday to prove the birth of the assumed Historical Christ 255 years later! In other words he lied about the birth of an assumed historical Messiah! Justin Martyr taught "religious myth" as if was literal truth. He taught "Astrological Myth" as literal history and everyone fell for it and does so today as well.

Answer for yourself: What conclusion should we bring?

The supposed historical Christ had no other birthday than that of the solar god, the birthday of the year, whether reckoned from the Solstice or the Equinox. Rather revealing is the quote of Chrysostom, who wrote on the nativity of Christ, in Antioch, about 380 A.D. Now this is almost 400 years since the time for the supposed historical Jesus. Now pay attention to what he says. He states: "It is not yet ten years since this day was made known to us". What? The date for Jesus' birth was determined ten years before 380 A.D.? What is going on?

He says further: "Among these inhabiting the west, it (this Winter Solstice date) was known before from ancient and primitive times, and to the dwellers from Thrace to Cadis (Gadeira), it was previously familiar and well known."

But this birthday of the Lord was not well known in the East, at Antioch, where the name of Christians was said to have been first adopted, on the verge of the Holy Land itself. We also learn that as late as the fifth century Leo the Great was compelled to rebuke the "pestiferous persusion" of those Christians who were found to be celebrating Christmas day "not for the birth of Christ, but for the resurrection of the Sun". The actual origins of Equinoctial Christianity were not then superseded.

This date of 255 B.C. (the Age of Pisces) was the true day of birth, or rather of re-birth for the celestial Christ, and there was no valid reason for changing the time of the world. The Gospels contain a confused and confusing record of early Christian belief: things most truly believed (Luke) concerning certain mythical matters, which were ignorantly mistaken for human and historical. The Jesus of our Gospels is but little of a human reality, in spite of all attempts to naturalize the Mythical Christ, and make the story look rational. The Christian religion and the "Jesus Story" was not founded on a man, but on a divinity; that is, a mythical character. So far from being derived from the model man, the typical Christ was made up from the features of various Gods (neteru) and fused in a portrait of a dozen different persons. In such a literary design the many merged into one that is not anybody. And as fast as the composite Christ falls to pieces as we study, each feature is claimed by various Ancient religious myths and each scene in the "Jesus Story" is gathered up by the original owner.

If you understand that the "Jesus Story" is the personification of the Divine Soul as it descended into matter, or should I say the flesh of mankind then it bears upon our minds to recognize the Divinity of the "Jesus Christ" which resided in each child of God. Jesus Christ, as seen in his two births that even Church Fathers acknowledge, knew that their "Jesus Christ" never could be any other than a divinity; that is, a character who was not "literal" or "human". They understood this Divine Concept, at least the earliest of them did like Polycarp and Clement of Alexandria, and this Divine Idea and Concept was entirely mythical and could be traced back into the history of mankind as the Ancient Divinity that was the core of many pagan myths thousands of years before our era; as far back as Ancient Egypt.

The hard realities are inescapable since Christianity ties mankind's salvation to the historical Jesus and his physical death and resurrection for mankind and the necessity of such a belief for one's personal salvation.

Nothing is more certain, according to honest evidence, than that the Christian scheme of redemption is founded on a fable misinterpreted; that the prophecy of fulfillment was solely astronomical, and the Coming One as the Christ who came every time anew with every Sunrise, with every new House of the Zodiac in which the Sun rose and at the beginning of each new Age (mistranslated as 'world', was but a metaphorical figure, a type of Divine Allegory, which never could take form in historic personality. The conclusion is inescapable. The history in our Gospels is from beginning to end the identifiable story of the Sun-God, and the Gnostic Christ who never could be made flesh.

It is rather simple really. When we did not know the one it was possible to believe the other; but when once we truly know, read the evidences and gather the facts, see the parallels between the Ancient Sungods, come to possess the "keys" for the Astronomical interpretation of the Sun "personified" as it moves through the Zodiac and at the same time notice the unbelievable parallels to the "Jesus Story" in the Gospels, from beginning to end, and become knowledgeable about the "Gnostic Christ", then the false belief is no longer possible. But the good news is that behind all our misunderstanding and deception lies God's instruction to you and me for the Spiritual Maturation of our Souls in this earthly existence. The "Jesus Story" is to be yours and my experience for "the Christ" lives within us and is not limited to but one person long ago in Palestine as Rome would have you believe. The Stars and the Sun teach us so. Thank you God that we can know the truth before we die and prepare to meet You and love You while we live in this flesh the way you so commanded, desire, and deserve.

THE NEW TESTAMENT & MODERN SCHOLARSHIP...HOW MANY "CHRISTS" ARE THERE IN THE NEW TESTAMENT?

Answer for yourself: Have you ever taken the time to make comparisons between different versions of the same event found in several Gospels? If you have then there can be no doubt that a complete reading of the Gospels, or the genealogies of Jesus for example, is likely to disturb Christians profoundly.

THE PROBLEM THAT EXISTS BEFORE WE EVER START TO STUDY NEW TESTAMENT LITERATURE

I must digress into some history before we take up the issues to be addressed in this and following articles. In editions of the Bible produced for widespread publication, introductory notes more often than not set out a collection of ideas that would tend to persuade the reader that the Gospels hardly raise any problems concerning:

- the personalities and identities of the authors of the various books,
- the authenticity of the texts
- later alterations, addition, deletions, and changes to these texts in our New Testaments as seen over time as theologies changed due to the "winners" and "losers" of theological wars
- the truth of the descriptions of events in what we are reading in the New Testament as "received inerrant and infallible truths"

In spite of the fact that there are so many unknowns concerning authors of whose identity we are not at all sure, we find a wealth of precise information in this kind of introductory note. Often they present as a certainty what is pure hypothesis, or they state that such-and-such an evangelist was an eye-witness of the events, while specialists and modern scholars and archeologists today claim and prove the opposite. We are led to believe that the time that elapsed between the end of Jesus' ministry and the appearance of the texts of the Gospels and much of the New Testament is drastically reduced when objective study into history and modern scholarship will reveal just the opposite. Paul's name is placed upon 2/3 of the New Testament when in fact scholars today show us that more than likely only seven epistles can be authentically attributed to Paul. That means much was later added to the New Testament in "Paul's name" in attempts to change what Paul originally taught in his earlier and authentic epistles. Traditional Christian tradition would have one believe that these "books" attributed to Paul or the apostles like Matthew, Mark, John, etc., were written by one man taken from an oral tradition, when in fact specialists have pointed out adaptations and alterations to the texts over extended amount of time. Of course, certain difficulties of interpretation are mentioned here and there, but they ride rough shod over glaring contradictions that must strike anyone who thinks about them.

When adaptations, changes, alterations, and contradictions of the original Greek manuscripts of the New Testament are pointed out, and we see the way texts handed down to us have been corrupted, the presence of obscure, incomprehensible, contradictory, improbable, and even absurd passages comes as much less of a surprise. The same may be said of texts which are incompatible with today's proven reality, thanks to scientific progress. Observations such as these denote the element of human participation in the writing and modification of the texts.

Admittedly, in the last few decades, objective research on the Scriptures has gained attention. Many modern scholars warn that 'one should not take literally' facts reported about Jesus by the Gospels, because they are 'writings suited to an occasion' or 'to combat', whose authors 'are writing down the traditions of their own community about Jesus'. Little by little the truth concerning the New Testament is coming to light however. At the core of these New Testament writings is a true battle of sorts; a war of "theologies" fought on paper as we shall see between different camps who held different and opposing beliefs concerning "the Christ" as well as "Jesus Christ". If you have been diligent to read the other articles on this website then the information and the facts and documentation surely has gotten you attention by now.

This "theological battle" is not easy to grasp, because the weight of such a bitterly defended tradition is very heavy indeed. To free oneself from it, one has to strike at the roots of the problem, i.e. examine first the circumstances that marked the birth of Christianity.

3 STRUGGLES THAT GO UNDETECTED: JUDEO -CHRISTIANITY & PAULINE CHRISTIANITY & ROMAN CHRISTIANITY

As stated above before we can look seriously at the conflicting genealogies of Jesus and their intended purpose and later addition to the existing First New Testament by the "literalists" of Rome in their refutation of Paul's "Gnostic Christ" we have to understand the spiritual dynamics that occurred in the first century and the opposing theological camps which fought these "theological wars".

The majority of Christians believe that the Gospels were written by direct witnesses of the life of Jesus and therefore constitute unquestionable evidence concerning the events high-lighting his life and preachings. One wonders, in the presence of such false guarantees of authenticity, how it is possible to discuss the teachings derived from them and how one can cast doubt upon the validity of the Church as an institution applying the general instructions supposedly that Jesus himself gave. Today's popular editions of the Gospels contain commentaries aimed at propagating these ideas among the general public.

The value the authors of the Gospels have as eye-witnesses is always presented to the faithful as if such a thought is without question but nothing could be further from the truth. In the middle of the Second century, Saint Justin did, after all, call the Gospels the 'Memoirs of the Apostles'. There are in addition so many details proclaimed concerning the authors that it is a wonder that one could ever doubt their accuracy. If you read common Christian commentators you will find statements like: "Matthew was a well-known character, 'a customs officer employed at the tollgate or customs house at Capharnaum; it is even said that he spoke Aramaic and Greek. Mark is also easily identifiable as Peter's colleague; there is no doubt that he too was an eye-witness. Luke is the 'dear physician' of whom Paul talks: information on him is very precise. John is the Apostle who was always near to Jesus, son of Zebedee, fisherman on the Sea of Galilee". On the surface of such statement one is led to assume that such is the case; but that is before any investigation is undertaken to verify the validity of such statements.

Modern scholarly studies on the beginnings of Christianity show that this way of presenting things hardly corresponds to reality. As far as the decades following the depiction of Jesus's mission are concerned, it must be understood that events did not at all happen in the way they have been said to have taken place and that Peter's arrival in Rome in no way laid the foundations for the Church. On the contrary, from the time of the first century to the second half of the Second century, there was a struggle between two factions within Judaism. Later there would be a struggle from a third fraction "outside Judaism" and this Roman faction will be declared the "overall winner" by the fifth century. In the beginning however one was what one might call Pauline Christianity and the other Judeo-Christianity. It was only very slowly that the Pauline Gnostic Christianity supplanted Judeo-Christianity, and today we see a "modified"& "literalized" Pauline Christianity that has triumphed over Judeo-Christianity via the help of Rome.

A large number of very recent works are based on contemporary discoveries about Christianity. Among them we find Cardinal Daniélou's name. In December 1967 he published an article in the review Studies (Etudes) entitled: A New Representation of the Origins of Christianity: Judeo-Christianity. Here he reviews past works, retraces its history and enables us to place the appearance of the Gospels in quite a different context from the one that emerges on reading accounts intended for mass publication. What follows is a condensed version of the essential points made in his article, including many quotations from it. Let me say that in my opinion he has it "almost right" but close enough to get the point so I present excerpts from the article for the reader's benefit.

After Jesus's departure, the "little group of Apostles" formed a "Jewish sect that remained faithful to the form of worship practised in the Temple". However, when the observances of converts from paganism were added to them, a 'special system' was offered to them, as it were: the Council of Jerusalem in 49 A.D. exempted them from circumcision and Jewish observances; "many Judeo-Christians rejected this concession". This group was quite separate from Paul's. What is more, Paul and the Judeo-Christians were in conflict over the question of pagans who had turned to Christianity, (the incident of Antioch, 49 A.D. [called in our studies at Bet Emet the Antioch Problem]). The crux of the the problem is that for Paul, circumcision, Sabbath, and form of worship practised in the Temple were henceforth old fashioned, even for the Jews. For Paul Christianity was to free itself from its political-religious adherence to Judaism and open itself to the Gentiles through a synthesis of mystery religions, gnosticism, and a "dab" of Judaism as determined by Paul.

For those Judeo-Christians who remained "loyal Jews," Paul was a traitor to them as his message was not a coming human deliverer but rather a "Spiritual Christ" as the salvation for the Gentile world. Spiritual salvation was not the greatest need for the Jews since they already had the Torah and grew up understanding repentance and obedience to the Commandments of God and their Covenant with him. They needed salvation from the persecution of Rome and only an anointed one from Yahweh like King David of old would do. Because of a different "salvation message of the convert Paul" Judeo-Christian documents call him an "enemy", accuse him of "tactical double-dealing". Paul, to them, was more concerned with their enemies, the Gentiles, that with the Jews whose religion he had adopted (THINK). "Until 70 A.D., Judeo-Christianity represents the majority of the Church" and "Paul remains an isolated case". The head of the community at that time was James, supposedly a relation of the historical Jesus. With him were Peter (at the beginning) and John. "James may be considered to represent the Judeo-Christian camp, which deliberately clung to Judaism as opposed to Pauline Christianity." We are taught through tradition that Jesus's family is thought to have had a very important place in the Judeo-Christian Church of Jerusalem. "James's successor was Simeon, son of Cleopas, a cousin of the Lord".

Cardinal Danielou here quotes Judeo-Christian writings which express the views on Jesus of this community which initially formed around the apostles:

- the Gospel of the Hebrews (coming from a Judeo-Christian community in Egypt),
- the writings of Clement: Homilies and Recognitions, 'Hypotyposeis',
- the Second Apocalypse of James,
- the Gospel of Thomas.

Answer for yourself: How often has any of these books that we know the Messianic Jews in Israel in the first century read and treasured have been read in your Church or studied since they represent the ideas and belief of Messianic Israel in the first century? If Israel is a "light" to the nations (Gentiles) then how much of this "light" has been shown upon you?

One could note here that all these writings were later to be classed as Apocrypha, i.e. they had to be concealed by the victorious Church which was born of Paul's success. This Church made obvious excisions in the Gospel literature and while rejecting the many Gnostic Gospels that were available to them that the earliest Gnostic Christians cherished they chose to not only author but present only the four Canonic Gospels which we have today.] "It is to the Judeo-Christians that one must ascribe the oldest writings of Christian literature." Sadly we don't have these in our bibles today and did not even know of them thanks to Rome and we are blessed today by the fruits of archeology which has brought these to our attention in our generation. Cardinal Daniélou mentions them in detail.

"It was not just in Jerusalem and Palestine that Judeo-Christianity predominated during the first hundred years of the Church. The Judeo-Christian mission seems everywhere to have developed before the Pauline mission. This is certainly the explanation of the fact that the letters of Paul allude to a conflict." They were the same adversaries he was to meet everywhere: in Galatia, Corinth, Colossae, Rome and Antioch.

The Syro-Palestinian coast from Gaza to Antioch was Judeo-Christian "as witnessed by the Acts of the Apostles and Clementine writings". In Asia Minor, the existence of Judeo-Christians is indicated in Paul's letters to the Galatians and Colossians. Papias's writings give us information about Judeo-Christianity in Phrygia. In Greece, Paul's first letter to the Corinthians mentions Judeo-Christians, especially at Apollos. According to Clement's letter and the Shepherd of Hermas, Rome was an 'important centre'. For Suetonius and Tacitus, the Christians represented a Jewish sect. Cardinal Daniélou thinks that the first evangelization in Africa was Judeo-Christian. The Gospel of the Hebrews and the writings of Clement of Alexandria link up with this.

It is essential to know these facts to understand the struggle between communities that formed the background against which the current Gospels that we possess today would later be written. In a nutshell we have in the beginning a conflict between two theological camps:

- Messianic-Judaism as expressed by the Jerusalem Church which looked for an "anointed human Messiah" and
- Pauline Gnostic Christianity that taught a "non-fleshly Christ-Logos-Joshua/Jesus"

This theological struggle will be settled by the destruction of the Temple and the Roman war of 70 A.D. Both of these struggling theological camps will lose and Rome will win and although their victory over Judaism and Messianism was immediate it would take them over 5 centuries to defeat the Gnostic believers who followed the Pauline Gnostic Christ.

A THIRD THEOLOGICAL VOICE EMERGES AS A SYNTHESIS OF THE PREVIOUS TWO

A "third" voice will emerge through Roman military might, censorship and destruction of Gnostic writings as well as the world's libraries (like Alexandria for example) along with creative writing of the "Second New Testament" which will teach a "fleshy human Christ" which Paul and his 7 authentic epistles never taught and this is "the Christ" that we have received today in the book the Rome forged and gave the world in the wake of their domination of the world in that day. Such a forgery goes unnoticed except by those who submit to serious study of the New Testament and the various roads and tributaries that emerge for further study from such investigation. Missing from our libraries and our hands as archeology and serious study will attest is the "First New Testament" of the earliest "Gnostic Christians" where Paul's 7 letters were the core of Marcion's collection of Epistles of Paul plus Marcion's "Gospel" which is basically an early written record of the "Q" oral sources and traditions attributed to the "Jesus Christ" of Christian Gnosticism.

Answer for yourself: Was this "Jesus Christ" a human being as first taught by the earliest Gnostic Christians? No but more on that later as our studies get more involved.

Messianic-Judaism will lose and by default a later "Roman" modified Pauline Christianity will win. The only problem is that this "modified Roman Pauline Christianity" is not the same that Paul taught and few ever see this although the contradictions by Paul in the New Testament should alter us to the fact that something is wrong. That is where I was for years until my studies finally encompassed a through understanding of Gnosticism; in particular Christian Gnosticism which was the faith not of Messianic Judaism but the evolution of the Essenes which had long departed from normative conservative Judaism. Later forgery of the rest of the Epistles bearing Paul's name were crafted by Irenaeus and other proto-Roman forgers in order to present an anti-Gnostic slant to what was taught by the earliest Gnostic Christians who taught a "Spiritual non-human Christ".....the Logos....the "Christ within".

Now don't believe this because I said it but do you own study to see if this is possibly true and if you do you will see that these truth exist and Rome never wanted you to know! Take the challenge and I will lead you through the wilderness of lies and deceptions if you wish.

It is time that we restore the real truths and revelation given by God to the Ancients who have us the religious concepts that we have today which sadly are so blurred by deceit that we miss the beauty and simplicity of what God intended we, as His creation, was to understand about Him and His creation. We have to start over and that means with Egypt where we find the earliest Revelations of God to mankind in all their beauty and simplicity. The Egypt website is soon to be published on the net so please pray for me as I finish this part of the puzzle that has consumed me for the last 16 years.

But what we cannot miss here is that the form of Pauline Christianity that existed in the first century is completely different from the revised and modified Pauline Christianity that will emerge from Rome after they "literalize" Paul's Gnostic Christ and create many religious writings in both Paul's name as well as the apostle's names (the Gospels) in order to make it appear as if a "literalized" Christ was the crux of Paul's message when scholarly study today reveals just the opposite!!! [READ THAT AGAIN]. The forged texts that we have today, after many adaptations from the sources, began to appear in their infancy around after 70 A.D., the time when the two rival communities were engaged in a fierce struggle, with the Messianic-Jews (also termed Judeo-Christians since they believed in a soon coming human messiah as fulfillment of Hebrew Scriptures) still retaining the upper hand. With the Jewish war and the fall of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. the situation was to be reversed. This is how Cardinal Daniélou explains the decline:

"After the Jews had been discredited in the Empire, the Christians tended to detach themselves from them. The Hellenistic peoples of Christian persuasion then gained the upper hand. Paul won a posthumous victory. Christianity separated itself politically and sociologically from Judaism; it became the third people (a third voice after Rome refutes the Gnostic Christ of Paul and turns the allegory of Paul into a "literal Christ Jesus" made of flesh and blood and "fills in the gaps" by creating genealogies, birth accounts, infancy narratives, and a historical time line for the "human Jesus".

Answer for yourself: How do we know this is true for sure?

Well all you have to do is look at archeology and what has been discovered in the last 200 years and do critical study into comparative religions and see how most of the "Jesus stories" in the New Testament are carbon copies of prior allegorized legends of sungods and dying-rising sungodmen and various other legends like that of Osiris which became the "pattern" for all other later sungodmen. The Jesus of Rome's creation in their Second New Testament is a replay of what has been told before as found in the spiritual allegories of Gentile nations since time began. However there is one big difference. Where all prior allegories of sungods and sungodmen were but that; allegories expressing Divine concepts told through the story of symbolic allegories and metaphors where the dying-rising godmen were but pictures of the awakening of the soul within mankind to his true Spiritual Nature (that God dwells within him and that he has come from God and returns to God) Rome will "literalize" the story of these godmen and role them all into one; that being the ultimate liberalized Godman as Jesus of their Gospels (since their Emperors were already human gods alive and walking around like other humans it was no problem to have another). This Divine allegory of the God within expressed since Egypt all the way down through history becomes now in Rome's refutation of the earlier Gnostic Christ and the Gnostic First New Testament a "Literalized Christ".

Col 1:26-27 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Through creative forgery in Paul's name Roman theology will find expression and the truth behind all the Ancient allegories of God and "the Christ" that lives within mankind are lost to us and in its place falsehood and idolatry is taught and presented to the world as a "Second New Testament" which teaches a "literalized Godman" who is to be worshipped. This never existed! Just ask the Jews and their scholars who just happen to have the uncorrupted Hebrew Scriptures which attest to this truth! Let it be understood by all that although this ultimate forgery of the Gnostic New Testament by Rome was to come later after the Jewish revolt in 140 A.D., Judeo-Christianity continued to predominate culturally. It will be this "Hellenistic-Pro-Roman" influence that will become the anti-Gnostic yet "modified" and "literalized" pro-Pauline faction which will step in and amend so much of the earlier Gnostic New Testament of Marcion and the Gnostic Pauline epistles and produce a refutation anti-Gnostic New Testament. In so doing we find that under this influence of this 3rd group of proto-Catholics like Irenaeus and others. The 4 Gospels will be crafted along with these conflicting genealogies, birth narratives, infancy narratives, etc., and also the other fraudulent Pauline epistles which try to give an anti-Gnostic slant to an already existing Gnostic New Testament by presenting after 180 C.E./A.D. a "human fleshly Christ". This 3rd group succeeds via the power of Rome and gives the world the Second New Testament we have in our possession today. So we go literally from a Judeo-Messianism expecting a political human Messiah (Judeo-Christianity [camp one] to a pro-Pauline "Gnostic Christ" [camp two] which stressed not the political aspects of God's deliverance (Yahweh's salvation=the meaning behind the Hebrew "Joshua" or Latin "Jesus") as had the Jews but to a spiritual deliverance within the soul [which happens to be also a correct understanding of the work of the Logos/Christ/Sophia on spiritual level] to a 3rd group of "literalistic" anti-Gnostic proto-Catholics which reworked not only existing theologies that emanated out of Judaism but was responsible for stealing the identities of the earliest "apostles" and Paul and ascribing such authority to their "literalistic" anti-Gnostic religious synthesis of sun worship and parts of Judaism which is of their own making and solidifying this in a refutation Second New Testament which went all over the world and continues to do so today.

From sometime around or after 70 A.D. to a period sometime before 180 A.D. the Gospels of Mark, Matthew, Luke and John were slowly produced. However they do not constitute the first written Christian documents: the authentic 7 letters (Gnostic epistles) of Paul date from well before them. The Jews had their Tanakh and the "Gnostic Christians" of Paul had his Gnostic 7 Epistles but curiously absent at this time was Rome's New Testament which will later teach a "human Christ" which Paul' Epistles never taught!

According to O. Culmann, Paul probably wrote his letter to the Thessalonians in 50 A.D. He had probably disappeared several years prior to the completion of Mark's Gospel.

"PAUL A TRAITOR"...LET US UNDERSTAND HOW THIS HAPPENED

Paul is the most controversial figure in Christianity. According to existing historical records left to us by the Ebionites and others Paul was considered to be a traitor to Jewish Messianic thought by the Messianic community who had stayed in Jerusalem in the circle around James. Paul and his Gnostic Christ laid the foundation for a later Roman Christianity as they would come behind him and "literalize" Paul's Gnostic Spiritual Christ...the Logos within. Paul had not known Jesus during his lifetime and we are led to believe that this "Jesus" appeared to him which was necessary if he was ever to prove the legitimacy of his mission. This had to be done by declaring that Jesus, raised from the dead, had appeared to him on the road to Damascus.

Answer for yourself: When did this "appearance" happen? Can we date it for sure and what implications can be drawn from such dating? How is it that this appearance of "the resurrected Christ" to Paul can be dated to 27 A.D. yet Jesus is not supposed to have died according to Christian theology till after 30 A.D.? Did you catch that?

Answer for yourself: Have you put on your thinking hats yet? You may need one for the following example. The conversion of Paul, according to the Acts, is supposed to have occurred sometime after the year 30 A.D. at the earliest; and yet if we accept the data furnished by the book of Acts and Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, he must have been converted as early as the year 27 A.D. Paul states that after his conversion he did not go up to Jerusalem for three years. Then after 14 more years he went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas. This second visit can be dated by means of the famine, which is historic, and known to have occurred in the year 44, at which time relief was conveyed to the brethren in Judea by Barnabas and Paul. If we take 17 years from 44, the different statements go to show that Paul had been converted as early as the year 27. Thus, according to the dates and the data derived from the Acts, from Paul's epistle, and the historic fact of the famine, Paul was converted to Christianity in the year 27 of our era!

Answer for yourself: What was Paul supposedly converted to then if Jesus was not dead yet in the year 27 A.D./C.E.? Why did not Paul go up to Jerusalem and hold a conversation with Jesus personally since by all Christian scholarly accounts he is yet alive at this time? What does this whole deception teach us or should teach us?

Well first of all that what we are reading in our New Testaments given to us by Rome might not be true and we have to dig out the truth from other sources available to us today. This could not have been by a spiritual manifestation of the supposed personal Jesus to Paul, who was not then dead, and had not at that time been re-begotten as the Christ of the canonical history. This is usually looked upon (by Renan, for example,) as such an absurdity that no credence can be allowed to the account in the Acts. Such a supposed conversion by its own account is dubious if not an impossibility; whether you look at Galatians and the conversion account which evidently is forged as well or the book of Acts and its conversion account.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? This betrays the action of textual forgers trying to write into history and the texts grounds and support for their religious beliefs long after Paul is dead. Since Paul was the only successful "missionary" to the Gentiles they will need Paul as their "ambassador" for a "literalized Christ". There is only one problem; Paul never taught one in his 7 authentic Epistles. Study reveals Paul was a Gnostic and not an advocate in the Historical Jesus of Rome's invention. You cannot date one event by another which never occurred, or, if it did occur, is not recorded by Paul, especially when his own account offers negative evidence of its non-occurrence. It is only using plain words justifiably to say that the conjecturers of the Acts falsify whenever it is convenient, and tell the truth when they cannot help it!

It is quite reasonable to ask what Christianity might have been without Paul and one could no doubt construct all sorts of hypotheses on this subject. I would guess we would have been left with Messianic Judaism. As far as the Gospels are concerned however, it is almost certain that if this atmosphere of struggle between communities had not existed, we would not have had the writings we possess today since these religious camps waged theological battles not only with rhetoric but the "pen" as well. We have Paul's writings which are Gnostic in his 7 authentic epistles. These writings begin to appear at a time of fierce struggle between the two communities (Messianic Judaism and Gnostic Christianity). These 'combat writings', as Father Kannengiesser calls them, emerged from the multitude of writings on the "Jesus". It will do the reader well to read and study on the "Exodus Allegory" and just what "Jesus" meant in the first century taking into play the word usages and how the earliest New Testament writings characterized "Jesus" and "Jesus Christ" in an allegorical sense in order to fully understand what is being said. Only later mind you we find the "literalization" of Jesus by Rome when they forged much of the New Testament which we have today and gave "flesh" to "the Christ" through falsified Gospels and Pauline epistles and other letters we have in our New Testaments today. These "theological battles" occurred at the time when Paul's style of Christianity won through default and the Roman war which suppressed Messianic Judaism along with their Messianic influence. In the wake of this war we find the emergence of a "theolgoical Rome" whereby they will take existing religious thought and synthesize them with their own and present them in their own collection of official texts in 180 A.D. which will refute complete the earlier Tanakh as well as the Gnostic First Gnostic New Testament of 140 A.D. given to us by Marcion. This Roman synthesis of texts that included everything from pure invention to purposeful mistranslation and misquotation would become the foundation for a later official modified "Canon" of a Second New Testament by Rome which condemned and excluded as unorthodox any other documents that were not suited to the line adopted by the later Gentile pro-Pauline "modified & literalized" Church.

The Messianic Judeo-Christians have now disappeared as a community with any influence, but one still hears people talking about them under the general term of "Judaistic". This is how Cardinal Daniélou describes their disappearance:

"When they were cut off -from the Great Church, that gradually freed itself from its Jewish attachments, they petered out very quickly in the West. In the East however it is possible to find traces of them in the Third and Fourth Centuries A.D., especially in Palestine, Arabia, Transjordania, Syria and Mesopotamia. Others joined in the orthodoxy of the Great Church, at the same time preserving traces of Semitic culture; some of these still persist in the Churches of Ethiopia and Chaldea".* A more detailed understanding of Paul's Gnostic influence and the struggle with Messianic Judaism is available to the reader is so interested.

THE FOUR GOSPELS....HISTORY AND SOURCES

It is important that the reader pay close attention to what is being said next. In the writings that come from the early stages of Christianity, the Gospels are not mentioned until long after the works of Paul. It was not until the middle of the Second century A.D., after 140 A.D. to be precise, that accounts began to appear concerning a collection of Evangelistic writings. In spite of this, "from the beginning of the Second century A.D., many Christian authors clearly intimate that they knew a great many of Paul's letters." These observations are set out in the Introduction to the Ecumenical Translation of the Bible, New Testament edited 1972. They are worth mentioning from the outset, and it is useful to point out here that the work referred to is the result of a collective effort which brought together more than one hundred Catholic and Protestant specialists.

The Gospels, later to become official, i.e. canonic, did not become known until fairly late, even though they were being compiled at the beginning of the Second century A.D. According to the Ecumenical Translation, stories belonging to them began to be quoted "orally" around the middle of the Second century A.D. Nevertheless, "it is nearly always difficult to decide whether the quotations come from written texts that the authors had next to them or if the latter were content to evoke the memory of fragments of the oral tradition" (THINK)!

"Before 140 A.D."* we read in the commentaries of various Bibles, "there was, in any case, no account by which one might have recognized a collection of evangelistic writings". Yet in spite of such clear historical evidence we find Christians who make such statements as those like A. Tricot who writes (1960) in the commentary to his translation of the New Testament: "Very early on, from the beginning of the Second century A.D., it became a habit to say "Gospel' meaning the books that Saint Justin around 150 A.D. had also called "The Memoirs of the Apostles'." That simply is not true and is sadly an erroneous assumption that cannot be substantiated by the evidences existing today which proves the otherwise; namely, that the first quote by any Christian writer from the 4 Gospels by "name" is after 180 A.D (last second century). Unfortunately, erroneous assertions of this kind are sufficiently common for the public to have ideas on the early date of the Gospels which are mistaken. So that we don't forget why this information is important is because we will find upon close scholarly study that another proto-Catholic "literalistic" Second New Testament will surface in and around 180 A.D. with the help first of all by Irenaeus which will refute and eventually replace an earlier "First Gnostic New Testament" and in so doing bring into reality not only these 4 Gospels but many epistles as well which were penned in the names of Paul and other "apostles" which will completely distort the earliest understandings of "the Christ" as well as "Jesus Christ" as held by the earliest Gnostic Christians.

The Gospels did not form a complete whole 'very early on'; it did not happen until more than a century after the end of Jesus's mission. The Ecumenical Translation of the Bible estimates the date the four Gospels acquired the status of canonic literature at around 170 A.D.

Justin's statement which calls the authors 'Apostles' is not acceptable either, as we shall see.

As far as the date the Gospels were written is concerned, A. Tricot erroneously states that Matthew's, Mark's and Luke's Gospels were written before 70 A.D.: but this is not acceptable, except perhaps for Mark. Let us never forget that the first quote of a Gospel by name by any Christian writer is not found until after the Second New Testament of 180 A.D. Following many others, this commentator goes out of his way to present the authors of the Gospels as the apostles or the companions of Jesus. For this reason he suggests dates of writing that place them very near to the time Jesus lived. As for John, whom A. Tricot has us believe lived until roughly 100 A.D., Christians have always been used to seeing him depicted as being very near to Jesus on ceremonial occasions. It is very difficult however to assert that he is the author of the Gospel that bears his name. For A. Tricot, as for other commentators, the Apostle John (like Matthew) was the officially qualified witness of the facts he recounts, although the majority of critics do not support the hypothesis which says he wrote the fourth Gospel.

Answer for yourself: If however the four Gospels in question cannot reasonably be regarded as the 'Memoirs' of the apostles or companions of Jesus, where do they come from?

Culmann, in his book The New Testament [Pub. Presses Universitaires de France, Paris, 1967], says of this that the evangelists were only the "spokesmen of the early Christian community which wrote down the oral tradition. For thirty or forty years, the Gospel had existed as an almost exclusively oral tradition: the latter only transmitted sayings and isolated narratives. These writers, called "evangelists" by church tradition, strung them together, each in his own way according to his own character and theological preoccupations. They linked up the narrations and sayings handed down by the prevailing tradition. The grouping of Jesus's sayings and likewise the sequence of narratives is made by the use of fairly vague linking phrases such as 'after this', 'when he had' etc. In other words, the 'framework' of the Synoptic Gospels [The three Gospels of Mark, Matthew and Luke.] is of a purely literary order and is not based on history."

The same author continues as follows:

"It must be noted that the needs of preaching, worship and teaching, more than biographical considerations, were what guided the early community when it wrote down the tradition of the life of Jesus. The apostles illustrated the truth of the faith they were preaching by describing the events in the life of Jesus. Their sermons are what caused the descriptions to be written down. The sayings of Jesus were transmitted, in particular, in the teaching of the catechism of the early Church."

This is exactly how the commentators of the describe the writing of the Gospels: the formation of an oral tradition influenced by the preachings of Jesus's disciples and other preachers; the preservation by preaching of this material, which is in actual fact reproduced and found in the Gospels, by preaching, liturgy, and teaching of the faithful; the slender possibility of a concrete form given by writings to certain confessions of faith, sayings attributed to Jesus from oral traditions, descriptions of the Passion for example; the fact that the writers of the New Testament called "evangelists" resort to various written forms as well as data contained in the oral tradition. They resort to these various oral traditions in order to produce texts which "are suitable for various circles, which meet the needs of the Church, explain observations on the Scriptures, correct errors and even, on occasion, answer adversaries' objections. Thus the evangelists, each according to his own outlook, have collected and recorded in writing the material given to them by the oral tradition".

This position has been collectively adopted by more than one hundred experts in the exegesis of the New Testament, both Catholic and Protestant. It diverges widely from the line established by the Second Vatican Council in its dogmatic constitution on the Revelation drawn up between 1962 and 1965 let alone received church tradition since the early third century. On the contrary, as we read in the following taken from the Second Vatican Council concerning their views upon the New Testament which demonstrate the "party line":

"Nobody can overlook the fact that, among all the Scriptures, even those of the New Testament, the Gospels have a well-deserved position of superiority. This is by virtue of the fact that they represent the most pre-eminent witness to the life and teachings of the Incarnate Word, Our Saviour. At all times and in all places the Church has maintained and still maintains the apostolic origin of the four Gospels. What the apostles actually preached on Christ's orders, both they and the men in their following subsequently transmitted, with the divine inspiration of the Spirit, in writings which are the foundation of the faith, i.e. the fourfold Gospel according to Matthew, Mark, Luke and John."

"Our Holy Mother, the Church, has firmly maintained and still maintains with the greatest constancy, that these four Gospels, which it unhesitatingly confirms are historically authentic, faithfully transmit what Jesus, Son Of God, actually did and taught during his life among men for their eternal salvation until the day when He was taken up into the heavens. . . . The sacred authors therefore composed the four Gospels in such a way as to always give us true and frank information on the life of Jesus".

This is an unambiguous affirmation of the fidelity with which the Gospels transmit the acts and sayings of Jesus.

There is hardly any compatibility between the Council's affirmation and what the authors and scholars quoted above claim. In particular the following:

The Gospels "are not to be taken literally" they are "writings suited to an occasion" or "combat writings". Their authors "are writing down the traditions of their own community concerning Jesus". (Father Kannengiesser).

More to the truth consider the next statement.

The Gospels are texts which "are suitable for various circles, meet the needs of the Church, explain observations on the Scriptures, correct errors and even, on occasion, answer adversaries' objections. Thus, the evangelists, each according to his own outlook, have collected and recorded in writing the material given to them by the oral tradition". (Ecumenical Translation of the Bible).

SOMEBODY HAD GOT IT WRONG....BUT WHOM?

It is quite clear that we are here faced with contradictory statements: the declaration of the Council on the one hand, and more recently adopted attitudes on the other. According to the declaration of the Second Vatican Council, a faithful account of the actions and words of Jesus is to be found in the Gospels; but it is impossible to reconcile this with the existence in the New Testament text of:

- contradictions in the New Testament texts that are exposed by knowledge of geography, history, Biblical languages, mistranslations& misquotations & pure invention of New Testament Scriptures when compared with the Hebrew Scriptures...thus creating a false picture of the Jewish Messiah, "the Christ" as well as "Jesus Christ" as understood by the earliest Christians
- the recurrent pattern of the cosmic-godman taken from personified sunworship as found applied to the Jewish Messiah by the synthesis of religious ideas by the apostate Essenes of the intertestamental times which find expression in their fraudulent translation of the Hebrew Scriptures into Greek which we find constitute the very basis for all quotes of Hebrew Scriptures in the New Testament
- the recurring pattern of Osiris-Dionysius and the events in their lives replayed not only down through history through the myths and legends of cosmic godmen in other nations as expressed through allegory which finds ultimate expression in the New Testament as "literalized events" in the life of a Jewish Rabbi named Yeshua/Jesus
- other improbabilities & things which are materially impossible or statements which run contrary to firmly established reality & I could go on.

If, on the other hand, one chooses to regard the Gospels as expressing the personal point of view of those who collected the oral traditions that belonged to various communities, or as writings suited to an occasion or "combat-writings" expressing the current religious views of various theological camps, it does not come as a surprise to find faults in the Gospels (like the genealogies of Jesus). All these faults are the sign that they were written by men in circumstances such as these. The writers may have been quite sincere, even though they relate facts without doubting their inaccuracy. They provide us with descriptions which contradict other authors' narrations or other Ancient understandings of "the Christ" and "Jesus Christ" as held by the earliest Christian Gnostics for example, or are influenced by reasons of religious rivalry between competing religious communities. They therefore present stories about the life of Jesus from a completely different angle than their adversaries which today are easy to substantiate by reading a few good books.

In closing let me give it to you in a nutshell. I have tried in this opening article to paint with broad strokes the events that underlie the foundation for the writings that become the New Testament which we have today. We have a struggle and contest of religious ideas from three camps that compete for ascendancy:

- James and the Jerusalem Church &Messianic Judaism which taught and looked for a human descendant of King David anointed for the task of a physical deliverance and salvation of Israel from the persecutions of the Gentiles and restoration to the past glories of the ear of King David
- Marcion and Paul and Gnostic Christianity which taught an allegorical "Christ within" and taught of a spiritual awaking and salvation within mankind through the coming to the awareness of the God within, man's true origin and his destiny, and the attendant responsibilities that such an awareness brings to man who is created in the image of God.
- Roman literalistic Christianity who not only wins the wars against the Jews and Gnostics but builds upon both their beliefs the ultimate religious synthesis whereby the expected human messiah is fused with the personified cosmic godman of sunworship and presented as a "literalized" man and "fleshly Christ" in a historical timeline of their making through their forgery of many religious "gospels" and "epistles" in names of Paul and other historical apostles from the Jerusalem Church. In so doing they literally back-wrote a "literalized" Christ as "Joshua-Jesus-Christ" and literalized the myths of Osiris-Dionysius and these became the stories and events of "the human Christ" we have in the New Testament. Lastly their continued forgery in Paul's name was to give the impression that Paul always believed and taught a fleshly Christ when in fact he did not.

The sad result of this deception is that we approach the New Testament today never knowing that three different theologies [human Messiah, allegory of the Christ within, and a literalized Christ as if human] were thrown into the blender of Rome and out comes a "golden calf". And we read the New Testament with such an unawareness of this fact that we never distinguish between them let alone know which of the three can be believed as true. Let me give you a hint from my perspective from scholarly study over these last 16 yrs; namely, two are correct but one is idolatry. Any guess? Surely Judaism looked for their hoped for and prophesied Messiah who was to be only an anointed man from the human lineage of David. This was not what Paul, himself a Gentile who had converted to Judaism, was concerned. You heard me correctly; historical records and the testimony of Church Fathers tell us that Paul was a convert to Judaism. No wonder he has Roman citizenship (THINK). Paul's revelation was not of a human Messiah but rather of the same one that had been held since the time of the Ancients which concerned the true nature of mankind. The Logos or "the Christ" dwelt within each of God's creations and over time this was truth was lost. Egypt knew it and taught it and at one time the Gentile nations had such an understanding and expressed this through metaphors and allegories of the dying-rising godman as the souls' awakening to the Divine within mankind. This was understood by the Ancients as a resurrection for the dead while alive! Paul understood it and taught it and it is right before our eyes and we never really understand it!

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Paul is writing and speaking to a living audience here. This is just another proof that Paul was Gnostic and we never knew it. We fail to understand these things as typical Christians today because simply we were never taught this but the information is out there and in time you stumble onto this if you keep studying. Paul was teaching a "Spiritual Christ" within each of us and not a Jewish Messiah. This "Spiritual Christ-Logos-Sophia" is the mediator between Spirit and matter. After Rome gets through with his writings then Paul is made to contradict what he earlier has taught and wrote he is made to appear that he is teaching a historical Jesus Christ when he never did. We are so indebted to archeology and men and women who dedicated their lives to literally dig up these truth hidden from us and bring them to the light of day in these last two hundred years. With the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Nag Hammadi Library just barely over 50 years ago the lie of Roman Christianity has been exposed; that is only to those who take the time to look.

DID JESUS CHRIST HAVE TWO MOTHERS #1?

Answer for yourself: Were you aware that in all religious myths down through recorded history that the nation's Christs, Sungods, and Messiahs had two mothers? Are you aware that in the New Testament, hidden behind the supposed literal historicity of "Jesus Christ" we find that the New Testament Jesus has likewise two mothers? How could there possibly be rational significance to even such a question at it goes against the very Laws of Biology and the Cosmos? Is this possible? How can I know?

If this can be proven then we will have to study in order to crack the surface of our ignorance of the Divine Truths hidden in our Christian Scriptures in our pursuit of the truth behind our "Jesus Story"; a truth that sadly escapes almost all Christians today who have never studied Comparative Religions or Astrotheology.

When one approaches such a subject he is often put off by the writings of Christians who relegate such an idea as but crude illiteracy of the Ancients where they are mistakenly believed to have taken their own religious myths as if "literal history and stories". I must admit when reading of these things years ago before my studies progressed to where they are now I was swayed by these Christian writers and their comments upon Ancient religious antiquity as they relegated all such comments about "Christs" and "Sungods" as but mythical rubbish and nonsense of early "Paganism". That word, Paganism is a "buzz word" that is found to be used a lot by Christian writer who lack the "keys" to unlock this Ancient Spiritual wisdom and in so doing they literally discount and blaspheme the Ancient Spiritual Masters by relegating their profound Wisdom to the trash bin of "Paganism" and illegitimacy. Unsettling to me, even in spite of their comments, is the fact that these "Sungods" and these "Messiahs" had similar lives and sayings to that found in the New Testament in its depiction of my Christian Jesus. I, not possessing yet the "keys" to unlock this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom at that time in my life and in my studies, was unable to see the depth and profoundness of this supposed "Pagan" rubbish and nonsense. But that will all change over the next 5 years as my studies advanced to the point where I could see the incredible intelligence and Spiritual Wisdom that hid exalted Cosmic Truths under the religious myths of the Ancients. Exposed before me as my studies in Gnosticism and Egypt advanced was the foolishness, absurdity, and lunacy of these former Christian writers and their blind opinions on such "presumed childishness, ignorance, absurd symbolism, metaphor and myth" of the Ancient Wisdom and religious myths!

When I got to think about much of what I was reading about, like the two births and two mothers of these Sungods and Messiahs, it finally dawned on me that I should not be surprised at the idea that the nations "Christs", like the Christian Jesus Christ, should have two mothers and two births. In fact one day I was reading the Gospel of John and the truth jumped out at me; a truth that I had never seen illuminated to me before. I saw that in the "Jesus Story" even the New Testament Christ, the symbol for the Divine principle in mankind, heralded explicitly by Jesus in his declaration to Nicodemus that "ye must be born again." Nicodemus asks if this means that we must enter a second time into our mother's body and experience a second birth in the natural manner. There is always a "literal" interpretation which the flesh of mankind looks for in the beginning. But often we loose the real truth when we look only superficially at such passages. Jesus replies that we "must be born of water and the spirit." Something was hidden in such a response. Many opinions exist but I went to the Lexicons to get to the root of the words.

Answer for yourself: What does "Spirit" mean? The Thayer's Greek Lexicon says:

4151 pneuma-

1) a movement of air (a gentle blast)

- a) used of the wind, hence the wind itself
- b) the breath of the nostrils (the mouth)

The Greek word "pneuma" is translated as "spirit" in many passages and means "air" or "breath."

Unknown to most Christians is that one great keys to Bible meaning is the series of the four "elements" of ancient mythicism:

- Earth,
- Water,
- Air,
- Fire

The Ancient taught that the body of the physical or natural man was conceived as being composed of the two lower elements, earth and water, while air and fire, representing mind and spirit, commingled to make the higher or spiritual man. It is important that in such an understanding we see "two realms" of existence; one physical and one Spiritual. Mankind is a mixture of Heaven and Earth.

Jesus' statement to Nicodemus, then, could have been rendered, "born of water and air." And John the Baptist uses three of the four elements when he states that he, the forerunner of the Christos, and therefore a type of the lower natural man, indeed baptizes us with water (omitting earth), but that there cometh after him one higher than himself who shall baptize us with the holy spirit (air) and with fire. Let us stretch our minds for a second. We find in the New Testament that the depiction of the Jewish Christ affirms that mankind has two births, necessitating two mothers, and John the Baptist adds that we must have two baptisms.

These same Ancient Spiritual Masters and Sages of Antiquity, from nation to nation, taught that man's spirit is an indestructible fragment of God's own mighty Spirit, truly a tiny "spark" of that cosmic Intelligence and Love which we call the Mind of God.

John 1:1 1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. (KJV)

Unknown to most Christians is that the reference to "the Word" in John 1:1 has more in common with "thought" and "idea" than with a "spoken word". We really need to grasp this idea before we go on.

John 1:1 1 In the beginning was the Thought, and the Thought was with God, and the Thought was God. (KJV)

These same Ancients in their writings typified the divine element in man by "fire" and in contrast the lower or human element by "water". The fiery soul of man is housed in a temple of flesh and matter which is 72% water by actual composition! Now if you have read much of Comparative Religions you find repeatedly the crossing of the rivers and seas and the immersion of solar heroes in water in olden mythologies, and the rite of baptism in theology, signified nothing beyond the fact of the Soul's immersion in a physical body of water nature in its successive incarnations.

Answer for yourself: Does this mean that our Sungods and Solar heroes and Christs, and their "baptisms", or when they "walk on water" are but personifications of the Divine Soul as it descends into matter and the flesh (water) of mankind? Yes. Thus when Christ walked on the water this was neither a human action, since it is not human to walk on water, nor was it divine, since it is not of God to walk, but it is an evidence of the union of humanity and Divinity as told through allegory. That will not suffice for many so it appears that we need more evidence before we can say for sure and draw rigid conclusions that might apply to our inherited "Jesus Story". What we will see behind many of our "Jesus Stories" are parallels with the lives of the Sungods and should be so since both are descriptions and personifications of the incarnation of God into matter in the form of "the Christ".

Answer for yourself: Does this finally settle the long debated question as to why Jesus Christ submitted to a baptism of repentance given by John the Baptist if he was "without sin" as Christianity teaches? Is the New Testament Jesus fulfilling the mythos and myth of the Sungods? Let me give you a clue; he is fulfilling the mythos and we mistakenly read it as if "historical-literal".

Answer for yourself: Where do we get the idea that the Sungods were baptized in the first place? We get it from the personification of the Sun as it moves through the Zodiac. Yep, the "Sungod Stories" and the "Jesus Stories" come from the personification of the path of the Sun through the Heavens. Comparative Religion shows that the story of Jesus already existed in numerous religions prior to the alleged time of Jesus. Chrishna, Horus, Orpheus, Bacchus, Osiris, Dionysus, Buddha, Apollo, Hercules, Adonis, Ormuzd, Mithras, Indra, Œdipus, Quetzalcoatle, etc. are all prior "Jesus Stories". The motif of a Crucified Savior was already extant prior to the alleged time of Jesus. Solar Mythology shows the story of Jesus is just an allegory for the sun passing through the Zodiac and the passage of the seasons of the year. Jesus travels throughout his one year ministry, and the description of his travels exactly match that of the sun traveling through the Zodiac during the year when personified as seen in the lives of these prior Sungods, their lives and their "logia" or sayings. Here we have the origin of the "Jesus story", which is the personification of the Cosmic Energy, the Sun, which is but a symbol for God as understood by the Ancients. This common origin explains why all the stories of crucified saviors are essentially the same. The "key" to unlocking this whole repetition of "solar stories" lies in the fact that all these Sungod stories as well as our "Jesus Story" is mystical and mythological allegory depicting the "Descent of the Divine Soul" into matter. Thus, the proper interpretation of the "Jesus Story" is the "pattern" for the "birth, life, maturation, death, and rebirth" of our Soul. The rest is commentary but you have to see it to "believe it". We do this now.

Just for fun understand that the personified Sun is born in the House of Capricorn where upon as the personified Sun he must move from the House of Capricorn to the House of Aquarius. Now read the following two links and try to tell you that this is but a coincidence before you resume this study.

The Second House that the new born Sun (Son of the Sun when personified) travels is the House of Aquarius, the House of the Water bearer.

Answer for yourself: Is this why Jesus, the personified Sun, after his birth in the House of Capricorn, moves on to the House of Aquarius and why the New Testament has little to mention between the birth of the Christ (personified Sun) and when he appears at the waters of Jordan to be baptized? Jesus moves from the "manger" of Capricorn to the Jordan and John the Baptist (the water bearer). I will let you figure that one out by yourself. The Sun is plunged into the water of the Constellation of Aquarius on its route to the zenith of its life and ministry at the Summer Solstice. Now let us continue. There are 12 articles detailing the "Jesus Story" that parallel the passage of the Sun when personified through the Zodiac and they line up perfectly with the depiction of Jesus from Matthew chapter 1 through Matthew chapter 28. You literally have to see this to believe it.

We have seen that the Spiritual Masters of Ancient antiquity, from Ancient Egypt on down through history, including the great Greek philosophers like Plato, Plotinus, etc., in symphony taught that mankind is distinctly a creature compounded of two natures:

- A higher and a lower,

- A spiritual and a sensual,
- A divine and a human,
- A mortal and an immortal, and finally
- A fiery and a watery,

Each of these manifestations of God is combined in a mutual relationship in the organic body of flesh. Heraclitus, a Greek philosopher of the late 6th century B.C.E. states: "Man is a portion of cosmic fire, imprisoned in a body of earth and water." Plato, who lived 427 B.C.E. – ca. 347 B.C.E. was an immensely influential classical Greek philosopher, student of Socrates, teacher of Aristotle, writer, and founder of the Academy in Athens. Speaking of man Plato affirms: "Through body it is an animal; through intellect it is a god." To create man God incarnated the fiery spiritual principle of His own Energy/life in the watery confines of material bodies. Man is cosmic fire, the very Energy of The Cosmos limited and entrapped in this matter we call flesh. That power which permeated the lower nature of human kind is transformed into soul power as a permanent virtues. The cosmic fire force within man, the furnace wherein this work is effected, is symbolized by many things by these Ancients. We will look at a few as this article goes on. But a few more things need to be said.

The following is a summary of the Ancient's teaching on mankind and the Divine Spark within him:

Man per se is an invisible entity. What we see of him in and through the body is merely the manifestation of the inner man, because man essentially is a spiritual energy -- a spiritual, intellectual, and psychomaterial energy, the adjective depending upon the plane on which we choose to discern his actions, for indeed he may be said to exist on all planes, inner and outer. Though man is an invisible entity, he needs a physical body in which to live and with which to work upon this physical plane. He is a pilgrim of eternity. He came forth from the invisible part of cosmic being in aeons so far bygone in the past that mankind, except the great sages and seers, has lost all count thereof. He came out of the womb of cosmic being as an unself-conscious god-spark, and after wandering aeon after aeon through all the various inner worlds, passing at different stages through our own material sphere, and out again into the inner worlds, he finally became man, a self-conscious entity; and here we are. Future aeons of time will bring forth even on this our earth, into a far more perfect manifestation than at present, the locked-up faculties and powers existent in every human being. The heart of the heart of a human being is a god, a cosmic spirit, a spark of the central cosmic fire; and all development is merely bringing forth into a more perfect manifestation the infolded energies, faculties, powers, organs, of the evolving entity we understand as God in matter, or should I say God in mankind. And as these faculties and energies become more able to manifest themselves, become more perfectly evolved forth, does the organism through which they work -- the body -- show the effects of this inner evolving fire, of this energy within; and thus also the body itself so evolves, because automatically reflecting in itself each inner step taken forwards. Out of the invisible into the visible, like the growth of a plant, comes man, the man-plant of eternity. Now you know why Osiris was a "vegetation god". Beginning in one life on earth as a human seed, man grows to maturity, and produces or evolves forth what is locked up within; and then, with the natural decay of power, sinking to earth the body dies; and after a long period of rest and assimilation of experience in the invisible worlds, the Ancients taught through observation of the unchanging Laws of the Cosmos that this inner spiritual flame comes again to earth for a new incarnation here. The spirit of man works through the human soul.

What you need to know right now is that what you just read is the most accurate and truest basic description of man that anthropology can present.

Man is, then, a natural man and a god, in combination.

Ps 82:6 6 I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High. (KJV)

John 10:34 34 Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods? (KJV)

Our natural body is the platform, the medium that gives the Soul of man its baptism by water; our initial spiritual body is to give us the later baptism by fire!

- We are born first as the natural man; then as the spiritual.
- Or we are born first by water and then by fire.

Of vital significance at this point are two statements by St. Paul:

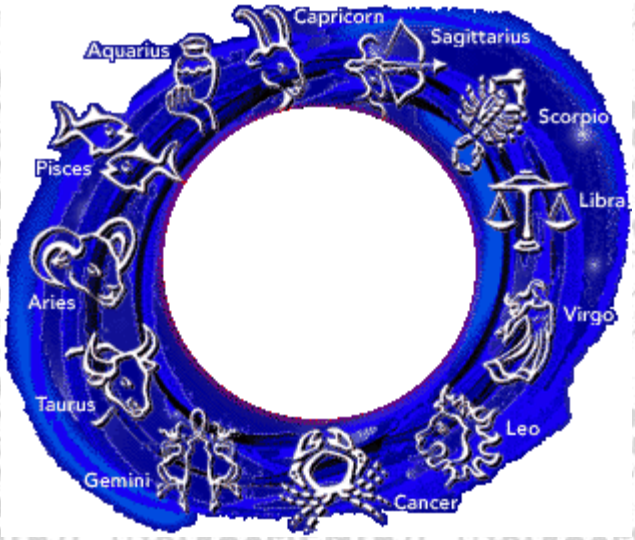
1 Cor 15:46 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. (KJV)

1 Cor 2:14 14 But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. (KJV)

This should make sense to us; for the natural man is not yet in that higher kingdom of evolution, and he must be transformed, transfigured, lifted up into a superior world of Divine Christ Consciousness before he can apprehend spiritual things. Development of the Spiritual Nature in him will thus transform him, and nothing else will. We must feed on God and His truths if the "inner man" is ever to grow to his intended Spiritual Maturity in this physical realm the live, the testing ground for our Souls.

Now we come to the genius of the Ancient so terribly misunderstood and denigrated by early Christianity. Gross blindness and the dullness of the later Christian age which is propagated by later Latin and Greek Church Fathers would cite these same marvelously ingenious portrayals as the evidence of childish ignorance on the part of these Ancient Spiritual Masters who were the disseminators of this profound Spiritual Wisdom. Using astrological bases for portraying cosmic truths, the Ancients used Astrotheology to express in simple myth which was already known as a Heavenly truth.

Answer for yourself: What better symbolism could they have used to portray such Divine Cosmic and Heavenly truth than the symbols of Heaven themselves?



The Ancient Spiritual Masters and Adepts localized the birth of both the "natural man" and the "spiritual man" in the Heavens and understood that they were connected with two Constellations:

- They taught that the natural man was birthed in the zodiacal house of Virgo and
- They taught that of the spiritual man was birthed in the opposite zodiacal house of Pisces.

Answer for yourself: What is this to teach us?

These then, Virgo and Pisces are the houses of the two mothers of life.

The first was the Virgin Mother (Virgo), the primeval symbol of the Virgin Mary thousands of years B.C. Virgo, it was taught, gave man his natural birth by water and became known as the Water-Mother. The connection of Virgo with water is confirmed both in the fact that Virgo's polar opposite is Pisces, the Fishes, and one of the esoteric rulers of Virgo is Neptune, veiled by the Moon. Take time to look at the picture and see how Pisces is adjacent to Virgo on the Wheel of the Zodiac. Let the reader picture before him the circle of the Zodiac, with the House of Virgo at the western or right end of the equatorial meridian line drawn horizontally through the center and intersecting the circle on the east and west, and with the House of Pisces directly opposite it on the left and eastern end. This picture that I used has it reversed but you get the point. The simple fact that these two Constellations stand opposite to each other and six months apart and they will presently be seen to dramatize cosmological and anthropological truth of the most basic and, in our present state of ignorance, astonishing important are they to our understanding if we ever hope to arrive at the truth behind our "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? There is a relationship between the two Constellations and the Spiritual Message that they bring mankind and we will see this momentarily.

According to the ancient Egyptian sphinx, the first house of the Zodiac is Virgo, not Aries as in the modern Zodiac!!!

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? Thus, the natural birth of mankind begins here. It is common knowledge among occultists that, from remote antiquity, Virgo represented the Mother Goddess worshipped under various names by different pagan cultures. Some of the mythological representations of Virgo are Nana, Eve, Istar, Demeter, Hecate, Themis, Hera, Astraea, Diana, Cybele, Isis, Fortuna, Erigone, Sibylla and the Virgin Mother. All representations of these goddesses are of the Great Mother in some form. It is this Great Mother who existed before the Masculine gods of ancient and classical mythology. The feminine aspect of God will be replaced by a Masculine representation of God around 2000 B.C.E. when the northern hemisphere invades and conquers the southern hemisphere.

Pisces (the Fishes by name) gave man his spiritual birth by the Fish and was denominated the Fish-Mother. So now we have two mothers, a "water mother" (Virgo) and a "fish mother" (Pisces).

Let us not forget that the personified Sun, a symbol of God and Cosmic Energy/Force/Power moved through the Heavens and the Houses of the Zodiac. This Heaven is what we call the Sky or Space. Despite all the various Creation myths that the Egyptians subscribed to, they had one thing in common, Nun. Even though the myths named different gods as the original Creator, they all agreed that He sprang from Nun, the primordial waters. Nun was more than an ocean, he was a limitless expanse of motionless water. Even after the world was created, Nun continued to exist at it's margins and would one day return to destroy it and begin the cycle again. Thus we should expect and are not disappointed with "water" symbolism with Pisces (the Fish Mother) and Virgo (the Water Mother). Behind all of this Astronomy mind you is the Descent of God into matter, Spirit and Soul, invisible and visible (fire, water, air). Let us not forget what lies behind this symbolism.

The virgin mothers are all identified with water in symbolism and their various names, such as Meri, Mary, Venus (born of the sea-foam), Tiamat, Typhon and Thallath (Greek for "sea") are designations for water. On the other side there are the Fish Avatars of Vishnu, such as the Babylonian Ioannes, or Dagon, and the Assyrian goddess Atergatis was called "the Fish-Mother."

- Virgo stood as the mother of birth by water, or the birth of man the first, of the earth, earthy birth;
- Pisces stood as the mother of birth by spirit or fire, or the birth of man, the second birth, a spiritual birth

- Virgo was the water-mother of the natural man,
- Pisces the fish-mother of the spiritual man.

Don't forget what I just said as we will build upon this as we go.

Answer for yourself: What else lies behind the significance of the fish symbol in the zodiac and in mythical religion?

We all can agree that water is very important in the birth of a baby. The mother's womb is a watery environment. The baby begins to float in a watery environment somewhere between 3-6 weeks and we all are familiar with the saying "her water broke". Therefore water is the type of natural birth because all natural birth proceeds in and from water. All first life originated in the sea water. The fish, or the "symbol of a fish", is a birth in and from the water, and it stands patently as the "generic type" of organic life issuing out of inorganic!

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? Namely, that the fish symbolism typifies life embodied in a physical organic structure.

Answer for yourself: What are the Ancients doing with such Astronomy and symbolism of these Constellations?

The Ancients were masters at utilizing astrological symbolism and facts for the depiction of cosmic truths, the ancient astrologers localized the birth of the natural man in the zodiacal house of Virgo, and the birth of the spiritual man in the opposite house of Pisces. These, then, were the houses of the two mothers of life's progeny. The first was the Virgo (Virgin) Mother, the primeval symbol of the "Virgin Mary" thousands of years before Christ. Virgo gave man his natural birth by water, and became known as the "Water-Mother" as I said above. Pisces, the Fishes by name, gave him his birth by the "fish," or in the sign of the Fishes, and was denominated the "Fish-Mother." Virgo stood as the mother of birth by water, or the birth of man the first, earthy, in a watery body. Pisces stood as the mother of birth by the spirit, or by fire, or the birth of man the second. Man's physical body is the high product of a biological evolution that actually started in the ocean water! The Ancients taught that our Soul descends through various manifestations and kingdoms before entering the mankind: first the mineral kingdom, next the vegetation kingdom, then then animal kingdom before the human kingdom. Virgo was poetized as the Water Mother of the natural man; Pisces as the Fish Mother of the spiritual man. So Virgo was the first of the two mothers of the god-to-be in the life of mankind; Pisces was the second.

In spite of the presence of these significant data standing for all to read in mythology and the Scriptures, any profound grasp of the interior notions was missed because the true relevance of the symbolic sense of both water and the fish had never been glimpsed. Prominent as the fish symbol has been in Christian literature of the introductory period of Christianity, no one has seemed to divine its enlightening cryptic import. Water is the type of natural birth because all natural birth proceeds in and from water. All first life on our globe originated in sea water, and all vegetation must have water to maintain its life. The fish is a birth in and from water, and the fish fittingly therefore stands patently as the generic type of organic life issuing out of the inorganic! The fish typifies life embodied in a physical organic structure, subsisting in a sea of inorganic matter. Organic life is born out of the inorganic just as the fish is born out of the water. It is the child of the water-as-mother. And if organic life (the "Fish") is in its turn to become mother, its child will be mind and spiritual consciousness, son of the Fish Mother (the home for the Christ). Water is thus the mother of natural physical life, and organic physical body becomes the mother of later evolving divine mind. Thus we can see that the Ancients are teaching through such Astrological symbolism that organic life is born out of the water, and is the first birth (natural), child of the water-mother. And if organic life is in turn to become a mother, its child will be "mind" and "spiritual consciousness", son of the fish-mother. This is the home for the "descending Christ" and his incarnation into mankind! We need only to remind us that Paul has already taught us

1 Cor 15:46 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward (second) that which is spiritual. (KJV)

We are speaking of a Divine Pattern that is repeated throughout the whole Universe and therefore taught in all the Ancient Wisdom religions. Simply said, God created and in so doing He descended into matter (the natural physical creation...the first birth); the Mind of God, the Intelligent Spark of the Cosmos descended subsequently into this same matter and transformed the creation by imparting the Divine Spark into mankind (matter). This is "the second birth; the spiritual birth. Thus we have "two births" and "two mothers"; Virgo and Pisces. So, in brief, water is the mother of natural physical being, and organic structure becomes the later mother and gestator of the Divine Cosmic Mind of the Creator who descends into matter.

Speaking not about a "literal-historical" Christ but rather the "Christ-Consciousness" Paul would say:

Phil 2:5-7 5 Let this mind (thought) be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: (KJV)

Now when you find in your studies the name "Jesus Christ" in Ancient Egypt as far back as 10,000 B.C.E. then you no longer are confused about just whom this "Jesus Christ" actually is.

We continue. Now, strangely enough, water is not limited to this one symbolism as it is the type of another thing that teaches us about an even earlier stage of development of matter. Matter is the virgin mother of all life. All things are generated in the womb of primordial matter. Of all the nations which teach this we look to Egypt and their religious mythology and symbolism for its greatest unveiling of hidden Divine Truths concerning this "primordial matter".

Answer for yourself: Why is Egyptian religious mythology so important for us to understand? Simply, as I found in my 20 years of study, it is by a consideration of the nature of matter and its evolution that we are enabled to arrive at last at the true meaning not only of the double motherhood of life but the clearest understanding of the metaphysical state in which mankind is placed by our Creator. Let us not be mistaken, at the heart of our "born again" doctrine, as with all our other religious doctrines, like the Laws, Cycles, and Patterns operating in the Cosmos which the most spiritually inclined of our species as far back as Ancient Egypt both saw and spiritually understood when pondering the night skies of Ancient Egypt. Of course at the heart of all of this is the "truth about 'the Christ'" and the coming of "the Christ" into matter as the mediator between mankind and God.

Egypt taught that man exists on a number of different levels at once, from the most physical to the most metaphysical. Einstein agreed with the same principles. Since Einstein's relativity theory, it has been known and accepted that matter is a form of Energy—a coagulation or condensation of energy. We know that Energy is made up of molecules rotating or vibrating at various rates of speed. In the "physical" world, molecules rotate at a very slow and constant rate of speed. That is why things appear to be solid, for our earthly senses. Really an visible object is mostly "space" and when we touch it we are touching only the circulations electrons and this gives it the appearance of being a solid. Basically visible objects are miniature "solar systems" consisting of small amounts of matter separated by vast amounts of "space" in which the electrons are circling the atoms at such speeds that they appear as "solids". The slower the speed, the more dense or solid the thing. In the metaphysical (spirit) world, the molecules vibrate at a much faster, or ethereal dimension—where things are freer and less dense. In this light, the universe is basically a hierarchy of energies (neteru), at different orders of density. Our senses have some access to the densest form of energy, which is matter. The hierarchy of energies is interrelated, and each level is sustained by the level below it. This hierarchy of energies is set neatly into a vast matrix of deeply interfaced natural laws. It is both physical and metaphysical (natural and spiritual). It is into this "space" in matter, our flesh for example, in which the Energy or "neteru" named "the Karest/Christ" has entered in its "incarnation". This Divine Consciousness has come to "tabernacle" in the flesh of mankind. All of mankind are manifestations of "the Christ child".

Today modern science has verified what the Ancient Egyptians taught about matter and metaphysics. We know today that matter is seen to exist in two states, in each of which it becomes mother of life, at two different levels. Primordial matter, the sea of empty space, is the first mother of all living forms. This is the primal "abyss of the waters" in Genesis. Egypt gave the Hebrews the ideas they later expressed in Genesis. This "abyss of waters" is called "Nun" in Egypt. This Nun is one of the eight creator deities of the Hermopolitan Ogdoad. He was the divine personification of the primordial waters of chaos from which the "primeval mound" of the sun-god, Atum (the invisible One arose). Here again we find the primordial waters as the Eternal Potential that will birth the "first-natural-visible" creation (the primeval mound) and behind it operating in secret is the the "second-spiritual-invisible" One; the Absolute First Cause. The Latin word for "mother" is our very word "matter," with one "t" left out--mater. And how close to mater is water! And organic structure is the second mother, parent of spiritual mind (the Karest/Christ).

The ancient books always grouped the two mothers in pairs. They were called "the two mothers" or sometimes the "two divine sisters." As we find them described in Egyptian religion and other Ancient Religions they were the wife and sister of the God, under the names of Juno, Venus, Isis, Ishtar, Cybele or Mylitta. In old Egypt they were first Apt and Neith; and later Isis and Nephthys. Massey relates Neith to "net," i.e., fishnet! Pisces, the fishes, refers again to the "spiritual birth" that is to follow the "natural birth" (Virgo). Clues to their functions were picked up in the great Book of the Dead: "Isis conceived him; Nephthys gave him birth."

Answer for yourself: Could these references to the two mothers, Isis and Nephthys and Apt and Neith be in reality a reference to the two births of mankind; one natural (the one in Virgo...watery womb) and one spiritual (one in Pisces)? No wonder the fish symbolism is the "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: What have we seen here so far? This is very important you understand what you just read. We see that the Ancients used both astronomy and astronomical terminology dealing with the Constellations in the Zodiac which move above our heads and the methodology of "personification" to express these various Energies of the Cosmos and associated forces, principalities, thrones, dominions and powers to refer to mankind and the two births of mankind; one natural and one spiritual.

Answer for yourself: Then are we seeing that the "personification" of these Metaphysical dynamics of the Cosmos were explained by the Ancients use of "personification" to describe these Metaphysical principles, like Isis and Nephtys, gods and goddesses (the two births of mankind...natural and spiritual)? Yes we are. Is this how they wrote in explaining the Descent of God or the Soul into matter and the Descent of the Mind of God, the Christ into the flesh of mankind? We sure did see it and this is exactly how to interpret the Ancient Wisdom Scriptures and the "Christ Stories" in these various Sungods and the "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: Then did these same Ancients use this same Methodology to express Metaphysical dynamics operating in the Cosmos and in so doing are we to understand that these Sungods and goddesses (neteru) and the "Christs" are not to be understood as if "historical-literal" personages but yet behind these Spiritual Stories lie a very real Metaphysical truth concerning the Descent of God, the Cosmic Mind into matter in the form of His Christ? We sure are. This applies to the "Jesus 'Christ' Story" as well.

These Ancient Sages go on to write: "Isis bore him; Nephthys suckled him," or reared him. The full sense of these statements was not discerned until they were scrutinized in the light of another key sentence which matched them: "Heaven conceived him; the Tuat brought him forth."

For "heaven" is precisely the place, or the state of the first matter-mother, the "firmament" of empty space, and in the bosom of this first mother form the unit potential of the seed of "divine mind-to-be" is conceived. All later potency of a godly mind is latent in the depths of sub-atomic matter. "The shape of things to come" in the evolution of universal life is archetypically conceived at the arc of the cycle when spirit and matter, as yet undifferentiated, are identical and homogeneous. Spirit yet slumbers in unconsciousness, and matter exists only in the mind of God. All things are initially conceived in the innermost heart of primordial Being, wherespirit as Father and matter as Mother are yet One. Being is then Father-Mother, not Father and Mother. With this comes the crystal clear insight into the mystery. For that which is to eventuate in the cycles of evolution as the descent of the Divine mind into an organic matter and creature, by that I mean mankind is elementarily conceived by Divine ideation (thought..."in the beginning was the Word") in the innermost depths of Cosmic Consciousness (God's thoughts/Mind), or in the unmanifested world of "thought" (before matter and the "big bang"), or again in the heart of Infinite Spirit, where Spirit is identical with pure undifferentiated matter.

Answer for yourself: How did Egypt express this idea; the "thought" in the mind of God before the subsequent visible "manifestation" of that "thought" in the physical realm?

This is mirrored in the Egyptian statement that Isis conceived him. Matter in its invisible, inorganic state and existing only in the world of "thoughts" of God as it existed only as "potentiality in Nun before the "big bang" was the womb of the first conception. In the beginning, the world appeared as an infinite expanse of dark and directionless waters, named Nun. Nun was personified as four pairs of male and female deities. Each couple represented one of four principles that characterized Nun:

- hiddenness or invisibility,
- infinite water,
- straying or lack of direction, and
- darkness or lack of light.

Matter existed as "thought" only in the primeval water that encircles the entire world, and from which everything was created. Isis is virgin, i.e., pure matter, or matter which, as "thought", is unmanifested and undifferentiated that awaits its birth, evolution and transformation. The Tuat, on the other hand, is really earth, as the type of physical matter, or matter organic, aggregated into substantial forms, called by us physical matter. It is matter as substance, constituted and existent in the visible world in structural forms. We have before us then the "invisible world of potential Energy" and the subsequent "visible world of potential Energy realized" (matter is energy...it only changed "form"). Isis was matter existing only as empty space (invisible), and Nephthys was atomic matter, consisting of concrete structural forms (visible) awaiting its manifestation. It is the "invisible world that births the visible". It has been said that it is advantageous for us to think of the physical worlds as floating in the sea of empty space like fish in a pond of water. These physical worlds are the second form of matter (matter in thought and in the mind of God in the invisible realm being the first), and their organic bodies of substantial matter give birth to the Logoi (word, thought, speech, reason, principle, standard, or logic) in the solar systems and to the Karest/Christos in man.

Plato also thought a lot about the natural world and how it works. He thought that everything had a sort of ideal form, like the idea of a chair, and then an actual chair was a sort of poor imitation of the ideal chair that exists only in your mind. One of the ways Plato tried to explain his ideas was with the famous metaphor of the cave. He said, Suppose there is a cave, and inside the cave there are some men chained up to a wall, so that they can only see the back wall of the cave and nothing else. These men can't see anything outside of the cave, or even see each other clearly, but they can see shadows of what is going on outside the cave. Wouldn't these prisoners come to think that the shadows were real, and that was what things really looked like? Suppose now that one of the men escaped, and got out of the cave, and saw what real people looked like, and real trees and grass. If he went back to the cave and told the other men what he had seen, would they believe him, or would they think he was crazy? Plato says that we are like those men sitting in the cave: we think we understand the real world, but because we are trapped in our bodies we can see only the shadows on the wall.

Answer for yourself: How does all of this apply to Plato?

In the same way the "natural birth" as seen in the Sun passing through the Constellation Virgo (Water-Mother) is not the real birth for mankind; the real birth for mankind is the Spiritual Birth that is typified only by the "natural birth".

1 Cor 15:46 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. (KJV)

Plato would tell us that the "natural birth" of mankind (Water Mother-Virgo) is but a shadow for the real birth of mankind which is "spiritual" (Fish Mother-Pisces).

This concept of the "spiritual birth" is mirrored in the Egyptian statement that "Isis conceived Horus, the Christ-to-be". Matter was the womb of the first conception, and Nephthys was to give birth to what Isis conceived. Isis is therefore the true Virgin of the world, because she is matter in its virginal state, not yet existent, unable to be paired off as the opposite pole of spirit and hence unwed. As virgin, she has not yet given birth to the Christ. That role will be performed by Nephthys, matter impregnated by spirit/Energy. Cosmically and evolutionarily speaking, Isis is the young girl who can not marry and bear the Christ; Nephthys is that same young girl grown to womanhood and able to produce her child. In the same sense in which we say that the child is father of the man it can be said that Isis is the mother of Nephthys. And we shall see that this legend of the two mothers, the second being the daughter of the first, is found intact in the New Testament Gospel story.

Answer for yourself: Do we need a review before we close this article.

Answer for yourself: If heaven, in the sense of virginal matter, conceived the Divine Consciousness principle, what is the "Tuat" that brought it forth? It must be equivalent to Nephthys. This locality is the Egyptian designation for earth, or matter in its substantial evolved form which can finally bring spiritual consciousness to manifest expression. It is matter in its physical form. Isis was matter subsistent in the form of "empty space;" Nephthys was atomic matter, existent as visible structural form, or the "fish." The fish is seen to be the type of organic matter floating in the sea of inorganic first matter, the "waters of the firmament." We see the physical worlds floating about in the sea of empty space like fish in the water. The physical universe is that Great Fish in the sea of infinite Being which contains the germ of the Jonah Consciousness (for Jonah is another figure of the Jesus or Christ Consciousness). This great universe is the second form of matter and hence is the second mother, Nephthys.It is the developed bodies of organic matter that give birth to the Logos in the macrocosm and to the Christos, a seed unit of that same Logos, in man the microcosm. Man's physical body, with brain and nervous system organized to give expression to that grade of mind denominated the Christ consciousness, is the divine Fish of the mythologic tradition of early Christianity. One needs only to refer to the Greek designation of the Christos of the precessional period of Pisces as Ichthys the Fish to be amazed at the play of the symbolism in the ancient day precisely when Christianity was being formulated. For the sun had entered the sign of the Fishes about 255 B.C.

So under the conception of the divided function of motherhood it can be said that man's future Christhood is conceived in the womb of Isis and brought to birth from the womb of Nephthys, the second mother, the immediate incubator of the Christly power in the world. New life is first conceived in the minds of man before born from the womb of its physical mother. This is a Cosmic Law; two births and two mothers! It is conceived by the mother and born by the daughter. Life is spiritually conceived and physically born. Man is born first as man, by water, the sea of primordial matter, in whose depths he is conceived; then he is reborn later as god, by the fire of spirit, emerging with biological life out of the womb of the sea, the Water-Mother.

The two mothers can be sharply distinguished as these two forms of matter in the following delineation: the first or virgin mother (Virgo=Isis) is matter in its first creative form; invisible, inorganic, unsubstantial (in our sense) and subatomic. The second mother (Pisces=Nephtys) is matter in its later evolved form as visible, organic, substantial and atomic. The first mother, the "Water Mother", virgin though she is, generated her child, organic matter, who by virtue of her "immaculate conception" was confusedly still called "virgin." And this daughter, grown to adulthood by evolution, became the second, or "Fish Mother," and in her turn produced, not now a daughter, but her Son, the masculinity indicating a spiritual and not a further physical progeny, the birth of Mind from matter (the Karest/Christ).

As hinted a moment ago, this genealogy or divine lineage is found in the New Testament of Christianity and the "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: How is that?

The first mother, corresponding to Isis is Anna, and the second mother is her daughter Mary, who bears the Christos, Jesus. Anna and Mary are the Isis and Nephthys of the Christian dispensation. And it is a question whether the Christian Anna and the Hebrew Hannah are not immediate derivatives from the Egyptian An, Ani, Anu. An was an alphabetical glyph for existent being. Ani was the name of the human entity evolving to deity in the Book of the Dead. We will later see that "Anu" will have an astonishing significance a little farther on in the final article #3.

The Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the sages taught that the Divine spirit (existing the Mind of God, a mind of thought and ideas) is conceived in the womb of Isis, the first universal mother, and brought to birth in the womb of Nephthys (physical matter), the second mother, the immediate incubator and gestator of its manifest expression. If you are not familiar with the concept of "archetypes" you need to read this article in order to help you conceptualize what is being said. This is saying simply that physical realm manifests the archetypes that exist in the invisible realm of pure Energy and Spirit. Moses, whom many believe in Pharaoh Akhenaten of the 18th Dynasty, speaks of this when mentioning "the Pattern" of the Tabernacle in Heaven as a template for the one to be built on earth.

Exod 25:40 40 And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the mount. (KJV)

The "real is the Spiritual" in the realm of the Fish-Mother (Pisces; second birth); the natural is not the real but a shadow pointing to the real spiritual reality that is hinted at by the physical real (the archetype); in this case King David, really Tuthmose III, a Pharaoh of Egypt, 18th Dynasty, speaks of the same thing by mentioning this "pattern" as well.

1 Chr 28:19 19 All this, said David, the LORD made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern. (KJV)

Now you can begin to see why the Egypt had at the very center of its Religion the Spiritual concept of "So Above, So Below". Even the New Testament teaches this:

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." (Mat 6:10 KJV)

As we have seen there is a "pattern" for the birth of mankind; a natural and a spiritual birth as taught by the Constellations above. Unknown to most Christians is that Ancient Religious myths of the nation's Christs, Sungods and Messiahs were generally "allegorized" as having two mothers! Unknown to most Christians is the profoundness of Spiritual knowledge within such a statement. Re-examination of such a religious stance of the Ancients in not only beneficent but necessary if we ever hope to settle the "historicity" problem surrounding the New Testament's depiction of "Jesus Christ". Such a religious belief may go against biological law but it does not go against Spiritual Law of the Cosmos as I have explained. As we study this out you will see that it is not the Ancients who are unintelligent but it is us today who are still immersed in primitive superstition, not the Ancient Spiritual Adepts.

This dual maternal parentage of the Messianic characters of history should not have appeared so outlandish and bizarre had we possessed only a few "keys" necessary to interpret our own Scriptures. This is easy to understand when we consider that it is the Jewish Christ, Jesus himself, the dramatic personified figure of the divine principle in man, who categorically announced this very feature in declaring to Nicodemus that "you must be born again." Here we find our "two births" and by necessity our "two mothers".

Thus life has two births and must of necessity have two mothers. Or, as we have heard so often when reciting that often used passage "a man must be born again", man is born as a natural creature from the Divine Spirit into matter, and born later as a spiritual god when he emerges from his baptism in the water of his physical body (his earthly life and reenters the bosom of his Father as the Soul at his death). Or, finally, he is born first as man, by water (physical birth of the Soul in matter/flesh); and reborn later as god, by fire (repentance and Spiritual enlightenment and awakening).

The body of the physical, natural first man, of the earth, earthy, was symbolically conceived as being composed of the two lower, or coarser of these four elements, earth and water; while air and fire, representing mind and spirit, commingled to constitute the higher, or spiritual man, the second Adam, or the Christ. Jesus' statement to Nicodemus could then as meaningfully have been phrased "born of water and air." Thus we can see a new significance in the statement of John the Baptist, in which he uses three of the four elements to symbolize his meaning when he said that he, the forerunner of the greater Christ, baptizes us with the two lower elements, water and earth (but omitting earth, which should have gone with it); but that the mightier power of spirit that is to supervene after his preparatory work has been accomplished, will baptize us "with the Holy Spirit (air) and with fire." Jesus thus affirms that we have two births, necessitating two mothers, and John adds the corroborating datum that we have two baptisms.

Egypt sees these Divine processes mentioned above, the first and second birth of mankind taught, proclaimed and modeled for all mankind to see in the movement God's Heavens in the beginning of time. The Spiritual Priest and Masters of Egypt were the first to understand that God depicted for all of mankind the first birth on the western side of the zodiac, in the house or womb of the Virgin Mother, in the constellation Virgo, because in the west the Sun, which is the universal symbol of spiritual fire, descended into organic matter in its setting, or incarnation. This is a beautiful picture of God's Energy incarnating in matter which the Ancients understood as the God's Spark of Life/Energy being deposited in matter and flesh of mankind. So man is born as natural man on the west (Virgo/virgin matter), to be regenerated as spiritual man on the east (Pisces). Spirit's descent, in the form of the setting Sun sinking on the west horizon as the Constellation Virgo is on the night's western horizon, makes it man; consequently the Sun's resurrection on the eastern horizon, like the summer sunrise, makes it deity again. This is the death and resurrection of the god in all religions. It is all about God becoming "matter" and infusing this matter with His Consciousness and Divine Mind as the Soul in matter (flesh). This is "the incarnation of Christ" we see in our "incarnational" infancy narratives in the Gospels. It is incarnation and return to spirit. This "Divine Pattern" is cyclical being played out in Cosmic Laws above our heads in the Heavens which is the Sky as seen in the path of the Sun as it moves through the Zodiac yearly. This explains why many of the nation's Christs have but a one year "ministry" as we find with the New Testament Jesus in the Gospel of John. It takes the Sun only one year to repeat it circular cycles through the Heavens, Constellations of the Zodiac and the Equinoxes and Solstices. This same "Divine Pattern" is again replayed for us in the Laws of Nature. Ancient mankind saw the Creator teaching mankind about his "Divineness" not only above his head but under his feet as well. Thus we again better understand the cornerstone of all Egyptian Religion: So Above, So Below. This "Divine Pattern" was told repeatedly in multiple symbolisms many of which are in our Bibles in which we mistakenly interpret as "literal" stories about assumed personages.

Answer for yourself: Now did Jesus, the New Testament Christ, really go down into Egypt as a child? The Ancients again tell this similar story about their Sungods and their "Christs" and frame such an "incarnation of God's Energy into matter" in the form of a story of the "descent of their Messiahs into Egypt and his exodus back to Canaan". Now you can see that more than likely this is again allegory to follow the mythos.

We close this article now but will pickup with the second in this series as we will deal with the "bread that came down from Heaven".

DID JESUS CHRIST HAVE TWO MOTHERS #2?

Before we get into the "meat" of the second article in this series a little background information and teaching is needed.

Ps 19:1-4 1 The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork. 2 Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. 3 There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. 4 Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun, (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What are the Heavens "declaring" to mankind? Since the word "declare" in Hebrew also means "rehearse" then was is being "replayed" above our heads? Are we listening? Have we heard? What is the firmament, or the "visible arch in the Sky" saying to mankind? What are the utterances, promises, and commands being spoken to mankind above our heard? What are the "words" being declared above our heads to which all the world are to hear? How can it be that there is no "speech" or "language" which this voice of the Heavens has not been heard when this whole idea seems so strange to us today?

Having declared that the heavens reveal God's glory, the Psalmist informs us that the heavens declare a message in a language that is understood by all peoples. That once was true but no more. Rome made sure of that in the 3rd through 5th centuries. These starry worlds, as such, do show forth His handiwork, but explain little about the glory of God. The "keys" necessary for interpretation of the Stars in the Heavens is lost today except to few who have safeguarded this arcane Spiritual Wisdom down through history and those like myself who happen to stumble upon it in copious study over the years.

Answer for yourself: How then can the stars be made to speak, in a language everyone can understand? Has it really happened in the history of mankind and we are not aware today for some reason? Can I find these "keys" to interpret what God is saying to mankind today?

Answer for yourself: What is this message that the Creator wrote in the Heavens regarding mankind and his Soul's salvation? Is there a message in the movement of the orbs of the Heavens which I have never heard? Is it possible that this message concerns the salvation of the Soul in mankind? With so many religions today and "paths to salvation" by today's world religions could it just be that the true and ORIGINAL SALVATION message to all mankind is written in the stars and I not know it? How do stars speak to us? Let me say as we advance our studies I have along the way shown the abundant evidence of the forgery of religious passages and Scriptures by Christianity along with many of its cardinal doctrines and dogmas over the twenty years to which I have devoted my life to such studies. When all of this is seen to the degree it has happened it saddens the best of us and sickens our hearts that what we are taught today is a jumbled mess of convoluted doctrines and dogmas "created" over the earliest centuries of the emerging Gentile Roman Christian Church. Of great new is that no man has been able to "forge" the Heavens and the stars and therefore the real "salvation message" that the Creator wrote in the Sky as discerned in the movements of the Sun and the orbs of Heaven. This message as been the "same" since Creation; only lacking on our part is the knowledge to discern the "keys" to its interpretation.

The message of the Sun and the Stars concerning mankind and his intended "salvation" is yet spoken today. It is a simple message given to all nations since time began but unfortunately a "silent" message that goes unheard by almost all mankind today since men have not been taught to "read the Book of God in the Sky". The answer to the above enigma is quite evident. Pictures speak in all dialects. They speak a universal language, to all peoples everywhere. Somewhere in the earliest ages of human existence the visible stars were once named. Certain ones were arranged into groups by someone thoroughly familiar with the laws of astronomy. Those names and groupings were at the same time included in certain figures, natural or imaginary, but intensely symbolic and significant. The picture above is a mosaic of the Zodiac discovered in the floor of a Jewish Synagogue. In fact archeology has located a bunch of these in Israel today. Imagine that; zodiac in the floor of Jewish synagogues. This should make you mind wonder as to why this was thought so important by Judaism to include it in the very architecture of their places of study and prayer. Today we know these grouping of stars as Constellations. Twelve constellations make up the Zodiac. These major star groupings form a belt which circle the sky close to the plane of the earth's orbit around the sun. Modern atlases list them in the following order: Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius and Pisces.

It is well known that the ancient races drew charts of these Zodiacal Signs, that ancient astrology was actually the father of astronomy. Astronomers sometimes denounce the Zodiac as unnatural and confusing, yet they have never been able to brush it aside or substitute anything better or more convenient in its place. The Signs of the Zodiac are a part of the common universal language of astronomical science. The Zodiac is found in religious faiths the world over. Astrology is based upon it. The Bible is replete with it. The Companion Bible tells us that all the verbs in the second half of Psalm 19 are of an astronomical nature.

Answer for yourself: Why would that be? What does this possibly indicate? When your studies advance in this area of study you will come to see that the written words of Scripture parallel the words written in the Heavens and which are preserved "message" hidden in the Signs of the Zodiac. But we are not quite ready for that right now but it won't be long.

When we begin to take notice of such things we should being to think that the Ancient Spiritual Masters understood that the Heavens are supposed to speak to mankind, to declare insights, reveal knowledge and that no language even exists that does not contain the voice of the heavens. The Ancient Spiritual Master of Egypt, for example, taught that we, mankind, can have a conversation with the Eternal Being of the Universe through the motions of the heavens. Think on that for a second! The "pattern" for mankind, his birth, life, death, and rebirth is taught by the Zodiac but you have most likely never heard it or saw in in the night sky when you look above in the night sky. But not only that the "pattern" for his spiritual development of his Soul is there as well. Not only on a "literal-physical" level did man learn his fate by living and dying but the Creator's intended "path" and "pattern" for his invisible Souls life-cycle in this physical plane of existence was written above his head in the nigh sky; man is without excuse. The Bible, when understood correctly, speaks clearly about the purpose of the Sun, moon and stars." The Bible begins to declare this message right in the beginning of the book. I open to Genesis 1:14-18.

And God said, let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs and for seasons and for days and years: And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so. And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also. And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth and to rule over the day and over the night and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good.

MAZZAROTH: THE TWELVE SIGNS OF THE ZODIAC

In Job, God asked his humble servant a series of questions involving the wondrous miracles performed. In Job 38:31-33, God asks, "Can you bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades or loose the bonds of Orion? Can you bring forth the Mazzaroth in their seasons? Or can you guide Arcturus with his sons? Do you know the principles of the heavens? Can you set their dominion over the earth?"

Answer for yourself: What is God telling Job?

God is proclaiming that there are principles in the heavens and that they govern life on earth (physical and spiritual). Furthermore, God is responsible for bringing forth the Mazzaroth in their seasons.

Answer for yourself: What is the "Mazzaroth"?

Most Bibles avoid translating this sacred word, Mazzaroth, because it literally means "the twelve signs of the zodiac" in Hebrew. So, God created the zodiac and brings each of the 12 signs or Houses of the Zodiac and their "message" forth in their rightful seasons. This zodiac is like a "book" in the Sky whose pages turn "monthly". The "message of the Zodiac" repeats yearly; thus the "rehearsal" we saw above. The "message of God" is being repeated monthly and yearly since the beginning of time. God goes on to explain to Job that the heavenly constellations, like the Pleiades and Orion, have influences that can be unleashed upon the created order.

We don't have to be afraid of signs from the heavens; especially when we learn that God speaks through these signs of the Zodiac to you and me and to all mankind.

In Jeremiah 10:2 it says, "…do not be dismayed by signs from heaven." We need to be open to the realization of messages in the Heavens. The problem is that few of us possess the Ancient "keys" to understand God's "blackboard" in the Sky and the messages He writes upon it and declares to all mankind.

Answer for yourself: What types of messages are we to learn from the Sky? Well, there are many. I could begin with the spiritual message behind the Equinoxes and Solstices, the true salvation message of God hidden in the Biblical Festivals, but that is not our focus right now. Understand that these Equinoxes and Solstices, the seasons mentioned in Genesis above, are the foundation stones for almost all world religions today but our focus is on one in this article. Let me elaborate. We are concerned in these articles with the two births of mankind; in particular the Descent of the Soul, the Christ into matter as the mediator between man and God.

The Hebrew word for "light" used when God says, "The sun, moon and stars were created for giving light on the earth," is "aur". The Hebrew writers were well versed in the sacred language of archetypes. I highly recommend that you stop right now and read the article on "archetypes" and come to fully understand the concept for this is what we are dealing with in the Heavens "speaking to us". The Ancients, familiar with the idea of "archetypes", were able to contemplate Divine Heavenly Truth through symbol as each letter of their alphabet held an archetypal meaning:

- "Aleph", the beginning letter of aur symbolizes unthinkable vibration, the sacred spirit of life, infinite potential and eternal possibility.
- "Vav", the middle letter, symbolizes the process of divine fertilization emanating from the creative void.
- "Raysh", the final letter, symbolizes the hidden movement of cosmic possibility as creation.

Answer for yourself: What is being said here?

Hidden in the letters of Hebrew "light" we discover its deeper meaning, the infinite potential of the sacred Spirit fertilizing creation. Again we see that this teaches us that God humbled himself when He limited and confined Himself to matter through the agency of His Christ:

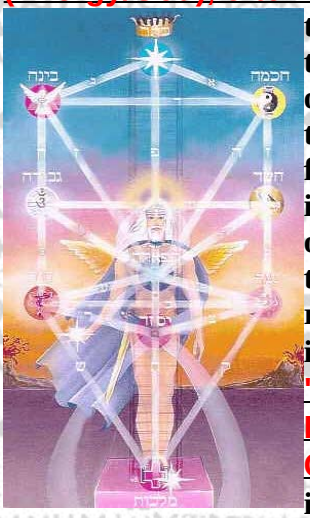
Phil 2:5-7 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: (KJV)

Notice the word "likeness".

Strong's Concordance:



3667 homoioma (hom-oy'-o-mah); from 3666; a form; abstractly, resemblance: KJV-- made like to, likeness, shape, similitude.

In this verse we find the core of all religious truth; that all things consist of God in one way or the other.

Speaking of the "Father God"

Col 1:15-17 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him (God-Father) were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

All things that exist, visible and invisible are "manifestations" of God; nothing exists that is not fully God in one way or the other. The first line of the Bible says, "In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth." When you break it down into archetypal Hebrew it means the first fruits of the spirit aspiring to express eternity through a fountain of divine wisdom were the creation of the celestial dimensions and the manifest world. Now that casts a whole new light on Biblical translation. The Hebrew word for astrologer is "ashaph" which breaks down to the spirit communicates through the sacred flames. This "sacred flame" (Energy/God), often called a "spark" by the Ancients found a home in physical matter; in particular as the Soul (Divine Consciousness) in the flesh of mankind. Egyptian "Gnosticism", and even the Jewish Kabbalah teaches that a Divine Spark of Celestial Energy (God) has fallen into our physical world or matter. This Divine Spark of Cosmic Intelligent Energy descended the ladder of Heaven into matter. For our purposes we focus on the Soul and its descent from the invisible realm to the visible realm in mankind where it is entrapped in matter; ie., the flesh of mankind. Once birthed in it new home of "flesh" the Ancients the world over taught that this Soul is now "dead" while the flesh of mankind lives. Consequently the Soul must be awakened by a divine aspect or counterpart of the self so that it can be raised and reintegrated with the divine sphere. These "Divine Sparks" become enmeshed in the lower worlds and within them is the desire to return to the Infinite God. These "sparks are raised back to God when humanity conforms its behavior to the Divine Laws of God operating the Cosmos and adheres to the Commandments of God and when individuals discover the "roots" of their own Souls. Thus the awesome importance of the 42 Negative Confessions of Egyptian Religion and the Torah of Judaism. They are the same and it is from Egypt that Moses will learn of these mitzvoth given to all mankind by the Creator. Sadly, my birth religion, Christianity, prides itself on not being under these "Laws".

Rom 10:4 4 For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. (KJV)

Rom 6:14 14 For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace. (KJV)

Now past this short introduction we continue to look at these "two births" of mankind that is taught in the Heavens and in the Constellations Virgo and Pisces. We continue from the first article in this series in which we saw that the Ancients taught that mankind had two births, a "natural" birth and a "spiritual" birth and that these were taught in the message declared by the Constellations Virgo and Pisces. We saw that the Ancient Spiritual Masters understood that the path of the Sun through the Houses of Virgo and Pisces was speaking and declaring to mankind, as Psalm 19 said, of the necessity of mankind's two births; one natural birth and one Spiritual birth. We saw how this was connected with the idea that man "must be born again"; a birth of "water" (the Water Mother of Virgo) and a birth of "fire" (the "Fish Mother" of Pisces). We saw in the earlier article that the Descent of God into matter was described by the Heavens (the Constellation Virgo) as the natural birth of God (in particular...mankind) in the watery womb of matter. We saw likewise in the earlier article that God also descended into matter in the form of Heavenly fire. We saw that this was understood by the Ancients as the Descent of the Soul, the Karest/Christ come to tabernacle in the flesh of mankind. We saw that it is this second birth, the spiritual birth of mankind, was declared by the Constellation of Pisces and it is in this "being born again" where we find the awakening of "the Christ" within mankind. This refers to the awakening of Christ Consciousness and the ascent of the Christ Nature in oneself in order that the Christ Consciousness awakened within mankind can operate in through a physical body.

The Ancient Sages taught that this "Divine Spark", in the guise of individual men, is unaware of its true origins, but nevertheless possesses an unconscious desire to return to its divine home. The Divine Spark thereby constitutes the individual's essential but forgotten reality. The Gnostics held that the material, empirical, human being is essentially an illusion that envelops, indeed imprisons, the inner, true self. It is only by acquiring knowledge or "memory" (in the Platonic sense of anamnesis) of this inner self that the Gnostic devotee can free himself from this hostile world and achieve ultimate spiritual fulfillment and enlightenment of his true condition and true salvation. While the Kabbalists held a similar view regarding the "sparks," their Jewish commitment to the world's essential goodness led them to transform the "sparks doctrine" into a vehicle for world-redemption. For the Gnostics, knowledge (gnosis) is not achieved through a purely cognitive procedure. Gnostic knowledge is first and foremost knowledge of the heart; it is an experience of spiritual regeneration, of immediate salvation. It is in essence, the awakening of the long-dormant inner, divine self. Meditation, debate, and reflection are all useful in preparing the intellect, but the intervention of a divine luminous power creating a profound emotional experience is necessary to create the image of the "essential man" which is of the same essence as the divine world. This awakening occurs, according to the Kabbalists, only through a person's attaining a deep, abiding, emotional/spiritual knowledge of his true self, and is achievable only when an "arousal from above" compliments man's own "arousal from below."

What I have just described to you is mankind's necessity of "two births" which the Ancients came to see and understand by looking intently at the movement of God's Sun through the Zodiac. They heard the message of the Heavens. The plan for mankind's salvation was first seen and understood from examining the movement of God's Energy, the Sun, a symbol for God as it moved through God's own Heavens. All religions begin with Astrotheology. Every Bible and Holy Book has its beginning and origin in Astronomy and Astrology. That may shock the reader but grasp the importance of the fact that all theology in the beginning of the human race and its intelligent ascent as a species began by interpreting the Heavens; the abode of God. The stars were understood as speaking to man a "Heavenly Message" as we learned above from Psalm 19. Concerning the Soul in mankind the Ancient Spiritual Sages came to understand that mankind needed to have two births that necessitated 2 mothers and they saw this pictured for them by the Sun being born in Virgo and Pisces as described in the first article. Mankind, aided by the indwelling Christ, the illuminator within, is to have two births and two mothers. This is what the Gnostics taught as well; both Jewish and Gentile Gnostics.

Answer for yourself: Seeing this portrayed in the Heavens and in the Zodiac what should we be thinking might possibly be true?

The Zodiac was mankind's first Bible to teach him about the Descent of the Soul into living mankind and the Divine plan and "pattern" for its Spiritual Maturation in the flesh of mankind. Once the reader comes to see and fully understand this "Heavenly message" then all aberrant world religions and their alternate "salvation messages" are easily seen as nothing more than deviant teachings that have strayed from God true message of mankind's salvation written in the stars. Once this "Divine Message" is both declared and understood from Heaven then we can beat our swords into plowshares and be thankful that there is no longer room for religious bickering, wars, and bloodshed between Christianity, Judaism, and Islam about "who is right". Only God is right and the Heavens have spoken the "same theology" since the beginning of time. Of these 3 religions the "enlightened reader" will come to see that Judaism is the more correct religion of the 3 and it has a lot in common today with its parent religion; that of course being Egyptian Religion. The "path of the Soul" birth into matter, its life and maturation, its release at the body's death, and its rebirth was all transcribed by the Creator in the Sky and the Ancient sages of antiquity came to see this "pattern" in the Sky. It is beyond question that the great ancient design of the zodiac is a wondrously conceived chart aimed to depict the structure of the Logos, "the Christ", the pattern or creative evolution, the essential constitution of the Universe and the course of the current of life in the Cosmos, and by analogy in man the microcosmic replica of the macrocosm.

In short, the round of the zodiac, the famous horoscope of twelve signs, exist above us as a omni-directional, cinema-like, projection of the inherent twelve-fold, plastic matrix that sub-divides that organic computer referred to as the "Collective Consciousness." As the twelve disciples of Jesus represent aspects of his own consciousness, so do the twelve celestial signs of the zodiac, likewise, represent the twelve archetypal facets of our own being.

As we all know science began with the stars, and mankind discovered in them the dominants of the unconscious, the "gods," as well as the curious psychological qualities of the Zodiac: a complete projected theory of human character – Carl Jung

Almost infinite nuances of significance have been adumbrated in those twelve signs or houses of the zodiac and the thirty-six other constellations, as well as in the pictorializations which ancient wisdom and an ingenuity born of a wise understanding of the deeper truth of life conceived and drew around those star clusters in the heavens. The uranograph, or chart of the skies, was incontestably the first of all Bibles, pictorially edited. Not quite simply and patently, but still most luminously for the initiated who held the hidden "keys" to the symbolic lexicon of ancient writing, it can be affirmed that all Bibles are but amplifications and elaborations of the original volume of ideography that was first written on the open slate of the sky, then charted in the zodiac and the planispheres carved on the ceilings of ancient temples and later transferred to earth and inscribed in scrolls, tablets and parchments.

Commonly known as the Zodiac of Dendera, the picture is but one example from among many of Egyptian Zodiacs; the Dendera Zodiac is found on the Temple Roof at Dendera. Man, adjured the old Scriptures, was to fashion his new body of spiritual glory "after the pattern for his Spiritual Development as taught from the heavens," the frame of the heavenly or zodiacal man, the primal Adam Kadmon. And a cryptic graph of the nature and history of this celestial Personage was sketched by the enlightened Sages in the configurated star groups. The Adam Kadmon is the symbol of Primordial Man, the first being to emerge with the creation of the cosmos is common to a number of religious and philosophical traditions. Many Ancient Religions describe this spiritual concept as the primal man who is composed of the very elements which were to become the world. This "gigantic divine being" is both infinitely far and and at the same time deposited near the innermost recesses of the human heart. Indeed, in many of these Ancient Religious traditions this the Primordial Man is identified both with the entire Universe and the Soul or essence of all things. Simply said mankind requires a "second birth" as taught by the Constellation Pisces in order that he can obtain the goal of his earthly carnation; that being his evolution into "the Christ" incarnated in matter (flesh). We, as human kind are to live out the stories we read of the nation's Christs and for the Christian the "Jesus Story " is to be our living experience in this physical realm in which we temporarily inhabit.

Some more thoughts on the Zodiac are warranted. The word "zodiac" comes from the Greek word "zodion", meaning a small animal zootype, or living symbol of the microcosmic life of man, who is indeed made in the image and likeness of the Divine Man pictured in the cosmic heavens as seen above. Man's little physical body is a miniature copy of the universal body of God; for after all we are made in the "image of this God". It stretches our minds to grasp the concept that the eternal frame of cosmic Man, the goal of our fleshly existence, was outlined in the scroll of the skies, the solar systems and galaxies being symbolic representation of the very living cell clusters in his immeasurable organism. Wow.

Interestingly, a similar image is found in Plutarch who relates that the entirety of the heavens is arranged in the form of a macroanthropos, a colossal human being who is conceived as a model for the human world.

The Primordial Man is also an important symbol in Gnosticism. The Gnostics inferred from the verse in Genesis "Let us make man in our own image" that the first earthly man was created on the model of a cosmic Adam on high. In the Nag Hammadi text, the Apocryphon of John, we learn that this anthropos is the first creation of "knowledge and Perfect Intellect" and the first luminary of the heavens. This Anthropos becomes the heavenly model through which the demiurge forges an earthly Adam (mankind).

In the Kabbalah, the Primordial Man is spoken of as Adam Kadmon, and, in the Lurianic Kabbalah this symbol becomes a pivotal notion linking God, Man, and the World. Adam Kadmon, as the first being to emerge from the infinite Godhead, Ein-sof, is essentially indistinguishable from the deity, yet at the same time his body is said to both emanate and constitute the world. Man, having been created in God's image, is said by the Kabbalists to be comprised of the very same cosmic elements, the Sefirot, which comprise the "body" of Adam Kadmon. The symbol of Adam Kadmon expresses the idea that the cosmos itself has both a soul and body very much like that of man.

In 1928, Israeli farmers in Beth Alpha, located at the base of Mount Gilboa in the Valley of Jezreel, were digging an irrigation ditch when they unearthed a brightly colored mosaic chip. A Hebrew inscription on the piece was cause for consultation with Professor Eliezer Sukenik of the Hebrew University, who immediately ordered an archaeological dig. This led to the discovery of the remains of a fifth century synagogue's pillars and walls. The greatest surprise came when they unearthed an almost completely intact zodiac mosaic floor inside the synagogue. The elegant floor of warmly colored stones contains an instantly recognizable image of the twelve signs. The Greek Sun god Helios is the largest image, appearing in the center of the horoscope wheel. He's crowned and is shown inside his chariot surrounded by stars and a crescent Moon. Four horses appear with him, and his chariot has multi-colored wheels. Examples of the twelve zodiac signs with Helios in his sun chariot surrounded by angels have been discovered in seven ancient synagogues in Israel. This should make us wonder at what lies at the very heart of Biblical Judaism. We need only ask Moses.

Moses (c.1200-1100 B.C.), as Pharaoh's adopted son, was also an astrologer. He correlated the attributes of the twelve signs to the twelve tribes of Israel, then took the people from the tabernacle in the wilderness on their pilgrimage, lined up by zodiacal order. Rabbinical tradition asserts that the signs of the zodiac have represented the twelve tribes since antiquity. Sets of twelve from the Bible are obvious candidates for linkage; these include the Hebrew tribes, the twelve Prophets and the twelve Apostles. We see the influence of the Zodiac in Moses' life where he arranged the Israelites around the Ark in their encampment, not only circularly but in sets of three with regard to compass direction. Ancient gods also tend to have existed in sets of twelve and their several personal attributes often find a nice fit in the zodiac.

Answer for yourself: Seeing that the Jews and Judaism connected the Zodiac with their religion as did Ancient Egypt and other nations then is it not evident that these Ancient Spiritual people understood that the Cosmos, the Zodiac, and the Stars had a Spiritual message for mankind? It should would appear so.

Having understood the above introduction to the second article then let us continue to examine Biblical passages in light of this new found knowledge and see just what we can find lurking behind the traditional "literal-historical" interpretation of the New Testament.

Remembering the Constellations Virgo and Pisces (symbolic of mankind's two births), we find an immediate link between the symbol of bread in connection with both Virgo and Pisces. Pisces is the house of the Fishes by name (2 fishes), but it is not commonly known that Virgo in astrological symbology was the house of Bread. This is indicated by several items of ancient typology. Many centuries ago in the Precession of the Equinoxes, the end of the year was marked by the position of the great Dog-Star Sirius, mighty celestial symbol of the divinity in man.

Answer for yourself: So what did the helical rising of the Dog-Star Sirius symbolize? It symbolized the increasing of consciousness from one reality or frequency - to another (natural to spiritual). Could we see in this, the helical rising of Sothis, Sirius, in Egypt just prior to the flooding of the Nile the very symbol and image of mankind's "second birth" and "second illumination" of mankind and his Soul? Is Sirius, the herald star of the Nile's annual innudation and the virtual salvation of Egypt a spiritual symbol for mankind's salvation tied to his spiritual awakening of his Soul, and his "second birth"? Is this the same thought as the "the Christ being formed in you" which Paul spoke? Yes. Remember, first comes the "natural" then the "spiritual". God is again speaking from heaven about mankind's salvation.

Unknown to most Christians is the almost endless intimations of vital significance hidden in the Constellations and their configurations that carry with them the esoteric import of the Scriptures we read in our Bibles. Equally unknown to most Christians is the methodology of the archaic science which is in truth the "lost key to the Scriptures". What we find when we study is the fact that Biblical theology rests more completely on Astrological Symbology than has been discerned in any age since the ancient day. Acquisition of these "lost keys" to Scriptural interpretation is necessary if one hopes to arrive at the proper interpretation of the Scriptures they read and in so doing obtain their true meaning. This is crucial when reading the New Testament as it is basically Astrological symbology whereby Divine Metaphysical Truths are personified and presented in anthropomorphic schemes to the reader. Thus we have a gold mine behind our "Jesus Story" and we never know it. Now we have to pay close attention. Precisely at midnight of December 24, the Winter Solstice, Sirius stood on the meridian line from the zenith to Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? In and of itself it is not. But watch this.

At the same moment there arose on the eastern horizon the constellation of the Virgin (Virgo), bearing in her left arm the Christ child, symbol of the Christhood coming to function in man, symbolized by the great star Spica (Latin, a head, or "spike" of wheat), symbol of that same divinity coming as celestial food for man. In Virgo the soul and the body are blended and of supreme importance to each other; the mother protects the germ of the Christ life; matter guards, cherishes and nurtures the hidden soul until its awakening in the flesh of mankind (Pisces).

"The choice of this particular date is cosmic in its implications, and not unwittingly, we can be sure, did the wise men of earlier times make these momentous decisions. Annie Besant tells us that: "He (the Christ) is always born spiritually at the winter solstice, after the shortest day in the year, at the midnight of the 24th December when the sign Virgo is rising above the horizon; born as this Sign is rising, he is born always of a virgin, and she remains a virgin after she has given birth to her Sun-child as the celestial Virgo remains unchanged and unsullied when the Sun comes forth from her in the Heavens. Weak, feeble as an infant is he, born when the days are shortest and the nights are longest..." (Annie Besant,Esoteric Christianity, p. 157).

"At the time of the birth of Christ, Sirius, the Star in the East, was on the meridian line, Orion, called "The Three Kings" by oriental astronomers, was in proximity; therefore the constellation Virgo, the Virgin, was rising in the east, and the line of the ecliptic, of the equator and of the horizon all met in that constellation. It is interesting also to note that the brightest and largest star in the constellation Virgo is called Spica; it is to be found in the "ear of corn" (sign of fertility) which the Virgin holds. Bethlehem means the "house of bread," and there is therefore an obvious connection between these two words. This constellation is also composed of three stars in the shape of a cup. This is the true Holy Grail, that which contains the life blood, the repository of the sacred and the holy, and that which conceals divinity. These are astronomical facts. The interpretation of the symbolism attached from ancient days to these constellations is as old as religion itself. Whence came the signs, and how the meanings and symbols associated with them came into being, is lost in the night of time. They have existed in men's minds and thoughts and writings for thousands of years, and are our joint heritage today. The ancient zodiac of Denderah (antedating Christianity by several thousand years) is ample proof of this. In the sun's journey around the zodiac, this "Man of the Heavens" eventually arrives at Pisces; this sign is exactly opposite the sign Virgo, and is the sign of all world Saviors. We have already seen that the age of Christianity is the Piscean Age, and Christ came to the Holy Land when our sun transited into that sign. Therefore that which was started and had its being in Virgo (the birth of the Christ Child) is consummated in Pisces when that Christ Child, having attained maturity, comes forth as the world Savior" (Alice Bailey, Bethlehem to Calvary, p. 64).

Of course Alice Bailey speaks not of a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus Christ in Israel in the first century; rather, she speaks of the awakening of "the Christ" in the whole of mankind whereby the whole human race can assume its rightful position as "saviors" of the world in which we have been born.

"One other astronomical fact is of interest in this connection. Closely associated with the constellation Virgo, and to be found in the same section of the Heavens, are three other constellations, and in these three there is portrayed for us symbolically the story of the Child which shall be born, suffer and die and come again. There is the group of stars called Coma Berenice, the Woman with the Child. There is Centaurus, the Centaur, and Boötes (the shepherd), whose name in the Hebrew language means the "Coming One."

Answer for yourself: What's coming? Could the Constellation Bootes be a picture and symbol indicative of the "coming of the Christ" and his Descent into water mother, the cosmic womb of matter? Could this "change of consciousness" intended for all mankind which has experienced only a "natural birth" as symbolized as we saw in the rising of Sirius and its helical rising at the same time as Virgo connected, all in one message, teaches mankind that "the Christ" is to descend into the water mother, to descend into the womb of matter where he can experience his awakening in the hearts of mankind? Could this be a prophecy fulfilled that lies behind the allegory of the "fish mother" of Pisces? Could the Constellation of Bootes be teaching us that into the womb of the Cosmos, into the water mother Virgo, into the womb of natural birth comes the Sun (personified as the Son/Soul/Christ) which is symbolic of the Energy of the Cosmos (the Divine Spark in mankind)? Is this Energy of the Cosmos understood as the "Divine Spark" in the form of "the Soul/the Christ" who descends into all matter and the flesh of mankind? Is this the Descent of the Soul into the animal kingdom thus separating man from animal due to this higher consciousness? I think it is getting obvious by now.

Answer for yourself: Why a cenatur? What has a centaur have to do with "the Christ" and his coming? The centaur, ever the symbol of humanity in the ancient mythologies, reminds that man is an animal, plus a god, and therefore a human being with dual natures. We have before us a perfect example of what happens when "the Christ" descends into matter; the animal in which "the Christ" descends is endowed with a higher consciousness than the normal animal kingdom whereby mankind is both "animal" and now "Divine". Alice Bailey states: "Then He Who shall come looms over them all, over-shadowing them, pointing to the fulfillment which shall come through birth and human incarnation. Truly the picture book of the heavens holds eternal truth for those who have eyes to see and the intuition developed rightly to interpret. Prophecy is not confined to the Bible, but has ever been held before men's eyes in the vault of heaven" (Alice Bailey, From Bethlehem to Calvary, chapter 2).

Answer for yourself: What is the Constellations and the Stars teaching man in their message to mankind? Have you heard it?

Simply man is born "naturally" needing a "second birth". It is intended for the whole of mankind to travel from Virgo to Pisces. Man is born slightly higher than animals and has an animal nature. The Ancients taught that there is a mineral kingdom, a vegetable kingdom, and an animal kingdom. What separated man from animals is the Descent of the Soul that gives man his intellect. Thus we see that a centaur is a fitting example in the Heavens to teach mankind that although an animal the Descent of the Soul lifts him above the animal kingdom and he is then both "natural" and "Divine".

Let us reexamine Virgo for a second. It must ever be remembered that the Gospels of John states:

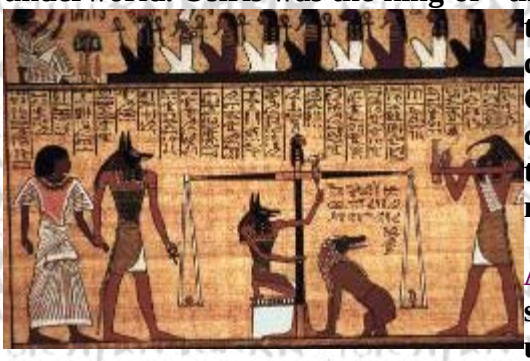
John 6:58 58 This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever. (KJV)

So typology represented "the Christ", seen as Virgo holding "celestial wheat", as coming in the form of the bread from Heaven, the babe Christ, and as food for man in the form of Heavenly wheat. John speaks of the Christ principles being "food" for mankind. Then we see in the Gospels that Jesus broke a loaf into fragments and gave to his disciples, saying that it was his body, broken for them. God feeds the natural man with His Christ and its evolution within the flesh of mankind.

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What did we just see?

We now have Virgo established as the HOUSE of Bread and Pisces as the HOUSE of Fish. But are not done for we are yet missing important information. God is feeding mankind the manna from Heaven through His Christ in us.



Answer for yourself: What is hidden behind the ideas of "Houses" in relation to the Signs of the Zodiac?

They are, as at first, the two states of matter (invisible - undifferentiated potential; visible - realized potential, physical existence) but now we need to notice the immediate reference to the life of man on earth. These "two houses" are in the final stage of the meaning man's body itself, which consists of matter in both its invisible and its visible forms. For man has a natural body (Virgo - natural birth) and a spiritual body (Pisces - spiritual birth). Man's body itself houses the two mothers. The body is this double house of both Bread and of Fish.

And the next parallel is seen when it is considered that this physical body is for the Soul the HOUSE of death and in its regenerative phase, the HOUSE of rebirth. It is the house into which the Spirit descends to its partial obscuration in the darkness of the grave of matter, into the night of death, or incarnation, out of which it is to arise in a new birth or resurrection (second birth, "born again" on the opposite side of the cycle).

Answer for yourself: Why is the Egyptian Bible called "the Book of the Dead"? How can "dead people" read it? Does it not appear to you that people need to read their Bibles while they are "alive"? How could a book whose title read The Coming Forth By Day be at the same time named the Book of the Dead?

Something is amiss here. Yet the book dealt mainly with the great trial of the soul of the deceased in the Hall of Judgment, the Hall of Osiris; and Osiris was the Lord of Amenta, the realm of the dead, the dark underworld. Osiris was the king of "those in their graves". The Book of the Dead is a book about the typical Christian judgment, enacted in the world of Souls following the demise of the body. Yet its original title was The Day of Manifestation. One knew that the Greeks had derived most of their profoundest conceptions from the Egyptians. One has to wonder if the figurative use of the word "death" in the title Book of the Dead is based on some hidden meaning found in the pages of the Book of the Dead. It is.

Answer for yourself: Could it be possible that all mediaeval and modern scholarship had missed the fundamental meaning of the word "death" as used in Scriptures by failure to catch some hidden Ancient symbolism? What an understatement. Could it be that some mighty truth lurked undiscovered under the metaphor of the word "death"?

What we find upon our studies is that Christianity has totally misunderstood their Scriptures and led untold billions astray from Divine Truth. Not only has Christianity totally misunderstood its own Christ, atonement, Law, the salvation message of God but almost unbelievably Christianity has lost the "keys" necessary to correctly interpret the word "death" as it applies to the Soul in their own Scriptures. With overwhelming certainty had come the perception that when the ancient writers of sacred books of religion spoke of "death" they referred to our present life on earth in these bodies of flesh! When the Soul descended into matter it was said to "have died". This is the often mistunderstood doctrine of the "crucifixion of Christ"; not on a old rugged tree but in dense matter. And when these Ancient Spiritual Masters spoke of "the dead", they again referred to us, here and now, alive as we seem to be!

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Obviously those to whom Paul was speaking were alive. There we have our answer right before us all the time. And by the terms grave, tomb, coffin, sepulchre, mummy-case, out of which we would be resurrected they meant these living bodies of ours! In the Ancient Divine Wisdom and theology, "to die" was for the Soul to incarnate in bodies on earth. If you take a second to reflect it can be found that the two words "womb" and "tomb" are from the same stem and convey the same connotation. Baptism in water is likened to a "new birth" because we enter into a "watery tomb" where human life, in the natural sense, cannot survive. He who enters life by way of the womb has entered the tomb of living death. In the eye of the Ancient Spiritual sages, death was to live the kind of life in the flesh that we are living here. In reality, as calm reflection then for the first time clearly indicated, for the soul there is no such thing as death, in the sense of total destruction, for the soul is indestructible. For if death could be at any time only a matter of relative intensity or degree of life, and this would be dependent upon the character and materiality of the embodiment in which it might find itself functioning at different stages of its growth. And one saw then that our life here fitly deserved the designation of death because it was the most sluggish, inert and restricted sphere of existence in which the Soul was ever called upon to become embodied and imprisoned. This type of life was the profoundest "death" the Soul was ever subjected to, as an individual entity! It could go no lower, be restricted no more completely, than it was here in the flesh of mankind. It should come to you as an astonishing realization in this connection, that we could never be any more "dead" than we are now in our mortal habitat. We are truly in the very jaws of "death", in the "valley of the shadow of death", and we are therefore the "dead" of all the ancient philosophical books. Thus the Egyptian Bible was commonly called "the Book of the Dead" as it prepared living Souls for their release from this body of death.

Answer for yourself: Is it possible that all religions have been designed as instruction and guidance for "those in their graves" of earth-life, and all its sacred books were meant to be a light for us, "the dead", in the dark underworld of Hades, Sheol, Amenta (which refers to the arena we live while alive in the flesh)? But long ago was lost the knowledge that such instruction was for us, that we were "the dead" for whom all religious systems were devised, and for whose resurrection out of the tomb of the physical body the whole end and aim of religion was conceived.

Answer for yourself: Since Christianity has mistakenly interpreted the word "death" then does this mean that Christianity's teaching of a physical bodily resurrection is incorrect as well? Yes.

The first consequence of such a tragic rejection of Ancient Egyptian Religion and Ancient Spiritual Wisdom connected to the true meaning of the word "death" as used in Ancient Spiritual writings and teachings for thousands of years is the certainty that the often mentioned "resurrection" in the New Testament could not signify the mere raising of decaying physical bodies from cemeteries!

Answer for yourself: What then is the resurrection to which we should look?

The "true resurrection" refers to the re-arising of the buried Soul from out its physical prison, its rending at last of the fleshly veil of the temple, its bursting the bars of death in the body, which was the only grave, sepulchre, tomb or sarcophagus that the wise Ancients ever had in view in the proclamation of their great Easter message!

Answer for yourself: What should we see here? The undeniable fact that the whole framework of Divine, Religious Revelation given to mankind by the Creator, spoken from the Heavens above by the Sun, stars, and Constellations, the abode of God, from the beginning of mankind's existence is to be constructed of spiritual, not of historical or "literal-physical" interpretation as Christianity has done with its "literalization" of "the Christ". This "re-arising" of the Soul is prefigured in its "awakening" while imprisoned in this body of death whereby it can then exert its Heavenly influence to sanctify the animal nature of our bodies. This is the purpose of "the Christ" and His "Descent into matter, the flesh of mankind". Such awakening is prophetic of the final awakening of the Soul and its release from "the dead"; its entrapment in the flesh of mankind.

The Gospel narrative was, as taught from the beginning of time and as seen in the Sky and the Heavens, nothing more than a series of Spiritual Allegories taken from the personification of the path of the Sun through the Houses of the Zodiac as Spiritual sages followed and interpreted the path of the Sun (symbolic for the Intelligent Energy of the Universe we call God). This path of the Sun, the symbol for God, as it moves through the Heavens, when interpreted correctly, is to be indicative of a mystical understanding of the synonymous path, "pattern", and direction for the Soul's maturation and development while it resides in this "matter/body of death"! The Sun and the Cosmos was designed by the Creator to teach mankind of his Soul and in so doing depicts the nature of our own personal soul-life, the history of everyman's experience in the world of flesh and matter, or what just so happens to be the "realm of the dead". Not a single item of Ancient Philosophy, Ancient Spiritual Wisdom, not a statement anywhere in Ancient Scriptures or Texts, controverts this conclusion in the least degree; whereas every new bit of testimony fortified verifies this Metaphysical truth and its undeniably. This is the hidden revelation that Rome stole from the world for within it is the intended righteous conduct of the Soul and the sanctification of the temple of the Soul, the fleshy body. Rome lived by a philosophy that is contradicted by the very Sun they worshipped; that is "might makes right". The message of the stars refutes this and in light of such Ancient Wisdom those who possess it can stand the assault of any theologian or scholar who tries to challenge or refute it. This understanding of "the Soul" and the path for its spiritual maturation existed in the world until the rise of the Mighty Roman Empire in the 3rd through the 5th century. After burning down the libraries of the world and murdering millions of people who trusted in this spiritual knowledge given mankind in the beginning of its existence the earth was plunged into darkness the depths of which is yet felt today.

A significant passage from the Book of the Dead recites: "Who cometh forth from the dusk, and whose birth is in the house of death"--referring to the incarnating Soul. In a spiritual sense the soul "dies" on entering the body in incarnation, but has a new birth in it as it later awakens "spiritually" and even later "resurrects" from the body at its demise. The body is therefore the house of the Soul's death and rebirth, or the place of the Soul's/Christ's crucifixion and resurrection. This is not "literal" unless you experience it in your life because God never intended it to be limited to only one person as Rome would have us believe. And the Egyptians had a name for the body as the point of these transformations, which carry the central meaning of all theologies. This name now rises out of the dim mists of ancient Egyptian books to enlighten all modern Bible comprehension. This city of the body, where the sun of soul sank to its death on the cross of matter, to re-arise in a new birth, was called the city of the sun, or in Greek, Heliopolis, but in the Egyptian, ANU.

There is a world of revelation behind the Egyptian word "ANU" that we save for the last article in this series.

DID JESUS CHRIST HAVE TWO MOTHERS #3?

We ended the second article in this series with a "bang" when exposing how Christianity has misunderstood their own Scriptures over 1,800 years at present and how it has affected a multitude of cherished Christian doctrines passed off onto the world as supposedly necessary for the salvation of mankind. We looked at how Christianity has misunderstood the words "death" and "resurrection" in their own holy book. We explained why Egypt called its own Bible "the Book of the Dead". All of this mind you is tied to the "two births of mankind" and the operation of "the Christ" and his incarnation in the flesh of mankind. We ended with the following paragraph which is repeated here as a link between article 2 and 3.

A significant passage from the Book of the Dead recites: "Who cometh forth from the dusk, and whose birth is in the house of death"--referring to the incarnating Soul. In a spiritual sense the Soul "dies" on entering the body in incarnation, but has a new birth in it as it later resurrects from it at the demise of the body. The body is therefore the house of his death and rebirth, or the place of the Soul's/Christ's crucifixion and resurrection. later these ideas will be "literalized", "carnalized", and "historicized" in transforming the "Christ within" into an assumed historical person. The Egyptians, who gave us these spiritual concepts in the first place, had a name for the body as the point of these transformations, which carry the central meaning of all theologies. Through the benefits of archeology and the tireless efforts of dedicated men and women over the last two hundred years we have before us today the "clues" and "keys" necessary to interpret correctly these ancient spiritual writings; many of which have found their way into our Old and New Testaments. This name now rises out of the murky hazes of ancient Egyptian books to enlighten all modern Bible comprehension.This city of "the human body", where the "Sun of Soul" sank to its death on the cross of matter (think...intersecting two planes of existence, forming a cross), to arise in a new birth, was called the "City of the Sun", or in Greek, "Heliopolis", but in the Egyptian, "Anu".

Answer for yourself: What lies behind "Anu"?

We saw previously that the first, or virgin birth was depicted as taking place on the western side of the zodiac, in the house or womb of the Virgin Mother, Virgo (the Water Mother). This allocation was due to the fact that it is in the west that the Sun, universal symbol and embodiment of the fire of spirit, descends each evening into the earth and water that "represented the body" in which the "Soul incarnated", this body itself being composed of those two elements, earth and water. So man is, zodiacally, born in the water, as natural man, on the western side (Virgo); and is to be reborn, or regenerated, as spiritual man, at the end of the cycle, on the eastern side (Pisces) necessitating two births and two mothers. The Heavens revealed to mankind that mankind, in his pilgrimage through this plane of existence, requires "two birth" thus necessitating "two mothers". Spirit's descent into water (of the body) on the west makes the man a physical being; its later resurrection on the east makes it man a spiritual being; the deification of man. Says the text of old Egypt: "Pepi saileth with Ra to the eastern side of heaven, where the gods (deity in man is born) are born."

Answer for yourself: What does this mean? This refers to the death (descent of the Divine into matter) and resurrection of the divinity (release of the Divine essence in matter/body at the end of bodily existence), the basic theme in all religions. It is simply the Ancient story of incarnation and return to heaven.

Answer for yourself: Have we read of this in our Bibles and not noticed it before? Yes. This same idea is allegorized in our New Testament in the story of the "Christ" and the "descent of the Christ/Messiah" into "Egypt" and his "exodus" back to spirit, historicized in the Scriptures as "Canaan."

Hidden almost everywhere in these New Testament stories which we have been taught to read as assumed "historical narratives" are ancient allegories of the "Descent of the Soul into matter" and its "return to Heaven" at the death of this physical body given mankind.

Further examination of ancient volumes and books available to us today brings to light today the connection between the zodiacal pictorialization and the Bible. It is time we look at another one which is a central idea in the New Testament concerning "the Christ".

By that I mean the use of the symbol of bread in connection with both Virgo and Pisces. Pisces is the "House of the Fishes" by name, but it is not commonly known that in the astrological representation the Constellation of Virgo is known, even today, as "the House of Bread". This is indicated by several items of the typology. Many centuries ago in the precession of the equinoxes the end of the year was marked by the position of the great Dog Star Sirius which we have already seen is a heavenly symbol of the divinity in man. Long ago in Egypt, precisely at midnight on December 24, this bright Sun stood on the meridian line running from the zenith to the south. Terribly important for us to know is that at the same moment there was rising on the eastern horizon the constellation of the Virgin (Virgo), bearing in one arm a star that was represented as "the Christ child", symbol of the Christhood coming to function in man; and in her other hand she clasped the great star Spica (Latin: a head or "spike" of wheat), symbol of that same deity coming as the celestial food for man.

Answer for yourself: What did this represent again? The Ancients came to understand this as the "Coming of the Christ into mankind" along with "the message of God taught through "the Christ" to all mankind" so that he might be saved.

It must be remembered that the "Jesus Story" has written for us that if mankind was to have eternal life, they each of us must virtually eat the body of Christ as our divine food, and drink his blood.

Mark 14:22-24 22 And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body. 23 And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. 24 And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many. (KJV)

Hence typism and symbolism represented "the Christ" as coming in the form and nature of man, the human babe; and coming likewise as spiritual food represented by wheat.

Answer for yourself: Should we see that these "two comings" of "the Christ" are representative of mankind needing "two births" as well? Yes.

The "Jesus Story" describes the supernal gift of the spirit in the words:

John 6:50-51 50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. 51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. (KJV)

Jesus took the same symbol, a loaf, and, breaking it into fragments, gave a morsel to each of his disciples, saying it was his (spiritual) body, broken for them.

Answer for yourself: As this "loaf" from God was broken and distributed to all mankind present, then is this a symbol of the body of Osiris being dismembered and spread throughout the land? Yes. In the mythos we find that Set discovered the body of Osiris by chance and this time and cut up Osiris' body into fourteen pieces and scattered them far and wide throughout Egypt. This is a picture of the Metaphysical reality that God has descended from Heaven into all forms of matter; in this article we focus upon the key idea of the "Descent of the Soul" into matter (flesh).

Now the name "Anu" was given to an actual Egyptian city, where the rites of the death, burial and resurrection of Osiris or Horus were enacted each year (Osiris, a neteru, is symbolic for mankind); but the name "Anu" bore a theological significance before it was given to a geographical town. The name is obviously made up of "NU", the name for the Egyptian Mother-Heaven, or empty space, or abyss of nothingness out of the bosom of which creation emanates. The name for the Important to note. The A (alpha privative) means, as it does in thousands of words, "not." It is prefixed to a host of words to negate an affirmative meaning, as a-theistic, a-moral, a-symmetrical, a-mnesia. A-nu would then mean literally "not-nothingness," or a world of concrete actuality. The negation of a negative posits an affirmative. It refers thus to our world of physical manifestation.

Answer for yourself: Do you see in this the "breaking and multiplying" of the bread and the cutting up of Osiris as but symbols for this Divine Descent of God into all matter?

Here we are brought face to face with the important Biblical sense of the word "multiply." To exhibit its infinite creative resources, life must multiply itself endlessly. The unitary life of deity must break itself up into infinite fragments if it is to fill empty space with a multitude of worlds and beings of diversified natures. The primal sea, or Mother must engender a multitudinous progeny, to spawn the limitless schools of organic "fish-worlds" (spiritual worlds). This is the meaning of the promise given to Abraham that his seed should "multiply" until it filled the earth with offspring countless as the sands and the stars.

Answer for yourself: Since we learned that life divine was symbolized by bread (Virgo) as the type of the first birth, and by fish (Pisces) as the type of the second, then could we might expect to find in old religious typology the allegory of a generic Christ personage multiplying loaves and fishes to feed a multitude?

We should and we do.

No wonder we find in the "Jesus Story" then the account of "the Christ" feeding the 4000 and 5000 with 5 loaves of bread and 2 fishes (2 as in Pisces...remember)? The leads to the significance of the two numbers; "5" and "2". We find that as the bread symbol pertains to Virgo, mother of the natural man, the five loaves is likewise intended to refer to man's five senses, while the two fishes could have represented the two natures (natural and spiritual) unified by the second birth.

This is amazing. But unsettling to see and realize its implications that are only reiterated when one begins to read into the subject of Comparative Religions. We definitely have a very close connection between the Gospel narrative and the "Jesus Story" and Egyptian Mythology.

Answer for yourself: Knowing this then can we begin to estimate the serious challenge presented by finding these Ancient Spiritual Allegories presented as "factual, historical, and literal" history in the New Testament to which "required belief" has been attached for one's salvation?

Answer for yourself: Is this a coincidence? Is this whole Bible a "Spiritual Allegory" centered on the Descent of God, the Soul, into matter, mankind, and we not know it? Now let us continue.

"A-NU" would then mean "not-nothingness," or a world of concrete actuality, the world of physical substantial manifestation. The Ancients taught that such a world is the realm in which units of Cosmic consciousness (thought, the Mind of God) go to their death and rise again in concrete manifestation (the invisible becomes visible). A-NU is then metaphysically likened to the physical body of man on earth. Anu is the body of mankind; "the place of multiplying bread!" The Soul descends out of the waters of the abyss of the NUN, or space in its undifferentiated unity, which is the sign and name of all things negative. The NUN is indeed our "none." Life in the completeness of its unity is negative. To become positively manifested it must differentiate itself into duality, establish positive-negative tension, and later split up into untold multiplicity. This brings out the significance of the Biblical word "multiply."

Precisely such a world it is in which units of Cosmic Mind, Cosmic Thought, Cosmic Energy, and Cosmic Consciousness go to their death "death" (matter) and again rise out of it. Says God in the Old Testament: "I cast down to death and I raise up again." Anu is then the physical body of mortals on earth. The Soul descends out of the waters of the abyss, or the Nun, which is simply space in its primordial undifferentiation and finds its home in the flesh of mankind.

Here, then, in the Ancient dusty and long forgotten and silent records of Egypt we find the original story that is later mistaken presented as an assumed historical reality limited to but one person in the New Testament. How sad. Serious study on my part, and yours as well, will show you that the original, the prototype, of the "miracle" of the loaves and the fishes in the Gospels of Christianity, as well as many other Gospel stories by the hundreds find their earliest existence in Ancient Egypt.

Answer for yourself: In this of this new found knowledge don't you think that a new enlightening meaning must be read into our New Testaments around the life events and sayings of the New Testament Jesus?

Answer for yourself: Does it not appear to you, the enlightened reader, that such new information make it necessary lift these Biblical narratives out of their assumed "literal-historical" existence and inspect them anew to see if behind them lie only Metaphysical Divine Allegory and Reality?

Our eyes are opening. We see then, as the Ancient Spiritual Masters always taught, that Anu, as the physical body, is the place wherein the unity of the Christ's power is broken into an infinite number of fragments, which are distributed out among a multitude of God's children hungered after a three-days fast. This latter detail can readily be taken as referring to the deprivation of "spiritual food" suffered by Souls in their sojourn in the three elemental kingdoms, mineral, vegetable and animal, before attaining to the plane of mind.

Answer for yourself: Did we just discover the truth behind the Christian Eucharist? Is the Eucharist a picture of the broken but multiplied fragments of the body of the God, distributed to feed hungry humanity? And as humanity is composed of twelve groups of divine conscious units, there were gathered up twelve baskets of fragments! How appropriate.

Now for certain, for I have found it, this episode of the Christ's purported life is found to be Egyptian in origin and meaning and symbolic in character!

It is a known fact that the Hebrews came along and appropriated Egyptian material. They picked up the name ANU and fitting it back into its zodiacal "House" of Virgo, they called it the "House of Bread." This required their adding to ANU their word for "house," which, as anyone knows, is "Beth".

Answer for yourself: What do we get? This yields us Beth-Anu.

Now it is a fact of common philological knowledge that the ancient Greek and Egyptian "U" is rendered as "Y" when the words are brought over into English.

Answer for yourself: Since the "U" becomes a "Y" then what do we get? We get "Bethany" of the Gospels! Beth-Anu becomes "Bethany".

Bethany is thus just the sign of Virgo, as the "house of Bread," the home of the great star Spica, the head of wheat!

Answer for yourself: But what do we get when we take the Greek "Bethany", seen as "the House of Bread", back into the Hebrew? We get Beth-Lehem (Lechem, Lekhem), for lechem, lekhem, is bread in everyday Hebrew.

Answer for yourself: What do we learn? We see that the Ancient taught that "the Christ" was born in Bethany or Bethlehem, the astrological "house of Bread." Later it seems that the two signs, Virgo and Pisces, and their symbols, bread and fish, were almost interchangeably confused or commingled in the symbolic imagery. This was natural, since the two signs, Virgo and Pisces, represented the same body of man in its two aspects of birth, both dying and being reborn, and the two processes are confusedly mixed over time.

Answer for yourself: If Pisces is then the "house" in which the Christ in man comes to his birth, it is pointful to ask if there are evidences in the Bible or Christianity that Jesus was colored with the fish typology?

To any causal reader of the "Jesus Story" we find easily that we are overwhelmed by "fish symbolism" for after all it was the Age of Pisces in which these "Christ events" were supposed to have happened:

He picks his twelve disciples from the ranks of fishermen (in Egypt they were as well carpenters, reapers, harvesters, sailors, rowers, builders, masons, potters, etc.);

- He told Peter to find the gold in the fish's mouth;
- He spoke of a fish parable in the Sermon on the Mount
- He performed the miraculous draught of fishes;
- He fed the multitude with two fishes
- He declared that he would make them "fishers of men."
- His resurrection likened to Jonah who was in the belly of a fish
- He cooked fish in Luke and gave it to his disciples following his resurrection

In the catacombs under Rome the symbol of the two fishes crossed was displayed on the Christ's forehead, at his feet, or on a plate on the altar before him. And the Romans for several centuries dubbed the early Christians Pisciculi, or "Little Fishes," members of the "fish-cult." And the Greeks designated the "Jesus Story" as Ichthys, the Fish.

Answer for yourself: Can all this be just a coincidence?

It is the product of ancient custom, which figured the Christs under the symbolism of the reigning sign of the zodiac, according to the precession of the equinoxes. And that sign was the sign of the two fishes in the shape of a "cross"; Pisces. The Age of Pisces, an artifact of the Precession of the Equinoxes, is the time span extending from about 200 B.C.E. (200 hundred years before the "Jesus Story") until the current day. No wonder all the fish symbolism since it is the age in which "the Christ" from antiquity was redefined in Pisces symbolism. It appear that it took two hundred years to get the stories of these allegorical Christs redone.

And yet another surprising correlation comes to view. The Christ, as it has here been delineated, is the offspring or creation of a conception of deific Mind, first in the inner bosom of spiritual matter, then in organic bodily structure. Primeval space, we have seen, was called in Egypt the NUN, or the Waters of the Nun. All Bible students recognize a familiar ring in the phrase "Joshua, Son of Nun." Sadly, hardly any Christian knows that the name "Joshua" is just a variant name for "Jesus".

Answer for yourself: Did you know that the phrase is actually written in some old documents as "Jesus, Son of Nun"?

At any rate Joshua is just Jesus, no less. So here is the Christ, called Jesus, son of space, or the NUN. But the wonder increases when we turn to the Hebrew alphabet and find that while "M" is called and spelled "Mem" and means "water," "N" is called and spelled "Nun" and means--of all things--"Fish"!

Jesus, then, is son of Pisces, the Fish-sign, as he indeed is in the Gospels themselves.

Answer for yourself: Can you believe that Horus, the Egyptian Christ, who is identical with the Jesus of the Gospels in some one hundred and eighty details, performed at Anu a great miracle?

Horus raised his father Osiris from the dead, calling unto him in the cave to rise and come forth.

Answer for yourself: Do you have a hint at where we are going next?

Now Anu, as we have seen, became Bethany of the Gospels; and it was at Bethany that Jesus raised Lazarus from death!

Answer for yourself: Could Osiris and Lazarus have a connection that affirms that the "historicized" Jesus of the New Testament is but a mistaken reiteration of the life of Horus in Egypt?

Answer for yourself: Who was Lazarus?

According to Budge and other eminent Egyptologists today the ancient designation of Osiris was ASAR. But the Egyptians invariably expressed reverence for deity by prefixing the definite article "the" to the names of their Gods. Just as Christians say, or should say, the Christ, they said: "the Osiris". It will be found that the article connoted deity in ancient usage. Our definite article, "the" is the root of the Greek word "theos", God; the Spanish article, masculine, "el," is the Hebrew word for God; and the Greek masculine article, "ho," is a Chinese word for deity. To say the Osiris was equivalent to saying "Lord" Osiris. Now watch this closely. When the Hebrews took up the Egyptian phrases and names they converted the name of "the Osiris" or "Lord Osiris" directly into their own vernacular, and the result was "El-Asar." Later on the Romans, speaking Latin, took up the same material that had come down from revered Egyptian sources and to "El-Asar" they added the common Latin termination of the second declension masculine nouns, in which most men's names ended, namely, "-us".

Answer for yourself: What do we get? We now get "El-Asar-us." In time the initial "E" wore off, as the scholars phrase it, and the "s" in Asar changed into its sister letter "z," leaving us holding in our hands the Lazarus whom Jesus raised at Bethany!

Answer for yourself: What are we to make of all this?

We are faced with the irrefutable evidence of Comparative Religion that Jesus' raising of Lazarus at Bethany is but a rescript of the old Egyptian dramatic mystery in which Horus, the Christ, raised his "dead" father Osiris, or El-Asar-us from the grave. And the Egyptian recital was in the papyri perhaps 5000 years B.C.E. or more before the events alleged to occur to a historical Jesus.

But the comparison is not complete. Nor was Osiris, masquerading under the name of Lazarus, the only Egyptian personage present at the scene of this supposed Christian "miracle." Isis, the wife and sister of Osiris, under her ancient designation of Meri, was present also. As the feminine counterpart of the male deity was dualized to match the doubling of Horus as Horus the Elder (otherwise Osiris) and Horus the Younger, so the Meri name was sometimes pluralized, becoming Merti. Let us not forget what we learned about the neteru; they Emanated from the ONE in pairs. They are always together as duality. So also at the Egyptian scene of the rising of Osiris were present the two divine sisters, Isis and Nephthys. An old source-name for Isis was Meri, basic for the Latin mare, the sea. The Egyptian plural of Meri was Merti. In Latin feminine form this became Mertae. In Hebrew it resolved into what was rendered in English as Martha. The picture is now becoming very clear to the reader.

We are reading Egyptian religious Divine Allegory without their correct meaning when we read our New Testaments and the "Jesus Story"...what a waste of time that postpones our Soul' intended maturation as God intended

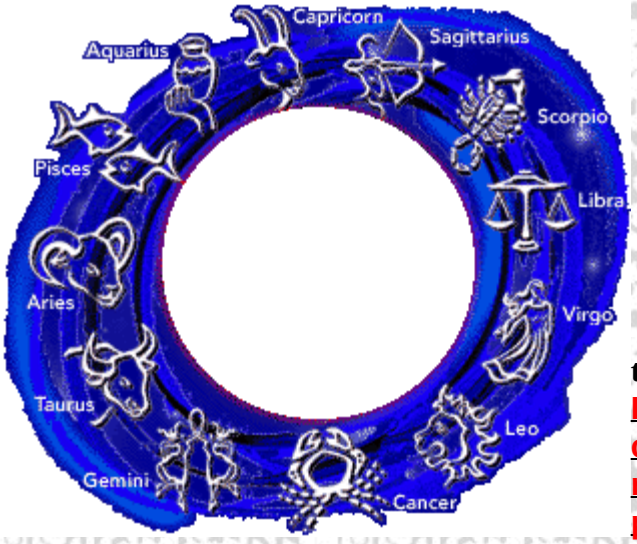
So even in the ancient Egyptian transaction there were present the two Maries, or Mary and Martha, the sisters of Lazarus! Martha is the Christianize form of Isis as Jesus is but a Christianized form of Horus/Osiris to which the "keys" for proper interpretation has been lost for almost 2,000 years; but no more!

One must ask what it can mean to the future of Christianity to realize now that this episode of the supposed life of Jesus is found to be the distorted republication of an antique Egyptian allegory, completely unhistorical in character.

To support the contention that this derivation is not a fanciful invention or sheer coincidence, we find the Egyptian "Azar" reappearing in the names of two of the Hebrew Priests in the Old Testament, Azar-iah and El(e)azar. The -iah (or -jah) appended to deific names substantially equated the prefixed "El" in Hebrew usage. But a further and far more authoritative confirmation of the linkage was found in one place in Renan's famous Life of Jesus, on page 308. The French theologian displayed an extraordinary knowledge of Judean history, geography, sociology and religion, and in connection with the elucidation here presented this citation from his great book confronts the Christian exegesis with a challenge which it may be difficult to fend off. We quote the passage as follows: "The village of Bethany, in particular, situated at the summit of the hill upon the incline which commands the Dead Sea and the Jordan, at a journey of an hour and a half from Jerusalem, was the place especially beloved by Jesus." Following this a numeral directs us to the note appended at the bottom of the page, in which the reference is to Bethany: "Now El-Azerie (from El-Azir, the Arabic name of Lazarus) in the Christian texts of the Middle Ages, Lazarium." :

On the next page, Renan, speaking of Mary he states: "Her brother Eleazar, or Lazarus, was as much beloved by Jesus." Here is indisputable evidence that the Egyptian connection with the name of Bethany clung to the town up to the Middle Ages. Since it is agreed widely that John's Gospel is far more mystical and spiritual and less historical than the other three, it is quite apparent that this reprint of an ancient Egyptian allegory would be more likely to be included in John's Gospel and omitted from the three synoptic ones.

Answer for yourself: What can it mean to Christian theology that the story of the raising of Lazarus was extant in Egyptian papyri at least 5000 or more years B.C.?



All this sets the stage for the crowning item in this article. In the Gospel drama John the Baptist enacts the role of the first-born or natural man, coming first to prepare the physical ground of evolution for the advent of the second Adam, or Christ.

Answer for yourself: Is this saying the same thing as "Virgo" (the first mother that prepared matter for the first natural birth) prepares the way for "Pisces" (the second mother as the medium for the spiritual birth of man)? Yes.

John the Baptist is again a Spiritual Allegory found in the stars of Heaven. He would therefore stand in the allegory as the son of the Water Mother, Virgo, and under the astrological symbolism would be born at the Autumn Equinox, or in his mother's House Virgo, which stands as that station in the zodiac. On the other side of the cycle of descent, "death" and resurrection, would stand Jesus, the Christos, son of the Fish Mother, born in his mother's House of the Fishes, Pisces.

Answer for yourself: What we notice right now? These houses are six months apart on the zodiacal chart!

This is not good news for the "Jesus Story" nor Christianity as you will see. The house of cards comes tumbling down and with it the Gospel's historicity when the astronomical understanding of the Gospel Story is made evident. We find in the first chapter of Luke's Gospel, that the Annunciation to Mary of her conception of the coming Christ by the Holy Spirit which is related to have come in the sixth month of Elizabeth's pregnancy with John the Baptist. With the "keys" to this interpretation you can see the methodology that these myth-makers devised for discerning intelligence in the allegory in Luke. The natural man, having covered the zodiacal "six months" between his conception and the date of his quickening into spiritual status in his evolution, was dramatized as being "quickened" at a point exactly opposite from the point of the beginning of his life. Six months on the chart would mark the end of an epoch begun opposite it (the Christ is quickend, born born in Pisces as the natural man was born in Virgo..separated by 6 months). This occurs simultaneously in the narrative. Six months, speaking purely zodiacally, would terminate the period of mortal life and bring the natural man to the place of his deification. At that point he would be represented as being quickened from natural to spiritual life.

Answer for yourself: Do you see it?

So then, according to the Lukan account, when the mother of the true spiritual Christ (Isis/Mary), who had just been impregnated by the Holy Ghost (Osiris was dead...remember), came into the presence of the first mother (Elizabeth, John the Baptist's mother), carrying her child at the figurative completion of his cycle of physical evolution, and awaiting only the advent of the spiritual Lord to be quickened into a new order of exalted being, he was dramatized as manifesting this reawakening by the statement that "he leaped in his mother's womb." The Luke narration makes it clear that the conception of Jesus had just taken place when Mary visited her cousin Elizabeth and found her at the six months stage of her pregnancy. These two birth, the natural and the spiritual are related as seen in their 6 month correspondences on the Zodiac. Mary's coming into the presence of Elizabeth is made the occasion of the natural man's leaping in his mother's womb. When the Christos comes to the natural man the latter leaps into the higher kingdom of spirit. The Virgo man is to become the Pisces man; first the natural then the spiritual. The Zodiac has the key to this story. The natural man should be overjoyed at the reality of his "second birth"; being "born again". The two mothers and two births required of man as taught by God in His Book in the Sky is dramatized for us in this New Testament story of Elizabeth and Mary. It is but a simple matter of arithmetic to note that the last three months of Elizabeth's pregnancy with John coincided with the first three of Mary's pregnancy with Jesus, bringing the birth of Jesus just six months after that of John! So Luke has it. But be not mistaken it was in the zodiacal chart some thousands of years before it could have "happened" in Judea. It had occurred zodiacally long before it could have occurred historically.

The implication of the reality that lies behind this supposed historical study is overwhelming when realized. The supposed historical occurrence is but a presumption of ignorance based on the zodiacal when that became circulated as history among the unintelligent masses. Little has changed today by design orchestrated by Rome some 1,800 years ago. The Dark Ages yet exist in the Christian Church and little hope exists for deliverance from such darkness and tunnel vision without serious study in the churches of our land.

As we see, John, symbolic of the natural man, excited at his new "awakening spiritually symbolized by Pisces, jumped for joy. This is the plan for mankind written in the night sky. We, as natural Virgo creations, are all to experience and be joyful for our experience and second birth in Pisces. The Luke narration makes it clear that the conception of Jesus had just taken place when Mary visited Elizabeth, and this is the occasion of the natural man's leaping in his mother's womb. When the Christos comes to the natural man the latter (Christos) leaps into the higher kingdom of spirit.

John 3:30 30 He must increase, but I must decrease. (KJV)

I was taught that his is about a clash of ministries; that John the Baptist must step out of the way to make room for the ministry of Jesus. Well, we almost got it right.

St. Paul declares that we come to birth spiritually only as we die carnally, meaning that the quantum or quality of divine character in us grows in proportion as the quantum of raw nature decreases. We increase deifically as we decrease humanly; the god gains in power as the animal nature in us dies. So the structure of the allegory depicted the spiritual man, Jesus, son of Nun, the "Fish," as increasing, while John, son of Virgo, the Water Mother, decreases in stature.

This battle between Set and Horus that is eternally waged; good vs evil. Here is where the 42 Negative Confessions and the Torah play such a big role in the maturation of "the Christ" within us all and our Souls. Man must come to the knowledge of right and wrong; the Torah defines absolute right and wrong and reveals them as the highest love. The Torah is the training manual for our Souls in order to train our Souls in their earthly abode how to live like God and conquer this animal nature as the Christ continually to be "formed" in each of us and rises daily to conquer the Set in all of us. Judaism teaches the same thing; the mastery of the Yetzer Ha Ra (good inclination) over the Yetzer Ha Tov (evil inclination). This the internal battle of light and darkness, flesh and spirit. This life is the proving ground for our Soul. Every man has an idea of what is good, but only the 42 Negative Confessions and the Torah define them absolutely for mankind. Only in this way can the "John the Baptist" in all of us decrease and make room for the increase of "the Christ".

Astrologically, as we might expect, the Ancients observed that as a star or constellation sinks below the horizon in the west, its opposite star or constellation would be rising in the east (there is your 6 months again between Virgo and Pisces); the two births and two mothers. As John, typified by the constellation of Virgo, type of the first, the natural man, went down below the horizon (having completed his mission of preparing the way for his greater successor), Jesus, type of the spiritual birth, typified by the Constellation of Pisces, rose on the world in the east. So we now understand the narrative has John saying: "I must decrease, but he must increase." In the descent of soul into the body spiritual power decreases as physical life increases. But on the reverse arc of the cycle, or evolution, the physical (John) decreases as the Christ power increases in its new round of growth.

Answer for yourself: Do we dare say that a day of brotherhood in human society may be about to dawn, as the "six months'" reign of a degrading literal interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures goes down to disuse and the day-star of a transfiguring spiritual interpretation rises in the east in its place?

THE EGYPTIAN RELIGION....COULD IT BE THE FATHER OF JUDAISM AND CHRISTIANITY?

I hope you like a challenge for your surely are in for one if you begin to study the link between Egypt, Judaism, and Christianity.

I never dreamed years ago in Seminary that my studies into the origin of Christianity and its Hebrew roots would later prove to me that the Bible that I carried is a book about astrology, astronomy, and the harmony of the Universe which is later personified into events in the lives of the Patriarchs and even Jesus. You might say that I was at that time in my life unawakened to the Cosmic Consciousness that lies beneath many of the stories in my Bible let alone the stories concerning the depiction of Jesus in the New Testament. I quickly found over the years of intense study that all roads do not lead to Rome, although many do, but truly all roads lead to Egypt for it is there we find the world's First Monotheism in it's purest state. That's right; I said Egypt and not Jerusalem nor Rome. This might come as a shock to you as it did me but when you become familiar with how the texts of the Bible were written as well as archeology and ancient historical records you find that the Jews are the "children of the Egyptians" in the first place. We will get to that later in this website but for now let us remain on tract. The things said above might seem shocking to you considering what you have been taught by your Christian Church and its traditions which we inherited in this Western Hemisphere. Even the Old School of Egyptology goes out of it's way to make sure that the truth concerning Moses, the Jews, and Israel is hidden because of its ramifications upon three world religions today. To say that such information is earth-shaking is a gross understatement.

When one surveys the development of Egyptology as a discipline during the course of the 19th century, one is struck by the single-mindedness of purpose to which many of the great names of the day adhered. That sole purpose sought to discover in the ancient Egyptian cultural record evidence which would document, and thereby confirm, the events recorded in the Old Testament. These efforts have failed for several reasons. The biggest reason is that most scholars have been trying to fit Egyptian history into the Bible rather than the Bible into Egyptian history. However, archeological finds in the last 150 years have been monumental and such discoveries are of such an astounding nature that one realizes that the above approach of trying to put Egypt into the Bible is utter nonsense. Rather today we know for certain that we need to put the Bible into Egypt history in order to understand correctly the events and identities of the famous men and women of the Jewish Old Testament. Never forget that winners of wars write history as well as change it according to their views and agendas. Along with this comes their "version" of the story given as their legacy to all mankind. This has been done to where the truth concerning the origin of Christianity is almost totally lost today without a good deal of hard work and diligent study. Had it not been for great discoveries in archeology in the last 150 years we would today remain in the darkness of Roman Church tradition which obscures the truth about God and His Revelation to all mankind which was first given to Egypt long before the Jews came from their loins.

This brings me to the purpose of this website and the information and articles that will follow. Having devoted myself to serious study these last 20 years my travels in scholarship have taken many paths and learning and knowledge has become my best friends. Today I as well as many other scholars realize that the roots of Christianity do not lie in Rome or Jerusalem but in Egypt. In fact the purest doctrine of Monotheism is to be found in Egypt when their religion is properly understood. Truly this gives cause to not only rethink Egyptian religion which has sadly been misrepresented to the world by the Old School of Egyptology for hundreds of years but brings a correction to its daughter religions which have stayed from the path of its parent. We are dealing here with Divine Revelation on a magnitude that few since Moses, himself a Pharaoh, has received and the failure of succeeding nations to understand and convey it properly. Sadly humanity has lost much of this knowledge through war and conquest but archeology is brining this history and information to the surface once again. In so doing we have now the ability to trace God's earliest Revelation of Himself on this planet through successive nations and as we do we can follow the changes, alterations, corruptions, as well as those who did not yield to such changes but chose rather to adhere to this original Divine Revelation. What we find upon such study is both disconcerting as well as comforting; disconcerting because we see the aberrations and alterations of such original Divine truth once held by the Egyptians as we trace these doctrines chronologically down through history though successive Gentile sun worshipping nations as well as the rigorous and tenacious fighting by the Egyptian's children, the Jews, to maintain and preserver this "original truth" of its parents.

SO WHY IS THIS IMPORTANT TO TODAY'S CHRISTIAN?

This is important for us today because until we truly learn the origin of our Christian Faith and it's earliest doctrines and dogmas and what was believed way back then by the earliest believes in God on this planet to whom this Revelation was given and who are called "Holy men of old" and then compare their "religious beliefs" to those we have inherited today which are likewise touted as "Divine, infallible, and inerrant" then we see major changes and alterations have been made to this simple faith of the ancient Godfearers. Without such investigation on our parts we have no way to knowing for certain if what we have been taught and inherited down through history by successive Gentile sun worshipping nations is accurate and and a faithful representation of these original religious beliefs held by those who first received God's Divine Revelation in this world.

Sadly few if any Christians have ever studied the origins of their faith and have been instructed to accept without question their inherited faith as if this is an accurate representation of this prior Divine Revelation. Without such personal and individual study then we are relegated to having "faith" in what has been handed down to us by Rome in this ONE BOOK we call the Christian Bible and which is passed off as being an accurate representation of God's earliest revelation of Himself to "holy men of old." You will quickly come to see that this position of implicit faith in our inherited Christian religious belief system and this ONE BOOK more than a little problematic upon just a few hours of serious reading and study into the true origins of the Christian faith let alone into serious study into the textual integrity with the texts within the Christian Bible.

BECOMING EQUIPPED TO STUDY THE BIBLE AND ONE'S FAITH IN DEPTH

After Seminary, as well as during my three year course of instruction, I realized beyond any doubt that there are many problems within my Christian Bible and my Christian religious beliefs system and I wanted answers to why things just did not add up so much of the time since supposedly coming from a God who is not the author of confusion. But time restraints required that I wait until after graduation and during the years of my Pastorate in order to investigate such irregularities. As God would have it by Divine Providence I had read a very good Jewish book on the Jewish Jesus before entering my course of study at Southwestern Theological Seminary entitled Understanding The Difficult Words of Jesus by David Bivin and Roy Blizzard. This book agitated me beyond belief because it revealed to me that behind the English words of my New Testament were Hebraic doctrines and meanings that the English and the context of the passage failed to bring out. I quickly realized that I did not have the meaning Jesus intended but yet I read the passage and arrived at an alternate understanding either from my ignorance of Hebrew or my prior conditioning by hearing sermons that allegorized the passages in question. Said bluntly I did not have words of Jesus nor the understanding intended for the hearers who once set before him when he instructed them. Likewise I realized that I had often a completely different meaning and I reasoned that if I had another completely different meaning than what Jesus intended from inherited sermons from the Gentile Church than what the Hebrew behind the Greek and English intended then I had the wrong understanding. It was not Jesus who did not "believe as me" but I who "did not believe as Jesus."

I began to ponder such a scenario. I had just finished taking Systematic Theology in Seminary where I was taught the Baptist viewpoints on such religious doctrines such as sin, repentance, judgment, resurrection, prayer, atonement, life after death, tithing, etc. Then it dawned on me to question if I really had the "mind of Christ" on these religious beliefs. Not knowing what lay ahead of me in my future studies and being "literal" in most of my thinking at that point in my life I asked myself some very difficult questions the last day at Seminary as I set on a bench before the beautiful gardens on the campus:

- What did Jesus the Jew believe concerning various theologies and Biblical doctrines that make up his faith and his religion?
- What have I been taught to believe about these same religious doctrines which were believed by this Jew?
- It is possible that Jesus the Jew believes different from me in these areas of Biblical doctrine?
- If it can be shown that my religious belief system is different from Jesus the Jew then is Jesus wrong or am I wrong?
- If it can be shown that I believe different than Jesus did on these religious doctrines then is Jesus wrong and me right?
- If it can be shown that I believe different from Jesus on these religious doctrines then does it not stand to reason that I have the WRONG religious belief system and that I need to repent and change my religious beliefs and bring them in line with what the historical Jesus believed?
- Can I really call myself a follower of Jesus if it can be shown that my Christian religious belief system is opposed and is opposite to what can be shown that Jesus believed?

Looking back on this now these were infantile thoughts. This was the beginning of 15 years of dedicated study that would lead me to discover the truth behind Christianity but I had to eventually travel to Egypt in my studies to get to the bottom of my religious problem; the answer to which would shake my world and would eventually lead me out of the pastorate. Yet at that time I could only think that I had to have the answers to these questions. I knew what the Baptists believed and wanted me to believe but I was haunted by these above questions and the answers could not come quick enough but yet I realized that it might take months and even years to satisfactory get the answers that I needed. I wanted no room to doubt so my determined to approach such investigation and study in a methodical way. Since being a full blown zealous Christian at that time in my life I began my studies in Fourth Century following the Council of Nicea since this is the high water mark of organizational Christianity. I began to work backwards down through history with the desire to sift through as much information as possible to understand the intricacies of what really happened that shaped and gave momentum to Gentile Christianity all the while comparing what I had been taught to believe with what a Jew like Jesus in the first century believed. But there was one problem; I did not know what a Jew like Jesus believed in these areas so I had to undertake a serious and in-depth study of Biblical Judaism which took over 4 years to where I was satisfied that I knew the Jewish faith inside and outside. That was an eye opening experience to say the least as I saw daily in my studies that I had very little in common with a Jewish Jesus and his faith of Judaism. I wondered how my faith and Christian religious beliefs and doctrines which is supposed to be the fulfillment of Judaism could conflict and contradict so often what Jesus the Jew believed. I wondered who was responsible for such a misrepresentation of the historical Jesus the Jew as found in the New Testament and Gentile Church dogma which my ONE BOOK taught as the faith of Jesus when serious investigation into Judaism shows that the Jesus of the New Testament has more in common with sun godmen and cosmic saviors than the Messiah of Judaism and what Judaism teaches. What I was not prepared for which would come within two years of such study is that the very identity of Jesus and his historical existence would be questioned and challenged to its very core by such studies. It was only when my studies arrived at a through investigation of Egyptian religion did I discover the Egyptian Karast (Christ) and Osiris/Horus which is the Egyptian Jesus. It is at this time that I found the identical same stories told of "the Christ" in the New Testament which were previously told thousands and thousands of years earlier about Osiris/Horus and the same "Logia" or sayings of the Lord taken from the mouths of Egyptian rituals put into the mouth of the New Testament Jesus. Now I had a real problem facing me. Now my Jewish Jesus had been shown to be a fraud as well. Behind it all was allegory, symbolism, metaphor, and myths which originally portrayed Divine Truths but which were later "literalized" by Rome thousands of years later. This you will see if you continue to study the Egyptian Jesus (http://jesusastrotheology.netfirms.com).

Picking back up with my early years of studying a "literal Jewish Jesus" and having at that time learned what Jesus the Jew would have believed about these various doctrines I quickly saw that Gentile Christianity had little in common with the faith of Jesus "the Jew". In fact it seemed I had inherited a belief in the "Jesus of faith" given to me by Rome as depicted in Rome's canon of passages called the New Testament instead of the assumed "Jesus of history" whose Bible was the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings [sadly called the Old Testament today....rightly known as the Tanakh]. As I began to isolate these divergent religious doctrines in Gentile Christianity that deviated from Biblical Judaism then I wanted to know "why" my Christian religious doctrines were different and "when" these doctrines were changed and where they found their ultimate origin. That began for me a quest to trace these Gentile religious beliefs back down through history through each successive conquering nation until I arrived eventually at the beginning of recorded time which I found to be Egypt and Sumer. I began as my fixed point Roman Catholicism in the middle ages and began to work backward. It was amazing at what I saw and uncovered as the years rolled along. Along with such discovery of altered religious doctrines by Rome I was introduced into the corruption of New Testament documents themselves as history and archeology records for us the almost constant alteration, change, and continued manipulation of these documents as successive Roman Church Councils as they decided upon and created theology down through history. The further I ventured back into the influence of Gentile religious beliefs upon the Christian Bible I ran into the earlier corruption of the Hebrew Scriptures by the Hellenized Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt in 220 B.C.E. (http://essenecx.netfirms.com). Now we have the corruption of both the Hebrew Scriptures known as the Old Testament as well as the New Testament and these mind you become the Bible of the Christian Church for the last 1600 years. Having done this study now I came to see why the prophecies of the Jewish Messiah are different in the Hebrew Scriptures when compared with the later forged Greek and English texts (http://messianicprophecy.netfirms.com and http://seventyweeksdaniel.netfirms.com and http://jewishmessiah.netfirms.com).

These truths were very hard to swallow for an ordained Christian Pastor of a mega-church in Dallas, Texas. Thus my resignation lay only months ahead. As I continued to trace backwards in time the origins for my inherited Christian beliefs and to find the origin for their deviation from what the Jews believed as recorded in their Hebrew Scriptures I found that all roads began to point to Egypt. Along the way I discovered that Ezra rewrote the Hebrew Scriptures following the Persian captivity and at that time the history of the Jewish black-skinned people was altered to cover up their "Egyptian Roots" and to hide their true parents. This opened a whole can of worms that intrigues and motivates my study even to this day. Important for our study and this website is the marvelous facts I found concerning the Egyptian Religion which are sadly so tragically misrepresented today to all but those who study the New School of Egyptology. In Egypt we find the world's first recorded religion and when properly understood the similarity with Biblical Judaism is overwhelming. But we should expect such once we learn the true origin of the Jewish people which can be shown to have sprung from the intermarriages of Egyptians and Canaanites. This information now becomes startling because not only do we learn the true identity of the Biblical Patriarch who are Pharaohs but reorients the dating of the Exodus to a period where few if any scholars look for evidence. Not finding any this period they dismiss the Exodus as myth but when dated to the period to when it actually occurred the evidence for the Exodus is plentiful.

As if that is not enough I was overwhelmed with what I found concerning Egyptian religion. Properly understood the beauty and simplicity of God's Revelation to earliest mankind is breathtaking as God revealed Himself to these people though the Universe, Nature, and within the physiology of Humanity. Observations in the Heavens, in Nature, and in mankind himself expressed truths that found their expression through allegories and metaphors that took the form of stories and events that were never literal to the Egyptians but yet when personified expressed "literal" truths about the Creator and His Cosmos. These personifications of Divine truth were woven into the Egyptian civilization and when PROPERLY understood reveal the Glory of God and His true message to mankind. It would be these "religious beliefs" that would provide the substrate for Egypt's Ethical Monotheism which was to be imparted to the world. In time the children of the Egyptians emerge through the marriage of Egyptians and Semites and we recognize them today as the Jewish race. These Egyptian children, the Jews, learned the religion of their parents and cleave to it today as well. Alexander the Great will come and destroy and Hellenize Egypt and in his wake the religion of the parent will be destroyed but try as they may the children of the Egyptians have withstood down through history assimilation and repeated attempts to subjugate and destroy their faith by successive Gentile conquerors. Biblical and Rabbinical Judaism is the closest representation of God's original Divine Revelation to mankind that can be found in the world today. Sadly Gentile Christianity refused this Revelation and did all that could to change it and pass off this altered anti-Egyptian religion and anti-Judaism as "orthodoxy" to the unsuspecting Gentiles who lack the knowledge to spot the counterfeit.

Sadly in time such Divine truths of the Cosmos would be perverted and the allegories and metaphors expressing these Divine truths would become "literalized" and debauched by successive Gentile nations and this deviation from truth becomes the cornerstone of world paganism in their deviate solar and nature festivals. Rome, in its combat against Judaism as a world religion in the earliest centuries, assimilates just enough Judaism in order to remake the Egyptian Karast (Christ) into Jesus of the New Testament and then Jesus of the New Testament is transformed into a hybrid representing a Cosmic Godman crossed with just enough Judaism to appear as the fulfillment of the Jewish messiah to those who know no better and have no knowledge of the manipulations and alterations done to the Hebrew Bible by the apostate Essenes of Alexandria, Egypt, in the 3rd century B.C.E. That once was me but no more. Simply said religious doctrines of Egypt expressing Divine truth in the form of allegory and metaphor are literalized by the Greeks and Romans and taught in a literal manner which was never to be understood in such a way nor taught in such a way by those who first gave the world these deeper religious understandings. Of what I am referring are the majority of the New Testament accounts of Jesus in the New Testament which simply are little more than personifications of Stellar and Cosmic events originally understood allegorically that reveal God and His attributes to mankind which have under the influence of the Essenes and later Rome been personified and deified as applied to an assumed historical Jesus. In so doing the simple truths, the original Revelation of God, and the simple Gospel of God originally given and understood by the Egyptians and their Jewish children has been tragically altered and destroyed and the Roman depiction of Jesus the Jew in the New Testament is nothing more than the literalization of these Divine truths understood originally as allegory and myths which again were but stories that revealed the maturation and maturity of the soul. That's right...these Egyptian myths of Osiris, Isis, and Horus were never "literal" but were allegories of the descent of the Divine, the Soul into matter (mankind) and the pattern for its spiritual development in this matter we call flesh. Such revelation of the Divine intent hidden in myth and allegory is totally lost today when read anew in the supposed life of a "literal Jesus" which focus upon "the one" instead of all who have this same "Christ/Sophia within". Said another way the "literalized Jewish Jesus", instead of being a picture for the development and imitation for all mankind for their spiritual development, has been transformed into a man who has become literally God by Nicean theology and along with this comes the loss of the religious beliefs system of the nations (Egypt, Israel) that once carried this Divine truth in Laws and Commandments that ordered the development of this soul. In its place we find a substitute of another religion that stigmatizes all Laws and Commandments which finds expression in the New Testament. But ever more all this was done along with the imposed Roman religious doctrine that failure to believe such things as taught by the Roman church as found in their New Testament results in one's damnation. Our adherence to many of these New Testament beliefs about Jesus are simply wrong and inaccurate and renders the uneducated believer an idolator and blasphemer when compared to the original beliefs of the Jewish nation and the Egyptian parents of these Jews.

WILL YOU LET ME PROVE THIS TO YOU?

If you have followed me up to now you might be bewildered to the claims made above but as they say in Texas: "the proof is in the pudding." I would ask you to search your heart and see if truth matters to you in your relationship with God. If it does then I would ask you to take this challenge and let me prove these things to you beyond any doubt which after twenty years of serious study I am prepared to do. The question is if you are willing to devote time and resources to procure some necessary books to aid in your study because I don't want anyone to stand before God in the judgment and say "pastor Craig said." That simply won't do. You are responsible for your own relationship with God as well as acquiring the truth concerning your faith. In order to return to the faith of Jesus (by that I mean the Jewish revelation of God inherited from Egypt) you must come first to the realization that you don't have it. This is my job to convince you through many infallible proofs that as a Gentile Christian it is impossible to be a follower of the historical Jesus (real or not) until you find out what Jew like him was supposed to believe and where these Jewish beliefs came from. Again the roads will lead to Egypt.

On this ministry's various other websites I have over the years tackled various doctrinal problems facing the traditional Christian and brought truth to bear upon the lies of Christian orthodoxy passed off as truth. Most of this has been done from a "literal" perspective since that is how we are taught to approach our Bibles as Christians. Now we look deeper to the hidden allegorical meanings behind these "simple stories" which were known by the Ancients and which have today been lost to all but a few dedicated students. Now we begin at the beginning of recorded history in order to understand the religion of these Egyptian parents of the Jews who gave us what is later altered to become the traditional historical Jesus. It is only in such study can we ever hope to find the truths that lie behind this "assumed historical Jesus". This will not be a quick or easy study and the concepts that will be revealed with be new and challenging. But as they say "no pain, no gain." So we begin at the beginning to understand the earliest of God's Revelation to mankind. Then after seeing these things for yourself then it is up to you to decide if you have been given the truth and a faithful representation of it by Rome or if you have been led down the road of deception like the billions of other Gentile who came before you who failed to take seriously the study of the origins of their faith. It is to these issues we now turn in this website. May God bless your efforts and the repentance of your life as these truth pierce your heart and reveal to you maybe for the first time in your life that you have received the counterfeit instead of the real. In so doing the idolatry and blasphemy which contaminates every Christian due to Rome's antisemitism and rejection of "the faith once given to the saints" will be exposed and this is the first step in your repentance and returning to the real faith of Jesus: Faith "in" Jesus or "the faith of Jesus"; that is the question! Ironically it is possible to have a faith both "in and of" Jesus but not a Jesus as defined from the Roman view and your studies will show this to you in time.

Let me make you a promise. If you continue in these studies and seek out your "Jewish Roots" you will find that all religious truths lie behind Egyptian religion in one way or the other and in discovering this truth you will find as well the truth behind the first "Jesus", "Messiah", and "Christ" which all had their origin in Egyptian religion and that all of these religious concepts again find their origin in Astronomy and the movement of the orbs in the Heavens where the Ancients first studied God's face. Stay tuned.

SO WHO WAS THIS JESUS TO THE EARLIEST CHRISTIANS?

It has been the established position of Orthodox Christianity for over some 1,700 to 1,800 years that we are to believe that the "Christos" is limited and isolated to just one historical person who lived in the first century in Israel and that this person alone is "the Christ" or "the Messiah". Judaism of course has denied this for the same period of time if not longer. Somebody is right and somebody is wrong here. Study is necessary to find the truth concerning this "Jesus of Nazareth" after being 2,000 years removed from the said events.

Answer for yourself: And who is this person of note that Christianity teaches as "the Christ"? Well that was easy. If you are a Christian your first answer would be "Jesus of Nazareth"; otherwise known as Yeshua in Aramaic-Hebrew. Orthodox forms of Christianity would have us believe that this "Christos" is isolated to just the person of Yeshua (Aramaic for "Jesus") of whom they preach and teach and substantiate such a belief upon from the received tradition as testified and maintained by the book given the world by Rome and which is called today the New Testament.

Answer for yourself: Were you aware before you studied the true historical evidences which we have shown and which archeology has given the world in these last two hundred years that an earlier "Christianity" than the later Roman Christianity called "Gnostic Chrestianity" holds a very different view of this "Yeshua" and this "Christos"? Today we need to understand that these two terms "Christianity" and "Chrestianity" are mixed and the earlier one almost if not totally forgotten by most. So in this article I will use these terms interchangeably.

Answer for yourself: And what was believed about this first "Yeshua" and "Christos" before the emergence of the mighty Roman Empire and the writing of the New Testament under their oversight which was canonized in 398 A.D. and which depicts Rome's interpretation of "the Christos"?

We know for certain today that these earliest "Christians" first of all were not called "Christians" but rather "Chrestians"; "Chrestus" being the name not for some supposed historical person but rather for the "indwelling Christ of God" which was understood since the beginning of time to dwell and tabernacle within each man and woman created by God. These Gnostic Christians viewed this "Christos", this "Jesus", this "Yeshua" as the "perfect man" and model for all mankind; sort of a "completed man" and this Christos was viewed as a Light-Presence of God among mankind. In short, this Christ was the goal to be obtained by all mankind. Thus, to Christian Gnostics long before the rise and emergence of Orthodox Roman Christianity this "Yeshua" was God's vehicle for light and illumination of the whole mankind. Unknown to most is that every nation had their "Karst" or "Christ" and the similarities are uncanny when you do these studies. There was in reality "one Christ" as the example for all men and nations and "His Story" was told throughout the history or mankind under different names and identities and in nation after nation. In reality this "Christos" was understood as a "bridge" between the Invisible Realm of God and the visible plane of man's existence. This Christos was God's illuminator of mankind and was the gift given to each of mankind buried deep within his "flesh" and it was man's responsibility to awaken the Christ within.

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: And why was this necessary? The next verses say it all.

Eph 5:15-17 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, 16 Redeeming the time, because the days are evil. 17 Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Why is the word "walk" so important in verse 15 above?

Thayers' Greek Lexicon says it best:

4043 peripateo- to walk:

- a) to make one's way, progress; to make due use of opportunities
- b) Hebrew for, to live
 - 1) to regulate one's life
 - 2) to conduct oneself
 - 3) to pass one's life

Only when the Christ awakens in mankind can man know the will of God and the purpose of his Soul in his fleshly existence.

Rather than something isolate or exclusive to just one human being or some supposed "historical Yeshua", the Christos is considered to be embodied by all mankind, all men and women and collectively these aware of the indwelling Christos are truly the "body of Christ" around the central concept of the indwelling Christ, this Christ acting as a Center of a Light-Transmission or Christ Revelation of the Divine which is asleep within mankind. Essentially, according to masters of Gnostic Christian Tradition, the Light-Presence of the Messiah is not embodied by a single individual alone but by a matrix of individuals and, ultimately, is to be embodied by humanity as a whole--giving birth to a New and Divine Humanity. This is the goal of mankind and purpose of our existence.

From the Gnostic perspective, this "Christos" or this "Yeshua" is comparable to the "image" of our Future Self, our True and Divine Self, and belief in the Incarnation of the Christos in each man and woman (just like in the Jesus Story) was not originally believed limited to just one child in some manger but the belief in the divinity of man was understood on a much deeper level by those possessing such Spiritual Insight to be that all men and women created by God have within them the potential in their lives to live as "living sacrifices" unto God whereby their lives are manifestations of God's salvation both in body and Spirit. In this way they became living examples of God as the "life giver", of God's salvation; they became examples of this "Yeshua" to a suffering and needy world. Such was the understanding of the "indwelling Christ" in these earliest Gnostic Chrestians and history teaches us that this has been the belief of mankind since Ancient Egypt for they have their "Karsts" as well but we don't recognize them today since they go by the names of Horus and Osiris. Other nations will follow Egypt's example. Every nation has taught this indwelling "Karst" to those with "eyes to see and ears to hear". But sadly not all want to hear this message because of the awesome responsibility morally and ethically that it brings to the hearers. Rome will be a perfect example in the earliest centuries.

But these Gnostics taught such a belief in the Divine Potential within each and every human being. We see it so clearly in the teachings of the Gnostic Paul which never once mentions a supposed historical Jesus or even the life and teachings of such a supposed sage. Paul's "Karast" was the "Christ" within all men as it had always been taught before the rise of Rome and their historical Jesus and their book of fiction which describes supposedly a life of Christ limited and confined to only one person. Listen well to what this Gnostic Paul wrote in this authentic epistles and not the later forged ones by Rome:

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Thus, to believe that Yeshua is the Incarnation of Christ is to believe that the Christos is incarnated in yourself and that within you dwells the True Nature of God in your Soul and Self, and that one is destined to evolve toward Christhood. This "Jesus Story" is not the story of another; it is to be our story, our example, our paradigm. The New Testament teaches that this is the goal but sadly purposeful and unenlightened translation of the Greek New Testament has hidden this form us. We all grew up hearing preached from our pulpits "Christ is the end of the Law".

Answer for yourself: But is he? Is Christ really the end of the Law?

Rom 10:4 4 For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. (KJV)

Thayers' Greek Lexicon is very insightful here as we look at the hidden meanings to the word translated "end" in our New Testaments.

5056 telos-

- 1) end
 - a) termination, the limit at which a thing ceases to be (always of the end of some act or state, but not of the end of a period of time)
 - b) the end
 - 1) the last in any succession or series
 - 2) eternal
 - c) that by which a thing is finished, its close, an issue
 - d) the end to which all things relate, the aim, purpose
- 2) a toll, a custom (that is, indirect tax on goods)

The Greek word translated "end" and interpreted as "ceased" as in "the law ceasing for mankind" actually speaks of a "goal" to be achieved that is obtained by living like this Christ and obeying the Commandments and Law of God in our lives just like this Christ-example in this same New Testament. This is to be our example for our lives that we might live as this Christ and experience this Christ in our lives; the story is not about some Christ living exclusively apart from you. This is to be our story. The verse speaks of every person's responsibility to allow this indwelling Christ to grow inside themselves and this was done by obeying the Laws of God which alters a person, transforms a person, and defines and molds one's character and personality. The "goal" is becoming a "living Christ" and this is the "living sacrifice" which the Christ in Paul mentions in Romans. Arriving as this "Christlikeness" through a life of faith and repentance and obedience to Gods' Commandments "further forms and nourishes this Christ in us" and one's life is but a series of opportunities to develop and strengthen this Christ in us and this is our purpose and goal which finishes our Soul and its existence on this earthly plane. So rather than being "kaput" the word "end" actually means the goal to be sought after. Ironically we misunderstand this verse and miss the truth of it by 180 degrees in our Churches.

This "indwelling Christ" in each of us as taught by Gnostic Christianity is similar to Eastern Wisdom Traditions which teach a Path to Enlightenment, and in the Gnostic view the True Gospel is a Way to the Attainment of Christ Consciousness. I know this is an overworked term but it is the truth no matter how some distort it today. The idea of "salvation" in Christian Gnosticism is a state of Self-realization of the Divinity within you and its cultivation and maturation during your life by allowing God and His Torah develop you into "the Christ" you were destined to become. This the purpose of one's life and why we are here.

Understand that this "Christos" is known by many names. The name of Yeshua in Hebrew connotes this idea of Self-realization. It is the Name of Yahweh, which appears throughout the Old Testament, with the addition of one letter (the Hebrew letter Shin.) The Divine Name of Yahweh literally means, "That Which Was, Is, and forever Shall Be", and the name Yeshua means, "Yahweh delivers" or "Yahweh saves". Yahweh, or whatever name you call our Creator, represents the one Being-Consciousness-Force-Energy or Life-Power which is the Source of all, and Yeshua, or again whatever name you call God's mediator or "Karast or Christ", represents a conscious unification with the Source; hence a state of Truth-Consciousness (Christ Consciousness). No wonder the Gnostic Paul uses the term "in Christ" so often when speaking of this conscious unification with the Divine. In essence, the Blessed Name of Yeshua does not mean some supposed historical personage which by the way yet today has not one shred of unforged evidence that he ever existed but rather a lot that proves he did not, but rather means "knowledge of truth that will set you free." This truth is the awareness of one's Soul and Self inseparable from Yahweh.

Answer for yourself: But is our whole New Testament wrong? No, for as hopefully you learned from this website Irenaeus and others will take these Gnostic writings and "work them over" incorporating their Historical Jesus as the Christ in their response to the Gnostic First New Testament along with "you get away with it theology by easy 'believeism'". Yet, glimpses of this truth of which I speak are scattered throughout this New Testament and are certainly to be found in places in the gospels that appear in the Christian Bible, but it becomes more obvious in gospels that were not included in the Bible, such as the Gospel of St. Thomas, which was among the scrolls found at Nag Hammadi by an Arab peasant in 1945. As I tell all my students it takes time to obtain such a level of study whereby you spot these things but over time with such study then these things will begin to jump out at you and you begin to see the differences between the Gnostic Paul and Christ in the New Testament and Rome's later anti-Gnostic Paul and anti-Gnostic Christ. This gospel of Thomas is quite different than those that appear in the Bible. Instead of an interpretive story, the Gospel of St. Thomas is composed of wisdom sayings of God's Christ collected and handed down over the ages, the interpretation of which is left completely to the reader. Every successive nation has their "teachings of God's Christ"; they are only called by different names but the Wisdom of God is found in every nation; wisdom intended to allow mankind to reach his Spiritual Potential by allowing the Christ in them to be formed more and more in them every day. This Gospel of Thomas is a book meant to support an oral tradition and to encourage a spiritual quest for the direct experience of the Spirit of Truth. The first saying or verse of the gospel makes this perfectly clear.

1. And he said, "Whoever discovers the interpretation of these sayings will not taste death."

Basically, it is a proclamation of the gospel as a record of "secret sayings" that were spoken in the presence of Didymos Judas Thomas by Christ-centered ones who in themselves were "living Yeshuas" and tells us that if we gain understanding of the sayings, we will be spiritually empowered and free from death, which is to say Self-realized. No one can really say whether St. Thomas actually wrote this gospel, but the dedication of the gospel to his name is significant, for Didymos literally means "a twin."

Answer for yourself: Could it be that these "living Yeshuas" teaching this Ancient Wisdom and "secret sayings" were speaking to a disciple called Didymos Judas Thomas and then does this alludes to the disciple as being like unto Yeshua or resembling him--hence the idea of the disciple as a Christ-bearer (twin) in the same way the Spirit of God in us all is the real Christ-bearer? What should this say to us?

Thus, the disciple to whom these sayings are spoken is one who knows the Indwelling Christ within himself, and it is implicit that one who reads and contemplates the Gospel of St. Thomas is to recognize Christ indwelling her or himself and to identify her or himself with that Light-Presence. Thus the goal of Christlikeness must begin with "knowing thyself".

The Gnostics considered "the Christ within" as not only as God's spiritual teacher, one who gives revelations, but also as an encourager for man to seek gnosis (Gnosis--"knowledge" of the true Self of man for himself). It is not sin, but ignorance that brings you into painful situations. The quest is to explore your own self, because within the psyche is the potential for liberation or destruction. Man, know thyself. Even in our New Testament the "Jewish Christ" often points to the fact that the source of knowledge is in man himself. Looking for this knowledge, or gnosis, is a lonely, difficult process in which one encounters an inner resistance. This resistance against Gnosis is the desire to "sleep" or to stay "drunk". Aside from the teachings of this Jewish Christ depicted as a personified "Jesus" the student, by self-knowledge, can find those things that even this "Jesus" cannot teach him. In Gnostic texts thus we find basically two issues: to distance oneself from the world and its pleasures, and the inner experience of Christ. This has been the goal of mankind since the beginning of time in many nations as man knew from the beginning that the search for God and His Kingdom begins within himself.

Luke 17:21 21 Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: How can we describe the term "Gnosis"? According to Theodotus, 140-160 AD) Gnosis is "The knowledge of what we are, what we have been, the place from which we have come, the place into which we have fallen, the goal we are striving for and from which we have been pulled away, and the nature of our birth and of our rebirth."

The Gnostics used the term Gnosis for "knowledge", "insight", because Gnosis implies an intuitive process of self-knowledge. To know oneself means to know the nature and destiny of man. "He who does not know himself, does not know anything, but he who knows himself, knows the depth of all things." (Book of Thomas the Athlete). Self-knowledge to the deepest level, is knowledge of the Divine.

Monoimus is recorded as saying: "Give up seeking for God, the creation and other such things. Seek him by taking yourself as point of origin. Learn who he is, inside you, attract everything to itself and says:" My God, my spirit, my thinking, my soul, my body". To attain gnosis is to learn the true source of divine power, this is the "depth" of all being. He who knows this source, gains self-knowledge, and discovers its origin. He has discovered his true Father and Mother.

Saturninus of Antioch taught that men have a divine spark (the Christ within) which wants to return to the unknown God. Each has to seek the divine spark within—the spiritual being trapped within themselves. So, Gnostics were originally spiritual beings who had been made to live in bodies and souls through falling from the spiritual world above. Sparks or seeds of the Divine Being fell from the transcendent realm into the material universe, which is wholly evil, and were imprisoned in human bodies. Gnosis allows the Gnostic redemption and rebirth into the spiritual world in which they were first born. Reawakened by knowledge, the divine element in humanity can return to its proper home in the spiritual realm. Notice how important this "knowledge" was to Paul or the Pauline writer of Ephesians:

Eph 1:17 17 That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: (KJV)

Eph 3:4 4 Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) (KJV)

Eph 4:13 13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: (KJV)

Lastly as an example that other nations who were not "Christians' knew of this "Christ within" I would like to mention The Delphic Oracle by Hart which states that the best known Delphic injunction was carved into the lintel at the Temple of Apollo: GNOTHI SEAUTON, Know Thyself. These words may have originated in Apollo's response to a question Chilon of Sparta asked: "What is best for man?" The reply, "Know thyself," is similar to the one believed to have been given to the Lydian king, Croesus, when he was told that he must know himself if he would live most happily. Croesus, a man of action and not philosophical, took this to mean that he should know his own strength, know what he wanted, and should rely on his own judgment. Others have found deeper meaning in these words, taking the "self" to mean the higher self, the true Self (our very Soul); to imply that as man is the microcosm of the macrocosm, he who knows himself knows all (both God and His Krst/Karest/Christ).

We find the same teachings of course in Judaism as well as the earliest "Chrestians" who taught only the "Yeshua within", "the Christ within" the very Self of man. Many spoke of these same teachings and were all "living Yeshuas" but this was never limited to just one person in some Palestine in the first century as we have been so taught by Roman Christianity. Understand that teach as they may, and many did teach these Divine ancient Spiritual Truths since Ancient Egypt and yet today they lay hidden behind the stories and parables in our Gospels, that these sayings are really taught not by man but by the Indwelling Christ within the one that wrote them or spoke them. From the Christian Gnostic perspective, either way they are authentic teachings of the Christos who lives within humanity and has taught this same "message" from nation to nation to the whole of mankind since time began. This explains why in many religions we find similar if not exact teachings from religion to religion, from nation to nation, since ancient Egypt on down the corridors of history until we come to 2nd century Rome when it all was "changed" and "reinterpreted" and the light of ancient Spiritual Wisdom went out for the world. There is only one Truth as the Ultimate Truth from God. Whether uttered by Christ indwelling man, woman, Israel, Greece, or Egypt, the Christ indwelling the disciple is the same Light-Presence that has revealed Itself since the beginning of time with the first man and woman created by our Ultimate Creator. In this light, the sayings in the Gospel of St. Thomas may be contemplated and meditated upon as sayings emerging from the Indwelling Christ within ourselves, as though a still, small voice is speaking them inwardly as we read and contemplate and meditate upon them. Study and contemplation of any Scripture in this way can lead to deep intuitive insights and can easily become an experience of contact with the Light-Presence within us. This is the purpose of the Gospel of St. Thomas, and from the Gnostic perspective, it is the purpose of any Wisdom Teaching or Scripture--a way to enter into the knowledge and communion of the Divine Presence and Power within ourselves and our lives; in reality the God who dwells in all "matter" and who was "crucified in the flesh of mankind" as the "Krst/Karest/Christ" (the Mind and Nous of God).

It is interesting to note the many different gospels we have: the Gospel according to St. John, the Gospel according to St. Thomas, the Gospel according to St. Mark, and so on. If one studies them, they clearly do not tell the same story nor represent a static or fixed view of this personified "Jesus Christ" or Yeshua or the Christos. In fact, each gospel actually represents the knowledge and understanding of Christ in the experience of the person who wrote it. In this we gain a sense of Original Chrestianity (not Christianity) as it existed in the pre-Roman Orthodoxy of the earliest centuries and in so doing we don't get a jumbled jargon of fixed doctrines dogmas, creeds, rituals; rather it was a living spiritual experience rather than a religion. It suggests that every "Christian" had his or her own unique gospel, his or her own knowledge and understanding of the Truth and Light as it was revealed in his or her own experience of Christ. Every nation had its own Torah of sorts to guide man in the steps of this evolving Christ within as well we can trace the Laws and Commandments of Moses all the way back to Sumer with the real "Noah". It is these Laws again, this message of the Christ "within us" that trains humanity to reach the perfection of our Soul in our Earthly existence and incarnation. This is the purpose of the "crucifixion of our Soul with Christ" as we both have incarnated and "fallen" to our deaths in this flesh of the animal which houses our Souls.

Gal 2:20 20 I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. (KJV)

Gal 3:1 1 O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you? (KJV)

Few Christians ever realize that this "crucifixion" was understood by the earliest Christians as the incarnation of both Soul and "Krst/Karest/Christ" into "matter" and the flesh of humanity. This is the "fall" of man and God as "Mind" into "matter" long before Rome will change its meaning. Seeing this then get ready for a shock at the next verse:

Gal 3:3 3 Are ye (plural) so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? (KJV)

Here before our eyes is Paul's testimony that the "Christ Spirit" dwells within mankind as a whole; never to be limited to but one person and so historicized and carnalized as would be later by Rome in their invention of the "historical Christ" which excluded the indwelling "Krst" to the rest of humanity. If ever that was a passage to contradict the whole of Christian theology built upon falsehoods and corruption of the ancient Egyptian Religion and ancient Spiritual Gnosis and Wisdom of the ancients this is it!

In this sense we may say that Original Christianity (called Chrestianity originally) was Gnostic, for gnosis is a Greek word meaning "knowledge," specifically knowledge and understanding acquired through direct spiritual or mystical experience, and a Gnostic is anyone who has acquired such spiritual knowledge to one degree or another. Essentially, according to the Christian Gnostic view, the True Gospel is one's own experience of the Truth and Light, which is "the knowledge of truth that will set you free." When the Christos is understood in this way, the fact that some people may use the name Buddha or Krishna or another name for the Light-Presence does not present a problem, for by "Christ" we mean the Spirit of Truth or Light-Presence in whatever form it might appear or has appeared to every man and woman since time began in every nation under the Sun. Now this should help us understand correctly how the Ancient nations understood their "Christs" when we read the Ancient Wisdom accounts of their "Osiris, Horus, Dionysus, Attis, Mithras, Apollos, and other Sungods etc." Just like the Christian Jesus their "Christs", depicted as Osiris, Horus Dionysus, Attis, Mithras, Apollos, etc., were not literal flesh and blood human beings but only examples of the pinnacle of human Spiritual evolution and Spiritual Maturation; they were likewise "the goal" for mankind's Spiritual Evolution as Christ is the "goal" of the Law and not the "kaput" as we saw above. Never has a passage been so misunderstood as the following:

Rom 10:4 4 For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. (KJV)

Paul the writer of Romans never believed this as his other writings attest. Such contradiction betrays tampering with the texts. Again before us we find the evidence of "monk" work on these texts. Notice if you will the real meaning of the word translated in our New Testaments as "the end" as if the Laws of God had "ended" according to this verse put in the mouth of Paul. Thayer's Greek Lexicon, a Christian Lexicon no less records for us:

5056 telos-

1) end

- a) termination, the limit at which a thing ceases to be (always of the end of some act or state, but not of the end of a period of time)
- b) the end

1) the last in any succession or series (see above...that has no end relating to time)

2) eternal (ETERNAL)

- c) that by which a thing is finished, its close, an issue
- d) the end to which all things relate, the aim, purpose

2) a toll, a custom (that is, indirect tax on goods)

Answer for yourself: Did you see this? Did you see that the purpose of the indwelling Krst in humanity, this very same "Christ being formed in us" as Paul states that serves the purpose and aim to lead our Souls to Spiritual maturity and perfection by teaching us these Laws of God, these same Laws of Eternity, which express this Mind of God, this Mind of Christ to mankind, and in so doing help "transform" humanity into true Sons and Daughters of God? And we read this badly corrupted text as if the Laws of God ceased with the coming of Christ as defined by Rome when ancient Egypt records the name "Krst/Karest/Christ" some 10,000 years B.C.E. If ever you have "thought deeply" then this is the time to consider just what we have been given by Christianity since Rome adopted it and reinterpreted the ancient Chrestianity beginning in the 2nd century A.D. Notice that what the verse really says in the Greek is 180 degrees diametrically opposed to the English translation. This is a crime! This is a large reason why the world is in the shape it is today; 2.5 billion people implicitly taught that they get away with sin having not to obey the Laws of God that lead to self-perfection of their Souls all the while waiting for some "descending Christ" to come and perfect the world when this same Christ came to mankind in man's first birth and continues to "come" to each new born baby in the world. This is the true incarnation and true "crucifixion" of Christ on "the cross of matter" as explained before in our articles on the Soul in Amenta.

Every human being is unique and individual, therefore every individual's experience of the Truth and Light will be unique to her or himself, as will the Holy Gospel she or he brings forth from within her or himself. In terms of Self-empowerment and Self-realization, the only question in the Gnostic view is whether or not the individual having a psychic or spiritual experience is able to recognize the Light-Presence (Indwelling Christ) within him or herself, because it is this inward recognition that opens the way to various degrees of Enlightenment and Liberation ("Salvation"). This is the true "born again" experience we hear and read about which sadly has been relegated in our day to signing a card and a simple prayer. Unknown to most being "born again" is a Spiritual Pilgrimage that takes time and effort and we should know this if we ever contemplated the actual time and events in the birthing of a human being. It is a "process" as well. So Above, So Below!

There you have it. You just discovered the "real Jesus" as it was taught before the rise of the Roman Empire. This "Jesus" as a Spiritual Concept goes back some 10,000 years for if you recall I showed the reader previously that we find this same name, "Jesus", as far back as the earliest records of Ancient Egypt some 10,000 B.C.E. This should get your attention and surely this cannot be a human Jesus or some Jewish Rabbi when there are no Jews on the horizon for some 8,500 more years. This, as I have detailed above, is the key to understanding the true Christ: the recognition and realization of the Light-Presence or Indwelling Christ within oneself and the bringing forth of that Light and Truth from within oneself. The message of Gnostic Christianity is that we are powerful Spiritual beings, whether or not we are conscious of it. We must "awaken" to our true Selves. We are living embodiments of this Christ, of this God, and the only question is how we receive our empowerment and actualize the Light-Presence in us. This is where the Torah comes in as it is the blueprint for mankind and defines the Ultimate will of God which is God's love to us whereby He reveals Himself to us; what He is and does (the Positive Commandments) and what He is not and what He does not (the Negative Commandments). This makes all the sense to allow us to achieve our potential as individuals and the whole of mankind who is called to this end. And yes, this end is the "goal" we saw above in our Greek word study. Christlikeness if the "goal" and the "end to be achieved"; not the "end" of any period of time. Oh how I wish we understood correctly what we read in our Bibles but such is impossible without good teachers and effort on our parts to find God.

Jer 29:13 13 And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. (KJV)

THE PAULINE EPISTLES & HIS CHRIST

Of the fourteen epistles ascribed to Paul, seven -- Ephesians, Colossians, Second Thessalonians, First and Second Timothy, Titus, and Hebrews -- are conceded by nearly all critics to be spurious while three others -- Philippians, First Thessalonians, and Philemon -- are generally classed as doubtful.

The general verdict concerning the first seven is thus expressed by the Rev. Dr. Hooykaas: "Fourteen epistles are said to be Paul's; but we must at once strike off one, namely, that to the Hebrews, which does not bear his name at all.... The two letters to Timothy and the letter to Titus were certainly composed long after the death of Paul.... It is more than possible that the letters to the Ephesians and Colossians are also unauthentic, and the same suspicion rests, perhaps, on the first, but certainly on the second of the Epistles to the Thessalonians" (Bible for Learners, Vol. III, p. 23).

The author of Second Thessalonians, whose epistle is a self-evident forgery, declares First Thessalonians to be a forgery. Baur and the Tubingen school reject both Epistles. Baur also rejects Philippians: "The Epistles to the Colossians and to the Philippians ... are spurious, and were written by the Catholic school near the end of the second century, to heal the strife between the Jew and the Gentile factions" (Paulus). Dr. Kuenen and the other Dutch critics admit that Philippians and Philemon, as well as First Thessalonians, are doubtful.

That the Pastoral Epistles are forgeries is now conceded by all critics. According to the German critics they belong to the second century. Hebrews does not purport to be a Pauline document. Luther says: "The Epistle to the Hebrews is not by St. Paul, or, indeed, by any apostle" (Standing Preface to Luther's N.T.).

Four Epistles -- Romans, First and Second Corinthians, and Galatians -- while rejected by a few critics, are generally admitted to be the genuine writings of Paul. These books were written, it is claimed, about a quarter of a century after the death of Christ. They are the only books of the New Testament whose authenticity can be maintained.

Admitting the authenticity of these books, however, is not admitting the historical existence of Christ and the divine origin of Christianity. Paul was not a witness of the alleged events upon which Christianity rests. He did not become a convert to Christianity until many years after the death of Christ. He did not see Christ (save in a vision); he did not listen to his teachings; he did not learn from his disciples. "The Gospel which was preached of me is not after man, for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it" (Gal. 1, II, 12). Paul accepted only to a very small extent the religion of Christ's disciples. He professed to derive his knowledge from supernatural sources -- from trances and visions. Regarding the value of such testimony the author of Supernatural Religion (p. 970) says: "No one can deny, and medical and psychological annals prove, that many men have been subject to visions and hallucinations which have never been seriously attributed to supernatural causes. There is not one single valid reason removing the ecstatic visions and trances of the Apostle Paul from this class."

The corporeal existence of the Christ of the Evangelists receives slight confirmation in the writings of Paul. His Christ was not the incarnate Word of John, nor the demi-god of Matthew and Luke. Of the immaculate conception of Jesus he knew nothing. To Him Christ was the son of God in a spiritual rather than in a physical sense. "His son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and declared to be the son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. 1:3, 4). "God sent forth his son, made of a woman [but not of a virgin], made under the law" (Gal. 4:4).

With the Evangelists the proofs of Christ's divinity are his miracles. Their books teem with accounts of these. But Paul evidently knows nothing of these miracles. With him the evidences of Christ's divine mission are his resurrection and the spiritual gifts conferred on those who accept him.

The Evangelists teach a material resurrection. When the woman visited his tomb "they entered in and found not the body of Jesus" (Luke 24:3). The divine messengers said to them, "He is not here, but is risen" (Luke 24:6). "He sat at meat" with his disciples; "he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them" (Luke 24:30). "Then he said to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side" (John 20:27).This is entirely at variance with the teachings of Paul. "But not is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead" (I Cor. 15: 20, 21). "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die; and that which thou sowest thou sowest not that body that shall be" (I Cor. 15:35-37). "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body" (I Cor. 15:44). "Now this I say brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (I Cor. 15:50).

The Christ that Paul saw in a vision was a spiritual being -- an apparition; and this appearance he considers of exactly the same character as the post mortem appearances of Christ to his disciples. "He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve; after that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; ... after that, he was seen of James; then all of the Apostles. And last of all, he was seen of me also" (I Cor. 15:5-8).

A QUICK PRIMER ON THE AUTHENTIC EPISTLES OF PAUL

There are seven New Testament letters that most modern scholars believe were definitely authored by Paul. Those seven letters are:

- 1 Thessalonians
- Galatians
- Philippians
- Philemon
- 1 Corinthians
- 2 Corinthians
- Romans | 1-15 | 16

(The 16th chapter of "Romans" was actually written to the church in Ephesus, but it is part of Romans in the canonical New Testament letters.)

Of the fourteen epistles ascribed to Paul, seven -- Ephesians, Colossians, Second Thessalonians, First and Second Timothy, Titus, and Hebrews -- are conceded by nearly all critics to be spurious while three others -- Philippians, First Thessalonians, and Philemon -- are often debated and by some generally classed as doubtful.

Many theologians believe that there is some material embedded in some of Paul's epistles that is actually much more recent material from other Christian sources - e.g. hymns, creedal formulas, confessions of faith. They seem to date from as late as the middle of the second century CE, some 85 years after Paul's death.

A.Q. Morton completed an analysis of these Epistles (S.M. Gilmour, "The Letters of Paul," essay in C.M. Laymon: "The Interpreter's One-Volume Commentary on the Bible," Abingdon Press, Nashville, TN (1991). He assumed that Galatians was written by Paul, and did a computer study of the style of the remaining letters using that epistle as a reference. His computer found that only Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, and Philemon matched the precise writing style of the author of Galatians. He assumed that the remaining 8 were written in the name of Paul by persons unknown.

The general verdict concerning the first seven is thus expressed by the Rev. Dr. Hooykaas: "Fourteen epistles are said to be Paul's; but we must at once strike off one, namely, that to the Hebrews, which does not bear his name at all.... The two letters to Timothy and the letter to Titus were certainly composed long after the death of Paul.... It is more than possible that the letters to the Ephesians and Colossians are also unauthentic, and the same suspicion rests, perhaps, on the first, but certainly on the second of the Epistles to the Thessalonians" (Bible for Learners, Vol. III, p. 23).

The author of Second Thessalonians, whose epistle is a self-evident forgery, declares First Thessalonians to be a forgery. Baur and the Tubingen school reject both Epistles. Baur also rejects Philippians: "The Epistles to the Colossians and to the Philippians ... are spurious, and were written by the Catholic school near the end of the second century, to heal the strife between the Jew and the Gentile factions" (Paulus). Dr. Kuenen and the other Dutch critics admit that Philippians and Philemon, as well as First Thessalonians, are doubtful.

That the Pastoral Epistles are forgeries is now conceded by all critics. According to the German critics they belong to the second century. Hebrews does not purport to be a Pauline document. Luther says: "The Epistle to the Hebrews is not by St. Paul, or, indeed, by any apostle" (Standing Preface to Luther's N.T.).

Four Epistles -- Romans, First and Second Corinthians, and Galatians -- while rejected by a few critics, are generally admitted to be the genuine writings of Paul. These books were written, it is claimed, about a quarter of a century after the death of Christ. They are, in the minds of many Biblical scholars, the only books of the New Testament whose authenticity can be maintained.

1 and 2 Timothy and Titus were definitely pseudonymous (written by a unknown person, passing the writings off as Paul's.) They were written 35 to 85 years after Paul's death. Although such a writer would be considered a forger today, the practice was quite common in the 1st century CE, and was considered acceptable behavior.

We are often guilty of judging 1st century CE traditions by today's ethical standards. As stated in the New Jerusalem Bible: "The best explanation may be that the Pastoral Epistles are letters written by a follower of Paul, conscious of inheriting his mantle and seeking to give advice and instruction for the administration of local churches. This adoption of a revered name in such circumstances was a literary convention of the times."

SO WHAT SHOULD WE UNDERSTAND FROM THIS PERSPECTIVE UPON THE TRUE PAULINE EPISTLES?

Well there are many things.

- First of all we should question if we should approach the New Testament with the idea that all that it is contained within it is indeed infallible and inerrant and the word of God in all places.
- Next we should realize the important responsibility we have to become students of the New Testament in order to gain credible knowledge of the earliest expression of Christianity and its devolution whereby we can safely read and interpret the New Testament and sift the "truth" from the "error" and replacement religion which will come later through the antisemitism and pens of the later anti-Gnostic proto-Catholics.

In so doing we will come to see along the way as we separate out the earlier authentic Pauline epistles from the later forgeries of Pauline epistles that there are two different "Jesus" being taught in the New Testament within the supposed Paul's writings. One is the representation of Yahweh's Salvation in the form of the "allegorical Christ" within mankind to which we are to awaken unto once our "eyes are opened" through gnosis and receiving the mystical teachings from Paul and others. The other is the presentation of a historical human Jesus of the later forged Pauline writings. Over one hundred years span the difference in time between the earlier presentation of Paul's "hidden Christ within" and the presentation of the "gnostic Christ" of the authentic Epistles of Paul written in the 50-60s C.E.

Admitting the authenticity of these books, however, is not admitting the historical existence of Christ and the divine origin of Christianity as it exists today. Let us never forget that Paul was not a witness of the alleged events upon which Christianity rests. He did not become a convert to Christianity until many years after the death of Christ. He did not see Christ (save in a vision); he did not listen to his teachings; he did not learn from his disciples and in fact refused to go to them for 14 years or more.

Gal 1:11-12 11 But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man.

12 For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. (KJV).

Paul accepted only to a very small extent the religion of Christ's Jewish disciples. As shown on an earlier article and on our Pauline website this is not strange once you come to realize that Paul was a Gentile who converted to Judaism and at the same time let us understand that the Messiah of Israel comes for the Jews and not the Gentiles. Thus Paul would not have been interested in the human seed of David that was hoped for by Israel as their physical deliverance from Gentile domination. Instead Paul professed to derive his knowledge from supernatural sources -- from trances and visions. Regarding the value of such testimony the author of Supernatural Religion (p. 970) says: "No one can deny, and medical and psychological annals prove, that many men have been subject to visions and hallucinations which have never been seriously attributed to supernatural causes. There is not one single valid reason removing the ecstatic visions and trances of the Apostle Paul from this class."

The corporeal and historical existence of the "fleshly" Christ of the writings of the later New Testament proto-Catholic "Evangelists" receives no confirmation in the earlier authentic writings of Paul. His Christ was not the incarnate Word of John, nor the demi-god of Matthew and Luke. Of the immaculate conception of Jesus and the supposed virgin birth Paul knew nothing and mentions nothing. No infancy stories or trip to Egypt are mentioned. There are not birth narratives alluded to by Paul at all. Not one mention from the earlier authentic Pauline Epistles is any reference to the human genealogy of Jesus. To Him Christ was the son of God in a spiritual rather than in a physical sense. This makes perfect sense once we realize that Paul was a Gnostic Christian.

With the Evangelists the proofs of Christ's divinity are his miracles. Their books teem with accounts of these. But Paul evidently knows nothing of these miracles because he mentions none of them. With him the evidences of Christ's divine mission are his resurrection and the spiritual gifts conferred on those who accept him and who awaken to "the Christ" within.

The Evangelists teach a material resurrection but contrary to what you might assume Paul did not. Paul's resurrection was not a physical but rather a spiritual resurrection within the soul of mankind. Speaking to people who obviously were not dead Paul says:

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

When the woman visited his tomb "they entered in and found not the body of Jesus" (Luke 24:3). The divine messengers said to the in verse 6, "He is not here, but is risen". "He sat at meat" with his disciples; "he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them" (verse 30). "Then he said to Thomas, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side" (John 20:27). This is entirely at variance with the teachings of Paul. "But not is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead" (I Cor. 15:20, 21). "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die; and that which thou sowest thou sowest not that body that shall be" (35-37).

"It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body" (44).

"Now this I say brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (50).

Answer for yourself: Now does that sound like a physical resurrection to you in the pattern of a supposed physical resurrection of a prior Christ Jesus?

The Christ that Paul saw in a vision was a spiritual being -- an apparition; and this appearance he considers of exactly the same character as the post mortem appearances of Christ to his disciples. "He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve; after that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; ... after that, he was seen of James; then all of the Apostles. And last of all, he was seen of me also" (I Cor. 15:5-8).

Let us keep in mind that Paul's biblical letters (Epistles) serve as the oldest surviving Christian texts, written probably around 60 C.E. As shown above most scholars have little reason to doubt that Paul wrote some of them himself. However, there occurs not a single instance in all of Paul's writings that he ever meets or sees an earthly Jesus, nor does he give any reference to Jesus' life on earth. Paul never mentions in his early authentic Epistles:

- The virgin birth
- Any infancy narratives
- Any birth stories of Jesus
- Any genealogical reference to Jesus being from David

Therefore, all accounts about a historical Jesus could only have come from other believers that followed Paul.

Of course one article proves nothing and that is not my intent. My intent however is to alert good people and believers in the Christ and the Jesus of the New Testament to the fact that we have serious problems and deficiencies in the New Testament that go unnoticed by almost all but few with some existing knowledge of these problems concerning the historical Jesus and who likewise possess a critical eye when reading these texts in the New Testament. It is truly foolhearty to approach the New Testament believing all things without personal study into the true origin and canonization of the New Testament.

No one has the slightest physical evidence to support a historical Jesus; no artifacts, dwelling, works of carpentry, or self-written manuscripts. All claims about a historical Jesus derive from writings of other people and let me say these writings appear "late"; often later second century. There occurs no contemporary Roman record that shows Pontius Pilate executing a man named Jesus. Devastating to historians, there occurs not a single contemporary writing that mentions Jesus. All documents about Jesus got written well after the life of the alleged Jesus from either: unknown authors, people who had never met an earthly Jesus, or from fraudulent, mythical or allegorical writings.

The most "authoritative" accounts of a historical Jesus come from the four canonical Gospels of the Bible. Note that these Gospels did not come into the Bible as original and authoritative from the authors themselves, but rather from the influence of early church fathers, especially the most influential of them all: Irenaeus of Lyon who lived in the middle of the second century. Many heretical gospels got written by that time, but Irenaeus considered only some of them for mystical reasons. He claimed only four in number; according to Romer, "like the four zones of the world, the four winds, the four divisions of man's estate, and the four forms of the first living creatures-- the lion of Mark, the calf of Luke, the man of Matthew, the eagle of John (see Against the Heresies). The four gospels then became Church cannon for the orthodox faith. Most of the other claimed gospel writings were burned, destroyed, or lost." [Romer]. Not only do we not know who wrote them, consider that none of the Gospels got written during the alleged life of Jesus, nor do the unknown authors make the claim to have met an earthly Jesus. Add to this that none of the original gospel manuscripts exist; we only have copies of copies.

We should take from this article again the need for serious study on our parts to come to the truth concerning just whom this "Jesus Christ" truly is that we read about in the New Testament. A few things are for certain in my opinion and this is the fact that when we separate our Paul's earlier authentic writings to the best of our abilities and read just what he says and writes concerning this earlier "Christ Jesus" and at the same time we do not read into his authentic earlier Epistles what we have been taught to believe about Jesus and what we have been brainwashed to previously think and believe by church tradition then:

- It is impossible to find a historical Jesus Christ in the authentic Pauline Epistles
- Only when we get to the later forgeries of the Pauline Epistles written long after his death, as late as the later second century, do we find a historical Christ Jesus written in Paul's name

At this later time (180 C.E.) we find the first quotes of early Church Fathers from these supposedly existing early 4 Gospels which indicate that there were written late and not early as a refutation of the earliest Gospels of the Gnostic Christians which never taught a human Christ Jesus nor a historical Jesus Christ.

The authentic Paul and his authentic Epistles taught the non-human Divine mediator which lies sleeping within each child of God; the "Christ within" which lives within each child of God which is his link between the Spirit and material world. Paul taught this "Christ within" to which Paul was called to make known to the Gentile world which did not possess this knowledge or understanding of God and the "sleeping" God within the souls of mankind which are trapped in this material universe.

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

In closing notice please where this "Christ" resides. Paul says "in you" not "out there". This is the message of the 7 authentic Epistles of Paul. Only later with the forgery of the proto-Catholics with the 4 current Gospels and the other anti-Gnostic Epistles in Paul's name and others do we find the creation of a "fleshly Christ" and a "historical Jesus".

DID PAUL TEACH A "HEAVENLY CHRIST" OR A "HISTORICAL JESUS"?

I noticed long ago that when reading Paul that he seems to be putting out "fires" everywhere he went. His letters and epistles are full of "stop it," "quit it," "cease," etc. Of course the Gentiles and heathen needed moral correction. Paul had problems everywhere which only he could handle. This being the case as seen from his writings the New Testament epistles can often be best described as "occasional writings" or "spur of the moment writings." That is, each one of Paul's epistles was written on a particular occasion to deal with a specific situation faced by the writer. Some of these writers, such as Paul, would not have penned their epistles themselves; they dictated them to a scribal companion or professional.

Such a letter might be hastily written and sent off overnight with little review or polishing before it was sent on its way. Yet in other New Testament letters we detect a great amount of planning and care was taken in their writing. As mentioned, a few of the New Testament epistles, such as the epistle to the Hebrews, are clearly not spur-of-the moment affairs, but carefully built and constructed little treatises. In the Pauline corpus, the epistles of Romans and Ephesians fall into such a category, possibly others. Finally, the odd epistle, notably 1 John, shows revision over time, a "layering" of later parts and insertions over earlier ones.

Answer for yourself: Understanding the haphazard approach to writing the bulk of the corpus of New Testament documents as we find today then what should we reasonably expect to find in such a random collection of writings?

We must begin by acknowledeging first that these writers are, since writing on the spur-of-the moment are not setting out to present a comprehensive statement of their faith and the central figure of it-although it might be argued that Hebrews does, and to a certain extent Romans. Nevertheless, we should reasonably expect that from this collection of early Christian correspondence only basic defining doctrines and instruction and just a general background picture of the Christian movement.

Answer for yourself: Should we not expect this especially in light of the fact that these supposedly Jewish writers are writing new religious dogmas for ignorant Gentiles? Was it not expected that these new Gentile Godfearer and converts to the faith would get the real "meat" in the synagogues?

Acts 15:19-21 19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God: 20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. 21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: But what do we find when we examine these New Testament documents with a critical and informed eye?

- We find that important fundamentals of doctrine and background, which have come to be taught as Christians today and which almost two millennia of Christian tradition would lead us to expect, are entirely missing in these earliest epistles. In other words they are not in-depth in teaching about Christ Jesus.

- On the other hand, the epistle writers seem to be saying things about doctrine and background which present quite a different picture than the Gospel traditions have given us.

EXAMINING THE DOCUMENTS CLOSELY

In that portion of the New Testament following the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles, there are 22 documents. Most of them were NOT written by the authors whose names they bear. Among the 13 epistles assigned to Paul, scholarly study and computer analysis have judged only seven as genuine:

- Romans,
- 1 and 2 Corinthians,
- Galatians,
- Philippians,
- 1 Thessalonians, and
- Philemon.

More radical views on the Pauline corpus regard even fewer letters as genuine, or none at all. Such an interpretation goes back to F.C. Baur and the Dutch Radical School of the 19th century, but is making a comeback in some circles today. While it is likely that liberal scholarship will eventually enlarge the extent of later editing and interpolation it would allow within some of the "genuine" letters of Paul, it is too soon to overthrow the basic reliability of the standard seven epistles. While we are at it we should mention that 2 Corinthians is an editing together of at least two separate letters, and I Corinthians may also contain splicing and editing. Colossians, Ephesians and 2 Thessalonians were likely written within a decade or two after Paul's death (presumably in the 60s) by followers or members of his congregations. Their authors used Paul's name in order to give their letters greater authority. The three Pastoral epistles (1 & 2 Timothy and Titus) are also in Paul's name, but they present a picture of a later period and are assigned to the early second century, usually 110-130.

The epistle to the Hebrews is anonymous. Of those under the names of Peter, James, John and Jude, none today are judged to be authentic. That is, they were not written by those legendary followers of Jesus. These epistles too may originally have been anonymous, or had their original ascriptions dropped; new names were added, possibly at the time the epistles were collected and a canon was being formed. The term for this custom of adopting the name of a famous figure of the past to give one's writing greater authority is "pseudonymous."

Dating many of these documents is notoriously difficult, and wide latitude are allowed. Traditional scholarship has tended to date Hebrews and James early-possibly before the Jewish War of 66-70. 1 Peter and the three Johns come perhaps in the 80s or 90s. 2 Peter tends to be dated late, 100-120; this requires Jude to be earlier, since some of its passages have been inserted into 2 Peter. Finally, Revelation, written by a prophet named John who is no longer identified with the Gospel apostle of that name, is placed most often in the mid 90s. Taken as a whole, then, most of the epistolary corpus predates the Gospels; virtually all of it predates the wider dissemination of those Gospels.

All the documents of the New Testament, as well as almost all the non-canonical ones of the first two centuries, were written in Greek, the international language of the time.

BUT SOMETHING IS MISSING...WHAT?

I learned a long time ago in my Biblical studies that we can learn just as much if not more by focusing not on what a document "says" but what it "does not say."

Those 22 documents in the latter part of the New Testament contain roughly 80,000 words. They are the product of about a dozen different writers, Paul being the most prominent. In them, one encounters over 500 references to the object of all these writers" faith: "Jesus" or "Christ" or a combination of these names, or "the Son," plus a few to "the Lord" meaning Christ.

Let me warn the reader to pay attention to what comes next and concentrate as he reads. Understand before we proceed that these epistles predate the later Gospels by over 50 to 100 years.

Answer for yourself: Even if these writings are "occasional"- and some of them are more than that - is it feasible that in all this discussion and defense of their Christian faith (80,000 words), that we can find nowhere where anyone or any writer, by choice, accident or necessity, used words which identified the "the Christ" they are all talking about with his recent "human" incarnation: whether this be the man Jesus of Nazareth known to us from the Gospels, born of Mary and died under Pilate, or some other "genuine Jesus" unearthed by modern critical scholarship"? Please read the question again and ponder it!

This "Christ" of Paul and the epistles is not connected to the "incarnation" in any way but seems to be only a "Spiritual entity." As astonishing as such a silence may seem, an equation such as "Jesus of Nazareth was the Son of God and Messiah" is missing from all the early Christian correspondence!!! The Jesus of the epistles is not spoken of as a man who had recently lived.

And let us not forget that this is the "message" taught by the earliest Christians not only up to 55 CE with the Jerusalem Council but much beyond until we find the emergence of the Gospels some almost 30-35 years later (the Gospel of Mark being believed to be the earliest Gospel). That means that this picture of "the Christ" is the idea and message taught by the earliest Christians; that is until the later Gospels emerge which replaces "the Christ" with a human being.

BUT WHAT ABOUT...?

There are three passages in the epistles which present apparent exceptions to what has just been said, plus a third which could be claimed to fall into such a category, and I will deal with them immediately so as not to compromise the argument.

One is I Thessalonians 2:15-16. After a statement that the Thessalonian Christians have been mistreated by their fellow countrymen just as the Christians in Judea have been persecuted by their fellow Jews, we read this additional comment about those Jews:

1Thes 2:15-16 15 Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men: 16 Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost. (KJV)

That last sentence is an obvious allusion to the destruction of Jerusalem, which happened after Paul's death and many years after 1 Thessalonians was written. That means Paul could not have written this since he was killed prior to the Jewish War. The sentiments in those two verses are also very uncharacteristic of Paul's feelings towards his fellow Jews as expressed elsewhere in his letters. For those reasons, many scholars have judged these verses to be an interpolation, something inserted into the text at a later date. This, by the way, is the only passage in the entire corpus of New Testament epistles which assigns the Jews any responsibility in the death of the Christ figure.

The second "apparent exception" is found in I Timothy 6:13, a passing reference to Christ making a confession before Pontius Pilate. First a word about the Pastoral Epistles. In recent times, however, the authenticity of these epistles has been called in question by Schmidt, Schleiermacher, Baur, Renan, and many others. Baur asserted that they were written for the purpose of combating the Gnosticism of the 2nd century, and of defending the church from it by means of ecclesiastical organization, and that the date of their composition was about the year 150 AD.They were absent from the earliest First New Testament of Marcion, and him being a lover of Paul, surely would have included them if they had existed in his day. Various difficulties have been alleged against the reception of the Pastoral Epistles as Pauline. The chief of these are:

- (1) the difficulty of finding any place for these letters in the life of Paul, as that is recorded in the Acts and in the Pauline Epistles written before the Pastorals;
- (2) the fact that there are said to be in them indications of an ecclesiastical organization, and of a development of doctrine, both orthodox and heretical, considerably in advance of the Pauline age;
- (3) that the language of the epistles is, to a large extent, different from that in the accepted epistles;
- (4) the "most decisive" of all the arguments against the Pauline authorship--so writes Dr. A.C. McGiffert (A History of Christianity in the Apostolic Age, 402)--is that "the Christianity of the Pastoral Epistles is not the Christianity of Paul."

1 and 2 Timothy and Titus were definitely pseudonymous (written by a unknown person, passing themselves off as Paul.) They were written 35 to 85 years after Paul's death. Although such a writer would be considered a forger today, the practice was quite common in the 1st century CE, and was considered acceptable behavior (The Pauline Epistles, Copyrighted © 1995, 1996, 1997 by the Ontario Consultants on Religious Tolerance, PO Box 27026, Frontenac Post Office, Kingston ON Canada, K7M 8W5).

Now let us look at the passage in question.

1 Tim 6:13 13 I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; (KJV)

While not so clear-cut a case, some commentators find that this reference does not fit well into its surrounding context, and so one can ask whether it was part of the original letter. In any case, since this epistle comes from the early decades of the second century, the reference to Pilate, if authentic, could reflect the newly-developing view that Jesus had lived at Pilate's time and was executed by the Roman governor.

The third passage mentioned above is the sole Gospel-like scene to be found in all of Paul's letters: 1 Corinthians 11:23-26.

1 Cor 11:23-26 23 For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread: 24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. 25 After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. 26 For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come. (KJV)

Here Paul attributes words to Jesus at what he calls "the Lord's Supper," words identifying the bread and wine of the thanksgiving meal with Jesus' body and blood.

Answer for yourself: But is Paul recounting an historical event here? There are several arguments to be made that this is not the case, that Paul is instead describing something which lay in the realm of myth, just as the cult of the savior god Mithras had a myth about the establishment of its own sacred meal. In fact, the opening phrase of the passage points to Paul's reception of this information through revelation, not through an account of others who were supposedly participants at such an event.

1 Cor 11:23 23 For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you...

Let us never forget that Paul never met a human Jesus but only knew of him through a vision and revelation. Now noticing this maybe for the first time in your life we can understand fully that these passages, due to their date and wording, do not have to be regarded as a necessary reference to an historical Jesus who had lived on earth in Paul's own lifetime.

Thus, we are left with an entire corpus of early Christian correspondence from Paul which gives us no indication that the divine "Christ" these writers look to for salvation is to be identified with the man Jesus of Nazareth whom the Gospels place in the early first century - or, indeed, with any man in their recent past.

What I will propose to reveal to you as our studies increase is the fact that many references in the epistles to the "death" or "rising" of "Christ" are not, in themselves, references to physical events on earth or in history. They, along with a handful of "human" sounding terms, are part of the myth of the Son; they relate to the activities of this divinity in the supernatural realm. In other words this is the expression as taught not by later Western Christianity but Gnostic Christianity. For all its jarring incongruity with our modern outlook, not to mention centuries of tradition about a Gospel Jesus, this is a view that would have been perfectly at home in the philosophical and mythical thinking of the time. It was, in fact, a view shared by a whole range of pagan salvation cults, each of which had its own savior god who had performed deeds in the mythical world. Once you come to understand these "myths" as allegories and not "literalism" then you will be able to understand the Divine truths that they captured and related to mankind before the emergence of Judaism and Christianity. Like Paul's Christ (understood allegorically), savior gods such as Attis and Osiris had been killed; like Paul's Christ, Osiris had been buried (after being dismembered); like Christ on the third day, Adonis and Dionysus had been resurrected from death. All these things were not regarded as historical; they had taken place in the world of myth and higher reality. You will come to see these were meant to be understood allegorically as the "rebirth and awareness within mankind of his spirit/soul within his body). Because we have been conditioned to always take thing "literally" we miss the true meanings intended by such stories used by the Pagans to express spiritual enlightenment within themselves. It all falls into place when you gather enough knowledge and understanding of what these "myths" are and how they were to be understood in the first place.

PAUL STARTS OFF WITH HIS CHRIST IN HEAVEN ANYWAY

To get a clearer focus on what we just said, let's look at a passage from Acts, a document which many scholars now date to the second century and no longer regard as historically reliable. In Acts 2:22-36, the author puts a speech into the mouth of Peter. Here Peter says: "Men of Israel, hear me. I speak of Jesus of Nazareth, a man singled out by God and made known to you through miracles, portents and signs. . . ." He goes on to tell about this Jesus, concluding with these words: "God has made this Jesus, whom you crucified, both Lord and Christ."

This would surely be the most natural and inevitable way Christian discussion and preaching would proceed. The movement had supposedly begun as a response to a human man. This man had had such a profound effect on people that they forsook everything in life to preach him; for this man's sake they had abandoned, even betrayed, much that was held sacred in their Jewish heritage. He should have lain at the forefront of their minds. And so Acts would seem to indicate. In speech after speech, the Christian apostles start with the man Jesus and make certain factual statements and faith declarations about him.

Answer for yourself: But what do we find in the letters of Paul and other early writers?

They start with the divine Christ (not a human man), the figure of the Son in heaven, and make their faith statements about him. And there is no equation with an historical man, a human teacher who had recently lived.

Paul believes in the Son of God, not that anyone was the Son of God.

Here is Paul stating a capsule summary of the gospel of salvation he preached to the Corinthians:

1 Cor 15:3-4 3 For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; 4 And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Isn't there something missing here?

Answer for yourself: Lets reason together for a moment. Lets pretend Paul is coming into your city two thousand years ago and he begins to preach in the town square or the local synagogue. Would his listeners, from this account above, have known that the Christ he is speaking of was a man from Nazareth who had undergone this death and resurrection in Jerusalem only a couple of decades ago, on a hill and from a tomb just outside Jerusalem?

Answer for yourself: Would not an essential part of his gospel be the identity of the human incarnation of this Son of God and Christ - or even the fact of the incarnation itself?

But perhaps Paul left out such preliminaries when quoting his capsule gospel. What of his "definition" of Father and Son in 1 Corinthians 8:6

1 Cor 8:6 6 But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. (KJV)

This is language very reminiscent of Greek philosophy. But it would seem that a fundamental description of the Son is not to include the fact that he was incarnated in the person of a human Jesus, the man through whom information about the Son was presumably derived. Such an idea Paul does not mention - either here or anywhere else.

Throughout his letters, Paul has much to say about faith.

- Faith in Jesus as the avenue to eternal life.
- Faith that God has raised Jesus from the dead.
- Faith even in Jesus' death.
- Faith that God has revealed his great mystery about Christ to apostles like himself.

But Paul leaves out what is surely the most important faith of all, the one that comes first, without which none of the others come into play. Paul ignores the requirement that one must have faith that the man Jesus had been the incarnation of the divine, redeeming Son he is preaching. This message of Paul is quite different from the presentation of Jesus in the Synoptic Gospels which will come much later. (Earl Doherty, The Jesus Puzzle, 1999, p. 11-22).

Some of the epistles contain descriptions of the Son which are quite fantastic. Here is part of the one in Colossians 1:15-20:

Col 1:15-20 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 19 For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell; 20 And, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. (KJV)

This is very deep for non-educated laymen and labors in Paul's day. In fact this is related to wider philosophical trends of thinking. This "Christ" is not only the reflection of God, he is the agent through whom all the heavens and the earth have been created. He holds the entire universe together!

Answer for yourself: But has Paul again failed to tell us something very important. Did you catch it? Where is the earthly incarnation of this "Christ" in Paul's message?

Paul, or the Pauline writer fails to mention anywhere in his letter that this colossal power had been on earth in the person of Jesus of Nazareth.

Answer for yourself: Would not such a fantastic promotion of a crucified criminal human being to such a high cosmic a level of divinity be an important point that needed to explained to Paul's audience? Would they not wonder how a man became God?

Answer for yourself: Why is no justification or defense of such a cosmic exaltation of a human being NEVER offered by any epistle writer for such an unprecedented leap from the realm of "flesh" to "Spirit"?

The author of the epistle to the Hebrews also instructs us the Son (1:2-3):

Heb 1:1-3 1 God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, 2 Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; 3 Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Having read the book of Hebrews most likely in your life did you ever notice that there is never one reference to a human Jesus or association of a human Jesus with this Cosmic Son?

Though this author of the book of Hebrews devotes a dozen chapters to detailing the Son's redeeming activities in a heavenly sanctuary, he never identifies him with the man Jesus of Nazareth or any other human being. Though he can quote the Son's words in scripture, the "voice" through which God has spoken in the present age, he never gives his readers a single saying attributed to the Galilean preacher in the Gospels.

Answer for yourself: Does it not begin to appear to you that the earliest writers of the New Testament are writing about a "Christ" which is not a literal human being on this earth as we once thought?

These and similar passages in the epistles illustrate the orientation of early Christian thinking. The writer of the epistles start with the divine Christ and detail his activities. They do not start with the human man and identify their divine Christ with him, which is the approach we find in Acts and the Synoptic Gospels which came much later after these epistles and their presentation of "the Christ."

Answer for yourself: Then is it remotely possible that these later Gospels were written to alter the prior understanding of "the Christ" and does so by "incarnating" the "Christ" whereby he becomes no longer a Divine-Spiritual concept among and within Mankind but is not made to be a "literal" human being?

JESUS...COULD HE BE THE CENTER OF A MYTHOLOGICAL ALLEGORY?

We have only begun to scratch the surface of this problem of the "historical Jesus" and the "Christ of Faith." This preliminary dip into the early Christian view of the Son presents a picture which scholars have long found perplexing. The epistles cast Jesus in an exclusively mythological and spiritual role, while ignoring the fact or identity of his supposed incarnation which is presented in the Gospels, the man whose career on earth presumably started it all. The term "mythological" as employed in New Testament studies can have a more specific meaning than the popular sense of relating to legends or mythical stories. It may refer to features given to deities, spiritual forces, etc. which relate to their functioning in the heavenly world or in relation to other spiritual things. Here is how one scholar has put it (Herman Ridderbos, Paul and Jesus, p. 3):

"No one who examines the Gospels, and then reads the epistles of Paul can escape the impression that he is moving in two entirely different spheres. . . . When Paul writes of Jesus as the Christ, historical and human traits appear to be obscure, and Christ appears to have significance only as a transcendent divine being."

But the question which mainstream New Testament scholarship has never asked is in fact the most natural one of all: suppose Paul made no such leap?

Answer for yourself: Upon intense scrutiny of Paul's presentation of Christ where we find only this transcendent divine being, whose activities are never linked to history or an earthly location, is there any justification for assuming that Paul's Christ arose out of Jesus of Nazareth, out of the human figure who appears for the first time only in Gospels that were written some time after Paul?

Those who derive their view of Jesus (Joshua-Jesus) from the Gospels might be startled to realize the highly elevated nature of the Jesus preached by early Christians. He is a part of the very Godhead itself. His nature is integral with that of the Father. And he has been given all the titles previously reserved in Jewish thought for God alone. This Jesus is pre-existent: that is, he existed before all time with the Father, before the very creation of the world. Indeed, it is through him that the world has been created, and he is the energy force through which the workings of the universe are maintained. In addition, he serves as God's redeeming agent in the divine salvation plan for humankind, reconciling an estranged universe to God (Colossians 1:20). He is the unifying force of the entire cosmos (Ephesians 1:10). He has subjugated the demon spirits who pervade the world and harass humanity, and he has been given lordship over all earthly and supernatural powers.

This supposed elevation of a human man is quite staggering. To the extent that they are familiar with them, Christians have had almost 2000 years to get used to such lofty ideas. But we lose sight of the fact that if the orthodox picture is true, someone or some group one day decided to apply all these ideas to a human being for the first time and actually went out and preached them.

Answer for yourself: Is it possible to conceive of circumstances in which followers of such a man, a humble preacher whose deeds - critical scholars are now agreed - could not possibly have matched those of the Gospel story, would have elevated him to such a cosmic level?

Though men, such as the Roman emperors, could be called divine and "sons of God," Jesus' degree of elevation would have been virtually unprecedented in the entire history of religion (from a criminal to Divine). That might sound feasible but let me remind you that this is especially inconceivable among Jews. The Jewish mind had an obsession against associating anything human with God. He could not be represented by even the suggestion of a human image. Jews in their thousands had bared their necks before Pilate's swords simply to protest against the carrying of Roman military standards bearing human images into the city of Jerusalem. The idea that a man was a literal part of God would have been met by almost any Jew with abhorrence and horror. Biblical anthropomorphisms (human images applied to God) have been rooted out by writers such as Philo of Alexandria and the translators of the Targums (versions of the Bible in Aramaic) because it was regarded as unseemly to represent God as possessing human attributes. James Dunn, in his Parting of the Ways, p. 188, states that Paul shows not the slightest discomfort in applying to Jesus passages from the Hebrew Scriptures which originally referred to God. The hymn in Philippians 2:6-11 is a clear echo, he says, of Isaiah 45:23, which is "one of the strongest assertions of Jewish monotheism in the whole of the Scriptures." He goes on to declare: "That a Jew should use such a text of a man who recently lived in Palestine is truly amazing." (Earl Doherty, The Jesus Puzzle, 1999, p. 11-22).

Yet we are to believe not only that Jews were led to identify a crucified criminal with the ancient God of Abraham, but that they went about the empire and practically overnight converted huge numbers of other Jews to the same outrageous - and thoroughly blasphemous - proposition.

Answer for yourself: What is wrong with that picture now understanding that these are strict monotheists?

Within a handful of years of Jesus' supposed death, we know of Christian communities in many major cities of the empire, all presumably having accepted that a man they had never met, crucified as a political rebel on a hill outside Jerusalem, had risen from the dead and was in fact the Son of God and redeemer of the world.

Since many of the Christian communities Paul worked in existed before he got there, and since his letters do not support the picture Acts paints of extensive missionary activity on the part of the Jerusalem group around Peter and James, history does not record who performed this astounding feat.

Additionally, it was apparently done without any need for justification. There is not a murmur in any Pauline letter, nor in any other epistle, about a Christian need to defend such an outlandish doctrine. No one seems to challenge Christian preaching on these grounds, for the point is never addressed. Even in 1 Corinthians 1:18-24, where Paul defends the "wisdom of God" (the message he is preaching) against the "wisdom of the world," he fails to provide any defense for the elevation of Jesus of Nazareth to divinity. He can admit that to the Greeks and Jews the doctrine of the cross - that is, the idea of a crucified Messiah-is "folly" and "a stumbling block." But this has nothing to do with turning a man into God, a piece of folly he never discusses or defends, and a stumbling block no traditional Jew could have circumvented. That his opponents, and the Jewish establishment in general, would not challenge him on this fundamental Christian position, forcing him to provide some justification, is inconceivable.

Scholars have traditionally postulated this rapid application to Jesus of all the going philosophical and mythological concepts of the day. But they are unsure who did it, or why. It was hardly the product of that circle of simple fishermen whom the Gospels place around Jesus, men who would probably have been barely able to read much less understand philosophical concepts like the Greek Logos or Jewish personified Wisdom and decide that the teaching Master they followed had been the very embodiment of these concepts.

More recent scholars have suggested that gentile circles in places like Antioch were responsible over time for applying current philosophical interpretations about the workings of Deity to Jesus of Nazareth, and that Paul was converted to one of these "Christ cults." But this scenario runs into problems. Such groups, being distant from the places of Jesus' ministry and forming after his death, would have had no contact with the man himself. One has to wonder how anyone, gentile or Jew, would have been impelled to create such a cosmic product out of someone they had never laid eyes on. There is no question that what was allegedly made of Jesus owes much to Hellenistic (Greek) ideas, but these ideas not even gentiles had ever applied to an historical person. Thus we can judge that the leap would have been, in its own way, as unprecedented and shocking for them as it would have been for mainstream Jews. (Earl Doherty, The Jesus Puzzle, 1999, p. 11-22).

THE EXISTENCE OF "THE CHRIST" CULT

Moreover, such a proposal founders on a very important consideration. To judge by the chronology he outlines in Galatians 1 and 2, Paul's conversion had to have taken place somewhere between 32 and 36, only a few years after Jesus' presumed death. Since Paul did not invent the Christ cult (he persecuted such groups, and there are prePauline elements in his letters which are the product of others), it existed at that time. It must have been thriving even in Jerusalem.

Answer for yourself: Who, then, in the very heart of religious Israel, had turned Jesus into a cosmic deity and attached Hellenistic mythologies to him almost as soon as he was laid in his grave?

Answer for yourself: Did Paul, a Jew born and bred, as he tells us, simply swallow the whole blasphemous proposition without a murmur of indigestion and fell back on his pagan upbringing in Troas?

Answer for yourself: Did he and so many other Jews allow gentiles - wherever they may have been - to persuade them to betray the most cherished principles of their Jewish heritage and turn a man into God?

Answer for yourself: Why? What would have led Paul, or gentiles off in northern Syria, to take a simple preacher whom they knew only by report, and turn him into a cosmic deity - no matter how strong they had been influenced by Hellenistic ideas?

Answer for yourself: If Paul had no interest in the teacher and his teachings (as evidenced by the scant reference to any of Jesus' teachings), no interest in the miracle worker or apocalyptic prophet, of what use was this Jesus to him as a candidate for divine redeemer?

Both Mack and Robert Funk speak of the Pauline cult's point of departure as the fact of Jesus' "noble death," but noble deaths are common enough in history, including Jewish history, and never before or since have they led to divinization on so exalted a scale. The simple fact of a reputed noble death would hardly have persuaded an educated, observant Jew such as Paul claimed to be, to contravene the most sacred precepts of his heritage and associate this particular man, one he had never met, with God." The cultic presentation of Jesus' crucifixion does not fit the "noble death" scenario. The latter is classically of the warrior or the teacher who dies for his country, his followers, his teachings. These things focus on a life, a cause; in Judaism it is invariably for the sake of the Law. This is precisely what is missing in the Christ cult, which has nothing to do with Jesus' life, teachings or followers. Dying for sin is not in the same category, especially when placed in the spirit realm; this is a mystical spiritual concept.

CONCLUSION

There is no denying that the earliest Christian record in the earlier epistles shows us a Christ Jesus who is presented exclusively in mythological, transcendent terms, with no reference to any human career or earthly teachings and deeds. This silence as applying to the human career or earthly existence of "the Christ" is both deafening and startling beyond imagination! Let me leave you with several "key" questions posted by Earl Doherty in his The Jesus Puzzle, 1999, p. 11-22):

Answer for yourself: But if a group is going to elevate its teacher to divinity and apply every philosophical concept of the day to him, why would it at the same time strip away everything to do with the human life he had lived, the life which supposedly had engendered their response to him in the first place?

Answer for yourself: Why would it create mythological statements, hymns and creeds about him which contained not a single reference to an earthly career?

Answer for yourself: If, as the scholars claim, the mythological overlay - the divinity, the pre-existence, the unifying force to a sundered universe, the redemptive significance - is an "interpretation" of Jesus of Nazareth, how are we to understand it as such when the object of the interpretation is never mentioned?

Answer for yourself: Since the epistle writers themselves give us no hint that they are "interpreting" a human man, are not scholars guilty of "reading into" the documents things they wish to see there, rather than what the documents actually say? We spoke of this above if you remember.

Answer for yourself: Would it not make better sense to view that earliest record as representing a belief in a spiritual entity who is but another version of the prevailing myths and thought patterns of the day, something upon which an historical garment was eventually hung? Is this presentation of "the Christ" only a reformulation and representation of God's "Christ" since the beginning of time?

Here is your answer to the above perplexing conundrum which this website will reveal.

Generally speaking, the ancient gnostics, both Christian and non-Christian Gnostics, primarily viewed "the Christ" as an eternal, celestial power, the "Logos", with which it is possible to have an intimate, personal relation, since our higher consciousness is made in its image. For this reason, gnostics stressed the experiential union with the divine, and showed little interest in the historical Jesus, whom it has always been impossible to know in a concrete sense, or even accurately in a historical sense. Because of this, gnostic speculation has always possessed a very strong ahistorical, cosmological tendency and dimension, preferring to concentrate on the liberating realization of Christ within. Now you know Paul as a Gnostic not only because of many of his religious teachings in the New Testament but he was also unconcerned about the teachings of the historical Jesus.

This is what you will see as our further study and investigation into Gnosticism and the earliest New Testament texts and their later alterations will reveal.

If we had no other documentary record than the New Testament epistles, we would probably regard the Son of God preached by apostles like Paul as a divine being like all the other gods of the day, or indeed of any day: confined to the supernatural dimension and communicating with believers and spokespersons through inspiration, visions and other spiritual manifestations. This is the way gods have been perceived to interact with the world from time immemorial. Paul's Christ would have been no different, and no more difficult to comprehend.

LEAVING YOU WITH A BIG QUESTION

But the later Gospels throw a monkey wrench into all of this. Before their arrival there was not really a problem for the hearers of Paul understood "his gospel" as the "allegorical Christ." But that would change after Paul's death and with the writing of the Second New Testament later by Rome in refutation of this Mystical Christ and the destruction of Marcion's First New Testament which also taught this Cosmic Christ as a Divine Principle and not a human being.

Answer for yourself: But if, on the basis of the later Gospel record, it is claimed that Paul and his colleagues are speaking of a human man who was recently on earth and set the new faith in motion and in a historical timeline, how is one to account for the earlier epistle's silence on such a man and his career?

The only sensible conclusion which will be proven throughout this website is the later tampering with, alteration of, and forgery of the earliest New Testament given to us by Gnostic Christians who safeguarded and taught "the Christ" as it had been understood and handed down since time began by Egypt. What we find is that Rome will come along and take control of this "Christian Faith" and destroy almost beyond recognition its religious belief system and in so doing interpret the whole "literally" instead of "allegorically." This I will now prove in the upcoming article. The sad fact about this is that this "literalism" reduces it adherents to "idolatry" which is related to "blasphemy of the Name of God"; the unforgivable sin of both Judaism and ironically Christianity as well.

Answer for yourself: Will you be able to forgive Rome for corrupting the earliest understanding of God and His "Christ" when they forged the New Testament and took these truths from you?

THE SON OF GOD AS "THE CHRIST"

THE LINK BETWEEN THE "LOGOS" AND GREEK PHILOSOPHY

If you want a challenging and a most surprising religious study then let me recommend an in-depth study of the origin of religious concepts such as the "Son of God," "the Sophia," "the Logos," and "the Christ". To your amazement, you will find is that these religious concepts have been among mankind since the beginning of time and represent some of the earliest Divine Revelations given to mankind as far back as ancient Egypt and beyond. Of course the names might change for this indwelling Presence of God depending upon nations and culture but the underlying religious concepts are the same. What is important for our study is the knowledge of the fact that this spiritual idea was a fundamental religious idea of the age right before as well as after the first century where we look for the emergence of Christianity. We will discover upon examination that these religious concepts like "the Christ" and "the Sophia" are ideas which Christianity assimilated from preexistent religious teachings and were presented to world in a new way. This restatement of the ancient Divine Mysteries dealing with the indwelling Presence of God within all things, including mineral, plant, animal, and human, was sadly distorted and radically reinterpreted whereby the mystical and metaphysical understanding of the Divine Spark and Seed of divinity within the whole of humanity was crudely "literalized", "historicized," and "limited" to but one person to the exclusion of the whole of humanity by the emerging Roman Church following the second century C.E.

Most of us are familiar somewhat with the Old Testament and Judaism's view of its God. Judaism has a long history understanding its God as the sole authority and supreme being which has endured throughout the ages. Little has changed for centuries upon centuries. But several centuries before Christianity, Greek thinkers had arrived at their own concept of monotheism. Because they perceived the universe as moving in obedience to a stable law, they postulated a single cosmic mind or governing force behind it. This is know as the "world soul" or the "soul of the Universe." Strands of ideas before Plato became consolidated in Plato, and out of his school came later ideas which, if they did not all go back to the Master himself, were attributed to him and called "Platonism."

This Platonic conception of God was that he was an Absolute Being, a Unity, that he constituted pure mind and inhabited a world of pure spirit. He was not and never could be a part of the imperfect world of matter and the senses, nor could he make any personal contact with it. To humans who inhabited the material, changing world he was inaccessible and incapable of being understood. This is the meaning of the word "transcendent." God is a transcendent being, totally separated from the material universe. God was indefinable.

Platonism taught that the governing force of the universe (God) was something which lay outside matter. God was the true reality while the visible world was only a distant, imperfect reflection of him. Thus the universe was "dualistic" (in two parts). This might sound simple but big problems lay ahead as men reasoned that this understanding of God did not satisfy the cry of men's hearts for God. Surely a compromise was needed otherwise otherwise mankind could have no contact with God at all and that was impossible for humanity who believed they were created in the image of God. Thinkers reasoned:

- For how was God to be revealed if He possessed no interface with the world of humans?
- How would humanity benefit from what God had to offer if there were no channel between them?
- How, indeed, had the world even come about if God was so remote?

Answer for yourself: How was this problem to be handled?

Out of necessity men had to come to an understanding and bridge the gap between the realm of the invisible pure Spirit and the realm of visible matter. Out of necessity some intermediate force or being had to exist for the link between the Spirit and matter to be connected. Many religious concepts were envisioned to explain this distance between the invisible God and the realm of visible matter. The first task of this "assumed" intermediary had been creation. In Platonism, the process of creation can be described by saying that the mind of God produced Ideas, and another aspect of this mind, God's creative energy (which Plato called the "Demiurge"), took these Ideas or Forms and fashioned copies of them out of matter, thus producing the material world perceived by the senses. All these elements in the mind of God, his Ideas, the creative forces, were seen as "intermediate" and came collectively to be referred to by the term Logos (literally, "Word").

Answer for yourself: Did this concept of the "intermediary" begin with the Greeks or can it be traced as far back as Egypt? Yes it can for we first meet the concept of "the Logos" and "the Word" of Creation in Egyptian theology.

The Platonic Logos was thus an emanation of God and God's point of contact with the world. In addition to the Logos being "the" agent of creation, the Logos was the "revealer" of God to mankind! It was God's Logos that revealed God, His nature, His divine will and was the channel of divine aid to the world. The Logos was the bridge between the world of pure soul or pure Spirit and the world of physical matter. The Logos was also the image of God according to which humans were created.

Platonists tended not to regard the Logos as a personal being, but more an abstract force. For some, however, the Logos could provide salvation.

Answer for yourself: Did this religious concept of mediation always remain as a "non" person? No. We find the incarnation of "the Logos" in revealing document entitled Discourse to the Greeks. This document has in the past been erroneously ascribed to Justin Martyr since it speaks of the Logos as instructing and having "ceaseless care over us," making "human beings gods." Here, for the first time, the Logos has become a personal divinity!

Answer for yourself: Is this Discourse to the Greeks a "Christ" centered document and a Christian document? No. But yet we begin to see the emergence of ideas which will be assimilated by key thinkers in the soon to emerge religion of Christianity. .

Owing to the problem of bridging the gap between the realm of pure Spirit and the realm of physical matter the impetus of the age was to bring the intermediary between God and the world closer to "literal" matter. This intermediary has to be more like mankind yet he is pure Spirit. Efforts began to mold this spiritual concept into a more personal being which could be understood as more accessible on a human level. This intermediary between the realm of pure Spirit and the physical realm of matter was to be "the Son of God." The Son of God was also therefore called "the Logos."

There are two ways to view "the Son of God":

- The Logos - Son of God dwells within God's creation. It is internal. A strong monotheist like Philo, a Jew, and who was the most prominent philosopher of Hellenistic Judaism would stop short of making his Son and the Logos a personal divine being. Philo of Alexandria, Egypt, is the foremost example of the input of Greek ideas into Jewish thought, a phenomenon which produced as important type of physiology and culture during this period, called "Hellenistic Judaism". Instead, Philo envisioned Moses as a man into whom the power and qualities of the Logos had been infused. Philo stressed that the Logos dwelled within mankind and that it was external to mankind. The Divine Spark of God was within God's creation; especially His highest creation.

- But other Jews did not feel the same rigid restrictions toward God, and could envision their Son as a personal divinity beside God in heaven.

From the Logos of Greek and Philonic philosophy to Paul's Christ Jesus is hardly any distance at all once these religious concepts were enlarged

THE JEWISH PERSONIFICATION OF GOD'S WISDOM

Philo, a Hellenistic Jew, embraced the Logos and associated ideas in his synthesis of Hebrew and Greek religious concepts.

Answer for yourself: What ancient Jewish concept existed at this time that also expressed companionship with God and also seen involved as the agent in Creation as we have seen previously with "the Logos"? God's Wisdom.

Mainstream Judaism had its own intermediary figure going back centuries, certainly as old as Plato if not older. The Jews, unlike the Greeks, never saw God as inaccessible. Jewish scribes of the period after the Exile presented God as making himself known and working in the world through a part of Himself they called "Wisdom." There are those who maintain that "Wisdom" was simply a poetic way of expressing certain of God's activities, but most scholars will admit that the portrayal of Wisdom in the biblical and extra-biblical literature makes her a distinct personage or force (Helmer Ringgren, Word and Wisdom, p. 118, 132, etc.).

This was no "Son" of God, however, for the figure of Wisdom was a female. Let us take not that the grammatical gender of "wisdom" in Hebrew is feminine! Wisdom took on a status and personality of her own. She developed her own "myths" about coming to earth, although there was NEVER any thought of her being physically incarnated.

Here is what the Old Testament Book of Proverbs has to say about Wisdom (from 8:1-36):

"By the gate, Wisdom calls aloud: 'Men, it is to you I call . . . I am Wisdom, I bestow shrewdness, and show the way to knowledge and prudence. . . The Lord created me the beginning of his works. when he set the heavens in their place I was there . . . I was at the Lord's side each day. . . Happy is the man who keeps to my ways."

There are two important aspects of Wisdom here:

- First, she is "preexistent," that is, she was with God in heaven before the creation of the world.
- She is associated with God in creation, serving as God's agent in the process of creation:

"In wisdom the Lord founded the earth and by understanding he set the heavens in their place." (Proverbs, 3:19)

Answer for yourself: What should we have noticed here?

We should have noticed that the religious themes of "pre-existence" and being an "agent in creation" are familiar to what we have read in the New Testament concerning Paul's Christ. These same spiritual attributes are given to the "Spiritual Christ" in the religious thought of Paul.

Eph 3:9 9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: (KJV)

2 Cor 8:9 9 For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich. (KJV)

Gal 4:4 4 But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, (KJV)

Phil 2:5-6 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: (KJV)

Col 1:15-16 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: (KJV)

Eph 4:8-9 8 Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. 9 Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? (KJV)

Paul shares with us in the above passages the pre-existence of "the Christ." Paul pleads that converts live as sons because "God sent forth his son"; argues for self effacement from the fact that Christ, being in the form of God, "emptied himself"; argues that "the Christ" is the first of God's emanations that is responsible for the creation of all later things; both in the invisible spiritual realm as well as the visible physical realm. As "Lord from heaven" Christ provides the pattern of our resurrected humanity; as he first descended, so he has ascended, the measure of his triumph and assurance of ours.

Baruch 3:37 gives us a line which, even though originally intended as a reference to the Torah (the Jewish Law contained in the five biblical books of Moses, which mainstream rabbinic thought identified with Wisdom), may have had a profound influence on the future:

"Thereupon wisdom appeared on earth and lived among men."

Answer for yourself: Was this one of the footsteps on the path that eventually brought to earth a different emanation of God-the Son? Perhaps the writer of the hymn to the Logos which was adapted as a Prologue to the final version of the Gospel of John turned it into a song of the incarnation:

"So the Logos (Word) became flesh and dwelt among us." (Jn. 1:14)

In the "Wisdom of Solomon," perhaps the most important surviving piece of Hellenistic Jewish writing, we can see a clear and exotic blending of Wisdom with the Logos. This document was almost certainly written in Alexandria, probably in the early first century CE. Like the Logos, Wisdom is now the divine power active in the world, the spirit that pervades and governs all things. She, too, is pre-existent and an agent of creation. She is God's "throne-partner," a step away from Christ sitting at the right hand of God.

24: For wisdom is more moving than any motion: she passeth and goeth through all things by reason of her pureness. 25: For she is the breath of the power of God, and a pure influence flowing from the glory of the Almighty: therefore can no defiled thing fall into her. 26: For she is the brightness of the everlasting light, the unspotted mirror of the power of God, and the image of his goodness. 27: And being but one, she can do all things: and remaining in herself, she maketh all things new: and in all ages entering into holy souls, she maketh them friends of God, and prophets. 28: For God loveth none but him that dwelleth with wisdom. 29: For she is more beautiful than the sun, and above all the order of stars: being compared with the light, she is found before it. 30: For after this cometh night: but vice shall not prevail against wisdom.

In the above passage notice the parallels with Paul's Christ:

- Wisdom (she) is the breath and power of God
- Wisdom is the expressed image of God
- Wisdom is all powerful and can do all things
- Wisdom dwells within the souls of the righteous
- Wisdom existed before creation with God

It should be now obvious that the concept of God's Wisdom (she) and Paul's Christ are the same concept and idea!

THE SON AS "WISDOM" AND THE "LOGOS"

Answer for yourself: Have we ever read about God's "Wisdom" in the New Testament and not noticed it?

Similar ideas and concepts that we encounter in the Wisdom of Solomon saturates the New Testament epistles. We only need look at the opening verses about the nature of the "Son" in the book of Hebrews, a document which comes either from Alexandria, or from some Palestinian circle with close ties to that city's philosophy.

Heb 1:2-3 2 Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; 3 Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did we not see above in the Wisdom of Solomon that Wisdom (feminine aspect of God) was God's agent in creation, the expressed image of God, and the power of God as we now find expressed though the agent of God's Son? We sure did!

Answer for yourself: Is then Wisdom (she) and God's Son the same? Yes they are! God's names in the Bible are both masculine and feminine and we find this expressed through different ways where personification is used to express these nuances within the Godhead. God's Wisdom (she) and God's Son (Christ) are the same idea!

The hymn in Colossians 1:15-20 is stamped with the same imagery:

Col 1:15-19 15 Who (He...God's Son) is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. 18 And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence. 19 For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell;...

As we saw before where God's Wisdom (She) is the image of God, the first of God's creations, the agent in all other creations that follow, the Sustainer of all creation, and pre-existent with God we now find the identically same concepts expressed though the masculine agency of God's Son. Paul tells us the same story as we saw in the Wisdom of Solomon only he changes the agent from the feminine Wisdom to the masculine Son.

Paul himself tells us that Christ:

Is the power of God and the wisdom of God

1 Cor 1:24 24 But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God. (KJV)

Is the very image of God:

2 Cor 4:4 4 In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. (KJV)

Is the agent of creation, channeling the source of all things that resides in the Father:

1 Cor 8:6 6 But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. (KJV)

Paul and other early Christian writers are speaking of Christ in exactly the same language as we find previously in the broader philosophical world, both Greek and Jewish.

Answer for yourself: Is Paul writing any new revelation when he speaks of "the Christ" or is he retelling what was already known and understood by the people of his day? Paul is only giving a review. This is not "revelation" but only further "illumination" of prior revelation given to the Ancients.

Paul's idea of the spiritual Son has absorbed both the Logos and personified Wisdom. In reading scripture and imagining he is being inspired to a view of God's Son, Paul is drawing on the prominent ideas of his day and the deeper heritage which lay behind them.

Scholarship fully recognizes this, of course, but most Pastors and Christians don't simply because their studies are deficient in such areas of their faith.

What is very important for us to now understand is that ALL these current ideas were applied to the Joshua-Jesus. Lacking explicit historical evidence to the existence of Jesus of Nazareth outside of the one book, the New Testament, then one can assume that if there was a historical Jesus that those who came in contact with him, his apostles and other followers, were so overwhelmed by the force of Jesus' personality, by the things he had said and done, that immediately after his death and perceived resurrection they went out, gathered all this sophisticated mythological theory and heaped it upon the humble Jewish preacher they had followed. This is one possibility but not the only one. At the same time in so doing we have to also assume that in the process, those followers abandoned all former interest in the details of his life and teachings and presented their master in allegorical terms whereby the personified concepts of Wisdom and God's Son were applied to him. In such a way he became greater in death than ever in life.

As I said the above is one possible explanation for what we find in the New Testament concerning Jesus. Yet the inherent fallacy in such a scenario is easy to see. In the above passages, early Christian writers are presenting the Son as "the image of the invisible God," etc. They are describing a divine figure in terms of divine attributes. No identification with a human man is ever made, no writer gives us even a hint that an "application" to an historical Jesus is anywhere in their minds. As suggested earlier, scholars are guilty of reading into the text things they find hard to believe are not there. There is no getting around the deafening silence of the absence of any credible and unforged record of the life of Jesus outside the New Testament!!!

ALLEGORY NOW BECOMES LITERAL

If you happen to possess a Harper's Bible Dictionary I would direct you to the comments by D. Moody Smith under the heading of the "Logos". Here we find that he states that "it is not immediately obvious why a man sent from God, even the Messiah of Israel, should have played such a role," referring to the Logos' role as God's agent in creating the world. He is quite right.

That Jews, no less, could assign to a crucified preacher the creation of the universe is beyond belief (THINK!)! But of course they did nothing of the sort. The Jews assigned the role of God's agent in creation not to a man but to the spiritual Son in heaven, just as thinkers before them had assigned it to God's Wisdom and others to the intermediary Logos. Due to the later addition of the "literal" Gospels by Rome when they altered the "allegorical" concept of mediation between the pure Spiritual Realm (God) and the Universe (physical realm) we then lose the truths that were first expressed not only in Marcion's First New Testament which did not teach a human Christ or even a human Jesus. But Rome will change all that through forgery, destruction, addition, and pure invention of this pre-existing New Testament after 180 C.E. through the effort of Irenaeus and others which will follow in his footsteps. The historical man entered the picture only when the heavenly son & heavenly wisdom was later thought to have come to earth and lived a life told of in the Gospels. Thus the dating of the Gospels are crucial. Modern scholarship has challenged the traditional dating of the Gospels as "early" and has brought to light damaging facts to this hypothesis like the absence of any quote from a "named Gospel" by any Christian writer until after 180 C.E. (THINK)!!! Cosmic beliefs about a supposed historical man were much easier to accept when applied long after the "fact," and easier still when created by a largely gentile mind.

On the matter of presumed Jewish response to a human Jesus, one of the common observations about groups in the 2nd and 3rd centuries which are styled "Jewish-Christian" is that they did not regard Jesus as a divine figure. The Ebionites, for example, saw Jesus as a prophet Messiah but not the Son of God. But all these groups flourished only after the first century, and the record of fragments from their documents (as in Epiphanius and Hippolytus) comes from the 3rd and 4th centuries. There is great difficulty in tracing Ebionite views back into the 1st century, especially to the Jerusalem community known to us through the letters of Paul.

Thus, our evidence that Jewish-Christians regarded an historical Jesus as simply a human prophet arises only after the figure contained in the Gospels had come to be widely known and accepted as historical. And this again is quite late; as late as 150 to 180 C.E. In fact, certain preserved fragments suggest that earlier Jewish-Christian sects did indeed envision a heavenly origin for Christ, though not as a Son of God. "They (the Ebionites) say that he was not begotten of God the Father, but created as one of the archangels . . . that he rules over the angels and all the creatures of the Almighty." (Epiphanius, Refutation of All Heresies, 30.16,4; E. Hennecke, New Testament Apocrypha, vol.1, p.158.)

These observations support the view that Jews, as a general rule, were unable to associate a human man with God. Once Jesus was brought to earth and given a human identity through the Roman Gospels in the mid-second century (produced in refutation of Marcion's Gnostic allegorical "Christ" as presented in his First New Testament in 140 C.E.), Jewish groups who were part of the Christian faith (and carried along like everyone else by the juggernaut of the Gospel accounts of Jesus) could no longer accept divinity for such a figure and had to reduce him to human dimensions.

As I stated above such an attitude surfaces as early as Justin around 150 C.E., whose character Trypho the Jew, in Dialogue with Trypho, serves to represent the outlook and opinions toward Christianity current in Justin's day, when the historical Jesus was beginning to make inroads into the thought of the time (around 150 C.E.). In chapter 88, Justin puts these words into Trypho's mouth: "For you utter many blasphemies, in that you seek to persuade us that this crucified man ought to be worshiped." Such an attitude in the 2nd and 3rd centuries, whether among Jews or Jewish-Christians, was not likely to have differed from that of the 1st century, and thus the entire picture of Christianity (up to this time) beginning with a response to a human Jesus by great numbers of Jews, elevating him to the status of a pre-existent divinity with all of God's titles, must be dismissed.

A CHANNEL BETWEEN GOD AND THE WORLD..."IN CHRIST"

Paul's Christ, like Wisdom and the Logos, is God's channel in his dealings with the world. It is not a person yet dwell within every living creature.

Paul has an expression to convey this idea. In the letters of Paul and those who later wrote in his name, we find the phrase "in Christ Jesus" or "through Christ Jesus" over a hundred times. With Wisdom and the Logos in mind, we can see just what this phrase means.

- Rom 6:11 11 Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. (KJV)
- 2 Cor 5:17 17 Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. (KJV)
- Rom 12:5 5 So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. (KJV)
- 1 Cor 1:30 30 But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: (KJV)
- 1 Cor 4:15 15 For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel. (KJV)
- 2 Cor 1:21 21 Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; (KJV)
- 2 Cor 5:19 19 To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. (KJV)

Here Paul is using the idea of "in Christ" to represent a channel of contact with God; Christ is the means by which Christians are "alive" to God.

Answer for yourself: Now that we have seen that Paul's Christ is nothing new then were what Christianity considers pagans alive unto God through their "Logos" and their "Wisdom" and their "Sophia" that provided the foundation for Paul's later "Christ"? If you read Plato and Philo you have a hard time putting these people in "hell" for their understanding and love of God permeate every page of their writings.

This intermediary channel is a Spiritual force that has been present since time began; past, present, and future. This Spiritual force has no reference to a recent historical event or person; it is only a "Divine Concept"!

At the opening of 1 Corinthians, Paul says that the congregation at Corinth is:

1 Cor 1:2 2 Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours: (KJV)

Christ is the medium which links the believers of that city with God himself.

Romans 8:39:

Rom 8:39 39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. (KJV)

Here Christ is the spiritual force which embodies and conveys God's love. Like the Logos, though in a more personal sense, the intermediary Christ allows humanity to reach God and to receive benefits from him. It is often said that the idea of the Logos pervades Paul, but the word itself is missing. Paul, in his writings, uses other words to express the "Logos" such as "Christ" and "Wisdom of God":

- 1 Cor 1:24 24 But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God. (KJV)
- 1 Cor 1:30 30 But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: (KJV)
- 1 Cor 2:7 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: (KJV)
- 1 Cor 12:8 8 For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; (KJV)
- Eph 1:17 17 That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: (KJV)
- Eph 3:10 10 To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, (KJV)
- Col 1:28 28 Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus: (KJV)
- Col 3:16 16 Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. (KJV)

The above passages not only equate "the Christ" with "Wisdom" but again we find Paul referring to the pre-existence of both "the Christ" and "Wisdom of God."

Titus 3:4-6 tells us:

Titus 3:4-6 4 But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared, 5 Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; 6 Which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour; (KJV)

Normally we have been taught that "Jesus Christ" or "Christ Jesus" is a human being in the New Testament and like we have seen in the Gospels "the Christ" is depicted as such but the earliest epistles teach "the Christ" and "Christ Jesus" (Joshua-Jesus) as a spiritual bridge between God and the physical creation. Let us remember that in Hebrew there is such a thing as "parallelism" and the the Bible is full of antithetical and synonymous parallelism. The above passage is rather simply if you understand that Hebrew thought often repeats itself over and over again by saying the ideas either twice or the opposite twice. Above we have a perfect case of synonymous parallelism where the same idea is repeated twice. The above verse is now to be understood correctly. God is the ONLY SAVIOR thorough the medium of the Holy Ghost which is God's agent of salvation to the world. We have already seen that another name for the "Wisdom of God" is the Holy Spirit or the Holy Ghost. Likewise we have seen Paul's "Christ" is another term for the "Wisdom of God" as well. God is the ONLY SAVIOR and God brings salvation to mankind through the agency of His Wisdom and the Christ. We will see that these are expressions of the feminine and masculine attributes of God in His saving grace. God come to mankind through His Wisdom (the Sophia) and His Christ (the Son). These again are allegorical concepts ONLY and were understood as such by the Ancients and the believers of the first century. Only later do we find an aberration of these earliest Divine Truths as these allegories take upon themselves human flesh through the later Gospels. The saving acts which have occurred in the present time are not the events of Jesus' death and resurrection. They are God's granting of the rite of baptism (being born again) and the bestowing of the Spirit (Judaism teaches this as receiving the soul that comes down from Heaven). The Joshua-Jesus, if you read the article, is again the allegory by which this channel along which this Spirit has flowed from God to the world. This allegory will take upon itself human flesh when proto-Catholics like Irenaeus refutes the earliest accounts of "the Christ" in Marcion's Pauline New Testament and out comes Rome's "golden calf" which is our current New Testaments today!

Christ, then, operates entirely on a spiritual level. He is a communicating and sacramental power now present in the world, impregnating the hearts and minds of believers. These are highly mystical ideas, and there is no justification for scholarship's frequent attempt to see the Pauline phrase "in or through Christ" as a cryptic summary of Jesus' life on earth. (Earl Doherty, The Jesus Puzzle, 1999, p. 87-94).

"THE CHRIST" HAS COME FOR THE EARLY CHRISTIANS

Paul, or a pro-Pauline writer tell us in the Book of Colossians:

Col 1:26 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: (KJV)

The earliest Christians after Pentecost understood that God's Son (Logos-Christ-Wisdom-Sophia) as a Spiritual entity was NOW in their day now being revealed to the world. For them God's Son (Christ-Logos-Wisdom-Sophia) has been "sent" into the world.

Acts 2:1-4 1 And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. 2 And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. 3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. 4 And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. (KJV)

We have seen in earlier articles that the name of the "Holy Spirit" was also understood to be terms used for God's Wisdom (Sophia-Logos) as well as "the Christ." Thus in the earliest Pauline passages the early Church understood that God has sent His "Christ" to them and God through His Christ tabernacles within them in a new way.

Early Christians saw the spiritual Christ as having arrived in a real way, active and speaking through themselves. When Paul and other writers speak of the "Spirit" sent from God, they are usually referring to the traditional idea of the Holy Spirit, the power and presence of God acting within inspired teachers and apostles. Yet on occasion we see a more explicit identification of this Spirit with Christ himself (as in Philippians 1:19), so that Christ becomes a spirit force in his own right.

Phil 1:19 19 For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, (KJV)

Gal 4:6 6 And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. (KJV)

1 John 5:20 reads: "We know that the Son of God has come (literally, "is come"- in the present tense) and given us understanding to know him who is real." The Son is working among Christians at the present time, imparting knowledge of God.

Eph 2:17 17 And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. (KJV)

In the same way, we can understand the "coming" in Ephesians 2:17: "And coming, he (the Christ) announced the good news . . ."

Answer for yourself: What was the content of that news as taught by "the Christ" that the writer of the Book of Ephesians mentions?

"peace to you who were far away and peace to those who were near, for through him we both alike have access in one spirit to the Father." [NEB/my trans.] (Earl Doherty, The Jesus Puzzle, 1999, p. 87-94).

It is very important that you notice that instead of taking the opportunity to refer to some of Jesus' earthly teachings, the writer of the epistles of Ephesians quotes ONLY from Old Testament Scripture: Isaiah 57:19, which speaks of an end-time reconciliation between peoples. Even the preliminary words about preaching good news are based on Isaiah 52:7. This is the Christ who has "come" in the spirit and speaks to the world - a "speaking" found in the Hebrew Scripture ...in the Old Testament Scriptures. The final phrase of the quote identifies him as a spiritual channel to the Father. The writer of the epistle of Ephesians does not give us "one" teaching of the Jesus of the Gospels; not one!!!

A CHRIST WHO INHABITS THE WORLD OF SCRIPTURE

This fact above has led to an important insight into how the early Christians viewed Christ. Not only is the Son revealed in scripture, the Son speaks from scripture. Certain passages in the sacred writings and Hebrew Scriptures were regarded as the voice of the Son, speaking directly to the world.

This is most evident in the epistle to the Hebrews. It begins with the statement:

Heb 1:2 2 Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Having begun the book of Hebrew by stating that God's Son is not "speaking" then where do we find this message of the Son as spoken of by the writer of the Book of Hebrews? NOWHERE!

In the absence of any teaching of the Son of God in the epistle of Hebrews then this "speaking of the Son" would seem to be something other than the teaching of Jesus of Nazareth, for not a single Gospel saying is offered through 13 chapters, not even a reference to the fact that Jesus had taught in an earthly ministry. Instead, when "quoting" the voice of the Son to make his arguments, the author draws on passages from the Hebrew Scripture that are identified as the Son's own words.

When seeking to illustrate (2:12) that the Son considers believers to be his brothers, he offers Psalm 22:22, "I will proclaim thy name to my brothers." More than one commentator has sought to explain why the writer would not have drawn on such sayings as are found in the Gospels, for example in Mark 3:35: "Whoever does the will of God is my brother." Hugh Montefiore (Hebrews, p. 63) suggests that this practice of putting scriptural texts into Jesus' mouth was "the tradition of the early church." That is an understatement of unbelievable proportions. What we have seen and continue to see is that in the complete lack of any historical reference to the Jesus of Nazareth outside of this "one" book the New Testament the early church and writers of the New Testament were left with no recourse owing to the fact that no historical record existed of the human Jesus and any supposed teachings. They were left with pure invention and purposeful misquotation, mistranslation, and misuse of the existing Hebrew Scriptures to which they, as Montefiore stated, put into Jesus' mouth as they created a human "Christ" and put flesh upon him.

The scriptural 'sayings" are prefaced by a "he says" - in the present tense -showing that in the writer's mind, the Son is an entity who is known and communicates now and today, through the sacred writings, not through any past preaching career on earth.

Lacking any historical career for this historical Christ the early writers and forgers of the New Testament had to create one to which they did when they refuted Marcion's First New Testament and his Spiritual Christ.

Heb 10:5 5 Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me: (KJV)

Unbelievable alterations of the Hebrew Scriptures were made in order to create a human "Christ". Above we are seeing a quote taken from the Hebrew Scriptures and presented by this writer of the Book of Hebrews that would lead us to believe that Jesus, coming from God, was given a human body long prepared for him in the mind of God. But the actual Hebrew Scriptures says something entirely different:

Psalms 40:6-8 says as taken from the Hebrew Bible:

"You, O Lord my God, have done many things; the wonders You have devised for us cannot be set out before You; I would rehearse the tale of them, but they are more than can be told. You gave me to understand that you do not desire sacrifice and meal offering; You do not ask for burnt offering and sin offering. Then I said, "See, I will bring a scroll recounting what befell me". (JPS)

The Soncino version says in Psalm 40:6-8

"Many things hast Thou done, O Lord my God, Even Thy wondrous works, and Thy thoughts toward us; There is none to be compared unto Thee! If I would declare and speak of them, They are more than can be told. Sacrifice and meal-offering Thou hast no delight in; Mine ears hast Thou opened; Burnt-offering and sin-offering hast Thou not required. Then said I: 'Lo, I am come With the roll of a book which is prescribed me"

As we have seen God did not "prepare a body" as the writer of the Book of Hebrew attest but rather God opened the ears of his servant in order that he could understand the Torah and God's message to mankind. This same message God was later to send into the hearts of His children through His Christ. This is but one example of hundreds to show the reader the early literary creationism by the early writers of the Jesus myth. The formation of a supposed "historical" Jesus Christ required the incarnation in a single body and the Hebrew Scriptures were altered to provide that to the unsuspecting non-Jews of the world. Thus, the Jesus of Nazareth, a city not even existing in the time given for Jesus, is created as the supposed home for this supposed incarnation of God into but one person to the exclusion of the whole of humanity. In so doing, Rome made itself the sole dispenser of God's love and grace to the world whereby salvation could be obtained in no other outlet than the doors of the Roman Church. The conquest of the minds of mankind was complete. When swords fail nations, religion, coupled with fear and ignorance, never fails.

The writer of the Book of Hebrews thus views scripture as presenting a picture of spiritual world realities, where the Son operates and speaks. This is the meaning of the epistle's opening statement, for God in this final age speaks to the world not through the teachings of an earthly Jesus but through a new reading of scripture, in which the voice of the Son is to be heard within the hearts and souls of God's children.

As late as the end of the century, the same phenomenon can be detected in the epistle 1 Clement. In chapter 22 'Clement' says:

"All these promises (by God) find their confirmation when we believe in Christ, for it is he himself who summons us through the Holy Spirit, with the words: 'Come, children, listen to me, and I will teach you the fear of the Lord.'"

Clement regards this quote from Psalm 34 as a personal summons from Christ, as though Christ himself is telling Christian readers that he will teach them the fear of the Lord. When he earlier (ch. 16) describes Christ's sufferings, he quotes a passage from Psalm 22, again presenting it as the voice of Christ himself, telling of his experiences of suffering and rejection through the words of scripture.

These early writers provide us with an insight into the fundamental nature of early Christian thought before the rise of the "literalism" and "carnalization" of the indewlling Christ.

- Christ was a spiritual figure and not a human-fleshy individual like we believe today because of the later writing of the gospels where the Heavenly concept of the Spiritual Christ takes upon himself human flesh.
- The Christ was not a "past event" some 50 years earlier but a present force who was accessible through the sacred writings of the Hebrew Scriptures...not the later forged ones in the New Testament.
- Scripture was not the prophecy of the Christ event, but the mystical and metaphysical expression of its embodiment within the bosom of every child of God.
- The Son inhabited the spiritual world of the scriptures, God's window on the unseen true reality that lies within each of us.

PAUL'S GOSPEL: A SYNTHESIS OF GNOSTICISM, MYSTERY RELIGIONS, AND JUDAISM

The truth, however, as we have seen if you have kept up with the prior articles in this series and on this website, is that Jesus did not found a new religion at all, but simply sought to play an accepted role in the story of an existing religion, Judaism. As a prophet a would-be Messiah Jesus dies with Israel failing to merit the Kingdom of Heaven. Israel, failing to rise to her calling as a holy nation and a Royal Priesthood to the world, not only postpones the manifestation of the Kingdom of Heaven's appearance but her king as well. Jesus, a good Jew, lived and breathed Judaism and gave his life for it's futherment. Never did it ever enter into his mind one time that Biblical Judaism was not the way for mankind; both Jew and non-Jew. For Jesus there was no need for a "second" religion; the problem was not with Judaism but with men's hearts. It was Paul who founded the replacement religion known as Christianity today, and he did so by creating a new story which really was not "new" at all; rather, it was a unique synthesis of "old" stories that had a unique appeal to almost everyone...except the Jews of course. Paul's new synthesis, his new story, was one sufficiently powerful and gripping to launch a new world religion among the non-Jews. In this new story Jesus was given a leading role, but this does not make Jesus the creator of Christianity.

THE DESCENT OF THE DIVINE SAVIOR....

The basic theme in the Pauline religious synthesis and religious myth can be summed up in one phrase: the descent of the divine savior. Everything in the so-called theology stems from this: for since salvation or or rescue comes from above, no capability or potential can be ascribed to the action or initiative of man to improve his situation. Man is totally helpless and undone without any actions that can be taken by him to even "work out" his salvation as a co-partner with God. Understand right now that this is not Biblical Judaism, this is not the message of Moses and the Prophets, and this is not the message taught by Jesus as well! In fact such ideas as taught by Paul totally contradicts the Torah. In Judaism man and God work together in salvation. One has to look to Gnosticism and other forms of dualism for such ideas of the utter incapability of man to be co-partners with God in salvation!

Inherent in such Gnostic beliefs is embedded the idea of predestination. Thus some kind of doctrine of predestination follows: when the divine rescuer and savior descends, he does not look to see who "deserves" to be rescued, because this would be to ascribe some kind of saving efficacy to something that man does by his own effort, whatever he does that comprises deservedness.

Answer for yourself: Since in Gnosticism we find the divine descent of the savior who has of course by necessity no human birth, then did this Gnostic belief coupled with the virgin-born sun-godmen of the mystery religions help explain why Paul, who wrote 2/3 of the New Testament, does not mention at all anything about Jesus' childhood or his birth?

Answer for yourself: Could this descent of the divine savior of Gnosticism (the pattern first applied to Jesus by Paul) help explain why the "infancy narratives" do not appear until almost 200 A.D. among the New Testament writings and also help explain why the first New Testament collected did not have such "infancy narratives" and "genealogies" as we find today in Matt. and Luke (remember Paul's writings were first and had a major influence upon the Gentile writers of the New Testament)? You bet it does! Only later when Christian Gnosticism was waining in popularity with the ascendancy of Western Christianity was there a need to explain away Gnostic Christianity's view of Jesus as a descending Gnostic savior and give him a "birth." This explains why there were no accounts written of the early years of Jesus until almost 200 A.D. and such efforts were directly to counteract Gnostic beliefs concerning Jesus as their divine savior who was not "flesh" but pure spirit. One only has to see passages like the following to understand how early Christianity struggled over whether Jesus had a body of flesh (human) or that he only seemed to have a body of flesh but was really only a spiritual apparition (Gnosticism).

I Jn 4:2 2 Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: (KJV)

Back to our point according to Paul's theology mankind can do nothing to be a co-laborer with God in working out his own salvation as no flesh will be justified in the sight of God by any action on the part of mankind.

Rom 3:20 20 Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: That being the case one only could wonder as to how anyone could know who will be rescued and saved? The answer is simple. There was no way to know. Those will be rescued whom the saviour has decided to rescue and save.

Answer for yourself: What, then, can we do to be rescued? Nothing, except to have "faith!"

Answer for yourself: What does this mean? It means to rely entirely on the descending saviour, and to abandon every other hope of rescue. But surely even to have an attitude of faith requires some kind of effort, and, if so, not everything is contributed by the saviour. This is perplexing to theologians who struggle with this paradox; but the basic thing is still the story: rescue comes from above.

THE DESCENT OF THE SAVIOR FROM "ABOVE" REVEALS TWO REALMS OF EXISTENCE...ONE ABOVE/ONE BELOW

The descent of the divine savior implies other narrative elements. It means that there are two realms, Above a Below: Above is the region of Light, and below a religion of Darkness, the dark prison from which we need to be rescued and from no one belonging to Below can release us. Thus no Below-type act of liberation can do us any good, no transfer from one area to another. What imprisons us is the human condition, which is one of bondage to the powers of Evil.

Answer for yourself: Since the realm of "below," where mankind is born, lives, and dies, is Evil there had to be a reason for the existence of this "Evil." Do you what was developed to explain the existence of this "Evil" we find below? The doctrine of Original Sin.

Answer for yourself: Can we find the doctrine of Original Sin in Moses, the Prophets, Biblical Judaism, or the teachings of Jesus? No! That is not to say we cannot find "sin" in the Old Testament but along with it comes "free will" where man is called to choose "Godliness."

As stated, from this aspect of the story comes naturally the doctrine of Original Sin, a re-reading of Paul of the Hebrew story about the ejection of Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden, which in the story itself, and its traditional Jewish exegesis, did not have this radical connotation.

Answer for yourself: Does it not strike you rather funny that Paul, a Pharisee of Pharisees and a supposed student of the great Gamaliel, is teaching a doctrine that is totally foreign to Biblical Judaism and it's exegesis of it's own faith?

So far the story as laid out in this article so far is the same as that found in the type of religion known as Gnosticism. Recent discoveries have shown contrary to what was previously argued, Gnosticism existed before Christianity, though it later took Christian forms. Thee essence of the Gnostic myth was that this world is in the grip of evil, and therefore a visitor (or a series of visitors) is necessary from the world of Light, in order to impart the secret knowledge (gnosis) by which some privileged souls may escape from the enslavement of the world. In Gnosticism, this world is regarded as so evil that it cannot have been created by the God (the good God). It was created by a limited or evil power called the Demiurge (creator otherwise known as the God of the Jews [YHVH]).). The true High God lives in a region beyond the skies, but he has pity on humanity and sends them an emissary to teach them how to free themselves from the Demiurge. In some Gnostic sects the Demiurge is identified with the God of the Jews, and it was thought that the Jewish Scripture, the Torah, was given by this evil deity. The Jews were therefore regarded by these sects as the special people of the Demiurge and as having the role in history of blocking the saving work of the emissaries of the High God. While anti-Semitism (in the sense of intense dislike of Jews) was not uncommon in the ancient world, it was probably among the Gnostic sects that the most radical form of anti-Semitism originated - the view that the Jews are the representatives of this cosmic evil and this evil God, the people of the Devil.

PAUL'S GOSPEL IS GNOSTIC TO THE CORE....WE DON'T KNOW THIS BECAUSE WE DON'T KNOW THE FIRST THING ABOUT GNOSTICISM TODAY

Paul's Epistles show a form of Gnosticism which is overlooked by 95% of Christiendom if not more simply for the reason that we are 2000 years removed from Gnosticism and we fail, when reading Paul, to recognize it's main doctrines in the Pauline writings. What makes it even more complicated again is the Christian's almost total lack of understanding of what both Biblical Judaism of the first century as well as the mystery religions actually taught. When you add these three "deficiencies" together the normative Christian is incapable of reading the New Testament and being able to separate out what Jesus the Jew would have believed from the Gnosticism and the Mystery religious doctrines in the New Testament. Lacking such information that only comes from a dedicated time of serious study the Christian is relegated to reading all that is in the New Testament and the Pauline writings and "accepting by faith" that what he is reading is a faithful representation of the Jesus of history. NOTHING COULD BE FURTHER FROM THE TRUTH!

As stated above in summary fashion the problem is that when encountering Paul we find a rather complicated and unique synthesis of all three of these world views from the first century. The Pauline corpus of literature in the New Testament is an amalgamation of all three world views: Judaism, Gnosticism, and Mystery Religions. Understand that this had never been done before Paul; he was the originator of this "new" world religion and his efforts has blurred almost beyond recognition the true Jesus of history. Therefore, the Pauline "religious beliefs system" and his "Christian myth and synthesis" is worth isolating, though it is combined with other, non-Gnostic mythological elements (Judaism and mystery religions). The basic perception of Gnosticism is certainly present in Paul: that this world is so sunk in evil that rescue from above is a necessity (Rom. 7).

Rom 7:24-25 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin. (KJV)

But Paul's Gnosticism is not without some quirks. The mythological details of Gnosticism are modified in Paul's unique synthesis of these three world views. Paul does not think that this world was actually created by an evil power; he accepts the account of Genesis that the world was created by God (YHVH). In this he maintains Judaism's account of creation. But, unlike Judaism and the religion of Jesus, Paul believes, as does Gnosticism, that the world has come under the control of an evil power; the Earth is captured territory. This is why there can be no hope of salvation except from outside or "above."

The importance of the concept of an evil power or the Devil in Paul's thought, or rather mythology, cannot be overestimated and here again we find Paul departing from Biblical Judaism and what the Jewish Scriptures teach about Satan. When referring to this power, he generally uses expressions derived from Gnosticism rather than from Judaism. Thus Paul gives the picture of the assault of cosmic evil powers on Jesus in these words:

1 Cor 2:8 8 Which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. (KJV)

The expression "princes of this world" does not refer to earthly rulers such as the Romans or the High Priest, but to supernatural powers who rule over "this world" in the sense of "this cosmic era." Likewise, Paul uses the expression "principalities and powers" and other such expressions with Gnostic connections to

Rom 8:38 38 For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, (KJV) refer to the supernatural forces that oppose Jesus and himself (e.g. Romans 8: 38).

On one occasion, Paul even calls the supreme evil force a "god" (2 Corinthians 4:4).

2 Cor 4:4 4 In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. (KJV)

Paul thus thinks of the forces of evil as organized in a hierarch (typical of Gnosticism again) and as having power independent of God, at least for a period in cosmic history. For Paul, it was primarily to break the power of these forces that Jesus came to the world; though the earthly power that opposed him, that of the Jews, who seemed to be his main enemies, was only on the surface, for he was engaged, in reality, in a vast cosmic struggle in which his earthly antagonists were the pawns of evil supernatural forces. This is the core of Gnostic thought and let me again stress that this is not Biblical Judaism. The Persian and Gnostic religious beliefs are the origin for Paul's statements. Again this is a perfect example of Paul's synthesis of various world views in his presentation of his unique Gospel.

Rom 16:25 25 Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, (KJV)

One thing is for certain that Paul gets correct; it surely is a mystery all right because he was the first to conceive "this mystery" and relate it to others. I cannot stress enough the uniqueness of Paul's invention. It never seems to amaze me how as Christians we can think that the Jesus of the New Testament was believed to have come with a Divine and Unique revelation from God when what Paul teaches about him was previously known and applied to various other godmen throughout recorded history. If anything the Pauline Jesus is a clone...in reality a tri-clops (three world views rolled into one man).

Even Iranian religion, from which the dualism of the Gnostics was ultimately derived, the evil supernatural power was regarded as inferior to the good power in that good would ultimately prevail. So Paul's dualism is hardly less extreme than that of Iranian or Gnostic religion. It has been argued recently that Paul derived this dualism from Jewish, not Hellenistic, sources since the Jewish Apocryphal and Pseudepigraphical books do give an important role to Satan; and the Qumran writings of the Dead Sea also ascribe much of the evil in the world to the activities of an evil angel called Balial. These writings, of course, were excluded from the canon of scripture by the Pharisees, who strongly opposed dualism and regarded Satan as merely one of God's angels, who did not rebel against Him, but obeys his orders, whether the Angel of Death or as prosecutor of human beings in the divine court. Even in purely Jewish terms, Paul's dualism would exclude him from the Pharisee mode of thought. But in any case, there is a great difference between Paul's dualism and that of the Jewish writings mentioned, which, though affected by despair, never descend to the depths out of which Paul's writings spring. Though the Jewish Psedepigrapha and Qumran writings have a sense of cosmic evil, they still believe in the efficacy of the Torah and of the election of Israel; they do not require a savior from the upper world in order to make human life workable.

If as a Christian you have thoroughly read and understand Moses, the Prophets, and the Writings correctly, then you know that God has said the same thing throughout the Jewish Scriptures and that is this: That it is through the practice of the Torah (faith in God and intense desire and effort to respond in love to Him through obedience to the Commandments and Laws of God) that the power of evil is eventually broken in men's flesh and the world (training in obedience); and this means that the exercise of human will to good is still the most important factor in history.

Answer for yourself: Is this what Paul teaches in his epistles? NO!

Paul takes a completely different approach as seen in the utter helplessness of mankind to remedy evil in this world (Rom. 7).

Rom 7:15-24 15 For that which I do I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. 16 If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good. 17 Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. 18 For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. 19 For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. 20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. 21 I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. 22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: 23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? (KJV)

The scene of the battle between good and evil is still within the human psyche, not removed to the skies with humans as helpless and passive reflections of the conflict. On the contrary, the battle that goes on between supernatural powers is a reflection of the battle on Earth; and the outcome of this battle will be a transformation of the Earth, not an organized escape from it (rapture).

No plausible Jewish model can be found for Paul's type of dualism; the only contemporary parallel is in Gnosticism. There are some differences, of course, but even in the differences we note a basic similarity; and here we must bear in mind that there were many varieties of Gnosticism, and that the central doctrine of the evil of this world and the need for extraterrestrial salvation could receive an almost infinitely varied mythological elaboration. Paul's variety does not include the notions that the evil power created the world and the Torah; but it contains notions that perform the same kind of function.

THE TORAH PRESENTS A CHALLENGE FOR PAUL...HE HAS TO DISCREDIT THE TORAH AND HE DOES

Paul belongs to the kind of Gnosticism that was fascinated by the Jews and Judaism, and sought to weave them both into its pattern, usually with anti-Semitic effect (the Jews are the people of the bad God-creator of matter...and the recipients of the Torah which also finds it's origin with this bad God-creator). The Torah, in this kind of scheme, is acknowledged to be of supernatural origin, but it comes from the wrong supernatural source. Yet the Torah, for this kind of Gnostic, contains a secret message: despite itself, it gives information about the tradition of the "true gnosis." Over and against the official tradition contained in the Hebrew Bible there are hints of an alternative tradition, by-passing the authority of the Jews and Judaism. Thus we find the Gnostics concentrating on figures in the Torah who are not Jews, but who nevertheless seem to have authority: such as Seth, the son of Adam born after the murder of Abel by Cain; or Enoch, reputed to have been taken alive into heaven; or Melchizedek, the priest of the Most High who was not of the Jewish Levitical priesthood. Paul does the same thing in choosing "Abraham" as his paradigm of faith and will use him in selling his theology to the Gentile world. On figures such as these it was possible to construct the fantasy of an alternative tradition, stemming not from the Jewish God, but from the High God above whose message far transcended Judaism. In order to present this "alternative tradition" it was necessary to discredit the origin of the Torah and Paul is up for the task.

PAUL CHANGES THE ORIGIN OF THE TORAH

Now this is important that we understand what comes next. Paul, as previously noted, was not your normal gnostic. He did not adopt the Gnostic myth of the creation of the world by the Demiurge; but he adopted the almost equivalent myth of the "rule of this age," the evil power who had taken over the world, though he did not create it. Likewise, Paul did not adopt the Gnostic myth that the Torah was given by an evil power and was thus an evil work; instead, he introduced the view that the Torah was a work of limited authority. Giving mythical expression to this view, Paul asserted that the Torah was given not by God, but by angels and not God (again Gnosticism is heavily "angel" centered). This demotion of the status of the Torah is seen in Paul's epistle to the Galatians:

Gal 3:19-20 19 Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator (Moses). 20 Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is one. (KJV)

Various scholars have tried to argue that the Jewish sources contain the notion that the Torah was given by angels, not by God, and that therefore Paul was not saying anything startling or new in this passage. If the Torah was "ordained" by angels that means that they originated it, while if they only "promulgated" it, it may have or originated from God. Despite the convoluted arguments of scholars, there is no parallel to Paul's idea that the Torah was given by angels in Jewish sources, which all insist that God was the sole author of the Torah and that was God Himself, not angels, whose voice was heard on Mount Sinai "giving" the Torah. Again we find religious ideas of Paul that lie completely outside of Biblical Judaism.

Answer for yourself: Where did Paul get his conflicting ideas that the Torah was given by angels and not God?

The only parallel to Paul's statement is to be found in the Gnostic literature which states that the Torah was given by an inferior power, the Demiurge. Paul is thus adapting the Gnostic doctrine of the inferiority of the Torah: instead of being ordained by an inferior and also evil power, it is ordained by inferior but beneficent powers. This is in accordance with Paul's view of the Torah as merely temporary and as foreshadowing something greater than would supersede it, the advent of the descending gnostic savior. The other two references to the angels as authors of the Torah in the New Testament (Acts 7:53 and Hebrews 2:2) are simply based on Paul's statement here. Paul was the sole creator of this myth about the angels fathering the Torah. Here again we encounter the pressure that exists in the Christian tradition and scholarship to deprive Paul of his originality as the inventor of Christianity.

FOR PAUL THE COVENANT WITH ABRAHAM WAS SUPERIOR TO THE COVENANT WITH ISRAEL

The "intermediary" to whom Paul refers is Moses, but his remark that "an intermediary is not needed for one party acting alone, and God is one" is somewhat cryptic. The best explanation seems to be that Paul is pointing out that the Torah constitutes a covenant or contract between two parties, God and Israel. God's pronouncement of blessings to Abraham, on the other hand, was one-sided, with Abraham as passive recipient, required only to have "faith": consequently no "intermediary" was needed. This one-sided conferring of blessing is, for Paul, a far superior and more immediate form of communication between man and God, reflecting again the Gnostic belief in the helpless state of man, utterly dependent on salvation from above. Paul thus rejects as inferior the Jewish concept of the human nature, by which the Torah constitutes a covenant and agreement between two partners, God and Israel. If you have ever studied Covenants for yourself you find that God's Covenants are successive and greater as time goes on. Basically they are cumulative and each in succession has greater responsibilities and greater blessings. To say that the rudimentary Covenant with Abraham was superior to later Covenants which God made with His people destroys the whole idea of progressive revelation and again is a totally false idea as presented by Paul.

PAUL'S USE OF ABRAHAM IN SCRIPTURE...AND HE GETS IT WRONG AGAIN

Paul's use of Abraham his discussion in Galatians and elsewhere is interesting in context of our consideration of his affinity to Gnosticism. We have seen that the Gnostics used non-Jewish biblical characters such as Seth, Enoch and Melchizedek as alleged representatives of alternative traditions of "gnosis." Paul uses Abraham in just the same way. Abraham, though the ancestor of the Israelites, was also the ancestor of other nations and was a pre-Mosaic figure not involved with the Torah. For Paul the use of Abraham as his "pattern" for his gospel of "faith" was necessary because Paul used Abraham in shadowing the obsolescence of the Torah even before it was given. This trend is developed in the Epistle to the Hebrews (written by a later disciple of Paul, though wrongly attributed to Paul himself by Church tradition), where the figure of Melchizedek is used in the same way, to show that there is an alternative priesthood, superior to that of the Jewish Aaronites. These "characters" are used by Paul because for him they lived in an era before the "Torah." Their example was used to promote the idea of "faith" without the Torah as being acceptable to God which is what Paul is teaching in the New Testament as again the Torah was not necessary any longer because since a product of the "bad-creator-god." However Paul again gets his theology wrong as attested by the following verse:

Gen 26:5 5 Because that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws. (KJV)

Notice with me the word "law" in the above verse [Strong's number 8451 towrah or torah- law, direction, instruction

- a) instruction, direction (human or divine)
 - 1) the body of prophetic teaching
 - 2) instruction in the Messianic age
 - 3) the body of priestly direction or instruction
 - 4) the body of legal directives
- b) law
 - 1) law of the burnt-offering
 - 2) used of special law, codes of law
- c) custom, manner
- d) the Deuteronomic or Mosaic Law

As you can see Paul again is wrong because every Covenant that God has ever made with man contains God's admonitions for mankind in the form of commandments and laws which are literally Covenant stipulations that is required of man. Mankind's honoring of them through obedience always brings the blessings of the Covenant and his disobedience always brings chastisement. This means dear reader that Paul's use of Abraham is totally discredited in trying to present a case of "faith only" as the way to please God!

This use of non-Jewish figures from the Bible (Abraham) by Paul, so reminiscent of Gnosticism, is not, however, the main strategy of Paul and of the Pauline Church with regard to the Hebrew Bible. The Gnostics regarded themselves as outsiders and outside mainline Judaism to say the least. Therefore it was necessary to construct an "outsider" tradition from biblical materials so they choose for their examples of their plain non-Jewish people before the giving of the Torah in Scripture. Thus the use of Abraham by Paul repeatedly throughout the epistles. In so doing they were rejecting the main line of the biblical story as concerned with the people of the Demiurge (YHVH). Basically they sought to change the Biblical revelation and the Biblical story. Paul, however, and the Christian tradition that followed him, adopted a much bolder line. He asserted that all the main prophets of the Hebrew Bible were proto-Christians. For Paul none of them (not even Moses) had regarded the Torah as permanently binding; all of them, according to Paul, had looked forward to the advent of the saviour who would abolish the Torah and show the true way of faith and salvation through "faith" in this special "knowledge" that this descending savior would bring (faith in the death, burial, and resurrection of this dying descending savior for salvation).

This Pauline "gospel" amounted to a wholesale repudiation of the Jewish religiohistorical scheme since time began let alone the messages of Moses, the Prophets, the writings, and the teachings of Jesus! Everything up to now according to Paul was wrong and had to be replaced with his "gospel."

Alterations of this kind were not unique to Paul, who accepted the Old Testament in full as the word of God, but instead he imported his own meanings into it, and turned it into a coded message of the Pauline mythology. In this way, the succession of Hebrew prophets was put into the place of the succession of "outsiders' bearing "gnosis," envisaged by the Gnostic exegetes of the Bible. Moses and the prophets were now the outsiders, because they knew the Christian meaning of their message, which was rejected by the Jews, who insisted on the permanence of the Torah and treated the prophets as they later treated Jesus. The division between Jews and outsiders is retained, as in Gnosticism, but the lines are differently drawn, with the result that Pauline Christianity, instead of opposing prophetic Judaism, appropriated it for its own purposes.

THE HIDDEN GNOSTICISM OF THE NEW TESTAMENT AND THE ORIGINAL PAULINE WRITINGS

Let us set the stage for what we must come to understand if we are ever to have a through understanding of the conflicting theologies and the tension between the First New Testament of the earliest Christians and the Second New Testament of Rome. A war is coming; a war over theology and Rome and Western Christianity will win. Eastern Christianity reflecting more closely the beliefs of the original Christians will lose. You should know this already; just look out your window to the vast majority of Christianity that exists in the world today and compare it only remotely to what Judaism once believed. Although there are yet differences between Judaism and early Eastern Christianity they have a lot more in common than Judaism and Western Christianity; or at least did at one time before Arianism lost out at the Council of Nicea.

We need to focus on the events happening and paralleling in both Palestine and Rome; especially in the tumulious first century C.E. In the last half of the first century C.E. we find that in a small corner of the Roman Empire groups of people were banding themselves together to follow the instructions of men claiming to be disciples of a teacher and "messiah" from Palestine. To most of their contemporaries they were yet another Jewish sect. Understand that there were many Jewish sects in this time period. To Romans in positions of authority, they were an extremely tiresome, and possibly seditious one; and since, like all Jews, they would not offer worship to the Emperor, nor worship the Roman Gods. Such failure to worship the Emperor or Roman God gave them the stigma of being called "atheists" in the existing literature that comes down to us today. You should find that fact amazing in light of who is calling these monotheists "atheists." Followers, according to Tacitus, 'of a pernicious superstition', they even worshipped their own leader. As recorded in Acts of the Apostles written, as many scholars believe, in and around 80 C.E., "the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch". By his adherents, Jesus of Nazareth was called Christ, the anointed one.

Answer for yourself: Should we find this strange? Had there been many "Christs" before Jesus? This is what escapes today's Christians. Being called "Christ" is not new; there have been many "Christs" before Jesus of Nazareth. One term that explains this "Christ" is the term"Avatar." Avatar is an Anglicized form of the Sanskrit, avatara which means "descent." Something has "come down." The word is used, in a technical sense to denote the descent upon earth of a portion of the essence of a god, which then assumes some coarser material form; usually man but not limited to mankind alone.

Answer for yourself: Did this "incarnation" of an aspect of God within a man make him God? No; only anointed for a task in serving God. Rome will later corrupt this concept and make such a one "God" incarnated which is idolatry. This they will do to Jesus of the First Century at the Council of Nicea in 325 C.E.

Such descents of this "portion of God" into this world influencing mankind are believed to have taken place at different ages of the world as God has manifested Himself in and through many "messengers" from on High.Any remarkable man is liable to be regarded as a more or less perfect avatar of God, and the consequence one of the worst features of this religious concept has been the offering of divine homage to men, especially the founders of religious sects and their successors.

Answer for yourself: Is this how Marcion understood "the Christ" in the First New Testament when he collected the letter of Paul which reflected this same belief? It sure is as we shall see.

Answer for yourself: Since the Jews were monotheists can never could believe or would believe that a man is God in the flesh then is this how the earliest followers of Jesus of Nazareth both saw and understood this man of wisdom and power that walked among them?

Answer for yourself: Then is it correct to say that the earliest believers in Jesus, both Jewish and Gentile, could be labeled historically as "adoptionists"? Yes it could. This is reflective of the Ebionites who were some of the earliest Jewish followers of "the Christ" or Jesus as we know him today.

Matt 24:24 24 For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. (KJV)

We must at this early time in our study come to the realization that there have been and will always be "Christs;" Jesus was one of many and his followers put their hopes in him that he would ALSO possibly be their long expected and desired liberator and "messiah."

But Rome did not need any more problems. Many, but not all scholars, connect the name "Chrestus" with the Jewish "Christ;" in particular they were by some believed to be followers of Jesus of Nazareth that were stirring revolt over their messianic beliefs and therefore sought the overthrow of Rome and their hostility toward the Jews. The expected Messiah is to judge the Gentiles due to their cruel treatment of the Jewish people. The Jews needed "salvation" from such Roman barbarism and they needed right then! Now you understand that to the Romans, "Chrestus" was the name of a trouble-maker, put to death in the reign of Tiberius. "Jews were driven out of Rome for rioting at the instigation of one, Chrestus." (Suetonius, Life of Claudius). But we cannot be certain that this "Chrestus" is actually Jesus because there were many false "messiahs" in this apocalyptic age. The truth about the true identity of this "Chrestus" remains today uncertain.

WITH MANY HOPES AND RELIGIOUS SECTS COME MUCH CONFUSION

Today, with so many extraordinary cults proliferating around us, it is not difficult to imagine how the first Christians appeared to those around them, who now heard rumors of yet another kind of religion, another sect, another message of hope that is unique to only their group. One of the weaknesses found in religious histories is that all the adherents of a religion are assumed to be on the same level of understanding. This is particularly apparent in the history of the early Christian Church. But that does not mean that there were not others who understood differently or came to understand differently or expressed ideas with different meanings. It is probably safe to say that the more spiritual the understanding, the less widespread it is likely to be, and probably the less documented.

So one has to imagine groups of people who had themselves listened to the teacher in Palestine, or who had heard of his teachings through his disciples or through others - each interpreting what they had heard in different ways, and asking what this new religion was about. The most difficult question was (and would always be) who was this teacher, this Jesus of Nazareth? What manner of being was he?

I wish I could tell you that there is just one answer to the above questions but there are not. There were conflicting answers to these questions from the very first. This question is at the root of almost all the great heresies and any answer provokes more questions, which, in their turn, lead to further questions which can shape or create a form of belief.

There are some things we know for sure. The first Christians were of course Jews, and they continued their worship in the Temple, their reading of Jewish scriptures and their obedience to Jewish Law. At the same time, they followed Jesus as their master, their leader, their hoped for liberator and "messiah." But he died! That is where the problem really begins in many ways.

Answer for yourself: Other than the Essenes were apostates from true Judaism and involved in a synthesis of Sun Worship, Persian Religion, and Judaism and who believed in "two messiah;" one who dies and one who would bring liberation to Israel then where in normative conservative Judaism do we find vicarious atonement and a dying Messiah up to that time? We don't!

But the death of this hoped for "messiah" had to be explained; especially in light of the historical fact that within the time frame allotted by the Prophets for the appearance of the Jewish Messiah when all messianic prophecy would be fulfilled Israel found themselves without their messiah and without their hopes fulfilled. No messianic prophecy was fulfilled and the Jews were exiled again. Theories abounded as to why Israel had "missed they day of their visitation." Not everyone agreed of course with the same theories and division was to be expected.

That division came quickly. As recorded in Paul's epistles and later in the Book of Acts which is heavily influenced by Paulinism there were distinct groups of Judaizing Christians who insisted that Christian converts must keep the Jewish Levitical Laws and observances before they could be immersed and receive "the soul that comes down from Heaven." This is what produced the Galatians letter where no longer enforced circumcision was required for non-Jews to be a part of the Israel of God.

There were divisions and uncertainties even among the apostles, themselves. At first, as has been said, the main body of the followers of the new religion were circumcised Jews, and the "gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter", (Gal. 2:7). Paul was preaching to the Gentiles, the heathen. He wrote,

Gal 2:7 7 But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; (KJV)

The Acts 15 council will meet shortly and agree with Paul that no longer will the Jews be bigoted toward the non-Jew; enforcing circumcision upon them in hopes of keeping them apart from the Jewish people. This messianic community of Jews, not all of Judaism of course, will repent of their attitudes and hatred toward the non-Jews and no longer enforce full conversion and circumcision upon the non-Jews for them to become part of the Israel of God. It was then decided that the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria need not be circumcised nor keep the Law. These non-Jews coming to God were required only adhere to the Laws of Noah only; to abstain from meats offered to idols, "from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication". These issues listed were mainly table-fellowship issues as shown in our Laws of Noah site. But the sect of strictly practising Jewish Christians continued as a separate body within the Christian community. But issues surrounding the true identity of Jesus remained; especially between Paul's Gentile gospel ('my gospel') and the Jerusalem Church and their understanding of Jesus and "the Christ."

More fundamental than their insistence on Jewish observance was their belief that Christ was the greatest of prophets, the expected Messiah, but that he was a man as other men. These Judaizing Christians became less important in the early Church after the Fall of Jerusalem in 70 AD but from them emerged a sect, the Ebionites, which was still in existence in the fourth century. Take note that these Ebionites again write very negatively about Paul and unlike Paul believed Jesus to be a man as other men; a human being. You will come to see in time that Marcion and Paul did not see "the Christ" as a human being in the First New Testament although this Gnostic First New Testament is made to look that way later by Roman editing of the First New Testament through forgery. For the Jews the expected messiah would be "anointed" and indwelling in him would be the descent upon earth of a portion of the essence of God. This would not make him God; only Godly!

Luke 4:18 18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me [CHRISTED ME] to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, (KJV)

Here we find Jesus the "Avatar." Again we must take time to understand correctly as it was understood THEN [2000 years ago] by Jesus earliest followers and friends.

Strong's Concordance reveals to us the hidden meaning behind the Greek word "anointed."

5548 chrio (khree'-o); probably akin to 5530 through the idea of contact; to smear or rub with oil, i.e. (by implication) to consecrate to an office or religious service: KJV-- anoint.

Now we need to look at the Greek word for "Christ."

Thayer's Lexicon says:

5547 Christos- Christ = "anointed"

So we now see that "anointed" and "Christ" mean essentially the same things.

All "messiahs" were anointed. "The" messiah was expected to be anointed as well; notice I said "the." And the word "Christ" means "anointed." Many were "anointed" and therefore "christs" and used of God; many Jews were as well but that does not mean that they were "the" messiah; but yet "messiahs." What we have to determine correctly is the relationship of "the Christ" in relationship to Jesus. Those who knew him best I believe had the most correct understanding of the man. Surely common sense says that if resurrected and having spent 40 days with his followers then few questions would have remained that had not been asked or answered by a resurrected man from the dead who was looked upon by his followers as their messiah. If anyone knew just whom this Jesus was surely it would be his closest followers THEN and not Rome some 100 or more years later who hammer out their theology about this man.

From where we stand in history, after hearing for so long the words and statements of Christian doctrine, both oral and written in our Christian Bibles, we are brainwashed to think that what we are reading today is what these earliest follower both felt and believed about Jesus of Nazareth. We lack the knowledge that much of our New Testaments today was written, edited, and invented by Rome in refutation of the First New Testament of Marcion and Paul. This is what I discovered upon serious intense study over these last 15 yrs. It is difficult to put ourselves into the minds of those Christians near in time to the events that gave birth to Christianity. For Jews, trained to centre their whole faith on the conception of One God, it would naturally seem blasphemous to conceive of Jesus as the Son of God. What is amazing is that so many were able to do so, or at least were able to believe that here was someone who was more than a normal human being.

The crux of the problem we encounter over and over again is how to understand God working in and through mankind; let alone Jesus. You will find as I did that the real problem is one of perspective: allegory or literalism.

"ALLEGORICAL" TRUTH OR "LITERAL" LIES?

The Ebionites (the name probably meant "the poor ones", owing to their exaltation of ascetic poverty) were one of the earliest followers of Jesus and thought of Jesus as their "anointed" and would be Messiah, but rejected the belief in his divine nature. He was not God; only Godly!They considered Paul to be a heathen because of his teaching that Jesus, a man, was Son of God.

Answer for yourself: If this can be proven both historically and archeologically that this was the earliest belief about Jesus by those who were closest to him and knew him best then way believe anything else?

But, as time went on, there were those among them who felt that they had to reconcile:

- The amazing deeds attributed to Jesus in the Gospel of Matthew (the only Gospel they accepted)
- The God-ordained status of "THE" anointed of God, His "Messiah"
- The being of an ordinary man.

There were basically two view that we find expressed in various version:

- Some held that the Spirit of Christ - the anointed one - descended on the man, Jesus, at his baptism by John the immerser, and left him at the crucifixion, when he died - again as an ordinary man [this explanation of the nature of Christ was to reappear later in various forms and guises, not only in various theologies and religious doctrines, but in the theological Controversies and Catholic Church Councils for hundreds of years]. Of course Rome will, over time, come to call this "human view" a "heresy."
- There were those who saw the question from the other side. If Jesus was invoked as "Lord," which is a title often used for Jehovah, and was "come down from Heaven", then how could he be of ordinary flesh and blood like the rest of us? [The question here is if the word "Lord" is begun with a "capital L" or a "small l."

Some scholars say that Christ was not regarded as God until well into the second century. This is startling in light of the fact that the earliest Christians and followers of Jesus who lived with him and knew him best, like the Ebionites, never envisioned the idea that he or the Jewish Messiah was ever to be considered God.

Now it gets more confusing and difficult. We know for a fact that it was the practice of the first groups of Christians, meeting for instruction and worship, to offer prayers to God through Jesus Christ, and there was also direct calling on the Lord Jesus in prayer.

Answer for yourself: Was this "Jesus Christ" to be understood "literally" as we have been taught today or is it just remotely possible that these earliest Christians understood this "Jesus Christ" to be allegory and a term used for the symbolic and allegorical concept of "intermediation" between God and man; sort of like the "Logos" or "Sophia"? There it is; I just gave the whole website away. The fact is that we have taken much concerning "Jesus Christ" literally today what the earliest believers understood symbolically only. What we fail to realize is all that is wrapped up in the word "Jesus." This not only was a very common name in Palestine but there existed many "Jesus" religious cults that had nothing to do with the Jesus of history to which Christians focus. The name "Jesus" comes from the Exodus. In Greek the Hebrew name "Joshua" becomes "Jesus." Today it is normal practice to use Joshua for the hero of the Exodus and Jesus for the hero of the gospels, which avoids any comparison of the two. It is important to understand that back in Old Testament times, even the first century, it would have been completely obvious to anyone knowledgeable in Greek and Hebrew that they shared the same name. This is not a coincidence. The Christian Jesus is a mythic development of the Jesus/Joshua of Exodus. In Hebrew then name Joshua/Jesus is written with the letters Yod Heh Shin Vah Heh. The letters Yod Heh Vah Heh, known as the Tetragrammaton, were extremely significant to Jewish Gnostics. They were used to signify the unpronounceable name of God, usually rendered today with added vowels as either Jehovah or Yahweh. Philo explains, when the middle letter Shin, known as the Holy letter, is added, the name means "Savior of the Lord." The honorary title "Christ" is also linked to the Exodus myth. Paul, or a pro-Pauline writer, tells us that, as well as Jesus, Moses was also "God's Christ" (Heb. 11:24-27).

Heb 11:24-26 24 By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; 25 Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; 26 Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward. (KJV)

So Moses experience "the reproach of Christ" in his life. That seems strange unless we get the "keys" to open our understanding of "the Christ."

Answer for yourself: Were you previously aware that Egyptians, who were not Christians, knew of "the Christ"? What was the concept of "the Christ" as they understood it? Could it be that Marcion and Paul and other writers of the First New Testament had this same understanding of this "Egyptian Christ" and we not know it since inheriting a Second New Testament by Rome whereby this "allegorical" understanding of "the Christ" has almost totally destroyed by Rome in their refutation of Marcion?

So we find the concept of "the Christ" as far back as Egypt but understand this is not the same as the "Roman Christ" of the Second New Testament

As seen above "Christ," which means "Anointed One," is a Greek rendering of the Hebrew word "Messiah," which is an epithet for a leader, used of Jewish kings. Although today the names "Jesus Christ" is inextricably linked to the Literalist figure of the supposed founder of Christianity, in the first century C.E. the name would have been heard obviously symbolic, meaning "the Savior king." Jewish Gnostics and Christian Gnostics after them, understood Exodus to e an initiation allegory. Egypt represented the body. While initiated identify with the body they are "in captivity." Let us recall that Gnostics consider all matter as evil; therefore the body was evil. The Soul was trapped in Egypt (the human body). To "come forth out of Egypt" was understood as leaving behind the idea of being merely a body and discovering that your soul. Egypt is often depicted as if "ignorant" in the Old Testament which seem strange in light of their astounding knowledge. This is explained when you understand the terminology of "ignorant Egyptians" is used to represent those "without Gnosis," who remain identified with their physical selves and fleshly lusts. Crossing the Red Sea was understood as symbolizing a purifying baptism, which is the first stage of initiation on the path of spiritual awakening for those who are "conscious." Explaining the Exodus should be understood "allegorically." Paul tells us this! But let us not forget that Paul/Pauline writers has already associated Moses [an Avatar] with "the Christ."

1 Cor 10:1-6 1 Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; 2 And were all baptized unto Moses [God's Christ] in the cloud and in the sea; 3 And did all eat the same spiritual meat; 4 And did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ. 5 But with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wilderness. 6 Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. (KJV)

You should see how a piece of New Testament Scripture must be interpreted "allegorically" or "symbolically" and not "literally." This is pure Gnosticism that goes unrecognized except by the few.

To these earliest Gnostic Christians like Paul initiation by baptism/immersion began a process in which initiates must face their doubts and confusion, symbolized by the Jews being afflicted in the desert [for our example] for 40 years. The next stage of initiation is about the "death" of the old self, represented by the death of Moses. Moses is mythically reborn as Joshua/Jesus who completes the journey to the Promised Land/ representing the "reborn" initiate who realizes "Gnosis." What we need to understand is that the Exodus Allegory, representing the fundamental stages of Gnosticism, is the framework upon which the Jesus myth of the New Testament was constructed. It was after Seminary in studying Jewish Roots of Christianity that I was first introduced to the concept that so much of the Jesus story in the New Testament was taken from the mystery religions of dying/risings Gods. At that time I saw and understood this as if literal; only later would I come to see it for what it really was: an allegory told in the form of dying/rising Gods that expressed the slumber of the human soul to its true essence and the later awakening of it to is Divine essence that is trapped in matter (the body). No wonder the Jesus of the New Testament does not fit Judaism when understood "literally." It is an allegory all along expressing Divine Concepts; or at least it once was in the form of the First New Testament given to the world by the Gnostic Christians.

The first stage of initiation for the Gnostic Christian was one of purification and struggle. In the Exodus myth this is the crossing of the Red Sea, which inaugurates 40 years of wandering in the wilderness. In the Jesus story, this stage is represented by Jesus' baptism which is then immediately followed by Jesus' 40 days in the wilderness. The parallel to the Exodus story is perfect.

The next stage in the process of initiation is the "death" of the old self which precipitates Gnosis. This is represented in the Exodus myth by the death of Moses and in the Jesus myth by the death of Jesus on the cross. The experience of Gnosis is represented in the Exodus by Joshua/Jesus crossing to the Promised Land and in the New Testament by Jesus' resurrection form the dead and ascension to Heaven. Acknowledging their debt to the Exodus allegory, the original Christians classified people as "the captive," "the called," and "the chosen." Those yet to undergo initiation and still trapped in the idea of being but a physical existence and a physical body are like the Jewish captives in Egypt.

Those who heard the call to awaken and begun the spiritual journey by being initiated into the Outer Mysteries of Christianity are like those Jew who were "called out of Egypt" to begin the journey to their true home. Those who have undergone the process of purification and spiritual struggle necessary to prepare themselves for Gnosis and been chosen to be initiated into the secret Inner Mysteries of Christianity are like those "chosen people" whom Joshua/Jesus leads across the river Jordan to the Promised Land. Initiates who finally realized Gnosis were known as "those who had crossed over." These three classifications parallel the Gnostic understanding of:

- the material
- thy psychic
- the spiritual

Early Christians were well aware of the parallels between their "Jesus Christ" and the Jewish Christ of Exodus. New Testament writers will link Jesus with being called out of Egypt and tie it historically to the sojourn of the Jews in Egypt. But we find no historical evidence that the human Jesus ever went down to Egypt nor any destruction of infants by Herod. But this was again only allegory. Like the Jews in Exodus, in the gospel story Jesus is called out of Egypt, where he has been hiding, like the soul within the body. Again this was never to be understood "literally" but only "allegorically" for the condition of one's soul within his body. The secret teachings hidden by Jesus the Christ of Exodus are finally made public by the reworked figure of Jesus the Christ in the gospels. This is the "secret revealed in former times" but "now disclosed? of which the Gnostic Paul writes in his letters.

Eph 3:3-6 3 How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, 4 Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) 5 Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; 6 That the Gentiles should be fellowheirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel: (KJV)

Now the rest of the website will detail the facts proving this! Of course this seems strange to the average Christian but irrefutable facts that I will share with you will prove that as Christians today reading the now current New Testament that we have completely misunderstood this "Jesus," the "Jewish Messiah," as well as "the Christ."

We will come to see that this "Christ," this "Logos," this "Sophia" is but a manifestation or emanation from God that functions as a bridge between the Spirit and Matter. This explains a lot. The Didache, or Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, (probably written before 90 AD) describes this intermediary principle as understood by the earliest Christians. And Pliny, a Roman historian of the first century, says that Christians were singing hymns to Christ as God.

Answer for yourself: What then were they doing? Were they, as Pliny thought, worshipping a man? If so, they would be behaving in the same way as the pagan Romans and that would be idolatry. If this "Christ" was to them the man Jesus of Nazareth then why would they fail to worship the Emperor, himself a man, if they were worshipping other men?

Answer for yourself: What was their understanding of this "Christ;" "literal" or "allegorical"?

For some of the earliest Christians, the answer was that "the Christ" had only the appearance of a man on earth - he was, in fact, a Theophany or a sort of a phantom. Christ was a Spirit, not a man. This line of thought became known as Docetism, which is not the name of a heretical sect but a tendency that was to appear in many schools of thought and types of heresy in succeeding centuries. Docetism is found in all systems which regard Christ primarily as a symbol, or as a mythological explanation of man's relation to divinity. It is said, that in St John's Epistles, there are warnings against those holding Docetic beliefs, as for instance in

2 John 1:7 "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist."

But again this betrays the second century creativity of the anti-Gnostic plagiarism of Roman Catholicism which subjected the Gnostic First New Testament to is Holy Roman Forgery Mill where many writings were invented in the names of Apostles and Paul and others from the Gnostic First New Testament were altered, changed, and edited.

From the first, then, there existed two opposing conceptions:

- Jesus, a man, although a great and divinely inspired one and anointed one; and
- Christ, the pure Spirit of God, untrampled by humanity and unlimited by this body of death

There were also the sceptics, like Celsus, a second-century Roman opponent of Christianity, who insisted that the idea of Jesus being a prophet or a divine Saviour was a gigantic hoax, spread by superstitious peasantry. How could the Eternal Principle become a man? For them, Jesus was either an imposter or else the fabrication of ignorant fishermen.

Answer for yourself: So who was he? Is the New Testament depiction of him accurate? Could "allegory" be mistakenly understood today if "literal"? This is what this website will reveal to you and you can make your own decision based upon the evidences shown you throughout this site.

In the part of the world where this new religion began many races, nations and cultures met. The new beliefs had to be explained to a large variety of people. We hear of the poor and the downtrodden who flocked to the new revelation. But the elucidations and explanations, about which we read, were given to educated, sophisticated men - men interested in religious and philosophical ideas - thinkers and speculators.

There were the leaders of the Jews themselves, particularly the Pharisees, the strictest and most spiritually orientated of the orthodox Jews. For them, the importance attached to their history as a chosen people had to be included in a Christian philosophy of history. Their understanding of the unity of God had to be reconciled with a belief in the Incarnation.

There were Greeks, whose philosophy had brought them to the idea of one eternal principle underlying all things. To them the idea of Infinity entering into life on earth, or Pure Spirit being connected with materiality, was nonsensical and even horrifying. Among them were rationalist philosophers and sceptics, but there were also members of the Mystery Religions and initiates who had witnessed their secrets. There were those who had knowledge of oriental religions from Babylonia and Persia, and there were those learned in the studies and sciences of the Egyptians. Christian beliefs had to be defined so as to be understandable to all these questioners.

In the years immediately after the birth of Christianity there were no written records or written teaching. All that could be learned about "the amazing events in Judaea" was through oral instruction. St Paul's letters expressing his ideas about "the Christ" are the earliest written records about Christianity that we have. These letters were probably written between 50 AD and the year of Paul's death, about 64 AD. They had been collected and were being regularly read in all the churches by 90 AD. It is not known exactly when the three synoptic Gospels were written, but it is thought that they were circulating among the Christian communities some time either just before the end of the century or no later than the close of the second century. But we again are brainwashed to think the gospels consisted of those we have today; never thinking for a minute that the earliest Gospels of "the Christ" were Gnostic Gospels long before Rome's refutation and burning of them almost out of existence. Archeological finds some fifty years ago consisting of the Nag Hammadi library of Gnostic Gospels coupled with the evidence from the Dead Sea Scrolls has made up "rethink" earliest Christianity as most of our current accepted premises are falling like flies. St Paul's letters expressing Gnostic thought, therefore, together with the Old Testament, were the first readings that the churches would have used.

Now we need to pay very close attention: In none of Paul's epistles does he give any stories from Jesus' life, nor any sayings or parables told by him, though he must have been familiar with the collections of Jesus' sayings and the reports of his deeds that were in existence then. It was, however, the relation of Christ to God, to man and to the universe that was important for Paul. It was this relationship that he wanted, above all, to explain to his converts. The two events in the Christian story upon which he dwells are the death and the resurrection of Christ. It is the spiritual and cosmological meaning behind these events that was at the centre of his teaching. St Paul was, in fact, the first Christian theologian - the first, to my knowledge, to develop a system from the facts and the teaching that had been given.

Even in Paul's lifetime there were those who reacted against what he taught; for example, the dissenting groups in Corinth and Galatia, which appear in the epistles. After his death many Judaeo-Christians in Antioch abandoned his teaching, considering it to be a mythologizing of Christ and a purely mystical conception of Christ's role as Redeemer. Again, because of the development of his ideas, Paul has been accused, and notably by a school of writers at the end of the last century, of so changing Christianity as to become its "second founder". Nevertheless, the letters of St Paul were later accepted, early in the second century following Irenaeus' presentation of the Catholic Second New Testament, as authoritative Apostolic teaching, and so they have remained throughout the history of the Church. By this time many of Paul's letter had been subjected to the Roman Forgery Mill and much has been invented to give Paul's Christ "flesh."

Though in the epistles there are no references to details of Jesus' life and sayings, Paul probably thought that his readers were sufficiently conversant with them, through the oral teaching which they would certainly have been given. All those events and teachings were handed down primarily by oral transmission for many decades. This was still held to be the essential way for religious beliefs to be passed on to the next generation. As long as those who had been directly in touch with the apostles still lived, this method of spreading Christian teaching continued, together with written records.

Although many documents and writings were held sacred, treasured and read at the places of regular Christian meeting, it was the four Gospels, St Paul's letters, (excepting Hebrews), Acts, I Peter and I John that, early in the second century, received general acceptance as embodying the authentic Apostolic tradition. Other writings might be good and profitable to read. There was the Shepherd of Hermas, a description of visions calling to repentance, and, for some time, considered to be "divine scripture". There was the Didache, or Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, a manual of ethical teaching and church practices. There was a treatise called the Letters of Barnabas, which explained the Old Testament as allegory leading towards the New. And there were treasured letters from St Ignatius and St Polycarp. But although these were all considered holy books for private reading, they were gradually eliminated from use at public worship.

It seems that apart from the Gospels - then as now - the letters of St Paul and of some of the other apostles, and the description of the early Church and its life as given in Acts, were the only documents accepted as authoritative Apostolic writings.

Many "records" of the life of Jesus were also available. They are even alluded to in St Luke's Gospel.

Luke 1:1 1 Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, (KJV)

Some became known as Apocryphal Gospels. The word "Apocryphal" originally meant "hidden or secret"'; only later under the influence of Roman Catholicism did it have the meaning of "legendary", and therefore "spurious".

But the four Canonical Gospels, from their earliest appearance, were recognized by most (although not all) as something different, something self-authenticating. They were, at that time, accepted without question as having been written by those whose name they held. Later generations have queried this, and only by lots of study and gathering of knowledge concerning Judaism, Mystery Religions, Gnosticism and Comparative Religions can these documents be analyzed and seen accurately for what they are: non-Jewish and anti-Semitic treatises that pass off the Gnostic Christ as both Jesus of Nazareth as well as the Jewish Messiah.

The aim of the Gospel writers was clearly not to present an historical biography, although there were certain historical facts given - possibly in order to anchor the accounts and the happenings to a definite time and place. Too bad a lot of these are wrong and reflect errors that Jews could never make unless completely ignorant about Judaism, Jewish History, Jewish Scripture, let alone geography.

John 20:31 31 But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name. (KJV)

Rumors of these happenings seem to have made small stir in the surrounding districts, in contrast to their later transforming effects. But whatever interpretation is or has been put upon these events, the New Testament writings, together with contemporary and near contemporary evidence, show that something took place at this actual moment which, then and there, gave birth to Christianity.

The documents which the first Christian communities used and which are now included in the Christian New Testament did not define in clear words exactly what had taken place. In fact it confuses almost beyond recognition what did occur and by whom. Different types of hearers were asking for an explanation and the first teachers of the new religion had to give them one. The first Christians themselves had varying conceptions as to the nature of their founder, and these sometimes conflicting conceptions had to be made understandable to people of different races, classes and cultures. There were problems, therefore, from the very beginning and it is by no means simple to discover how the mainstream of "orthodox" belief emerged.

THE GNOSTIC THEOLOGY OF PAUL AS TAUGHT IN HIS AUTHENTIC EPISTLES

Paul's writings are the oldest documents in the New Testament. Ironically the teaching of Paul when examined closely bears little resemblance to the orthodox Christianity of today and yet Paul has been considered one of the pillars of Christendom for centuries. How ironic is that? Paul's theology is decidedly "Gnostic" when one looks at it closely and at the same time possesses a working knowledge of what Gnosticism actually teaches as well as what the original authentic Pauline Epistles really were and what was contained within them before the later forgeries of other "epistles" in Paul's name. This is fact dear readers and not mere speculation as any serious investigation into the Canon of the New Testament and the writings of the Church Fathers will attest.

Paul did not base his teaching exclusively on the "tradition" of the Nazorean (Jerusalem) community but states unequivocally that his gospel was given to him "through a revelation of Jesus Christ." This is why we often find "two" conflicting voices in the New Testament where the "Pauline Christ" is unfortunately merged with the "Jewish Messiah" on the pages of our New Tesaments and few ever see this.

Gal 1:12 12 For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. (KJV)

Paul's appeal to private revelation for the source of his gospel places him in the category of the "Gnostic," that is, one who knows through divine insight or revelation. Paul as a "vision" and never met the "Jesus" of history and as shown in an earlier article Paul's "revelation" was in 27 A.D. which strangely is 3-4 years before the presumed death of Jesus according to Christian history. Strangely yet is that Paul decided in light of this "revelation" to not visit Jerusalem for 17 years; if he had he could have met the "historical Jesus" who would have supposedly been alive for several more years. I find that strange if not incredible and boarders on the "insane" if these events happened as chronicled for us in the inherited New Tesament. Ironically, and this deserves much contemplation, several "Gnostic" teachers, including Valentinus, pointed to Paul as the source of their teaching. So now we have "literalistic Roman Western Christianity" and "allegorical Gnostic Christiantiy" which opposed each other fiercely both claiming Paul and his theology as the origin for their religious doctrines!!!

Answer for yourself: How can that be unless there has been some "tampering" with Paul and his "theology" over the centuries?

There are several key ideas in Paul's theology which have been either ignored or misinterpreted but which are, nevertheless, firmly embedded in Paul's theological system. According to orthodox Christians, the following ideas which I will attribute to Paul would be considered "heretical."

Answer for yourself: Why? Not only because they have been re-interpreted by orthodox fabricators from the close of the first century onward, but because the "Gnostic" quality of Paul's theology became too uncomfortable for the early Church Fathers.

PAUL'S CHRIST: THE ARCHETYPAL MAN

Many years ago it dawned upon me as my studies progressed that Paul's theology appears to be based on the central idea of the Heavenly or "Cosmic" Christ and not a historical human being. At first I was confused but that was before I undertood a few years later as I got around to it a serious, a very serious, investigation in Gnosticism and especially "Jewish" and "Christian Gnosticism".The more I read and studied Gnosticism and how the early Christian Gnostic appealed to Paul for their theology then it became clear to me that Paul knows Jesus not as a flesh and blood "Lord" but as the resurrected "anointed" of God who personifies what can be termed the Heavenly or "Archetypal Man."The teaching concerning the "Archetypal Man" has been ingeniously swept aside by the orthodox, but had surfaced in the Christian-Gnostic schools (which looked to Paul as their teacher) under the term "Anthropos," which in Greek means the Man or Primal Man. In the gospels Jesus is made to call himself "Son of Man." This phrase can be understood also as the "Son of the Primal Man." The Jesus of the authentic Pauline epistles is called "the Son or image of the Archetypal or spiritual Adam". According to ancient Hebrew sources such as the Kabbalah, the esoteric doctrine of Israel, this divine Archetypal Man was known as Adam Kadmon (Charles Ponce, Kabbalah, (Wheaton, Illinois: Theosophical Publishing House, 1983), pp. 134-142). The Adam Kadmon is God's attributes which appear in a human-like form. Various Gnostic and hermetic concepts occur in the Jewish Cabbala and its Renaissance Christian variant: God is unlimited and cannot be grasped by human reason because he is without will, intention, longing, thought, language, and action. He is En Soph (the infinite), unknowable in his infinity and passive. Basically Kabbalah is based upon the teaching that the one living God, there's only one living God, has a variety of attributes, characteristics by which we can recognize him, that is that aspect of God, who descends low enough for human beings to be able to relate to Him. The epitome of God, the highest, the unlimited one, the infinite one, he is inscrutable. There is nothing about him that we can identify with, He has no attributes, we're incapable of comprehending Him. It is He who is descending in a manner by which He reveals himself little by little to mortal man, if we're willing to study and reach for Him.

The act of creation takes place in the unfolding of the ten divine emanations of God (En Soph), the Sephirot. The ten Sephiroth form Adam Kadmon, the archetypal man - comparable to the Hermetic Anthropos - the spiritual entity in whose image (Genesis 1:26) the Paradisical Adam is made. Sometimes, Adam Kadmon is the total of divine emanations in the ten Sephiroth, sometimes he consists of one emanation only, for instance Tiferet, beauty. Adam Kadmon is the most exalted manifestation of the godhead and can be approached to a certain extent through meditation.

We also find the term "Son of Man" in the books of Enoch, Daniel and throughout the*New Testament*, where it refers, esoterically, to the True, Ideal Man.

The Son of Man described in the Book of Enoch (3rd to 2nd century B.C.) is a pre-existent Messiah-figure who appears to be a divine personage bearing a divine "office." Enoch queries the angel in his vision of the Ancient of Days, asking who is the one whose "countenance resembled that of a man":

> "He answered and said to me, This is the Son of Man, to whom righteousness belongs; with whom righteousness has dwelt, and who will reveal all the treasures of that which is concealed; for the Lord of Spirits has chosen him; and his portion has surpassed all before the Lord of Spirits in everlasting uprightness... [3] Before the sun and the signs were created, before the stars of heaven were formed, his name [the Son of Man] was invoked in the presence of the Lord of Spirits. A support shall he be for the righteous and the holy to lean upon, without falling; and he shall be the light of nations. [4] He shall be the hope of those whose hearts are troubled. All, who dwell on earth, shall fall down and worship him; shall bless and glorify him, and sing praises to the name of The Lord of Spirits. [5] Therefore the Elect and The Concealed One existed in his [The Lord of Spirits] presence, before the world was created, and forever. [6] In his presence he existed, and has revealed to the saints and to the righteous the wisdom of the Lord of Spirits;...(Brackets added.)" (The Book of Enoch, 46:2; 48:3-6 in Elizabeth C. Prophet, Forbidden Mysteries of Enoch, (Los Angeles: Summit University Press, 1983), pp. 128-130).

In Enoch this "Son of Man" is also termed the "Messiah" and the "Elect" who shall; "take command," "be powerful upon the earth" and "judge the kings and mighty men of the earth".

Answer for yourself: Then do we see in the Book of Enoch that the "Messiah" is both an individual and a group of people as well? Yes, we sure do.

As we shall see in a few seconds, Paul understood Jesus as the pre-existent, divine Son of Man who had taken incarnation on earth. Paul however uses the term "Christ" and not "Son of Man." This divine figure descended to earth and became a man, as Paul describes:

Phil 2:6-11 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. 9 Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: 10 That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; 11 And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the word "likeness" when Paul was referring to Christ Jesus?

Strong's Concordance for the word "likeness":

3667 homoioma (hom-oy'-o-mah); from 3666; a form; abstractly, resemblance: KJV-- made like to, likeness, shape, similitude.

Thayer's Greek Lexicon for the word "likeness":

3667 homoioma- what has been made after the likeness of something

- a) a figure, a image, a likeness, a representation
- b) likeness that is, resemblance, such as amounts almost to equality or identity

What you should notice is that Paul is saying that this "Christ Jesus" is from God but is only an abstract resemblance in the shape or similarity to mankind; only a representation of man!!!

Now we have see this concept already in our study of Gnosticism where the Gnostic Christ was believed to be within each creature created in the image of God.

Col 1:26-27 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

In his epistle to the Colossians, Paul further elaborates on his doctrine of the "Universal Christ," the Enochian Son of Man or Archetypal Man:

Col 1:15-18 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. 18 And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstboth from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the word "image"?

The Strong's Concordance word for "image"?

1504 eikon (i-kone'); from 1503; a likeness, i.e. (literally) statue, profile, or (figuratively) representation, resemblance: KJV-- image.

Answer for yourself: Is this not the same idea we saw in Phillipians above? It sure is!

Answer for yourself: Where did Paul receive these ideas?

According to Biblical scholar, Hugh J. Schonfield, Paul studied the "occultism of the Pharisees," and specialized in the "Lore of Creation," which was in turn influenced by "Chaldean and platonic cosmogonical speculations, but these had been poured into a Jewish monotheistic mould" (Hugh J. Schonfield, Those Incredible Christians, (New York: Bantam, 1969), pp. 245-245). Paul, of course, also claimed to have received his doctrine from this Christ Jesus himself.

Schonfield elaborates on the meaning of Paul's teaching as follows and helps to illumine the above passage:

> "The essential element in the teaching is that the visible universe conforms to a pattern or design, which represents the image of the Invisible God who, himself, has neither form nor substance. Man, the crown of creation, being made in the image of God, answers therefore completely to the original pattern, which thus may be conceived as a manlike figure. This primordial or Archetypal man, the "heavenly man" of Philo and the Adam Kadmon of the Jewish occultists, is the true image of God, the beginning of the creation and the Lord of it. Hence the first man on earth was given dominion over every living thing in it" (Ibid., p. 246).

Obviously, this concept of the Archetypal or heavenly Adam has been "lost" to modern Christianity.
Answer for yourself: But who is this Archetypal Man? Schonfield continues:

> "We see man, therefore, as wearing physically the likeness of his spiritual Archetype, and that archetype is the expression of the nature of God....But for what purpose was man created? His creation must have had to do with the Messianic Plan, and the soul of Adam must have been knit with the soul of the ultimate Messiah [Christ]. It was therefore to be deduced that the archetypal or heavenly man was also the pre-existing spiritual counterpart of the Messiah, the heavenly Spirit-Christ. (Emphasis added.) (Ibid., pp. 246,247).

Schonfield then equates the "heavenly man" with the Enochian Son of Man, as described above, and states that Paul "regards the heavenly Messiah as the sole Messiah, who by an act of temporary redemptive renunciation became the man Jesus... the firstborn of all creation...." (Ibid., pp. 248-249).

If Schonfield's analysis is correct, the Jesus worshipped for centuries by orthodox Christians is not the Jesus of Paul but the Jesus constructed by Church Fathers and Church councils, e.g., the Council of Nicea.

Schonfield adds:

> "Paul's Christ is not God, he is God's first creation, and there is no room for the trinitarian formula of the Athanasian Creed nor for its doctrine that the Son was "not made, nor created, but begotten." But inasmuch as the visible universe is the expression of the Invisible God, the Christ, as first-product, comprises the whole of that expression in himself." (Emphasis added) (Ibid., p. 249).

According to Schonfield's interpretation of Paul's theology, not only is Jesus not God but, is in fact, Man, in his original spiritual state!

Schonfield continues:

> "Accepting with Paul the equation of the Messiah as the Adam Kadmon, it required that he should cast aside his glory and 'make himself small,...and initiate the restoration of harmony between man and God, and between the visible universe and the Invisible God. By the resurrection, there was restored in Jesus the light-body which the first man had possessed and forfeited, and the re-expansion of his stature in a manner comparable to that of the first man before the Fall. Thus ennobled and reintegrated with the Adam Kadmon, (Christ) Jesus was henceforth the Lord Jesus Christ." (Ibid., p. 250).

Paul therefore distinguishes between the Heavenly Christ and the earthly manifestation of the likeness of he Adam Kadmon in the form of Christ Jesus who was "made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." (Romans 1:3-4) It was through the resurrection that Jesus became the Son of God and thus restored man's true spiritual archetypal state.

> "...It is again evident that Paul did not think of Christ as God, only as being created in the image of God as the archetypal man and therefore having a godlike form....The heavenly Christ only took over when Jesus was raised from the dead and ascended to heaven (Ibid., p. 251).

A thorough reading of Paul's epistles will confirm the relative accuracy of Schonfield's analysis of Paul's Christology. The authentic 7 epistles of Paul taught only this Cosmic Christ and not a human being as we have been led to believe do to the later forgery of the Second New Testament whereby this allegorical Christ is made to appear as if a historical human being.

It is impossible to construe from the above passages that Paul is referring solely to the historical Jesus, even in his resurrected state, as dwelling in the hearts of the faithful, especially in view of the fact that Paul continually uses the term, Perfect Man or inner man, and not Jesus Christ. It is clear that the Perfect Man is to be identified with the true or inner nature of man.

This analysis is corroborated by Father John Rossner, author of In Search of the Primordial Tradition:

> "The term "Bar Nasha" or "Son of Man" refers to the "divine human form." An archetype of the human creation itself, it is the perfect Cosmic blueprint for all human beings. This was equated by some ancient writers with the "Logos" or eternal "image of God" that was said to be in every man that comes into the world" (John Rossner, In Search of the Primordial Tradition and the Cosmic Christ, (St. Paul: Llewellyn Publications, 1989), p. 189).

In The Myth of God Incarnate, Frances Young, commenting on Paul's doctrine of the Son of God, writes:

> This figure [the Son of God] is pre-existent not simply as a kind of divine being...but as the "man from heaven";... Indeed, he is the archetypal man and the archetypal Son of God in whom we become sons of God, fellow-heirs with Christ who will bear the image of the man of heaven (John Hicks, ed., The Myth of God Incarnate, (Phil.: Westminister Press, 1977), "A Cloud of Witnesses" by Frances Young, p. 21).

The heavenly Christ and the appearance of the image of God as the likeness of man entitled Christ Jesus having become one Lord Jesus Christ is a teaching which has been branded as heretical and "Gnostic" by the orthodox fabricators of Christianity from the second century onwards.

Christ as the divine Archetype whom the believer should follow and thus attain to his own spiritual inheritance which was lost at the time of the fall, has itself become a lost teaching.

And yet, the orthodox, by reinterpreting Paul and superimposing second- and third-century theology upon Paul's Christology whereby the Cosmic-Heavenly Christ has been transformed into a historical human being by gross forgery of the previous Gnostic First New Testament, have claimed him as their own.

CHRIST...THE INDWELLING PRESENCE OF GOD

This Christ whom Paul preaches is also an indwelling presence, a presence not confined solely to the image of the Christ Jesus which at one time appeared to mankind. Look at the following examples: After Paul had submitted himself to the "mystical crucifixion," Christ, as an inner presence, dwelt in him:

"I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." (Gal. 2:20) "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." (Gal. 4:6)

Paul teaches that this indwelling Christ must be nurtured in the hearts of the faithful:

"My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you." (Gal. 4:19, emphasis added.)

Paul prays to the Father for the members of his community at Ephesus:

"That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith...And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." (Eph. 3:16,17,19, emphasis added.)

The nurturing and development of this indwelling Christ as the Divine Spark in the hearts of Paul's disciples results in the believer's transformation into the Archetypal Man called by Paul an inner man, perfect man or new man:

"Till we all come in unity of the faith, and of the gnosis of the Son of God, unto the perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Eph. 4:13)

"...Put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." (Eph. 4:24)

By accepting Paul's gospel then, man is restored to his true estate: a preexistent spiritual being, as the "Jesus Story" likewise exampled to all as if restored through the resurrection of a new "Self".

Answer for yourself: How is this restoration to be accomplished?

Paul answers:

"And as we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." (1 Cor.15:49)

This restoration to the heavenly image or heavenly Man was to be accomplished by means of the "resurrection of the dead." This is not rising from some grave of mud and dirt; it is the awakening of the Divine Mind within us thus rasing "the Christ Mind" from the death of "matter" within us while we yet live.

This understanding of "the Christ" comes by knowledge (study) and with a time of maturity.

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

DID PAUL CONTINUE TO BRING BLOOD SACRIFICES 30 YEARS AFTER THE DEATH OF JESUS…DID PAUL & JAMES BELIEVE THAT THIS DEATH OF JESUS WAS THE FINAL ATONEMENT FOR ANYTHING?

Before we begin let me see if we can agree on a premise before reading this article.

A Christian's religious belief system, when tested and exposed to contradictory facts from Biblical languages, Biblical history, Biblical culture, and archeology, must in the Spirit of Truth and Repentance, be flexible enough to change

If you can admit to the truth of the above statement, then read on. If not, you need not continue.

If you were like me then most likely you grew up in the Christian church. Having done so you probably, like myself, were fed a steady diet of the book of Hebrews. In that book which is traditionally attributed to Paul as being the author, we are told that Jesus was the ultimate sacrifice.

In particular we read:

- Hebrews 9:12-14 Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us…..How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?
- Hebrews 9:28 So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.
- Hebrews 10:1-2 For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. 2. For then would they not have ceased to be offered?
- Hebrews 10:10 By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all
- Hebrews 10:14 For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified
- Hebrews 10:18 Now where remission of there is, there is no more offering for sin

After writing these passages the writer goes even so far as to say in Hebrews 10:20…."by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his body" and Hebrews 10:22 "let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith…"

NOW FOR THE HARD PART

Although it cannot be proven for certainty, the tradition of the Church maintains Pauline authorship for the book of Hebrews. As early as the second century Paul was regarded in the East as the author, and during the third century his authorship was the accepted view. In the West, where the epistle was known from earliest times, Pauline authorship was rejected and did not gain acceptance until the fourth century.

Having said that, then we should expect to find examples in Paul's life where he lives out the doctrines of salvation espoused in the book of Hebrews… especially the one concerning the finality of Jesus Christ's death as the final atonement for sin?

Answer for yourself: Does the Apostle Paul, in his life after the cross, share with us examples whereby he shows us that he believes that Jesus "once for all" redeemed us from sin? Astonishingly, no he doesn't! In fact I will show you in a minute he does just the opposite!

Answer for yourself: Can we find examples in the Apostle Paul's life where he goes against the teachings of the book of Hebrews and continues to bring blood sacrifices for sin as an atonement after the cross? Yes. We will examine the book of Acts and the book of Numbers to prove it to you shortly.

Answer for yourself: Did Paul demonstrate through a Nazarite vow and its accompanying blood sacrifices (Num. 6) that he was obedient to the rules and laws of the Pentateuch and the Mosaic Law, thereby producing a state of approval before God after the cross? Yes.

Answer for yourself: How could obedience to the laws of God (including those dealing with blood as well as non-blood atonements) produce a state of approval when we are told different today? It sure does and does so easily. If we look up the word used for "law" in the New Testament we find the correct meaning in the Greek:

The Greek word for "law" is as follows:

Lexicon Greek 3551

3551 nomos {nom'-os}from a primary nemo (to parcel out, especially food or grazing to animals); TDNT - 4:1022,646;

AV - law 197; 197

- 1) anything established, anything received by usage, a custom, a law, a command
- 1a) of any law whatsoever
 - 1a1) a law or rule producing a state approved of God
 - 1a1a) by the observance of which is approved of God
 - 1a2) a precept or injunction
 - 1a3) the rule of action prescribed by reason
- 1b) of the Mosaic law, and referring to the context. either to the volume of the law or to its contents
- 1c) the name of the more important part (the Pentateuch), is put for the entire collection of the sacred books of the OT

IT CAN BE SHOWN THAT THAT IN THE NEW TESTAMENT THE APOSTLE PAUL BRINGS BLOODY SIN OFFERINGS AFTER THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS…..SO WHAT GIVES?

That's right it can! Let us now examine the word "offering" as used of the type of sacrifice Paul is recorded as having made in fulfillment of the Nazarite vow in Acts 21:26.

Acts 21:26

26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them entered into the temple, to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.

(KJV)

The Greek word for "offering" as used in the text is as follows:

Lexicon Greek 4376

4376 prosphora {pros-for-ah'} from 4374; TDNT - 9:68,1252; n f

AV - offering 8, offering up 1; 9

- 1) the act of offering, a bringing to
- 2) that which is offered, a gift, a present. In the NT a sacrifice, whether bloody or not: offering for sin, expiatory offering

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that this offering could be bloody or not? Yes. So we have to keep studying deeper to get to the truth cause as of now it is unclear which type of offerings Paul brought.

Answer for yourself: How do come to the correct understanding about whether Paul brought blood sacrifices on non-blood sacrifices? Easy. We let the context of the passage define it for us.

And since this offering occurs after the cross - the ramifications of such an offering if is "blood" has staggering consequences for traditional Christianity and Christian doctrine.

INVESTIGATING PAUL'S OFFERING IN DETAIL

We need only to look at what was required in numbers 6 for one who undertook a Nazarite vow.

Since this is a Nazarite vow as described in Acts 21, which occurs almost 30 years after the death of Jesus, we must look no further than the commandments surrounding the Nazarite vow and these are recorded for us in Numbers chapter 6 to determine if the offerings attendant with it are "bloody" or not:

Numb 6:13 (KJV) And this [is] the law of the Nazarite, when the days of his separation are fulfilled: he shall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: 14 And he shall offer his offering unto the LORD, one he lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt offering, and one ewe lamb of the first year without blemish for a sin offering, and one ram without blemish for peace offerings, 15 And a basket of unleavened bread, cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened bread anointed with oil, and their meat offering, and their drink offerings. 16 And the priest shall bring [them] before the LORD, and shall offer his sin offering, and his burnt offering: 17 And he shall offer the ram [for] a sacrifice of peace offerings unto the LORD, with the basket of unleavened bread: the priest shall offer also his meat offering, and his drink offering. 18 And the Nazarite shall shave the head of his separation [at] the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall take the hair of the head of his separation, and put [it] in the fire which [is] under the sacrifice of the peace offerings. 19 And the priest shall take the sodden shoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and shall put [them] upon the hands of the Nazarite, after [the hair of] his separation is shaven: 20 And the priest shall wave them [for] a wave offering before the LORD: this [is] holy for the priest, with the wave breast and heave shoulder: and after that the Nazarite may drink wine. 21 This [is] the law of the Nazarite who hath vowed, [and of] his offering unto the LORD for his separation, beside that his hand shall get: according to the vow which he vowed, so he must do after the law of his separation.

Answer for yourself: First of all, did you notice that one who undertook a Nazarite vow was required to bring peace offerings as well as sin offerings?

Answer for yourself: Don't you find this rather strange in light of what Hebrews teaches, yet we have Paul's example to the contrary?

Answer for yourself: If Paul is the writer of Hebrews, and if he ascribed to such doctrines taught in Hebrews then why is he doing just the opposite?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that these peace and sin offerings required the killing and spilling of an animal's blood which had to be sprinkled on the altar?

Answer for yourself: Having read Numbers 6, do you see for yourself that blood sacrifices had to be brought in fulfillment of the Nazarite vow which Paul was obedient to over 30 years after the cross? I hope so.

Answer for yourself: Does it look like it to you that Paul believed, as seen in his actions, that Jesus was the last sacrifice once and for all? No way.

Answer for yourself: Does it appear to you that the writer of the book of Hebrews 10:1-2 is correct when it states that blood sacrifices for sin had "ceased to be offered?" No way. Evidently Paul surely does not seem to believe it by his actions.

Answer for yourself: Can you say that by Paul's actions he believe that the offering of the body of Jesus was a once for all sacrifice for sin? You sure can't!

Answer for yourself: How can be believe Hebrews 10:14 where it says we are "perfected forever" by the sacrifice of Jesus when just 30 years later the Apostle Paul was still bring sin offerings to the Temple (after the death of Jesus)?

Answer for yourself: Over the course of thirty years had Paul forgotten that "Now where remission of there is, there is no more offering for sin" as Hebrews 10:18 professes? Evidently he did not ascribe to such a teaching as evidenced by his life and actions.

Answer for yourself: How can we draw near to God with a true heart when we have been taught a doctrine by our Christian church which cannot be substantiated by looking at Paul's life when he is the one believe to have written it in the first place?

Answer for yourself: Why would Paul bring "blood sacrifices" and "sin offerings" if the Law had been down away with in Jesus' death or if Jesus' death had been understood as the final sacrifice of all sacrifices? He most assuredly would not have done so.

Answer for yourself: From the examples I have shown you, how can you in true faith believe that there is a "new way" when it can be shown by Paul's life that there is not any new way at all, but that the only way given to God by man was still followed by him as well as gentile coverts he taught?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that maybe for the first time you are seeing the many conflicts in the New Testament which lie just before the surface of the English translation?

Answer for yourself: Will you admit to yourself that what you have just saw throttles mainline Christianity and its teachings about the death of Jesus as a final atonement for sin? (request our in-depth teachings on atonement and get the answers you need..they are free).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that not just in Hebrews, but all through the New Testament we have passages which pass for "truth," which upon just a little investigation can be shown to be Gentile fabrications created by Roman and Gentile authors to change the faith of Jesus into a faith about him and replace Biblical Judaism intended for all mankind with neo-paganism which was their heritage?

Answer for yourself: In other words, are you aware that as a typical Christian you practice a replacement faith which can be shown to be in error by anyone well versed in both the Jewish as well as the Greek Scriptures?

You might ask yourself why no one besides me has pointed this out to you before. I can assure you that in this Information Age today there are multitudes coming to the realization to which I bring you today. The Last Days are upon us and as the Prophet Hosea states that in the Last Days God will restore the roots to the faith of the Gentiles. Simply, the vast majority of Christian pastors and teachers today are not qualified in the study of the Scriptures to lead anyone as evidenced by what I showed you today. I too like you was led astray by my spiritual leaders as well as my Seminary. Such is the sad reality to which I was born, and only departed after many years of in-depth study to find the truth when my studies challenged much of what I had accepted "by faith." Faith should only confirm and not contradict Biblical facts! But the roots of Gentile anti-Semitism created a new theology to replace what God had given all mankind. The legacy remains today and most are not aware.

The fact that Paul does bring blood sacrifices COMMANDED BY THE LAW testifies to him and should to us that the Law had not passed away after Jesus' death as a pattern for life for believers in Jesus and his message as we so often have been told. But more than that it demonstrates two things:

- 1. That Paul evidently did not think that Jesus' death was a sacrifice to end all sacrifices.
- 2. That Paul still felt the need to obey the Law after the death of Jesus, even laws concerning sin offerings as an atonement for sin.

Answer for yourself: Is that the message you have received from your church?

Answer for yourself: Has you church or clergy studied deeply enough to search out these truths buried beneath the pages of your Bibles or have they accepted the "echoes" of the past as truth even when the text of your Bibles correctly interpreted says different?

Answer for yourself: What does that do to the traditional teachings we hear week after week in our churches preached by those who repeat what they have heard and not studied out for themselves? Should we feel secure?

Answer for yourself: Dear Christian, can you now see that the Law had never passed away after the cross and we have severely misunderstood the message of the Bible and in its place accepted the traditions of men…many of which are in error and contradict the truths given by God? I hope so.

Answer for yourself: Can you begin to guess at the staggering consequences facing you since not only the Law has not passed away, but it seems Jesus' death was not understood by the first believes as a final atonement for sin as we have been told?

Answer for yourself: As most who read these thought-provoking articles are Christians, do you understand that you, like I did before I learned the truth, have lived most of your lives as "Lawless Believes" and are trusting for you atonement something other than the Bible teaches and what Paul actually believed?

Needles to say we have a great contradiction. Paul's life speaks otherwise than what is attributed to him in his letters. What we have to come to terms with is that much of what is believed written by Paul is rhetoric put into the mouth of Paul by the early Gentile Church. For you have seen hidden beneath the lines of your Bible evidence which contradicts much of what we are told Paul wrote. The both cannot be reconciled!

It is almost too scary to consider the many sins we have committed "under grace" without the guidance of God's Law which would have regulated our conduct and behavior if followed. Bet Emet Ministries continues to warn the Christian concerning the Law and its demands made upon one's worship of God through the correct giving of the Tithe, as well as the sanctification and observance of the many appointed times with God as commanded in the Law concerning His Festivals and Saturday Sabbaths. Not only this, but the Law details other than non-blood atonements which often are the subject matter of the teachings of Jesus in the "red" of our Bibles, but our unfamiliarity with the Bible blinds us to such understanding. The only problem is that we, for the most part, don't know the Law and are not aware of what God gave besides animal sacrifices that atones for our sins. We must repent if we truly are believers in God and love Him more than our erroneous traditions.

SO WHAT IS THE BOTTOM LINE PASTOR CRAIG?

We at Bet Emet Ministries realize that the vast majority of our readers have never had the opportunities presented to me as well as others who are part of our ministry to study in-depth to the degree that we do. I personally understand the great handicap this presents to the average Christian believer today. The average believer cannot read either Hebrew or Greek and is at a total loss in coming to terms with the original language in which the Bible was written. Those who try to study rarely go deep enough since lacking the skill to do so to the degree necessary to arrive at pertinent information such as this article has provided. Thus, they find themselves dependent upon their local spiritual authorities for spiritual guidance in the Scriptures. This is the tragic irony of all! Much within the documents comprising the New Testament can be shown to be Gentile fabrications when viewed against the religion of Jesus which was Biblical Judaism.

As I have shown you in this article alone, a thorough understanding of the Bible and the Jewish Scriptures is necessary to accurately understand the events of the New Testament. Without such a background one is easily led astray by the "agenda" of the Gentile authors of the books of the New Testament in spite of the fact they carry "Jewish names" (given by Jerome). The real apostles had nothing to do with the writing of the Synoptic gospels, for just a cursory background in Judaism betrays the mistakes and errors within the Synoptic Gospels that pass for "Judaism" to the unlearned, which in reality never were a part of the Judaism practiced in the first century. The pagan religions of the non-Jews who were familiar with mystic blood cults. It is not surprising to find in Mythric cults, as well as others, liturgies in the religious rites of other nations and religions often quoted word or for word in the New Testament. How are we to account for this as if supposedly given to us by a Jewish Rabbi who supposedly fought and gave his life to strengthen the faith of Moses? The truth of the matter is that the chronology and evolution of the Canon of the New Testament was disputed, argued, debated, and challenged up until the first millennium after the time given for Jesus.

Once you come to an understanding that there was not a consensus of opinion concerning the books we take for granted that are "inspired scripture," and that consensus was arrived at only after hundreds and hundreds of years of debate, then your opinion of these documents as "authoritative" will quickly vanish. Not only were books "in" and "out" of the Canon of the New Testament repeatedly, but this nonsense seriously calls into questions the role of the Holy Spirit in the selection process itself. Besides that, if you are acquainted with the theologies of those who did the selection, then you should be horrified that God would allow such an important task to fall into the hands of idolaters such as the early Roman Church. Let us not forget it was these people who prayed to the dead, believed in Mary as co-mediator with Jesus, believed in purgatory, believed in purchasing indulgences to get people out of hell, baptized infants for salvation, etc. These discrepancies should make you want to reconsider the whole historicity of the "Jesus Story." It did me.

I could go on and on, but you see the point. If you would like more in-depth teachings concerning the Hebrew Roots of the Christian Faith, how the original faith taken in the Great Commission was corrupted and later changed by Roman invention and how you can return to "the faith once given to the saints," please contact us. Shalom.

PAULINE GNOSTIC CHRISTIANITY VS PETRINE MESSIANIC JUDAISM: THE HIDDEN STRUGGLE IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

In a previous article I set out for the readers the fact that there are basically 3 different "theologies" and "Christs" in the New Testament which have under the influence and creativity of Rome been merged into one in the refutation of the First Gnostic New Testament. That being the case then understand that it is not a easy chore to sift through these prior competing theologies and come away with a concise and clear picture of not only "the Christ" but "Christ Jesus" as well as "Jesus" of the New Testament. For many that will be a very confusing statement but one which upon diligent study will become very clear over time. Let me summarize these 3 conflicting and competing voices before we begin:

- James and the Jerusalem Church & Messianic Judaism which taught and looked for a human descendant of King David who would be anointed for the task of a physical deliverance and salvation of Israel from the persecutions of the Gentiles and restoration to the past glories of the years of King David and in so doing help to begin the Kingdom of God on earth.
- Marcion and Paul and Gnostic Christianity which taught an allegorical "Christ within" and taught of a spiritual awaking and salvation of the soul within mankind through the coming to the awareness of the God within, man's true origin and his spiritual destiny, and the attendant responsibilities, both ethically and morally, that such an awareness of man's true identity brings to man who is created in the image of God.
- Roman literalistic Christianity who not only wins the wars against the Jews and Gnostics but builds upon both their beliefs the ultimate religious synthesis whereby the expected human messiah of Judaism is fused with the personified cosmic godman of sunworship [Essene theology] and presented as a "literalized" man and "fleshly Christ" in a historical timeline of Rome's making through their forgery of many religious "gospels" and "epistles" in names of Paul and other historical personalities from the Jerusalem Church. In so doing they literally back-wrote a "literalized" Christ as "Joshua-Jesus-Christ" and literalized the myths of Osiris-Dionysius and these became many of the stories and events of "the human Christ" we have in the New Testament. Lastly their continued forgery in Paul's name was to give the impression that Paul always believed and taught a fleshly Christ when in fact he did not and taught just the opposite and opposed those who were in his day and toward the end of his life beginning to teach a "fleshly Christ".

Bet Emet Ministries has made diligent effort to bring to the readers' attention in previous articles and websites that much of the basis of our Canonical Gospels is, to a large extent, mythical, and that the Gnosis of Ancient Egypt was carried into other lands by the underground passage of the Mysteries, to emerge at last as the literalized legend of Historic Christianity.

To quote Gerald Massey in his Nature Genesis "the mythical Christ was as surely continued from Egypt as were the mythical types of the Christ on the Gnostic Stones and in the Catacombs of Rome". Once one's studies have encompassed a through study of Egyptian religion as the foundation for all other world religions which will find their life through Egypt (and this included both both Judaism and Christianity as well as all others) then one sees for himself once he then undertakes a serious study of comparative religions the very clear chronological evolution of the earliest revelations of God to man given in the beginning to the Ancients in Egypt. This original understanding of God as expressed by the Ancients in Egypt in Thebes, Memphis, Heliopolis, and Hermopolis can be traced in various stages of degradation down through time in comparative religious studies which are necessary if one is to ever get to the real origins of Judaism and Christianity. If one does then great study then he or she will benefit and see what few who live as Christians ever see; namely more to the point, that Paul's Epistles and theology as he originally taught it in his 7 authentic Epistles expresses the very kernal of Egyptian thought concerning God and His "Christ". This mind you is expressed by Paul originally in his 7 authentic Epistles through allegory and metaphors which Rome will later "literalize" in Paul's name and in the names of other personages from the Jerusalem Messianic synagogue. In so doing Rome create for the first time a historical human Christ! Today Rome's corruption of the Gnostic First New Testament has complete distorted the Ancient understanding of "the Christ" and "Jesus Christ" almost beyond correct understanding except to those who pay the price to wade through so much conflicting theology and sift it and organize it. When one does this great task then they will see what I am sharing today: that there are 3 voices and 3 "Christs" all rolled into one in the New Testament. Today we have to face a problem that is one of the most difficult; it is my calling to share the truth concerning the New Testament and in so doing reveal that Paul was the opponent and not the apostle of Historic Christianity which would teach a literalized "Jesus Christ" and even claim Paul as one of their own. Extra-Biblical records available to us today shout this message concerning the authentic Paul over and over again and few ever read them or are aware of their existence. How ironic in light of what in-depth study of both the current New Testament and the earlier corruption of the Gnostic First New Testament can reveal. Let us not be mistaken by this; namely, that Rome gave to the world in their refutation of Gnostic Christianity and the earliest followers of "the Christ within" a false Christ and a false document that completely distorts what the earliest believers in "the Christ" really believed let alone as well what Messianic Judaism expected in their hoped-for Messiah.

THE CONFLICT BETWEEN THE FIRST TWO COMPETING VOICES & THE FIRST TWO "CHRISTS" IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

I remember it well setting in class in Seminary one day as the Professor casually mentioned the "Paul-Petrine Problem" and the "Tubigen School" of Europe and he moved on to another topic. "What Paul-Peter problem" I thought to myself. I would have to wait till after graduation to begin my own serious study of such things I heard in Seminary as my plate was full with current studies, ministry, family, and a job. Having said that I would later look seriously into this "Peter-Paul Problem" and the "Tubigen School" after Seminary and my studies into such areas of controversy and the results of such through investigation are made known in Bet Emet's articles and websites.

It is well known to all serious students of the subject that there was an original rent or rift of difference between the preacher Paul and the other founders of Christianity, whom he first met in Jerusalem--namely, Cephas (or Peter), James, and John. Paul, according to what we believe he actually wrote himself, did not think much of them personally as the Galatians Epistle make clear, but scoffs a little at their pretensions to being Pillars of the Church.

Gal 2:6-12 6 But of these who seemed to be somewhat, (whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person:) for they who seemed to be somewhat in conference added nothing to me: 7 But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; 8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles:) 9 And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.

Opposite of what Rome will present to the world in their latter corruptions of the earliest New Testament Gnostic writings collected by Marcion which contained the authentic letters of Paul, those men from the Jerusalem Messianic congregation or Church had nothing in common with Paul from the first and neither he with they, and never forgave him for his independence and opposition to the last. That is why Paul's Epistles are full of his defense of his "apostleship" in light of his rejection by the Jerusalem congregation which we see throughout the whole of the New Testament and the book of Acts. Considering Paul's past, it should not be surprising that Paul was not readily accepted by the Jerusalem synagogue having previously been a Sadducee since it was only Sadducees or those who were in their employ who could arrest and imprison others:

Acts 8:3 says, "But Saul began ravaging the church, entering house after house; and dragging off men and women, he would put them in prison."

Acts 9:26 says, "And when he had come to Jerusalem, he was trying to associate with the disciples; and they were all afraid of him, not believing that he was a disciple."

But the depth of that visible rift has not yet been fathomed in consequence of false assumptions by most; and my own researches and determination to look and think for myself have led me to the inevitable conclusion that there is but one way in which it can be bottomed for the first time. That is through the presentation of hard hitting facts dug from historical investigation that is obtained by many long nights and months of dedicated study.

Having done so for not only months but years of such dedicated study into such areas which most Christians never know about less study it is beyond any doubt that two voices are heard contending in Paul's Epistles which we have today, to the confounding of the writer's sense and the confusion of the reader's. They utter different doctrines, so fundamentally opposed as to be for ever irreconcilable; and this duplicity of doctrine makes Paul, who is the one distinct and single-minded personality of the "New Testament," look like the most double-faced of men; double-tongued as the serpent.

I need to explain something before we go any futher. Up to now many of Bet Emet's websites deal with the "literal Paul" and his writings which are contradictory to say the least. For after all that is the way we have received them and told to interpret them since childhood. If these Pauline Epistles are taken "literally" then they are possibly the world's most confusing and conflicting religious document to have ever existed as our Websites show. If one takes them at face value then Paul is schizophrenic to say the least or Paul seems to have multiple theologies spewing from his mouth and pen and often on the same "page" of his Epistles. It is a nighmare to try to keep these conflicting statements of Paul let alone to reconcile with normative conservative Judaism. I have presented up to now Paul the "literalist" on my websites and shown how he is in conflict with Judaism and make no mistake about it that this is true.

The truth claims of the various religions contradict each other, logically they cannot all be equally true. The same can be said for "sects" within one religion as a whole. Judaism is a perfect example. Particular religions might share certain truths in common (e.g., Judaism, Christianity, and Islam are all monotheistic); nevertheless, because of the real differences that exist, only one religion would be completely true or at least truer than the rest. This is what we have before us when Paul is examined through the microscope of Gnosticism. We see that Judaism in the first century was made up of many competing sects [Essenes, Sadducees, Pharisees, Gnostics, 4th Philosophy, etc., to name just a few] which raised their voices with different theological agendas. Each expressed the "truth" as they saw it. What I wish to deal with in this article is not the Essenes but normative Judaism which looked for an anointed human descendant of David to restore the glories of Israel. Likewise I wish to focus as well on the Gnostic Paul and contrast their messages which we find woven together in the New Testament in such a way as to blur the "Jewish Christ-Messiah" from the "Gnostic Christ".

However it is time to paint Paul as the Gnostic he truly was as our investigations and the fruits of recent archeological discovery has shown in the last one hundred or so years. Due to the forgery of so much of the Pauline Epistles by Rome whereby they introduced a "fleshly Christ" as opposed to the "allegorical Christ" that Paul originally taught we come away from a scrutiny of Paul confused as we first try to reconcile the contradictory statements of Paul in our minds with limited success. Trust me I have been as many of our current reader over Paul but as your study goes deeper into Gnosticism then the true Paul emerges and a truer picture of the competing theologies of the First Century emerges which is confirmed by present day archeology findings. Let it be said in the beginning of this article that there are a total of 3 voices in the New Testament that emerge on the pages of this one book and all of them are advocating their groups understanding of God and a "hoped for" redeemer.

- James and the Jerusalem Church & Messianic Judaism [both Essenic and Pharisaic Judaism]
- Marcion and Paul and Gnostic Christianity
- Roman literalistic Christianity

The task before the reader and student is to clearly understand each and the different "Christs" they espoused and be able to discern them separately when reading the New Testament and in so doing see how the New Testament which we have received today is a book given us from the "blender" of Romanism.

THE GNOSTIC OR SPIRITUAL CHRIST VS THE HISTORIC JEWISH MESSIAH OF NORMATIVE JUDAISM....PETER VS PAUL

Well there you have it and each of these above "theologies" are scattered across the pages of our New Testaments; some mixed on the same pages no less and we readers, lacking such insights and through comprehension of Judaism, Gnosticism, and literalized sunworship from both the Essenes and Rome grab our New Testaments handed down by Roman Church Tradition and head off to church and read only a passage or two of this fusion of Ancient contending theologies never knowing that we have jumbled and mixed-up theological mess bound in black leather which we are told to consider "holy".

Let us begin at the beginning before Rome gets into this theological fight between Judaism and Gnosticism. By that I mean let us focus only on the first "two" voices and "two Christs" before Rome gets into the fray. The two doctrines for our concern that contended for mastery in the beginning as found in first century Judaism are those concerning Gnosticism which espoused a "Spiritual Christ", and normative conservative Messianic Judaism which espoused a historic Messiah.

Answer for yourself: What do both of these "Christ" or "Anointeds" have in common right up front?

They were both a manifestation of "Joshua" or "Jesus". "Yahweh is Salvation" is the meaning of both "Joshua" in Hebrew and "Jesus" in Latin (THINK). You see both words mean "Yahweh is Salvation" and in their own unique way both the "Gnostic Christ" (found both in Judaism and in Gentile mystery religions) and the "human Messiah" of Judaism were to bring "Yahweh's Salvation"; one a Spiritual Salvation and one a combination of a Political-Spiritual Salvation as we find in normative Judaism. If you have been diligent to read the other articles in this website then you now understand how the Exodus Allegory made such an dramatic impression on the Jewish ancients.

What we need to understand is that both of these "Christs" reveal Divine Truth but yet not the same way....

It might help the reader to at this time understand just what the Messiah was to do for Israel. As stated above normative Judaism awaited a anointed human as their Messiah. There were also other fringe movements that were schismatics that looked for a Cosmic-godman of sorts like the Essenes but that is not our focus at this time as we need to understand that normative Judaism looked for one from the human lineage of David to come to their rescue as their "anointed" from God for their political salvation since the Jewish nation understood that their spiritual salvation comes from the Torah and righteous living. Having said that understand as well that these two entities [the Gnostic Christ and the Jewish Messiah] are not the same to Paul and Marcion and the Gnostics. This helps us explain Paul when he says that others, and in particular, the Jerusalem Synagogue for which he shows disdain in Galatians chapter 2, teach "another Joshua-Jesus" or "another Jesus". The human Jewish Messiah who is "anointed" or a "Christ" in his own right is not the "Gnostic Christ" of Paul; yet they are both "Christs". Now you are beginning to see what I am talking about since you now understand the real use of the name "Jesus-Joshua" as used in Judaism in the First Century. Don't let us be confused about the name Jesus as we have in earlier articles explained how the name "Jesus" was understood in the first century quite differently from the way it is today. "Jesus" is the Latin of the Hebrew "Joshua" which simply meant in the first century "Yahweh is Salvation" [Strong's Number 3091].

Both of these "Christs" cannot be true to Paul; and having done comprehensive study into both Judaism, Gnosticism, and New Testament manuscripts and their corruption during the early centuries of the Gentile Roman Church over the last ten or more years the only conclusion that a "thinking believer" can come to having seen all the evidence from these sources and studies is that both these competing voices and theologies concerning the two "Christs" did not proceed from Paul; only the Spiritual manifestation of the "Christ within" can be attributed to Paul and the other "human Christ" of Judaism finds its home in Messianic Judaism. Only later when these two are combined as such by Rome do we then find a 3rd voice expressing a 3rd Christ which is not true to either Messianic Judaism nor Gnostic Christianity as it was taught by Paul, Marcion, and others which came after them.

We know that Paul and the other Apostles [the Jerusalem Church] did not preach the same gospel; and it is my present purpose to show that they did not set forth or celebrate the same Christ. The truth is that Paul did not teach a Jewish Messiah per se. But what you need to grasp in light of the Pauline forgeries in our New Testaments is the fact that although Paul was not concerned with the appearing of the Jewish Messiah he certainly would not have been a supporter of the system known as Historical Christianity today which teaches a "fleshly Jesus Christ" which for Paul was only an allegory of the Christ working within mankind. It would be this 3rd voice which will give rise to a belief in the Christ carnalized and "literalized"; an assumption that the Christ had been made flesh. The authentic Paul and his authentic Epistles reveal, when only considering them and "the Christ" taught within them, that Paul would have been during his lifetime an unceasing and deadly opponent of this Roman "fleshly Jesus" or a "fleshly Christ". Here is the facts that cannot be disproved today; namely that History and archeology and comparative New Testament manuscript studies reveal that after Paul's death his writings were tampered with, interpolated, filled in, interjected, and re-indoctrinated by a "third voice" that enters this theolgoical mix of conservative Messianic Judaism and Gnostic Christianity. It is only after Paul's death that we find that these later forged Pauline Epistles are made to teach anti-Gnostic doctrines like a "fleshly Christ Jesus". Those proto-Catholic forgers are the evilest and vilest of theological opponents, the forgers and falsifiers, who first began to "literalize" the Gnostic Christ and forge this concept with the idea of the Jewish Messiah and out of such mixture comes the golden calf of the "Cosmic Godman Messiah " of Essene influenced Roman Western Christianity. This idolatrous concept from Roman sunworship wins the theological war hands down due to the power of mighty Rome and the power of the "pen" which is backed up both militarily and by fear of damnation held over the heads of the ignorant masses. With the later production of these written forged documents which end up in our New Testaments we come away with a "Frankenstein" instead of a clear picture of an expected Jewish Messiah along with the spiritual understanding of the salvation of the soul as taught through Gnostic myths that captured for all time unspeakable truths about the Spirit of God and His workings within the hearts and souls of men. Instead our "Roman Frankenstein Messiah" is a mixture of Gnosticism, Jewish Messianism, and sunworship literalized and as stated before the unlearned have no hope of ever discerning the difference and "casting out the leaven" of such forgery and idolatry. This should now explain why the Jews won't accept our New Testament which is replete with forgeries of their own Hebrew Scriptures let alone which depicts a false and non-Jewish Messiah. They know better; we don't.

In this way there was added a third "voice" or corner-stone to the original two in Jerusalem. The supreme feat, performed in secret by the managers of the Mysteries in Rome, was this conversion of the Epistles of Paul into the main support of Historic Christianity through blatant forgery of existing Pauline writings and the pure invention of others which espoused a "literalized and carnal Christ" which Paul never taught originally! Understand that forgery of the Pauline Epistles is the very pivot on which the total deception concerning "the Christ" turned! In his lifetime Paul had fought tooth and nail, with tongue and pen, against the men who founded the faith of the Christ made flesh, and damned eternally all disbelievers; and after his death they would rear the False Church over his legacy through forgery, and for eighteen centuries have, with a forged warrant, claimed him as being the first and foremost among the founders. What a lie once you study to see it for yourself. Through deception and forgery Paul will be made to look as if he supported, believed in, and taught a "fleshly Jesus" and a "literalized Christ" when nothing further from the truth could ever be said. Once you study Judaism along with its apostate Essenes, Gnosticism, and the facts concerning the New Testament and its continual emendation and additions and continual forgery by Rome.

PAUL'S CONVERSION.....DARE WE LOOK CLOSE?

It is the universal assumption that Paul, the persecutor of the early Christians, was converted by a vision of the risen Jesus, who proved his historic nature and identity by appearing to Paul in person. So it is recorded in the Acts of the Apostles.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever compared the conversion accounts of Paul for yourself? Are you aware that the account of Paul's conversion in the Book of Acts, thought by many scholars to be a second century documents, contradicts Paul's personal account in his authentic Epistle to the Galatians?

The account, however, is entirely opposed to that which is given by Paul himself in his Epistle to the Galatians.

Gal 1:15-16 15 But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, 16 To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: (KJV)

He tells how the change occurred, which has been called his conversion.

Answer for yourself: How did it occur according to Paul?

It was by revelation of the Christ within, but not by an objective vision of a personal Jesus, who demonstrated in spirit world the reality and identity of an historic Jesus of Nazareth, who had lately lived on earth. Such a version as that is rigorously impossible, according to Paul's own words. His account of the matter is totally contradictory to the account in the book of Acts. He received his commission to preach the Christ, as he declares, "when it was the good pleasure of God to reveal his Son in me [notice Paul did not say "to me" but "within me"]," and therefore not by an apparition of Jesus of Nazareth outside of him! His Christ within was not the core of later Christian belief, but the Christ of the Gnosis. He heard no voice external to himself, which could be converted into the audible voice of an historic Jesus; and nothing can be more instructive to begin with, than a comparative study of these two versions, for showing how the true religious beliefs of the Gnostic Paul and his assumed conversion has been manipulated, and the facts perverted, for the purpose of establishing or supporting an orthodox history. What he did hear when caught up in the spirit he tells us was unspeakable; words which it is not lawful for a man to utter! Paul never makes mention of a Jesus of Nazareth in his authentic writings. Indeed, Jesus of Nazareth is unknown to Paul! His name never once appears in the Epistles; and the significance of the fact in favor of the present view can hardly be exaggerated.

The name of "Jesus of Nazareth" does not appear in the First New Testament and the Gospel of Marcion either and Marcion we remember just happens to be the strongest advocate of the Gnostic Paul that we could ever find since Marcion states that only Paul understood "the Christ" correctly. In combating this fact in their day the Christian Fathers, when cornered on this fact of the absence of "Jesus of Nazareth" from the earliest writings of Paul which made up most of the First New Testament, charged Marcion in removing the the name of Jesus of Nazareth from his particular Gospel--being so virulent a heretic! Yet here we find the early and authentic Paul in agreement with Marcion, the Gnostic rejecter of Jesus of Nazareth, and of historic Christianity. We also saw in an earlier article that Marcion's "Gospel" was the earliest Gospel foundation from which the later Gospel of Luke will be taken which teaches us that Marcion's Christ was the earliest Christ of the Christian Church. As if that was not enough let us never forget that Paul was the only apostle of the true Christ who was recognized by Marcion. Now, as Marcion had rejected the human nature of the Christ of Rome's making, and left the sect which ultimately became the church of historic Christianity. Having understood all of this as it has been so far presented than it is impossible that Marcion could have adopted or upheld the Epistles of Paul and a "Pauline literalized Christ" as it has come down to us in our current version of the Epistles. Hence, Irenaeus complains that Marcion dismembered the Epistles of Paul, and removed those passages from the prophetical writings which had been quoted to teach us that they announced beforehand the coming of the Lord! That is, Marcion, the man who knew & recognized his fellow-Gnostic in Paul, but rejected the literalizations and the spurious doctrines which had been secretly inserted by these proto-Catholic founders, who were the forgers of Historic Christianity which we have inherited today. Further, with regard to the Marcionites, Irenaeus says the Marcionites allege that Paul alone, of all the Christian teachers, knew the truth; and that to him the Mystery was manifested by revelation. These Marcionites spoke as Gnostics of a Gnostic and that Gnostic was Paul.

Now let us hear the words of an early Church Father that is not cut from the current mold and who give us a more truthful picture of the events handed down to us by Rome. Clement Alexander asserts that Paul, before going to Rome, stated that he would bring to the Brethren not the true Gospel history, but the Gnosis, or Gnostic communication, the tradition of the hidden mysteries, as the fullness of the blessings of Christ, which Clement says were revealed by the Son of God, the "teacher who trains the Gnostic by mysteries," i.e., by revelations made in the state of trance. He was going there as a Gnostic, and therefore as the natural opponent of Historic Christianity.

Now let us examine more closely Paul's supposed conversion.

Answer for yourself: Have you put on your thinking hats yet? You may need one for the following example. The conversion of Paul, according to the Acts, is supposed to have occurred sometime after the year 30 A.D. at the earliest; and yet if we accept the data furnished by the book of Acts and Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, he must have been converted as early as the year 27 A.D. Paul states that after his conversion he did not go up to Jerusalem for three years. Then after 14 more years he went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas. This second visit can be dated by means of the famine, which is historic, and known to have occurred in the year 44, at which time relief was conveyed to the brethren in Judea by Barnabas and Paul. If we take 17 years from 44, the different statements go to show that Paul had been converted as early as the year 27. Thus, according to the dates and the data derived from the Acts, from Paul's epistle, and the historic fact of the famine, Paul was converted to Christianity in the year 27 of our era!

Answer for yourself: What was Paul supposedly converted to then if Jesus was not dead yet in the year 27 A.D./C.E.? Why did not Paul go up to Jerusalem and hold a conversation with Jesus personally since by all Christian scholarly accounts he is yet alive at this time? What does this whole deception teach us or should teach us? Well first of all that what we are reading in our New Testaments given to us by Rome might not be true and we have to dig out the truth from other sources available to us today.

This could not have been by a spiritual manifestation of the supposed personal Jesus to Paul, who was not then dead, and had not at that time been re-begotten as the Christ of the canonical history. This is usually looked upon (by Renan, for example,) as such an absurdity that no credence can be allowed to the account in the Acts. Such a supposed conversion by its own account is dubious if not an impossibility; whether you look at Galatians and the conversion account which evidently is forged as well or the book of Acts and its conversion account. This betrays the action of textual forgers trying to write into history and the texts grounds and support for their religious beliefs long after Paul is dead. Study reveals Paul was a Gnostic and not an advocate in the Historical Jesus of Rome's invention. You cannot date one event by another which never occurred, or, if it did occur, is not recorded by Paul, especially when his own account offers negative evidence of its non-occurrence. It is only using plain words justifiably to say that the creators of the Acts of the Apostles falsify whenever it is convenient, and tell the truth when they cannot help it!

Answer for yourself: Well if Paul supposedly did not want to visit a still-alive Jesus at the time of his supposed "conversion" then why would he not want to see those of who followed him; his apostles and disciples?

In Paul's own account of his conversion he continues: "Immediately, I conferred not with theflesh and blood; neither went I up to Jerusalem to them who were Apostles before me; but I went away into Arabia."

Answer for yourself: Dare we detect in Paul's mention and disdain for "flesh" more of his Gnostic thought? More than likely "yes".

It is recorded for us that Paul did not seek to know anything about the personal Jesus of Nazareth, his life, his miracles, his crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension; had no anxiety to hear anything whatever from living witnesses or relatives about the human nature of this Divine Being, who is supposed to have appeared to Paul in person; completely changed the current of his life, and transformed his character; no wish even to verify the historic or possible ground-work for the reality of his alleged vision of Jesus!

Answer for yourself: Don't you find that amazingly strange?

When reading the accounts of the New Testament we are told that when he did go up to Jerusalem, three years afterwards, and again in fourteen years, he positively learned nothing whatever from those who ought to have been able to teach him and tell him all things on matters of vital importance (for historic Christianity), about which he should have been most desirous to know, but had no manifest desire of knowing. We are told in Galatians chapter 2 that Paul saw James, Peter, and John, who were the pillars of the church and persons of repute, but whatever they were it made no matter to him; they imparted nothing to him. He says these respectable persons, these pillars, who seemed to be somewhat, communicated nothing to him; contrariwise, it was he who had a gospel of his own, which he had received from no man, to communicate to them! These accounts need to be understood correctly for they depict contrary to what you might have supposed up to now that Paul had come to bring them the Gnosis. They privately gave him the hand of fellowship, and offered to acknowledge him if he would keep out of their way with his other gospel--go to the Gentiles and leave them alone. There was a compromise, and therefore something to compromise, though not on Paul's account; but the only point of genuine agreement between them was that they agreed to differ! On comparing notes, Paul found that the Jerusalem Synagogue were preaching quite another gospel, and another Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Could it be that Paul, when speaking of another Joshua or Jesus (in Hebrew Joshua means "Yahweh is Salvation" and Jesus is Latin for "Yahweh is Salvation), has in mind a spiritual salvation as taught by the Gnostics and the Jerusalem Church another salvation from Yahweh in the person of a human Messiah? Most likely yes. Both were speaking and looking for "salvation" but one political-military and the other in the souls of men.

Let us not again get confused on the name "Jesus" or else we will miss completely the historical understanding of the events alluded to. Messianic Judaism was looking for the coming of the Jewish Messiah as an "anointed one" from God that would deal with the persecutors of Israel. As stated the Jerusalem Church was well aware of Gnostic Judaism.

We know what the gospel of the Jewish Messianics consisted of for it has come down to us in the doctrines and dogmas of a mutated historic Christianity. It was the gospel of this 3rd voice; one of the literalizers of mythology; the gospel of the Christ made flesh to save mankind from an impossible fall; the gospel of salvation by the atoning blood of Christ; the gospel that would make a hell of this life, on purpose to win heaven hereafter; the gospel of flesh and physics, including the corporeal resurrection, and the immediate ending of the world; the gospel that has no other world except at the end of this. The gospel of this 3rd voice was but another gospel with its doctrines of delusion, against which Paul would have waged continual warfare but in his place other Gnostics did for almost 5 centuries. .For, another Jesus, another Spirit, and another gospel were first being preached by these pre-eminent men of the Jerusalem synagogue-church who were the opponents of Paul. He warns the Corinthians against those "pre-eminent apostles," whom he calls false prophets, deceitful workers, and ministers of Satan, who came among them to preach "another Jesus" whom he did not preach, and a different gospel from that which they had received from him. Ironically we never dreamed that Paul could ever be referring to the Jerusalem Church in these passages but he certain has them in view in his epistles. To the Galatians he says: "If any man preacheth unto you any gospel other than that which ye received, let him be damned;" or let him be Anathema. He chides them: "O, foolish, Galatians, who did bewitch you? Are ye so foolish: having begun in the Spirit, are ye perfected in the flesh?"

Answer for yourself: Could this again be a signal to us that Paul is gnostic and let us remember the Gnostics saw no benefit to the flesh since flesh, being matter, contained only evil?

That is, in the gospel of the Christ made flesh, whether this "flesh" referred to a human Messiah or a Cosmic-Godman of Rome's making, the gospel of these others was enmity toward him. It would be they who followed on his track like Satan sowing tares by night to choke the seed of the spiritual gospel which Paul had so painfully sown, and who, as he intimates to the Thessalonians, were quite capable of forging epistles in his name to deceive his followers. It has never yet been shown how fundamental was this feud between Paul and the forgers of the fleshly faith, because the real facts had not been grappled with or grasped concerning the totally different bases of belief, and the forever irreconcilable gospels of the Gnostic or spiritual Christ, and of the Christ made flesh who is set forth as the Savior of mankind according to Historic Roman Christianity.

It was impossible that Paul and Peter should draw or pull together; the different grounds of their faith were in the beginning from pole to pole apart. He says: "I made known to you, brethren, as touching the gospel which was preached by me, that it is not after man. For neither did I receive it from man (or from a man), nor was I taught it, save through revelation of the Christ revealed within."

He did not derive his facts from history, nor his gospel from the Apostles; he was neither taught by man nor book. Paul derived his gospel from direct personal revelation of the Christ within. This is Gnosticism!!! In short, his Christ was not that Jesus of Nazareth whom he never mentions nor the one suspiciously absent for the First Gnostic New Testament of 140 C.E. Once you see this and understand Paul's "Christ" is not the one that the Jerusalem Church-Synagogue preached and not the "historical Jesus" of Rome's production and once you do a comprehensive study of the true origin of the New Testament and its canonization which includes manuscript evidences that reveal the changes, omissions, additions, inventions, etc., of our texts in the New Testament over the earliest centuries of the Gentile Roman Church then you will understand in light of the absence in the earliest First New Testament of the Gnostic Christians of the:

- genealogies of Jesus Christ
- the birth narratives of Jesus
- the infancy narratives of Jesus and the later inclusions in 180 C.E. of:

forged Epistles in Paul's name (Pastoral Epistles for instance) which make Paul give an anti-Gnostic slant to his theology when his earlier authentic Epistles teach just the opposite Gospel forgeries in the names of the dignitaries of the Jerusalem Church-synagogue that have been used and created in order to futher the transformation of the "Gnostic Christ" into the "historical Christ", which had been understood "allegorically" since time immemorial.

By such cunning and deception and literary falsity and forgery the "Gnostic Christ" of Egypt and Paul was turned into a "historical being" which was placed in a historical time line by Rome in their ultimate religious synthesis where they fused together in "one person":

- The Jewish Messiah
- The Gnostic Christ
